It is my view of the case, that our country being now deluged with opium, resembles a man with a virulent ulcer, the poisonous influence of which has spread over his whole body. Under these circumstances a skilful physician would first seek to secure the heart and arteries from danger; afterwards he would expel the malady from his limbs and members, thus lessening it's baneful influence by degrees; next he would confine it to one spot, and finally he would pluck it up by the roots, thus curing the whole instantly, and in such a way that the patient would feel no pain. Now it is by a plan like this, that I propose to save the lives of our people! Shing king (in Mantchouria) and Peking, are as it were, the heart and arteries: Shan tung and Shan se are the two arms, while Canton and Fo kien represent the feet, the original seat of the disease, whence it has slowly crept on to the very vitals of the empire! every man knows where the sickness is, and yet no one is able to eradicate it!

I humbly propose then, that in order efficiently to prohibit the use of opium, we begin at Shing king and Peking: and in applying the pains and penalties thereto attached, we commence with the Imperial palace itself! The petty mandarins and lictors who guard the nine gates are not sufficient to be relied upon, we must send to each gate a couple of pure, uncorruptible, and efever censors, and as they seize so many or so few culprits, so great will be their measure of honor, or degree of crime. The man who shall be there taken with opium, let him be immediately put to death! for his crime will be ten times deeper than that of the man who merely uses the drug to stupify his fellow man, and right and proper it is, that he be led to suffer on the arena of the laws! Again the different ports are the roads by which opium comes and goes. In prohibiting it at the ports, we should commence with Teen tsin, or indeed with Shing king itself. Let the censors lead on some military officers and civilians of the same province who are not affected with the opium plague to superintend matters with the utmost severity, and let these be accompanied by a hundred and odd (picked) soldiers. Whenever they make a seizure, let them rub the opium over with chainam oil (so as to render it unsaleable and unsmokeable) and hand it up to government to be destroyed and burned, when they shall be rewarded with something in it's stead: we shall see whether the capturers be important or otherwise, and reward them accordingly. As for the guilty person, let him be forthwith put to death, that those who buy, as well as those who sell, may see that they have not the slightest hope of escape, and these examples will cause also the dealers at the other ports, to lose heart and shake for very fear!

From the province of Chih le. we shall proceed to Shan tung, thence to Keang soo, next to Chih keang, and rigidly searching all the ports in the way before stated, we shall gradually draw towards the south. We must have actual cases of capture as proof that they have been searching and scrutinizing with due sincerity and rigor: he who shuts out search with empty words, or who hopes to hush up matters by saying that all is already quite cleared away, depend upon it, is a bad man, or has an interest in the abuse: limit him three months, within which time, if he does not make a single capture, turn him or them about their business for ever! and by these means will the stream of poison that keeps flowing to these several northern provinces be cut off!

In respect to our operations by land, let us rigorously interdict the various mountain passes and thoroughfares, that communicate between the provinces of Honan, Shanse, Shense, Szechuen, Yunnan, Kweichow, &c. All these we must search and scour with the same severity, as I before recommended in the case of the sea ports. We must first secure Shingking, Peking and the Imperial City from the influence of this poison, then proceed with Chihle, Shantung, Shanse, Keangnan, Szechuen, Shense, Kansuh, Yunnan, Kweichow, Kwangse and other provinces that they be freed of it's deluge in like manner, In rotation, we shall then take up the provinces of Hoo pih, Honan, and Keangse, as being the highways by which the opium comes out and in. There also the most desperate criminals are engaged in this unlawful traffic! they prowl about in companies of tens and in companies of hundreds, they dart from their lurking places like so many birds of prey, they are well furnished with every sort of military weapons, they look upon death with a smile, as if they were returning to their homes! truly they form a troop of desperadoes! of as-ociated banditti! we must block up all the roads and passes that communicate between Honan, Shantung, Shanse, Szechuen, Shense, Yunnan, and Kweichow, as well as seize upon all the places where they assemble; and leaving these banditti not an inch of ground to escape by, drive them together into a flock and utterly exterminate them!

Thus then (to return to my allegory) we shall not only have secured the heart and arteries from the influence of the virulent ulcer and saved the "bowels of the land" from it's attack, but moreover we shall have expelled a great portion of the venom from it's members, and hemmed it into those parts which are the original seat of the disease: thus giving our damaged constitution slowly yet gradually to recover it's pristine strength. Our damaged constitution being thus restored, we may then be able to set to work seriously with the two provinces Kwantung and Fokien: to rouse the besotted people of which to a sense of their danger it will be necessary to bring in military aid from the other provinces.

The first plan that we must put in force there, is sternly to prohibit the exportation of Tea and Rhubarb. We must contentedly give up several myriads of revenue, in order to stop many more myriads of leakage We must quietly stop till the foreigners come before us, and beg their lives, not daring to bring one atom of their poison to infect our country; and when we shall have put to death several tens of their ringleaders in this mischief, and cut off several hundreds of native traitors, then we may out of compassion open to them an end of the net, and relax our prohibitions against the exnort of Tea and Rhubarb! Still these commodities when exported afterwards, must have a limit set them, and the power to grant, or withdraw permission must rest exclusively with us. Thus then will the foreigners be deterred from carrying into effect their dark and poisonous plans! And as for this scheme of mine for stopping up the fountain of the evil, there will be no need to limit a year or any space of time before commencing it, we may set about it immediately!

To cut off entirely the flow of opium into our country, will require some time and must be done gradually. As for those who are set up to govern the people, and who cannot govern themselves, but who rather play with the laws in their own persons; the influence of the bad example of such infects the whole empire, and these should be looked upon as the primary causes of the evil! Thus it is. If a mandarin don't offend himself, he may easily keep those of his public court from offending, and if he keep in subjection those who belong to his public court, those of the people whom he presides over, may in like manner be restrained. Your Majesty's minister Hwang Tseo tsze suggests, "if any militia-"ry officer, or civilian, whether great or small, still "continue to smoke opium after the term of grace "is expired, let him be judged as a man who "knowingly and wilfully breaks the laws, and let "him suffer punishment a degree heavier than that "inflicted on the common people!" This I consider very proper. And again he says "a year "after the law on this head has been established, any "of the officers who discharge their duty diligent-"ly, and make a number of seizures, let the same "law apply to them that applies to those who "capture noted highwaymen, i. e. let the affair "be reported to H. M. and H. M. be requested to "think in what way he shall be rewarded, as a "stimulus to future exertions." I would beg to remark upon this that the mere smokers among the com. on people who may be captured, should be adjudged to a doom less than death, i. e. banishment; and that the district mandarin who might seize them, should not trouble the emperor about the matter. If however he capture those who sell opium, or who open opium shops, or who store up opium for other people, it is proper then that these offenders be put to death without remission, and that the district civil or military mandarins who may make three such captures, be, as in the case of those who seize noted robbers, reported to the emperor for his gracious consideration. Any great or small mandarin employé or relations of mandarins, or secretaries, or servants of government officers, who will still continue to smoke opium, besides being put to death with extreme severity, their superior officer shall be reported to head quarters as unworthy, and will await His Majesty's pleasure whether he will deprive him of office or not: only if he himself step forward and make the accusation, he may escape being severely handled. Any Tartar or Chinese soldier who may offend against this law, let him be put to death with extreme severity For restraining the common people, I recommend that the tithing men be held responsible for their neighbors, and that the district mandarins be set to watch over these tithing-men. Thus if we deal severely with the mandarins and their followers, they will not dare to violate the laws, and if they dare not, then the common people who violate them will be very few! And after having granted them a year to leave off, let them all afterwards suffer capital punishment! For in that space of time they may all know the law, and knowing it, to look upon it as mere waste paper, they may be put to death without remorse. Were we to make the district mandarins all at once responsible for a duty which they could not perform, then we would have nothing but glossing and concealment as was the case formerly: not so however now, if the plan that I have recommended for the cutting off of the opium stream be adopted.

We must consult and see how lightly or how heavily each province has been smitten by the opium plague, and accordingly limit one year or two years, when the law of death must be put in force, only it does not do to urge those matters too hurriedly.

We must remember, that our common people have fallen victims to the opium scourge, only from enjoying too much ease and comfort. I cannot but recollect, that such is the bounty and goodness of my Royal master, that his only anxiety is, lest his poor people, every one of them, may not have food and clothing! Therefore it is that for many years back there have been no extortionate bailiffs at our doors, but every man has dug his well and ploughed his field in peace and quietness: he has drummed contentedly on his full belly, and laughed amid delight and pleasure: now however that he has given way to the opium poison and brought evil upon himself, alas! this is indeed the depth of calamity! still, would it be proper to conceal the sickness and omit to tend it? thus leaving it to remain in the body of the people who had been so foolish as to incur it? No! for if you lose your opportunity of curing it, it will relapse into an incurable sore!

For this I fervently hope, that the holy emperor will take it upon himself to determine the matter! Do not for the sake of a trifling revenue, overlook the great plan which is to free our empire from the cause of all it's griefs! do not in order to enjoy a moment's tranquillity just now, forget the danger we stand in, of being after a few tens of years literally cleaned out! Do not form a mistaken idea of compassionating (a few foreigners?) lose sight of the heaps of your people who have perished by reason of this deadly drug! Issue forth a strong Imperial decree, command that it be put in force, and under heaven (or in the empire) where is he that will not tremble thereat!

These then are the sentiments of your stupid minister on the subject: whether they be right or wrong, proper it is that I respectfully obey the commands, and thus I humbly venture to lay my memorial before your Majesty.

(Note.—The copy which we had sent us of this document, was so full of errors as to be in many passages absolutely unintelligible. A well educated Chinese friend reduced it to something like consistency, still we are far from assuring the public that this is a correct translation of the original.—Translator.)

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 9th Feby.

The only arrival during the week of any interest has been that of the Heroine from Calcutta and Singapore, but we have not received any papers by her from the latter place, though the numbers of the Pinang Gazette to the 25th November have come to hand. The account previously received by way of Batavia of the Indian Government having declared war against Persia and Afghanistan has been confirmed, as will to seen from the Governor General's manifesto which we republish from the Pinang Gazette. This event had been long expected to take place, and considering the immense distance from India of the contemplated theatre of war it will be some time, we presume, before the news of actual fighting can reach us, and unless, as is supposed. Persia is supported in in her enmity to the Company, by Russia, it may be hoped that she will come to terms seeing both the Company and Runjeet Singh in earnest preparing for war. So ramified seems, however, the present system of European politities to be, that a blow cannot be struck in the deserts of Central Asia but it will reverberate in Europe, and possibly be the occasion of another European war. We fear also that the marching of the Company's troops to the westward, will be the signal of aggression upon her territory by the Burmese and Nepalese, and in that case the Celestial Empire even will be obliged to become aware of what is going on among barbarian nations on its frontiers. Whether in such an event the Son of Heaven will remain neutral remains to be seen.

It will be seen from our Extract from the Sing. Free Press of the 1st December, that the first Opium-Sale in Calcutta was to have taken place on the 7th January, and to consist of 7000 Chests, and that the whole quantity of the season will be 20,226 chests. Unfortunately for speculators in the drug none of the unfavorable advices from this could possibly have reached Calcutta before the first sale took place, and it is therefore much to be feared that the losses suffered by them will be very severe, nor isthere, as far we are enabled to judge any prospect of the restraints on the Opium-trade here being removed, on the contrary, the measures of the Government to put down the smoking of Opium have hitherto been attended with so much success that we doubt not, that they will persevere in their persecution of it, particularly as it is now very well known that all the high officers of Government have reported in favor of vigorous measures being adopted to suppress the smoking altogether. We this day again give a translation of the report of a high officer of state, on this subject, who, it will be seen, goes even farther than any of his compeers have done, by recommending the execution of foreigners found engaged in the smuggling of Opium Almost all recommend a temporary stoppage of all trade, if the smuggling of Opium does not cease, and though we do not think that such a measure would be long persevered in, yet, recent experience has shewn us that it is by no means unlikely to be attempted. But even allowing that in some few months hence, the Government again relaxes in its severity, and that it's officers are again tempted to connive at the Opium-trade, it's interruption has already lasted so long, that the future consumption, even under the most favorable circumstances, is likely to fall far short of what it has been, for not only has necessity obliged many smokers to break themselves of the habit, but the numberless publications on the subject by men in places of the highest trust and honor, cannot fail to exercise a considerable moral influence over the people, and deter many in from the use of the drug, who hitherto openly acknowledged the practice. But as we said before, we see no prospect of a relaxation in the severe measures, and again a few days ago several seizures of Opium and Opium dealers were made; one of a Coolie belonging to a foreign establishment, and who was taken when about to receive money upon a cheque in a Sircff-shop, in New China Street. This shop was entered by the Police, its inmates seized, and the shop searched, and afterwards sealed up. Connected with this transaction was a seizure of Opium made at or near Fa-tih.

The boat built by Mr. Dempster to which we have on several occasions alluded, was launched on the day before yesterday; we were prevented by the rain to witness it, but are told that she went into the water in good style She will receive her masts to day, we are told, and we shall hereafter report whas her sailing qualities are.

The Register in his last number states that we owe him 17 $ for a translation from the Chinese taken from him about three years ago without acknowledgement. We will at once plead guilty to the charge and recognize the debt, and forthwith pay it provided our Cotemporary will at the same time pay at the rate he charges us, viz, a dollar a line, for such translations from the Chinese as he has transferred from our Columns to his own, only lately, without acknowledging the obligation.

An Edict was published by the Nam hoy yune dated the 27th of January last, in which he states that he has received the Governor's orders, which, in accordance with a recommendation received from the Hoppo are nearly to the following effect, viz: that in future the foreign merchants are not to give credit to any one Hong merchant beyond the Sum of 100,000 Taels and odd, should the Hong merchants, nevertheless, incur debts to a greater amount, then foreigners are immediately to petition that a time for payment may be fixed; if foreigners neglect doing this, then their reclamations afterwards will not be attended to. Edicts of a similar tendency have frequently before appeared, but we fear, without having the result of restraining Hong merchants from incurring responsibilities they cannot discharge, or foreigners from giving credit, (forced thereto as they are under the present system) beyond what the security merchants can make good. Such edicts have always proved, and always will prove, a dead letter; no legislature can set bounds as to amount, to dealings between merchant and merchant, or influence the credit these may consider as mutually deserving: and we fear that the intention of the Government to have the Edict above alluded carved on stone, and placed in some conspicuous position, for foreigners and Hong merchants always to have before their eyes, will be so much money thrown away upon the stone-mason. In this, as in most cases, particularly where foreigners are concerned, the greatest fault of the Chinese laws seems to be that there are too many, and that, with the best will, it is almost impossible not to be breaking some of them continually, and habit thus renders people callous to the commission of a fault of daily occurrence. There is indeed that great difference between Chinese and European law that the former is preceptive and the latter merely preventive: which of the two le better, generally speaking, it would be difficult to decide, to upon first view the Chinese system seems to present many advantages which the other has not, and the chiefest of these is, uniformity, which in our penal and moral enactments is, in a great degree wanting; on the other hand people from the west would be but little inclined to suffer the everlasting meddling of their law-givers with what they consider their private affairs.

We have published the translation of the licence under which foreign passage boats are now permitted to ply between this and Macao We have reason to congratulate the community on having gained this point, which, as ensuring regular communication between the coast and Canton, is of great advantage. The fancy that it is degrading that these boats should submit to be visited by Custom house officers, or that they should carry a distinguishing mark on their sails or hull, seems to us quite ridiculous; we should like to know whether they would in other countries be allowed to proceed with as much liberty as is now granted to them. With all the smuggling that has been carried on in the River by foreign boats, it is a matter of surprize and certainly of congratulation to us that they have at all been allowed, particularly as they are exempt from all duty; this latter, we are certain would not have been the case in more civilized countries.

The Philippine Islands.

ART. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Das Marinas, De Morga, De Tello, &c. Continued from A. D. 1595 to 1624. From the Chinese Repository for January, (Continued from Canton Press N°. 14)

As yet, say our authorities, "the doctrine which purifies the heart by faith and changes the affections, so that they turn to heavenly things, had not been fully preached to the gentiles of these islands. They were yet to be completely pacified and therefore new conquests to be completely meditated." Das Marinas was not so fully occupied with Japanese negotiations or expeditions to Cambodja,* as to neglect the extension of the Spanish set tlements over the Philippines. A fuller reduction of the Northern and North-eastern part of the island of Luzon was determined on. It has already been mentioned, that a Japanese corsair had established himself there, in 1597, and had been dislodged by Captain de Carbalon. A fort was built, at that time, at the mouth of the Cagayan river, and repeated efforts made to reduce the natives to subjection. The nature of this resistance may be inferred from the remark, that the natives liked the neighborhood of the Spaniards even less than that of the Japanese, i. e. the Spanish colonists behaved worse than the Japanese pirates. One chief only is named as having sought the friendship of the new settlers, and he, in reward for his more friendly bearing, was taken and hanged on some groundless suspicion. A war afterward broke out between two chiefs, brothers, and the weaker party called in the Spaniards. Of course they remained masters of the matter in dispute. More territory was thus acquired, and a town was founded at or near the present capital of Cagayan, Nueva Segovia. The ill manners of the rude instruments of these acquisitions had by this time driven away their chaplains, and they had lived for some time without worship or subordination, when Das Marinas determined to take them in hand and bring the province to order and tranquility. His expedition was pushed forward by land across the mountains and junks, and descending by the river Ytui, he completed the conquest. A good fortress was erected, to protect the colonists, and two Dominican fathers were deputed to preserve the ascendancy of religion and good manners.

Das Marinas continued to administer the government till June of this year, when Don Antonio de Morga arrived, with the office of lieutenant-governor. Don Luis immediately resigned in his favor, but continued to reside at Manila. In the vessels, which brought out the lieutenant-governor, came a farther supply of Jesuit, Dominican, Augustine, and Franciscan missionaries, under royal commands, to divide the provinces of the colony among themselves, and to dedicate themselves wholly to the conversion of the natives. The central districts being already occupied, chiefly by the Augustines and Franciscans, the Dominicans found places in the northern and the Jesuits in the southern parts of Luzon, and in the adjacent islands.

The same arrival brought a commission to Don Estevan Rodrigues de Figueroa, to carry the Spanish arms in Mindanao, which island he had visited by order of governor Sande. Figueroa was at this time, one of the richest of the Manila residents, and bore himself the cost of the expedition. He embarked early in 1596, and anchored his fleet before the town of the principal raja, built on the banks of the river Buhayen. Almost at the act of landing, he was wounded by a native warrior, and died in six hours. His successor threw up a fortification and held his ground for some time, but no permanent good seems to have resulted from an enterprise, which thus cost, at the outset, the life of its principal leader. Soon after the arrival of De Morga, died the P. Sedeno, for some time Chief director of the Jesuit missionaries in the Philippines. It is said that the natives were indebted to him for instruction in several important arts—such as, working in stone, making lime, &c., &c. He was also the first to attempt the rearing of silkworms in the colony, a business which had been retried a great many times since his day, but has never yet been success-ful. He had been a soldier in his youth, and his military reminiscences were drawn on to furnish the sketch of the stone fortification thrown up at Manila. Becoming the chief of the Jesuit mission, he made a profitable use of the powers of benefaction conferred on him by the pope, by giving a current value to certain pictures of saints, &c., which he had painted in his own house, by artists brought over from China.

On the sixth of February, of the following year, the citizens of Manila were surprised by the arrival of one of the ships of the fleet of Alvaro de Mendana, who had left Lima the year before, to plant a colony on the Solomon's islands. The expedition had at first consisted of four vessels, carrying four hundred persons. It had touched at several islands, committing some cruel excesses, when the original leaders of the enterprise died, several others of lesser note were cut off by each other's hands, the largest ship disappeared altogether, and the finding of the Solomon's group was abandoned. Beside the ship which made a ha bor at Manila, the remaining two afterwards reached one of the outports of the colony.

The vessel of the same year arrived in July, bringing a successor to de Morga, in Don Francisco Tello, a Sevillian, who had been appointed governor, on the receipt of the intelligence of the death of the elder Das Marinas.

The vessel San Phelipe, laden with an unusually rich cargo, valued at $1,500,000, and carrying a number of passengers, was immediately dispatched, on her return to Acapulco. On the night of the 26th July, soon after setting sail, a comet of portentous aspect startled the voyagers. It had been observed in Japan, four days earlier, and being followed by repeated and most destructive shocks of earthquake, had thrown the court of Taiko into consternation. Notwithstanding the omen, the overladen galleon pursued her course, but was at length, after a succession of storms, compelled to put into a port of the Japanese principality of Tosa, in September. Here, under professions of kindness, the ship was piloted upon a sand bank, and the crew and cargo taken into custody. The Spanish supercargo dispatched messengers and rich presents to court, with an application for permission to refit his ship and to depart on his voyage. The messengers reached the court, but instead of succeeding in their petition, an official agent was sent to take account of everything in the ship, with a view to her confiscation. December came, and the rich cargo of the ill-fated galleon was divided between the Japanese officers and the emperor. The real motives of Taiko, in lending himself to this apparently piratical measure, it is not easy to penetrate. His necessities, at the moment, may have been such as to make him prefer the immediate possession of so rich a prize, to the faith of treaties, and the probable advantages of the Philippine commerce. Or his legal advisers may have persuaded him that the wrecked property belonged of right to the crown; more probably, the ostensive reason was the real one, that it was some improper design, and not a storm, which had brought this heavily armed ship to Tosa. The Japanese monarch was not ignorant of the power of Spain and of its steadily advancing conquest in America and the Archipelago. It had already been hinted to him that the mission of priests, and the multiplication of proselytes, was the common preliminary to armed occupation, and while his measures were taken to deter visits of powerful ships, he proceeded to charge the Spanish friars with disloyalty, and to threaten them with severe persecution; nor were these empty menaces. Early in December the Catholic priests were imprisoned, the Jesuits excepted, who had come out by way of Macao and Portugal, and had no connection with the Philippines. Twenty-six of the obnoxious priests and converts were afterwards crucified at Nangasaki, including among the number those who bore the title of the Philippine ambassadors.

This was the only death warrant signed by Taiko, and for it he gave this reason, "I command these men to be put to death, because they came as ambassadors, but employed themselves in preaching the Christian faith, and in building churches, which I had prohibited." While these unhappy events were in progress in Japan, de Tello had dispatched a further expedition to Mindanao, for the relief of the cooped up followers of the unfortunate Figueroa. The Buhayen chief had meantime called in aid from Ternate, but their joint forces were defeated by the Spaniards. A peace followed, but the Spanish force being withdrawn, the footing gained was soon lost, and the Mindanaoans were as free as ever to renew their cruel piracies.

It has been already mentioned, that two Spanish captains had joined the late king of Camboja in the Laos country, and accompanied his heir on his return to repossess the dominions of his father. By their advice the new king was induced to send an envoy to Manila, to cement the alliance with Spain, and "asking especially for some soldiers to sustain the baptism of his subjects." This occasion for interposition seemed most propitious to the governor, but the state of the colonial chest and defences compelled him to hesitate as to withdrawing any portion of his means from the colony. In this emergency, Don Luis das Marinas came forward to offer to bear the expenses of the expedition, and even to command it in person. The governor yielded to Don Luis, after preparing two ship and a tender, and collecting four or five ecclesiastics and 150 soldiers, sailed on the 17th September. After putting back once, the tender reached the Cambojan coast, but the flag-ship was wrecked on an island a little west of Macao, and the second met the same fate on one of the Babuvanes. The crew of this last ships found their way to Nueva Segovia, the new settlement on the opposite shore of Cagayan, where they procured a vessel and prosecuted the voyage. Falling in with a Chinese junk, they contrived to give chase and capture her, but the stranger led them among the islands west of Macao, where they were wrecked and a great part of the crew perished. The few who escaped got information that their commander Don Luis was in their neighborhood, and rejoined him soon after. They found him in as miserable plight as themselves, feeding on shell-fish and trying anxiously to escape from his confinement. At length a small vessel was prepared and sent to Manila for assistance. Aid was then dispatched to Don Luis, but before his rescue, information came that the crew of the trader, together with the Spanish residents in Camboja, had all been cut off by the natives, to whom their conduct had become insupportable.

To return Don Luis to his friends, permission from the Chinese authorities was supposed or pretended to be necessary. A messenger was therefore sent to Canton for this license, but he was unmercifully squeezed on his arrival here, and his attendants otherwise punished. The Portuguese at Macao suspecting that Don Luis had in view a commercial intercourse with China, cut off his supplies, intrigued against his messenger at Canton, and even attempted to make him prisoner. They justified themselves, by strict orders from the viceroy of India at Goa, that no Spaniards should be permitted to interfere with the commercial rights of the Portuguese. At length, the messenger was glad to escape from Canton by flight, and Don Luis equally so to set sail for Manila. A further vessel dispatched by de Tello, in aid of Don Luis, previously to the intelligence of his shipwreck, reached the mouth of the Mekon, but found a party of Mohammedan Malays in possession of the king's confidence. It appears that this ship was afterwards destroyed and a part of the crew escaped to Siam, and thence returned to Manila, while a part remained in Camboja. Thus terminated this miserable expedition. It merits notice only as one of many enterprises of the same character, founded probably on nothing better than the invitation of some Spanish refugees, prosecuted very likely as a cover to quite other ends than the ostensible one, but still throwing light on the manners and doings of the period under review.

Soon after the martyrdom of the Philippine envoys in Japan, permission was given by Taiko to the crew of the confiscated galleon to return to Manilla. On their arrival, a grand meeting was held of all interested in the matter, and in accordance with its wishes the governor determined on a further embassy, to remonstrate against the infraction of the existing treaty, and to reclaim the escheated property, as well as the precious relics of the martyrs. Don Luis de Navarrete was appointed the envoy, furnished with presents of silver, an elephant, stands of arms, &c., and arriving with these in Japan in August, had his audience at Osaka. The emperor quite readily gave up the bodies of the sainted sufferers, and Navarrete, deeming this the most important part of his mission, repaired to Nagasaki, to recover such "dijecta membra" as the piety of the Christians in the neighborhood had not already appropriated as relics. Here he sickened and died, and it devolved on his successor, Diego de Soza, or Souza, to press the remaining demands of the governor. At length the imperial supplies were to be communicated to de Soza, in letters to de Tello, with which he returned in 1598 to Manila. They were found, on opening, to convey the thanks of Taiko for the presents sent him, and for which he gave two horses, some Japanese sabres, &c., in return. As to the execution of the priests he explained, that it was a well-known artifice of the Spaniards to procure the propagation of their religion as a stepping-stone to the native princes of foreign countries, and the usurpation of their domains. For himself, he would not permit the national rites to be abolished, the people to be disturbed, and the sovereignty itself to be attempted in Japan. As to the confiscation of the galleon, he declared that it had been commanded in reprisal for like injuries suffered by his people, from the Spaniards themselves.† Since, however, the governor had sent his envoy so far and at so much peril, he consented to the renewal of the former treaty, giving the Spanish flag free access to all his ports, provided only that they brought no more preachers of the obnoxious faith. It should be added, there is no evidence of any thing religious, in the feelings, to which this pointed exclusion of the Spanish priests is to be ascribed. Taiko was no bigot, and it is said to have been a remark of his, that where there were so many sects already, it made little matter if there came one more. His views seem to have been purely political, and looking at his empire, just emerging from feudal tyranny and dissolution, and at the foreign faith, its introducers and its fruits, he took such measures as appeared to him conducive to the tranquility of the country, and the safe transmission of his new won crown.‡

The presents and letters brought back by de Soza, were very acceptable to the anxious de Tello, however unsatisfactory to the shippers by the confiscated vessel. The apprehensions of the governor were, however, soon aroused again by the report of great naval preparation in the ports of Japan. It was said, these were intended for the invasion of Formosa, the occupation of which it was feared would be but a stepping-stone to the invasion of Luzon. To gain intelligence on this point, de Tello determined to dispatch an expedition to that island, and if a Japanese settlement were really formed there, to give immediate information to the Chinese on the opposite coasts of Fuhkeen. Two vessels, carrying 200 men, were fitting out under the command of Juan Zamudio, but after several attempts, he entirely failed to reach Formosa, and the fleet returned. It is, however, stated on the authority of the P. Colin that Zamudio visited Canton that year, and that he procured a mission for the Spaniards to come and trade at Pinale (?) twelve leagues distant from Canton. His deviation and his return may be accounted for, by supposing that he got intelligence of the death of Taiko at sea, and that all fears from his ambitious designs were thus relieved.

This great monarch died August 1598, aged 64, having reigned 14 years. Though so firm an opponent of the Spanish clergy, they could not but quote, in application to him, what Livy said of Cato, In illo viro, tantum robur corporis et animi fuit, ut quocumque loco natus esset, fortunam sibi facturus videretur. The administration of affairs he left in the hands of a regent, until his son—then a mere boy, should be old enough to assume the crown.

The galleon of this year arrived in May, and brought orders for the reestablishment of the 'Real Audiencia,' the governor being its president, and its fiscal being constituted 'Protector of the Indios' (Protector of the Indians), a humane appointment which still continues. The same arrival brought orders for the erection of the bishopric of Manila into an archbishopric, with three suffragans, Zebu, Nueva Caceres, and Nueva Segovia. The first archbishop was the P. Ignacio de Santibanez of the Franciscan order.

Two other strangers arrived Manila at about the same time, whose story throws some light on the slow and restricted communications of this period. They were two Jesuit fathers, who had been merchants in their youth, and had joined the convent in Peru, after amassing considerable fortunes. Peru was at that moment in great want of certain supplies, and the viceroy dispatched a ship to Mexico, to procure them. Of this expedition the two Jesuits were appointed supercargoes. They arrived safely at Macao, but were there met by royal orders, prohibiting all commerce between the Asiatic and the American colony. Their ship was forthwith seized, and sent on to Goa. The viceroy of India declined to pass judgment on her, and forwarded her to his royal master's own adjudication at Lisbon. Our two Jesuits, however, decided that their supercargoship was at an end, and retraced their way to Manila. It was not until after nine years absence, that they regained their home in Lima.

* We omit to notice the details of this unfortunate expedition. It was dispatched, though reluctantly on the governor's part, at the request of two envoys or two men who called themselves envoys, from the king of Cambojà. Before the ships reached their destination, the Cambojan king had retired before a Siamese invasion to the Laos country, and a noble had usurped his throne. With this chief the Spaniards quarrelled, and in this contest, he was killed. After committing various excesses they retired and sailed for Cochinchina, whence they were rudely repulsed. One of the ships was then driven to Malacca and broken up, and the other returned. The most interesting fact in the story, beyond the light it throws on the unreined spirit of the age, is the landing of two of the [illegible] there in Cochinchina, their penetrating across the country to the camp of the exiled king, and their rendering essential aid in restoring his son to the possession of the Cambojan throne.

† It does not appear what transactions are here alluded to, but the charge seems never to have been disproved.

‡ In an article on the Portugues and Spanish intercourse with Japan, in a former number, the severe measures of Taiko at this time are referred in part to the impression made on him, by the remark of an "inconsiderate person" of the unfortunate galleon's crew. On being asked if the king of Spain and Portugal was the same man, and how he became possessed of such vast territories, he replied, by first sending priests to win over the people and afterwards armies to complete the subjection to his crown. This story, our authorities repeat, nor do they deny that it may be true. They suggest, however, that the Portuguese practiced in Japan the same systematic misrepresentations, against the Spaniards, as elsewhere, and that it is probable they were the real authors of the bad impressions, of which the "inconsiderate person" in question bears the blame. Neither the story, nor the suggestion seem necessary to account for the events. Wherever the subjects of Taiko went, they saw the enormous usurpations committed under the Spanish name, and the long negotiations carried on through Faranda, are evidence that the Japanese of that day were ready enough to make their observations and to carry home their tale.

China Opened.

To the active pen of the Revd. Mr. Gutzlaff we are indebted for another work upon China entitled "China Opened." We have as yet but cursorily gone over it's contents, which, besides occupying the same ground, in part at least, of his former "History of China" are composed of much that is new and interesting as cannot fail to be the case with a writer, whose knowledge of everything relating to the Chinese is so considerable. The following is an extract from this new work.

MOHAMEDANS AND OTHER SECTS.

The opinion of a famous commentator on the Sacred edict, in regard to sects, may stand at the head of this article.

"As to the sect of Taou---what they chiefly insist on is the law of renovation, by which they talk of solidifying the quicksilver, converting the lead, calling four grumbling dragons and roaring tigers: forming pills for external and internal use; and I know not what else—have all no farther object, than that of nourishing well the animal spirits, and of prolonging life for a few years. What the sect chiefly attends to, says the commentator, is the preservation of the breath of life. This single sentence expresses the summary of the religion of Taou. It is true, that the superior men amongst the priests of Fuh, who reside in the pearl monasteries of the famed hills, and well know how to deliver doctrines, reduce the whole to one word—viz, the heart. And those good doctors of Taou, in the deep recesses and caves of the mountains, seek to become immortal, conclude the whole with this one thing, namely, renovation of spirit. Yet when we attentively examine the matter, to steal away thus to those solitary abodes, where there are neither men, nor the smoke of human habitations; and to sit crosslegged in profund silence, is completely to root up and destroy the obligations of relative life. Now, we shall not say that they cannot either become equal to Fuh, or attain the rank of immortals; but if they really can, who has ever seen the one class ascend the western heavens: or the others take their flight upwards in broad day. Ah! it is all a mere farce. A mere beating the devil. But, notwithstanding, you people are easily imposed on, and induced to believe them. Do but observe these austere priests of Fuh, and renovating doctors of Taou, who, for interest's sake, destroy the relations of human life; they are not worth the down of a feateer to society.

"All these nonsensical tales about keeping fasts, collecting assemblies, building temples, and fashioning images, are invented by those sauntering Ho-shang or Taou-sze, (priests of Budhu and Taou,) in order to deceive you. Still you believe them, and not only go yourselves to worship, and burn incense in the temples; but also suffer your wives and daughters to go. With their hair oiled, their faces painted, dressed in scarlet, trimmed with green, they go to burn incense in the temples, associating with those priests of Fuh, doctors of Taou, and rascally attorneys, and pressed in the moving crowd, touch shoulders and press arms. I see not where the good they talk of doing is, on the contrary, they do many shameful things, that cause vexation, and give people occasion for laughter and ridicule.

"Budhu, after minute examination proves to be a scoundrel. His followers are unfilial, and wicked in the extreme, but those of the Taou sect are still worse. They talk about employing spirits, sending forth the general of the celestial armies, beheading monsters, chasing away devils, calling for rain, worshipping the great bear, &c. In this labour is neglected, wilst all talk of miracles, and the hearts and morals of the people are thus corrupted.

"Even the sect of Teën-choo (the Roman Catholic), who talk about heaven, and chat about earth, and things without shadow or substance, profess also an unsound and corrupt religion. But because the teachers of that sect understand astronomy, and are skilled in mathematics, therefore, the government employs them to correct the calendar. That, however by no means implies, that their religion is a good one. You should not on any account believe them. The law is very rigorous against all those left-hand roads, and side-door sects. Their punishment is determined the same as that of the masters and mistresses of your dancing gods. Government enacted this law to restrain people from evil, and to encourage them to do good, to depart from corruption and revert to truth, to retire from danger and approach to tranquility."

The question naturally arises, whether the people have to do without religion, which the imperial author very smartly answers by saying—"Having already two living divinities (father and mother), placed in the family, why should men go to worship on the hills, or pray to those molten or carved images for happiness? The proverb says well—'In the family venerate father and mother, what necessity is there to travel far in order to burn incense.' Could you discriminate truth from falsehood, you would then know, that a clear and intelligent mind is the temple of heaven, and that a dark and ignorant one is the very seat of hell. You would act with decision, and not suffer yourselves to be seduced by false religion. Your own character once rectified, all that is corrupt would vanish of its own accord. When harmony and order reign in a family, calamity itself may be converted into felicity. To be loyal towards the sovereign, and dutiful to parents, if carried to its full extent comprises the whole duty of man. It is only thus, that you will receive celestial favour."

In this general lecture against heresies, the Mohammedans do not escape, they are called traitorous and worthless vagabonds, but their tenets are not quoted on account of the ignorance of the writer.

The law severely prohibits sorcery and magic, introducts the publication of wicked and corrupt books, by threatening with capital punishment both the compiler and circulator. Whoever imitates the constituted mandarin priests, in the performance of the rites of the national religion, is to be severely punished, even the professional priests of Taou and Budhu not excepted. If, for instance, any body worships the heaven and north star, by burning incense to those objects, lighting lamps in honour of heaven, or seven candles to the north star; it shall be deemed a profanation of these sacred rites, and a derogation to the celestial spirits. Open processions of the idols through the street, are likewise severely prohibited, and numerous crowds collected for doing homage to an idol are dispersed.

From these remarks, it would appear, that no sect could safely exist in China and that loyalty towards the government, and filial piety towards parents, constitute the whole sum of Chinese religious theory and practice. Yet the laws, in this respect, are a dead letter. If the government itself maintains temples belonging to the Lamas, Budhuists and Taouists,—if under the reign of Hung-woo, the third emperor of the Ming dynasty, it sent peremptory commands to the Japanese, that they should conform to the precepts of Budhism; the prohibitory edicts are a mere parade of words, and only then put into execution, when the numbers of a turbulent sect give rise to discontent and rebellions. But since the high roads and streets are full of temples, shrines, and images, which are erected under the very eyes of the mandarins, and since at public festivals innumerable crowds assemble, not only with the connivance, but frequently also with the sanction of government, no argument can be brought forward to invalidate the principle of practical toleration.

Mohammedanism entered the western provinces of China, when the zeal of the immediate followers of Mohammed was still warm and their ardour of proselyting still burning. Their progress, however, was inconsiderable, till the Arabs in the ninth and tenth centuries visited the coast of China, for the sake of traffic. Most of their congregations were then established by the influence of the merchants. Under Kublai Khan's reign, the highest mandarins were chosen from amongst the Saracens in his train, and they doubtless endeavoured to propagate their doctrines. It is, therefore, by no means extraordinary, that there are a few Musulmans to be found in almost every large city of the empire, but especially in the western provinces, where the intercourse with the Turkoman tribes produced a similarity of religion and manners. Those who are met with, are in no way distinguished from the common people. They wear the same dress, eat the same kind of food, with the exception of pork, and perform nearly the same ceremonies. In their religious works they have some Arabic phrases, with a commentary; but we have never met with a translation of the Koran. Not remarkable for their literary pursuits, nor for their influence upon the Idolatrous community, the government has persecuted them, only when it was suspected that they had leagued with the rebels of the west. Since Mohammedans are in office, it is very likely that these counteract the designs of their enemies. In some places, as in Kan-sauh, and beyond the Yellow River, on the banks of the Grand Canal, they have built a number of mosques. There is also one in Canton city, erected in the beginning of the ninth century, with a spire and a weathercock. In general they appear to be a despised race, and by no means very strict Musulmans. They are accused of buying children, and educating them in their tenets. With the exception of Kublai, no emperor seems to have favoured them, nor is it likely that they will ever become a predominant sect. Though living at so great a distance from the grave of Mohammed, there are some Chinamen who perform the pilgrimage, in order to become Hajees. This is rather astonishing, because, surrounded by idolaters as they are, and little as they assert the unity of God in their practice, they still have ambition enough for visiting Arabia, the land of the prophet.

Extracts.

THE LLAMA.—The current number of the Foreign Quarterly Review puts its seal to the following affecting particulars respecting the llama, which it describes as authentic:—"The llama is the only animal associated with man, and modebased by the contact. The llama will bear neither beating nor illtreatment. They go in troops, an Indian going a long distance ahead as guide. If tired they stop, and the Indian stops also. If the delay is great, the Indian, becoming uneasy toward sunset, after all sorts of precautions, resolves on supplicating the beasts to resume their journey. He stands about fifty or sixty paces off, in an attitude of humility waves his hands cossingly toward the llamas, looks at, them with tenderness, and, at the same time, in the softest tone, and with a patience I never failed to admire, reiterates ie-ie-ie-ie. If the llamas are disposed to continue their course, they follow the Indian in good order, to a regular pace, and very fast, for their legs are extremely long; but when they are in ill-humor, they do not even turn their heads toward the speaker—but remain motionless, huddled together standing or lying down, and gazing on him with looks so tender, so melancholy, that we might imagine these singular animals had the consciousness of another life of a happier existence.

"The straight neck, and its gentle majesty of bearing, the long down of their always clean and glossy skin, their supple and timid motions, all give them an air at once noble and sensitive. It must be so, in fact; for the llama is the only creature employed by man that he dares not strike. If it happens, (which is very seldom) that an Indian wishes to obtain, either by force or threats, what the llama will not willingly perform, the instant the animal finds itself affronted by word or gesture, he raises his head with dignity, and without attempting to escape ill treatment by flight, (the llama is never tied or fettered,) he lies down, turning his looks toward heaven. Large tears flow freely from his beautiful eyes, sighs issue from his breast, and in half or three quarters of an hour at most he expires. Happy creatures, who so easily avoid sufferings by death! Happy creatures, who appear to have accepted life on condition of its being happy!

"The respect shown these animals by the Peruvian Indians amounts absolutely to superstitious reverence When the Indians load them, two approach and caress the animal, biting his head, that he may not see the burden on his back. If he did, he would fall down and die. It is the same in unloading. If the burden exceed a certain weight, the animal throws itself down and dies. The Indians of the Cordilleras alone possess enough patience and gentleness to manage the llama. It is doubtless from this extraordinary companion that he has learned to die when over tasked."

The Retort Courteous.—Every body knows that there is one member at least of Brooks's Club, whose stupidity there and elsewhere is proverbial; so much so, that when any one commits a mistake it is customary to hear the self-condemnation uttered by the exclamation, "I am a regular Joey B." The other night the veritable Joey happened to hear a juvenile member of the menagerie use his name in that manner, and cried out, "Sir, you are a fool." "You are right," was the prompt reply, "that is exactly what I meant to say." The room was literally convulsed.

An Inviting Invitation.—An Irishman, newly arrived from Connemara, seeing on the door of a shop "Money lent," went in and asked the pawnbroker to lend him a sovereign. On its being explained to him that he could not have the money without leaving gount-in-pledge of go ds, vastly disappointed, he exclaimed "Ye saundlers, then what do you mane by writing up 'Money lent,' when all the time it ought to be 'Goods borrowed?"

During the rebellion in Scotland, Earl Chesterfield was in Ireland, and one morning, when it was reported that the Roman Catholics were about to rise, a gentleman ran very abruptly into his chamber—"My lord, my lord, we are undone," says he, "all Ireland is expected to be up immediately." "Why, what o'clock is it?" says the e.l. "Ten, my lord," answered the gentleman. "Then I will get up myself," says his lordship, "for I think every man ought to be up at ten o'clock."

Garrick's Size.—When Foote was about to produce a play by puppets, a lady of fashion asked him if the figures were to be as large as life. "Oh, no, madam," replied Sam, "not much bigger than Garrick."

Curious Notion of Discount.—It chanced one gloomy day, in the month of December, that a go d-humoured Irishman applied to a merchant to discount a bill of exchange for him at rather a long, though not an unusual date; and the merchant having casually remarked that the bill had a great many days to run, "That's true," replied the Irishman, "but then, my honey, you don't consider how short the days are at this time of the year."

Bombay.

The United States Frigate "Columbia," Commodore Reid has arrived in our Harbour within these few days, vessel of about 1700 tons, and built on the Potomac near Washington. She is flush decked, mounts 54 guns and has a Crew of about 500 men including "non- combatants" as we would designate, Purser, Doctor, &c.: Her stern is elliptical, which, while it secures all the strength of the round, has also the more graceful appearance of the square stern. To those who have not seen an American man of War, we can recommend a visit to this Ship. She seems in high order and discipline, her commander is the beau ideal of a "fine old Commodore" most gentleman-like and affable:—his officers are courteous and obliging.

The "John Adam" (also in our waters at present,) is another fine proof of the palmy state of the American Navy. She is a beautiful looking craft, and carries 18 guns.

Both the "Columbia" and "John Adam" though on a peaceful mission, have, we believe, their complements of men and guns, a striking contrast to the niggardly and impolitic spirit of our Government, which sends our noble vessels to sea without their lower deck—guns, and but half manned, like Sampsons shorn of their locks.—Bombay Times, Nov. 7.

We beg to draw the attention of our readers to the annexed extract from the Lodheeana Ukhbar dated the 26th ultimo. We are happy to be able to state that we have learned on good authority, the from information received both from Simla and S.. the fact of the Persians having been compe..d to retreat from Herat, is fully confirmed.

Extract from Loodheeana Ukhbar, dated Oct. 22 1838.

Herat. It appears from accounts received from a respectable quarter, that on Friday the 1st Rujah (21st September) a messenger, Ruhimtarilla Khan Baruckzee, reached Candahar from the Fort of Farrah, performing the journey in four days.—He brought a letter from Mahomed Oomur Khan, son of Kohundool Khan, chief of Candahar, who has long been in the Camp of Mahomed Shah (of Persia) for the Chiefs of Candahar; stating that on the morning of Sunday the 13th Junmeadecoosanee (8th September) the Russian Envoy, and Mahomed Oosmur Khan decamped from Herat, with the Regiments of Infantry and Artillery, and proceeded towards Gooreeyan, that Mahomed Shah had remained in his Camp before Herat until the midnight of Monday the 19th Junmadecoosanee (9th September) when he also retired to Gooreeyan with his troops. Before day break, the people of the Fort of Herat heard of the retreat, when they sallied out, and plundered 200 Camels, 1000 Goats, and other property belonging to the Merchants who accompanied the Shah's Camp, such of the Persian troops as were still encamped before Herat having been intimidated by the great number of Heeratees that came out of the Fort, took to flight leaving all their things behind them.

The person who has communicated the above intelligence, states, that Dost Mahomed Khan, chief of Cabul, was highly gratified with this news, and illuminated his capital Cabul, to celebrate the Victory of Shah Khamran over the Persians.—Ibid, Nov 10.

In our last number we stated, that authentic intelligence had been received of the siege of Herat having been raised. We have now the pleasure to inform our readers, that official intelligence of this event reached the Government yesterday. It appears that His Majesty the King of Persia has had the good sense to comply with the whole of the demands of the British Government communicated to him by our Envoy through Lieut. Col. Stoddart—one of these was that he should desist from the siege of Herat, not only as being unjust in itself, but as being prejudicial to British interests. In compliance with this demand, His Majesty with the whole of the Royal Camp marched on the 9th Sept. to Sanghust about 12 miles from Herat with the intention of returning to Tehran, to which city we have no doubt our Envoy will return, as soon as he learns the successful issue of Lieut. Col. Stoddart's mission. Shah Kamran and his Court, it will be readily imagined, are exceedingly grateful for their deliverance, and it is to be hoped, will henceforward become firmly attached to British interests. We cannot foresee what will be the result of the event which we now communicate, but it cannot, we conceive, fail to facilitate the settlement of Afghanistan, and thus open new and extensive channels for the commercial enterprise of our Merchants, of which we trust, they will not fail immediately to take advantage.—Ibid, Nov. 10.

We have heard the following as the arrangement fixed on for the departure of the Troops for Kurachee, and as it is of interest to many, we give it not however pledging ourselves for its accuracy. The Sappers and Miners to go in the Hannah on the 15th inst. the 5th and 19th Regiment in the Sir Edward Paget and Lady East on the 16th. The Queen's Royals in the Syden and Brig of War Europeans on the 16th. The Horse Artillery and 4th Dragoons in the Cambridge on or about the 20th, and H. M. 17th Regiment in the Aurora as soon as possible after its arrival here.—Sir John Keane and Staff will probably proceed in the Semiramis Steamer, and Tapjee Pilot Brig.—Ibid.

The next English packet which we shall receive here was according to official statements long since communicated to the public, to have left London on the 29th of September, and was expected to arrive at Alexandria on the 25th of October.

It probably reached Suez on the 1st instant, and wind and weather permitting, we should look for it about the 18th. It is just possible that the same vessel may bring us the Paris mails to the 8th of October, if she has been permitted to await the arrival of the Marseilles Steamer.—Ibid.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 16th Feby.

The only arrival during the week has been that of the Mahamoodie, from Bombay 23d Nov ember We are indebted to the kindness of a friend for the loan of the six first numbers of the Bombay Times, a new semi-weekly paper just established at Bombay, and which, to judge of the numbers we have seen, will occupy a respectable station in the Bombay newspaper Press, the more so as we hear it said that it's commercial and shipping intelligence is under the superintendence of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. We give some extracts from this papers, which are chiefly filled with accounts of the preparations now making throughout all India for the march into Cabul, though it would appear that official intelligence had been received of the Persians having raised the siege of Herat. The following vessels had been taken up for the transport of troops and stores to the Indus, and most of them had already sailed for their destination: Hannah, Sir Charles Malcolm, Syden, Lady East, Sir Edward Paget, Aurora, Charles Forbes. The English mail of 29th September was daily expected, and we may probably receive it here by the Ardaseer which vessel was to sail by the end of November, or in the earliest days of December, and to be followed by the Good Success. The following is an estimate of the quantity of Opium, brought and expected by the vessels loading for China at Bombay—

Mahamoodie	1468
Ardaseer, more than	1200
Good Success about	2000
and by the Stains Castle, Carnatic and barque Hannah—about ..	600
together	5268 Chests.

of last season's opium. The quantity of opium expected at Bombay this present season was estimated at from 20 to 25000 Chests, of which it was thought about 10,000 would have been shipped on to China by the end of last month We see opium quoted at Bombay at 1060 Rupees, and the unfavorable news of the opium trade here could not reach Bombay before the end of January, wherefore the shipping of the drug there will not be suspended before that time What Consignees under the present circumstances will do to realize is a puzzling question, but after the commissione's arrival here, the measures which the Chinese Government may intended to pursue against the opium trade will no doubt be made manifest. We are afraid that this year will prove one of great lost to all the speculato s in the drug.

We hear also of a new clipper named the Nymph having been launched at Calcutta.

The Chinese New year holydays have set in accompanied by, for the season, almost unusual warmth, the thermometer rising during the day to 78°, and even 80° nor falling during the night to lower than 70°. This great heat so unusual in this month (three years since, about this time, we had a fall of snow two inches deep) cannot fail materially to have disconcerted the projects entertained of personal splendour in which the Chinese are fond of arraying themselves at this their greatest festival, the temperature rendering it impossible, except at very great personal inconvenience, to clothe themselves in furs and woollens, as is their custom on this occasion.

We learn that the commissioner from the Imperial Court to take upon himself the management of the suppression of the Opium-trade is expected to arrive very soon.

We omitted to report last week that another dividend of three per Cent has been paid on Hingtae's debt, thus making the dividends hitherto received to amount to seven per Cent in all.

STEAM NAVIGATION. It is not uncommon for people in Europe, accustomed to look upon maps of Asia drawn on a small scale, to fancy that, being once in India, it is as easy to move from one part of Asia to another, as it is to travel from London to Vienna or Rome. Formerly, a voyage from Europe to India did consume more time than passages from England to Calcutta or Bombay now on an average, not accomplished in less than four or five months—but since Steam has been applied to locomotion, a month and a half of very pleasant travelling will take the adventurer to Bombay, and you may now read in the newspapers from that place English news of such or such a day after being only 6 weeks old instead of the six months as not unfrequently happened before, But if Steam navigation has approximated India to Europe, the different parts of Asia seem to be wider apart than before; we become accustomed to contemplate the time saved by steam, and impatient at the old hum-drum manner in which international intercouse is carried on thisside of Hindostan. In fact, we are at times just as distant from Bombay, as that city is from Europe, as will appear from comparing the last dates from London and Canton there on the 21st November last, which were both of the 5th September, thus shewing that no more time is required to travel from London than from Canton to Bombay. We hope soon to hear that something has been done for the comprehensive line of Steam navigation so often alluded to in the Bengal papers, by which we in the celestial empire shall, in some degree at least, be benefitted, though we fear much time will elapse before steam will be a regular visitor of the China Sea.

Though the Register may "distinctly deny that he is under any obligations to us for translations from the Chinese" we nevertheless as distinctly again make the charge, in the hope that, the rate of payment for such translations having been settled by our Cotemporary to be one dollar per line, he will be good enough to send over the balance due to us at his earliest convenience. We will charge only for one translation the Register has taken from us without acknowledgment, nor are we aware that he has done so on more occasions, we have at least not had sufficient diligence at command to look for others: the appropriation we allude to was made by the Register on the 9th October last, from our paper of the 6th of the same month, in transferring to his pages a translation made for us by Mr. Fearon. This translation we consider to be as much our, as our Cotemporary's versions from Chinese are his proper y, nor do we see that the accident of Mr. Fearon's being Chinese Interpreter to the Chamber of Commerce can give to our Cotemporary any right to translations made by that Gentleman for us.

We find that this translation contains 93 lines, making, at one dollar each line . . . $ 93 deduct from this seventeen lines which three years ago we took from the Register and have not yet settled for, at the same price . $ 17

which, we doubt not, our Cotemporary of the Register will transmit to us without loss of time, and for which we shall, on his doing so, be most happy to sign a discharge in full of all demands.

Having thus arranged this account fairly and, we hope, to the satisfaction of our cotemporary, we must now set him right about another charge he makes against us of want of editorial courtesy in not sending to him after having copied them such documents as had been entrusted to us for publication by the Chamber of Commerce. These documents we always received with directions to return them to who gave them, and this we have done as soon as practicable; had the directions been to send them to the Editor of the Register we should of course have done so; we only did what the owners of the documents in question wished us to do, nor was it at our option to act otherwise.

THE CHINESE NEW-YEAR. To those acquainted with Chinese manners it must be well known that the festival of the New-year or New-year's day is the only one generally celebrated throughout this immense empire and that this day is the only one in the year on which a Chinese has an actual repugnance to work. It is in fact a day of unmitigated enjoyment, and is followed by three to eight more holydays, as the circumstances of the different people may permit. The only other feast that can at all compare with it in these parts of the country is the festival of the Dragon-boats on the fifth day of the fifth moon, but that is of a more local nature, and is not, throughout the realm, kept on exactly the same day. But for the New year's day the preparations of the Chinese, of whatsoever degree, are manyfold. Previous to this day all accounts must be settled, whence it may be presumed that by many it's approach is watched with anxiety; the frail ornaments of the past year that adorned the altars of their penates are changed for new; the habitations also are cleaned and newly adorned according to the means of their occupants—the latter, whenever they can afford it, taking care to exchange also the last year's clothing for new on this great day; presents are prepared as gifts for relations and friends, and a feast got ready at every board. It may therefore be supposed that the time immediately preceding the new-year's day is one of bustle and activity—but no sooner has this day commenced than all work is thrown aside, and nothing but feasting and pleasure is thought of. Walking through the streets, where all the house-doors will be found closed, sounds of music and merriment greet the ear at every step, and crowds of well dressed people are seen hasting through the streets either to enjoy one of the many theatrical performances, or to pay the compliments of the season to their friends and acquaintance. Servants may be observed with large bundles of visiting cards (which in China are of a deep pink color and of the size of half a sheet of letter paper) to leave at the houses of their masters' patrons and friends, the custom in this respect being here exactly the same as in many parts of Europe. Besides this the morning of this day is ushered in by the firing off, from every house and every boat in the river, of strings of crackers, and of numbers of rockets, beating of Gongs etc. preparing people for the solemnities of the occasion. As to religious worship very little if any of it is to be observed, though many of the rites followed are no doubt of a religious origin, which by their observers however are merely practised because such has been the custom of their forefathers.

The Cargo of the J. N. Gossler, (Ameri.) is not included.

CAUTION. Two valuable eight day Chronometers, one by French, and the other by Wydenham, the first No. 4176, and the latter No 1942; and two small gold Watches, (one by McCabe, mfaker of the other unknown) having been intrusted by me to ROBERT EDWARDS who lately left China, to be sent to London for repair; and he not having accounted to me for one or either of them; the Public are hereby cautioned against purchasing said Chronometers and Watches as they are my properly. JAS. P. STURGIS.

Canton, 24th January, 1839.

NOTICE—With reference to an advertisement in the Canton Press headed "CAUTION" and dated 24th January, we feel it our duty to notify publicly, as we have already represented to Mr. J. P. Sturgis personally, in November last; that we have been instructed by Mr. Robert Edwards, late of Canton, to dispose of the two Chronometers alluded to in that advertisement, in the event of the said Mr. Sturgis still retaining possession of a box of Dollars, the property of the said Mr. Edwards; the proceeds of the Chronometers to meet the value of the said box of Dollars, and the surplus, if any, to be handed over to the said Mr. Sturgis.

As the constituted attorneys of Mr. R Edwards, we have to state that the box of Dollars referred to herein is retained by the aforenamed Mr. Sturgis for an unacknowledged claim in 1833, which he has on Mr. Edwards; and further we know, that the watches mentioned in the said advertisement are not yet returned from England.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

In consequence of the Chinese holydays there have been very few transactions in any articles, and where they have taken place among the Chinese, as they were for the purpose generally of raising money they would appear no just criterion of the market and our quotations therefore remain the same as last week.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—There appears a disposition to buy Grey Cloths at from 3.75 @ 4.10, the stock being a good deal reduced white are in less request. In Cotton yarn no alteration.

Woollens.—Spanish Stripes remain much the same, the Chinese appearing willing to buy at from 1.25 @ 1.40, but not higher. Longella are without improvement in price or demand.

Metals.—as before quoted, but without transactions.

Straits Produce.—There are no sales or importations, and prices are nominally the same.

Rice.—has not further advanced.

Cotton.—There were few sales in the early part of the week of Bombay Cotton at rather a decline on previous prices, the best only fetching 3.8 @ 9 with a heavy stock, and as two or three ensuing Passage ships may be shortly expected, we fear there is no great prospect of early improvement. The price of Bengal and Madras is rather better maintained, the stock being small and principally in the hands of the dealer who are holding for an advance.

Opium.—We can only repeat our remarks of the last month or two, the trade is entirely suspended, not a chest being saleable here and little or nothing doing on the coast. The arrival of the commissioner expected in about a fortnight can alone determine the probable prospects of the trade, which, under any circumstances are most discouraging from the immense accumulation of stock there will be shortly of both descriptions. The Mahomoodie has already come in with upwards of 1400 Chests of Malwa to be immediately followed by the Ardaseer and Good Success, and the Bengal drug must be here by the Clippers within the month. The investigation of the smuggling transaction alluded to in our last has fortunately terminated without implicating any of the foreign boats or resident Foreigners. Deliveries at Hong-Kong to the 8th: Patna, old 3; Malwa 9; Total 12 Chests.

EXPORTS.

Tea.—There are, owing to the holydays, no transactions to report.

Nankin Silk.—In addition to the purchases noticed last week, about 600 bales of middling to good quality have been sold at from 510 @ 535, the fine is still held at 550. Parties generally anticipate a decline from the lateness of the season and the advance in the exchange on England.

The Philippine Islands.

NT. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Don Marinas, De Mercy, De Tello, &c. Continued from A. D. 1595 to 1624. From the Chinese Repository for January, (Continued from the last Canton Press.

It was now time for the southern pirates, whose intervals of quiet were never long, to renew their atrocious excursions. The Spanish commandant, irritated by their boldness, attacked the Sūlūans in their own harbors. He miscalculated their strength, and was killed with a great part of his followers. Elated with this triumph, the Sūlūans put to sea with 50 prāhus, and descending on the coast of Panay, carried off 800 prisoners.

It was now the close of the century in which the Philippine colony was founded; and the year 1600 was long remembered as one marked by many disasters. Of the 40 galleons of the season, one was lost on the Ladrones, and the other returned, after eight months battling with storms, to Manila. The Dutch privateer De Noort appeared off the port, and though beaten off with the loss of one of his vessels, it was at the cost of one of the Spanish ships, and the lives of 200 citizens. The earthquakes of the previous year were also renewed, and so thoroughly alarmed were the clergy and people by the destructive shocks, that it was unanimously resolved to choose a special protector from among the saints, for the shattered city. The choice was made by lot, and the decision fell on St Polycarp. A fatal epidemic prevailed at the same time widely among the natives, completing the catalogue of calamities.

After an administration of six years, de Tello was superseded in May, 1601, by Don Pedro de Acuna, soon after whose accession, an envoy from Dayfu, regent of Japan, presented himself. This forwardness on the regent's part is probably to be ascribed to a desire to have the Spaniards on his side, in the usurpation he already meditated of the throne of his imperial ward, and which he afterwards effected. The envoy was lost on his return-voyage, and it was some time before the privilege, conceded anew, for the Spanish priests to visit Japan, was ratified—whereon many availed themselves of the grant.

The combustible materials of which Manila was built, and long exposed it to accidental fires, and it appeared that scarcely a year passed without serious losses by conflagration. One of the most destructive of these is recorded as having taken place in May 1603, when a third part of the city was laid in ashes, and property destroyed, valued at $1,000,000. A casual notice that the corner of the Dominican convent, occupied by the Inquisition, was saved on this occasion, lets us know that the 'holy office' had already found its way to the Philippines.

It has been already stated that the Fuhkeen Chinese resorted readily to Manila on the first invitation of Legaspi. Their numbers had grown with the increasing wealth of the colony, and their enterprise and skill as traders, merchants, &c., were no inconsiderable element of its prosperity. It is said that at this time, A. D. 1603, they numbered 20,000, collected in and around Manila, while the Spaniards resident did not exceed 830. In the spring of this year, came a junk from Chinchew, having on board three mandarins, whose mission was to discover a mountain of gold, of which they received tidings. The governor allowed them to satisfy themselves that there was no such El Dorado in his colony, but afterwards conceiving suspicions of their designs, he gave them an unceremonious dismission to their own country. The distrust thus excited, was enflamed by reports that the Chinese government meditated a descent on Manila, and at length, turned full on the poor colonists of that nation. These men, busy in their private concerns, seem to have been entirely innocent, as their government doubtless was; but finding themselves marked out for public hatred, and all ranks arming against them, they were driven, in an evil hour, to concert for self-protection. To these measures they evidently proceeded with extreme reluctance, for it is added, that many of them sought refuge from the impending troubles in flight, and even in suicide. On St. Francis' eve, the storm burst forth. The Chinese attempting to compel a portion of their Christianized countrymen, living without the walls, to take their side, Don Luis das Marinas, with a hundred of the most active citizens fell upon them. The little party was soon surrounded by 6000 of the insurgents and cut to pieces. The victorious Chinese now prepared to carry the city' but its defenders drove them from the wall, being cheered by the visible presence of St. Francis, who enabled them to direct their pieces with unerring certainty. The insurgents then dispersed over the country, and a field force was sent against them; to cut them off in detail, and so thorough was the work of extermination, that of the 20,000 few remained alive by October. Thus closed one of a thousand scenes, the world has witnessed, of colonial butchery. All that remained to be done was to prevent the intelligence of this atrocious treatment of the Chinese, from doing harm to the Spanish commerce with China. An embassy was therefore dispatched, with explanations, to Fuhkeen, and the envoys delighted to find that the viceroy entirely disregard of the vagabonds from his jurisdiction, and that they were a fair mark at any time for robbery and massacre. The impression made on the private Chinese was scarcely less slight, for they came to Manila the next season, as usual, to the number of thirteen junks, well and richly laden.

While Manila was recovering from its severe losses by fire and civil war, the southern pirates were renewing and extending their incursions. In one of their descents (on Leyte, a small island near Zebu) these inveterate manstealers carried off more than 1000 captives. By the side of such accounts, so often repeated, we are constrained to confess, that the petty depredators of the present day, who claim succession from these bold kidnappers, are hardly worthy of their ancestry.

We come now to the period, when the subjects of Spain began to feel the interference of an enemy too strong for them, in this ill-fated Archipelago. Early in 1605, a Dutch fleet of 10 ships and 24 smaller vessels appeared off Amboyna, and summoned its garrison to surrender. The place was ill prepared to stand a siege, and the articles of capitulation were accepted by the Spanish governor. The Portuguese residents passed to Malacca, and the Spanish to Zebu and Manila. The successful fleet proceeded to Tidore, and succeeded in dislodging the Portuguese from this settlement also, though not without some fighting. These losses roused Acuna from his apathy, and orders were issued to prepare a grand armament for their recovery. It was assembled at Oton (near Yloylo in the island of Panay), and was ready to move on Tidore, early the following February, Acuna found no difficulty in possessing himself of the Dutch trading house at this island, and passing on to Ternate, he reduced it also to submission, and carried off the rajá as a hostage. But although he had 2000 men with him, he did not think proper, situated as he then was, to attack the Dutch in Amboyna, but returned again to Manila.

During his absence, the colonial capital had been seriously threatened by disturbances with the Japanese residents. These are said to have numbered 1500 at this time, and a private quarrel having taken place between one of their number and a Spaniard, in which the former was killed, they rushed to arms in order to avenge him. The contest would have been bloody, and its issue doubtful, but the Dominican fathers, under whose parochial care, the Japanese had always been, threw themselves between the combatants, and with great difficulty parted and pacified them. Acuna did not long survive his southern expedition. Exposing himself imprudently in the dockyards of Cavite, he sickened and died, on St. John Baptist's day, leaving behind him the reputation of a prudent and vigorous governor. The president of the Audiencia assumed the government ad interim, and was soon called on to quell a second rising of the irascible Japanese, on which occasion several lives were sacrificed.

When the death of Acuna was known in Mexico, Don Rodrigo de Vivero was appointed to the vacant post, but after a year's residence in Manila, he was recalled in 1608, to higher honor in America.

The peace which took place between Spain and Holland in A. D. 1609, did not allay animosities, or even put a stop to open hostilities under their flags, in the eastern Archipelago. Commercial rivalry and conflicting colonial pretensions made peace impossible in the Moluccas, and when the death of Acuna was known in Spain, and Don Juan de Silva was sent to the Philippines, the choice was not made without reference to the military reputation he had gained in Flanders. He arrived in April, and immediately set about strengthening the fortifications of the city, and improving the communications with Mexico.* These duties did not detain him long, and he turned with ardor to the proposed recovery of the Moluccas. The Dutch, on the other part, did not wait for him, but sent a fleet to blockade Manila, and as whatever came within reach was fair plunder in their estimatian, de Silva had time, while they were picking up prizes, to collect his forces and give them battle. It was near St. Mark's day when his preparations were completed, and the good citizens were just saddened and desponding under the news of the loss of another of their rich galleons, when the governor reanimated them by a dream, that he should on that day gain a great victory. The fleets at length met on the 25th April, the Dutch consisting of 5 ships, and the Spanish of 6 ships, carrying the best and bravest men of Manila. De Silva's dream was realized; the Dutch commodore was killed, three of their ships with ten prizes were captured, and booty was taken valued at $500,000.

* It was de Silva's predecessor, whose shipwreck on the Japanese coast, on his way to America, and subsequent purchase of a vessel by Adams, is mentioned in vol. vi p. 553.

Latest Europe News.

From the London Bengal Hurkaru Extra of 5th October.

His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge has sailed on board the Bragunza, Peninsular steamer, Lieutenant M'Leod, for Gibraltar, accompanied by Colonel Cornwall and suite. His Royal Highness is to make a tour of the Continent, with the title of Lord Culloden.

The Duke of Sussex has resigned the Presidency of the Royal Society, the state of his pecuniary resources being such as to compel a residence out of London, and to preclude the possibility of his filling the station in a manner suited to his Royal Highness's rank and station in the country, or with advantage to the character and dignity of the Society.

Major-General Sir R. H. Dick has been appointed to a Command at Madras.

It is again rumoured that Sir James Rivett Carnac, Bart., will succeed Sir Robert Grant in the government of Bombay.

The Earl of Munster will probably succeed Sir Colin Campbell, as Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia.

The present belief is, that the great European powers are determined to preserve to the Porte the supremacy of Egypt, but to obtain for the Pacha the hereditary right of succession, subject to a tribute.

We have no authentic account of the retirement of Mr. Turton, though the Courier states, upon the authority of a private letter, that he has resigned the office which he held, and which he has been induced to resign, in consequence of Lord Durham's having declined to be guided by an opinion which he urged upon him, as to some part of his official duty.

By the last accounts from Persia it appears, that, notwithstanding the Schah acted upon the plan of operations laid down for him by the Russian Count Simonitch, his attempt to carry Herat failed, with the loss of 6000 men, including several officers of distinction, among whom was General Barroski, a Pole of great merit. Thus, the mutinous state of his army, and the occupation of Karak by a British force, will probably bring the Schah to reason.

Recent letters state that Simonitch has been recalled by the Emperor of Russia, who will probably not recognise his recent interference in the affairs of Persia.

Much inconvenience has been experienced by the non-arrival of the overland mails for June, July, and August. A few letters reached town on the 11th September, by way of the Persian Gulf, but they were mutilated by the Arabs. Mr. Melville in his reply to the East India and China Association, dated Sept. 19, avows the insufficiency both in number and power of the steamers in India to keep up a regular monthly communication, and says that measures have been taken and are in progress to procure vessels of the necessary size and power.

THE TEA TRADE, Oct. 1.—The deliveries last week were limited, amounting only to 334,022lbs. The large public sales commenced this morning, and include upwards of 19,000,000 lbs., the declaration being unusually large. The sales have gone off very heavily, and but little of the quantity offered has been sold.

RAW SILK.—Considerable business has been done in Italians and Bengals, the former having advanced 1s. 6d. per lb., and the latter about 6d., both continue in good demand, with a short supply and small stock. Chinas remain exceedingly quiet and although the buyers hold off there is no disposition on the part of the importers and holders to give way in price. Public sale commences on the 6th.

The brig Isabella, William Ryan, master from Sydney, was plundered on the 5th of July, by a Spanish vessel, stated to be from the Havanna, bound to Gibraltar. On the following day, Captain Ryan communicated with Captain Percival of the United States sloop of war Cyane, who not only in the kindest manner relieved his wants, but also promptly pursued the depredator to the Azores, from thence to Teneriffe, where he found the pirate, got the master and crew arrested and imprisoned, and we are happy to add, that her Britannic Majesty's consul has forwarded all the particulars to the Admiralty, and that their lordships express a strong desire, through the solicitor to the Admiralty, to follow up the case, and endeavour to convict the offenders. It seems that the same vessel plundered the Azores packet, Captain Peters, from Teneriffe to London, a few days after.

SEPTEMBER 27.—The great meeting of the working classes at Kensal-moor, near Manchester, on the 24th, was numerously attended; but the numbers assembled are probably exaggerated when estimated at 250,000, including women and children. There was not the least disturbance or attempted breach of the peace, and the behaviour of the people assembled was in every respect most orderly. Petitions in favour of Universal Suffrage were adopted. A similar meeting was held at Liverpool on the 23th, but not more than 1300 persons were present.

The duty on Foreign corn had again advanced to 10s. 6d per quarter, but this signifies little, as there is no foreign corn to import. In France, the crops are deficient, and in Germany far below average; and in Ireland the wheat crop proves greatly deficient of what was expected, as the produce is of an inferior quality. The prospects of food are indeed gloomy, thanks to a 'predominant landed interest"

The Times of this day in a long article says—The separation of Egypt from Turkey has been one of the principal objects of Russian policy for more than half a century. The effecting of this object not only would lay the Ottoman empire prostrate at her feet by its separation into two hostile parts, but by awakening the cupidity of France, would revive in the mind of that great nation the bitter memory of her lost Indian possessions, open up to her prospects of African and caste n dominion, draw her into dependence on Russia for the formation or the furtherance of her schemes whilst unavowed, and place her in a position of obliged concert with Russia when the realization or the revelation of the schemes had effected the dismemberment of Turkey, or had broken up the alliance of France with Great Britain.

FOREIGN.—The accounts from Greece are most gloomy. It appears there has been another of those unfortunate revolutionary movements leading to no end, and serving no purpose, but that of inducing King Otho to proceed in his present tyrannical course. The miserable peasants of Messinia, driven to despair by the daily arrests of their parents and companions, and by the acts of cruelty of he government troops, without leaders and without plan, took arms simultaneously in several villages, attacked the gendarmes, some of whom they killed, seized upon a few military posts, and bid defiance to the government and the laws. On information of this state of things arriving at General Gordon's head-quarters, Argos, he immediately marched with such forces as he could muster, and no sooner did the peasants hear of his approach than they dispersed, taking to the mountains, from whence they will commence a guerilla warfare, and put an end to all security of life and property by their acts of brigandage. The government meanwhile has given orders for two battalions of the frontier troops to march into the Morea, and to quarter themselves free on the innocent inhabitants who have not fled.

FOREIGN.—An expedition against Mexico consisting of the Nereide frigate, the Create corvette, and the Cuirassier brig, commanded respectively by Captains Turpin, his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville, and Count de Gourdon, sailed from Brest harbour on the 1st September. Admiral Baudin has hoisted his flag on board the Nereide, and proceeds in the first instance to Cadiz, where he will be joined by the Gloire and Medee frigates.

It is confidently affirmed that very serious disaffection pervades the French army, which has been extensively tampered with by agents of Louis Bonaparte. Several soldiers, sub-officers, and even officers, have been arrested, and are at this moment imprisoned in Paris and Lyons, charged with participation in a plot to change the dynasty in France, and to place Louis Bonaparte on the throne. This is in some degree confirmed by the arrest in Switzerland of a sergeant of a French regiment who deserted his corps at Lyons, and was on his way to Arenenberg, the residence of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. They derive a certain support also from printed songs and other inflammatory documents, largely disseminated in the army.

The Paris papers state that Louis Napoleon has written to the Executive at Thurgau, abandoning his claim to be a citizen of that canton, and assigned as his reason that he cannot in any wise resign his claim to be considered a Frenchman. He writes at the same time, it is said, to Mr. Morier, British envoy, to ask passports to England, where he purposes to fix his residence. It is pretty evident this was expected for some time. And so ends the farce of a French war upon Switzerland!

Spain.

Letters from Bayonne, August 30, state that the loss of Oraa before Morella, and in his other late operations, was from 200 to 250 men killed, and 800 or 900 wounded. His retreat had been made in good order. Oraa had announced his intention to resume the siege of Morella, and that while waiting the arrival of certain necessary means he would manœuvre against Caldera.

General O'Donnell arrived at Tarn on the 28th, to arrange with the junta the manner in which Muniagorri should commence his operation.

Accounts from Madrid to the 30th are not satisfactory, though they state that the energy and the activity of Government had on the preceding night defeated the projects of the discontented, who calculated upon turning to account a theatrical representation given for the benefit of the prisoners of war, and at which the Queen was present, but no disturbance occurred. It had been reported that the disaffected would call upon the Queen for the dismissal of the Ministers; that denunciations of death against the Ministers and the Political Chief of Madrid had been uttered. Anonymous incendiary proclamations had been profusely circulated in the metropolis, and it was even said that attempts to corrupt the Gendarmerie had been made. The severest orders were issued by the authorities, and at eight o'clock in the evening the troops occupied different quarters of the capital, and the whole city was patrolled. General Quiroga passed at that hour through the streets, and inspected the posts, at which the Gendarmerie had been doubled. The garrison passed the night under arms. This display of force cooled the courage of the rioters, who attempted not the slightest demonstration. The performance at the theatre was not interrupted by any seditious cries, and the night passed in tranquillity.

The last accounts from Spain state, that on the 19th inst, General Alaix had left Artagona for the purpose of attacking the Carlists on the further side of the Arga. He had, however, been attacked by a superior force, and, after losing 900 of his men, had been forced to retire upon Puente de la Reyna, where he had been joined by the forces under the command of Ribet, with whom he was about to recommence the attack. It was reported that Alaix was wounded. The Carlist General Echevarria had been killed. Maroto and Don Carlos were on the 19th at Balmaceda.

Madrid papers of the 25th ultimo, state that the account of the failure of Oraa's assault on Marella had reached Madrid, and that it had produced a very great sensation. The Government was blamed for this disastrous result, and little doubt was entertained that two at least of the Ministers, MM. Mon and Castro, would be compelled to resign. It was also believed that two other affairs of importance—the negotiations with the house of Rothschild for an advance of money, and the projected operations of Espartero against Estella—would be seriously affected by the repulse and retreat of Oraa.

General Latre has been sent to supersede Oraa. The failure of the attack on Morella is ascribed to want of ammunition at a critical time. The Ministry had forwarded an abundance of every kind of military stores to Oraa; but the soldiers employed to convoy them stole them on the road.

DEATH OF A CHINESE FEMALE IN THE MEDICAL MISSIONARY HOSPITAL.

From the Canton Register of 19th February.

An eye-witness has favoured us with the following account; and a letter from the revd. P. Parker, M. D., and a translation of the hongmerchant's petition to the Namhoy magistrate will be found further on.

On the 16 inst. a court of enquiry (very much like one of our coroner's inquests) was held by the Namhoy magistrate at the M. M. Hospital, touching the death of one of its native patients.

On the 21th inst. a poor woman named Foo, a native of Sansuy district, about 40 years old, came to the hospital in great distress, and in a very advanced state of disease. She thus addressed the doctor —"pity me, pity me!" This appeal has never been made to the sympathy of the American philanthropist in vain. She was immediately admitted as an indoor patient. During the few first days her health improved, but she died almost suddenly on the 13th.

Dr. Parker immediatelly communicated this event to the hong-merchants, requesting them to make it known to the proper authorities.

The hong merchants having informed the Namhoy of the death, his worship fixed upon Saturday at noon for holding the inquest. Before making his appearance at the hospital he sent a message to Dr. Parker, to say—"that as he was now about to meet him in his official capacity as chief magistrate of the district, the foreign phisician would kindly overlook any apparent want of courtesy, as it was not in his power to treat with him on the same familiar footing, as he had previously done at Howqua's when himself a patient of the doctor's."

On arriving at the hospital a little official table and other apparatus were set up. The body was in a room on the ground floor, and thither the Namhoy and his followers went to inspect it. To guard against infection most of the Chinese stuffed their nostrils with paper; the Namhoy took snuff in large quantities, while his servants surrounded him with lighted incense sticks to ward off the distemper. The body was then stripped as far as decency would permit, and closely inspected. The nature of the puncture was explained, the instrument with which the puncture was made was produced and the suspicious looking leech-bites were explained to his worship's satisfaction. When satisfied with examining the corpse, the Namhoy proceeded upstairs, to take the deposition of another woman, named Lew, who had also been tapped for the dropsy, and at the same time as her less fortunate fellow-patient. She was accompanied by her son, a little boy nine years old who had seen the deceased die. The Namhoy examined her through a Chuen-Kung, or court interpreter, who seemed really to be a very clever fellow, and infinitely more master of his profession than our linguists. The questions were very much to the point—such as if the operation had been made with the deceased's full consent: if Dr Parker had not constrained her in any way; if the deceased seemed relieved by it; if the witness felt relieved by it; if Dr. Parker had treated her kindly; if she had had plenty of food; if the deceased had communicated any particulars concerning herself, &c.

This examination lasted so long, and the Chuen-kung did his duty so well—by returning to the subject about a dozen times under the form of cross examination—that the patience of the witness was at length utterly exhausted, and she began to get fretful and peevish. An attempt was then made to examine her son; but the little urchin defied them by his real or assumed stupidity.

His worship then proceeded to inspect the different wards of the hospital, and expressed his great satisfaction at seeing every thing so neat and clean. This was the only observation that we heard him make in reference to the subject. His followers were, however, loud in their praise of Dr. Parker's humanity. After having seen the whole of the hospital, the Namhoy went to inspect a dead body at the Shap-yat-poo, first having arranged with us to meet him at the Consoo house, with the hong-merchants, at 4 o'clock. Here the man who applied the leeches was examined on his knees; Dr. Parker's works on surgery were called for to prove that the place where he had tapped the woman was not a vital part; and his diplomas were produced to show that he was a regularly bred physician. About half-past five the Namhoy went home, but without committing himself by making a single observation, good or bad.

Dr. Parker's hospital has thus been brought officially under the notice of the Chinese government. It is a providential circumstance that the magistrate, whose duty it was to hold this inquest, has himself been relieved by Dr. Parker's hand, after having employed a host of Chinese practitioners in vain: and that he can at one and the same time testify to Dr. Parker's skill as a physician, and moral worth as a man. Any other officer might have given us a great deal of trouble.

Old Howqua's opinion of the matter was very characteristic.—"More better"—said he.—Doctor Parker take care that man have got frien—no fear makee die—suppose got letee sick—maskee, no matter; suppose too much sick, makee die, heigh yaw! too much trub, too much trub!

The Hongmerchant's Petition to the Namhoy Magistrate

A duly prepared petition, begging that your worship will be pleased to examine a dead body, and give the necessary orders for its interment, &c.

The said foreigner is named Parker, a native of America, and who from his youth has had some knowledge of surgery and medicine.

In the 15th year of Taoukwang (1835) the opened an hospital in Hoglane, where he felt the pulse and cured diseases, made use of the lancet and supplied medicines, without receiving any gratification for the same. The said physician during the day passed his time in the aforesaid hospital, attending upon the sick, and at night retired to his house in he American hong, where he slept. He has already cured a considerable number of people.

When there are any who suffer from dropsy he uses a lancet, and makes a puncture in the abdomen, so as to draw off the yellow fluid; he then gives them medicines for several days longer; and by these means he has relieved many from dropsy.

Further, as the said physician cannot go to people's houses to see patients, therefore it is that men and women from every quarter come to the said hospital, where their complaints are attended to. Those patients who come from the country reside in the hospital; the men and women in different apartments. If the patients have relations with them, then these are also permitted to live in the hospital, but if they have no relations, the females are put into a ward by themselves, or with other females: these are facts open unto all men

Now on the 2d of February there was a woman, about 40 years old, who came to the said hospital, saying:—"that her name was Woo; that she has no relations whatever; and that because she was suffering from dropsy she had come to the hospital to be cured."

The said physician hen examined her, and felt her pulse; seeing that her disease was very grave, he first used soothing medicines to cure her; but these not having a complete effect, he then said distinctly † to the woman—"that he must use his lancet, and tap her." To which the woman replied —"that she felt very willing that we should thus cure her."—The said physician then made a puncture with his lancet in the woman's abdomen, upon which issued a very great quantity of yellow fluid. Afterwards he gave her medicines to recover her; but still, as before, these had not the required effect. The said physician then advised the woman to return home; but the woman answered, saying,—"Just now is the end of the year, if I wait till the 2d of next moon (15th February), then I shall be able to return." Who would have suspected it?—The woman, being already dangerously ill, on the evening of the 30th day (13th February), between the hours of five and seven, having risen to perform a natural office, fell down suddenly upon the ground! —It so happened that there was another woman, named Lew, who had also come to the hospital afflicted with the same complaint, and who had been in like manner tapped in the abdomen, but who had experienced relief from the medicines; this woman lived in the same ward with the deceased, and, seeing her fall down, called out, and along with her son, Lew Achaou, went to assist her, but without avail; she was already dead.

The said physician then communicated these particulars to the hong merchants, and we, the hongmerchants, forthwith went to examine, when we found his statement quite true; and, moreover, as the said woman has no relations, we, as in reason bound, write these particulars, and herewith petition, begging the favour of your worship to examine the corpse, and give the necessary orders for interment, &c.

† This is a mistake—it was the woman herself who begged and implored Dr. Parker, to operate.

Singapore.

With respect to the intended execution of the unfortunate Hayew Keng in front of the factories, we think the foreign residents did right in endeavouring to interrupt it, and that it is fortunate they succeeded. Another interpretation however, besides that of intending to "insult and disgrace foreigners" by such an exhibition in front of their dwellings, may perhaps be put on the conduct of the Canton authorities in this matter. The sufferer was to be the first victim to the fatal severity of the new law against keeping an opium smoking shop, and we think it not unreasonable to conclude that it was as much for the purpose of letting foreigners have this fearful evidence of the intention of the government to carry into execution its edicts against opium, and of the dreadful punishment attending the violation of the law against a traffic in which foreigners are the primary agents, as with the view of grossly insulting them. There can we should think be no doubt that the conduct of the authorities in directing the sentence of the law to be executed upon a criminal for his connexion with the opium trade before the windows of the foreign residents had its meaning, and it will not everywhere perhaps be read in the same way as in Canton.

We must remark too that having seen the late Edict denouncing death against all vendors and smokers of Opium treated, in both the Canton prints as a forgery, we were rather surprised to meet with the following passage in the Register, in allusion to Hayew Keng's execution:—"This extreme and cruel punishment has been inflicted in obedience to the late imperial orders received from Peking"—as if the genuineness of the said imperial orders had never been a matter of question.

As regards the stoppage of the trade consequent upon the late detection of Opium smuggling in the river the Register contends that the most blameworthy parties are the officers of government who have allowed it to continue for so many months to go on undisguised and unchecked. No doubt the Emperor has much and good cause to reproach his officers with neglect of duty in this particular and on many others. But what has the foreign smuggler to complain of should the Imperial behests at last come to meet with attention? The Register has his answer ready and pleads an almost prescriptive right of anchorage and smuggling founded upon the forbearance or connivance of the Emperor's revenue officers for the last 18 months!!! Prepared as we were for any dogma or any doctrine from Canton in support of the rights or pretensions of the foreign residents, the assertion of a prescriptive right to smuggle certainly astounded us. To say that it involves a glaring contradiction in terms is nothing. The same excuse might as reasonably be set up by any of the gentlemen of the swell mob in London because the Bow Street Officers either were or chose to be blind to their pilferings.

Quite as preposterous, but a little more laughable, is the expedient which the Register suggests to avert the "disgraceful flight" of foreigners on any similar occasion of sixty cuffs with a Chinese rabble—"we would recommend" he says "that the residents should organise themselves as a sort of militia, their weapons to be heavy hunting whips, and there is no doubt that on any future similar occasion they will drive the Canaille of Canton, like Scythian slaves, into the river."! It is melancholy to witness such an instance of the delusion of national prejudice as the idea of one or two hundred Europeans switching the population of Canton into good behaviour—and it were more lamentable if there could be found a community to treat such absurd bravado with any thing but contempt. *Sing. Steam Navigation.

At a public meeting of the Inhabitants of Singapore held at the Reading Room on Monday the 17th December, 1838, for the purpose of taking into consideratson the suggestion of the Madras Committee for establishing a Steamer between Ceylon, the Straits, and China in connection with Steamers to be established between India and Suez, in the event of the Comprehensive Scheme not being carried into effect, W. D. Shaw Esq., having been called to the Chair, the following resolutions were unanimously carried.

First,—That this meeting view with feelings of satisfaction the disposition on the part of the Bengal and Madras Committees to co operate cordially on the subject of Steam Communication between India and England.

Second,—That in the event of the Comprehensive Scheme (namely an unbroken communication by Steam between Calcutta and London, via Suez) not being carried into effect, the Madras plan for forming a Company to perfect the communication on this side of the Isthmus, is the best, that could under the circumstances be adopted.

Third,—That this meeting, from such a view of existing circumstances as they are enabled to take, are of opinion that the establishment of a branch Steamer between Galle the Straits and China would eventually succeed.

Fourth,—That a Committee be formed for the purpose of procuring every information relative to the establishment of steam communication between Point de Galle the Straits and China, with a view to ascertain how far the undertaking would be likely to succeed with reference to the outlay and probable returns, and for the purpose of corresponding generally with the Committees of Bengal and Madras.

Fifth,—That the said Committee consist of the following seven Gentlemen, three to form a quorum

Dr. Montgomerie,
Messrs. Baleytier,
" Napier,
" Connolly,
" Boustead,
" Brennand,
" Macdonald.

That the thanks of the meeting be voted to Mr. Shaw for his able conduct in the chair,

W. D. SHAW,
Chairman.

The letter of a mercantile house at Batavia received by this opportunity says, "There is no announcement of the Tin sale due last month, and it is now rumoured that all the government produce is hereafter to pass into the Maatschappy's hands." This of course will go far to increase the difficulties to which private merchants are already subject in Java from the existence of a trading monopoly of which the interests are identified with those of the government, and seems only further intended to carry out the object of the late Tariff, by endeavouring to put an end to private trade altogether. The government of Java we do not mean to deny have the right to do with their own produce what they please, and of course to chuse the channel by which it may be remitted home—but the cessation of their periodical sales would nevertheless be a further injury to private trade in Java, superadded to the burthens under which it already labours, and which it seems are destined to increase until it is finally expelled. When something of this kind happens our own government will perhaps be taught the value of a trade which has been lost by their own neglect. In a Glasgow paper of May last we notice an able speech of Mr Walter Buchanan at a public dinner in that city, in the course of which, while commenting with great force upon the general disregard shewn by the present government to the interests of the foreign commerce of the country, he alludes at some length to the situation of our trade in Java, with which he shews himself perfectly well acquainted, and says with truth:—"Our trade with Java is of no small importance, and in the present state of our manufactures, we cannot offord to lose it. He is not fit to be the foreign minister of Great Britain who does not know or cannot value its importance." What with the unceasing system of restriction and encroachment pursued by the Dutch, and the pliancy or negligence of our own government, it scarcely seems too much to expect the total overthrow of British trade in Java. Singapore Free Press 27th December.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 23rd Feby.

Our columns this day are chiefly filled with extracts from Europe and Straits papers which have come to hand by the Ardaseer, many of which will be found interesting, particularly as the absence of all local news of any interest, owing chiefly to the holydays of the Chinese New Year, when all public offices are shut and consequently no business whatever is transacted, rendered the being enabled to fill our paper with foreign intelligence, a subject of no trifling congratulation. The news received overland from Europe are of little stirring interest, except that, if the accounts from Spain can be relied on, Don Carlos' affairs seem in a fair way of overbalancing the Queen's interests, and we hope for the sake of that unfortunate country that one or the other party may soon gain the upperhand, so as to restore quiet. As to any principle being lost or gained by the cause of enlightened liberty, by either of the parties proving victorious, the chances seem to be very equal either way—in fact neither party seems to deserve the sympathy of the good; quiet is all that that country at present requires, and this the predominancy whether of Don Carlos or Queen Isabella's arms will ensure

The Indian war with Persia has for the present been abandoned, the Shah of Persia having withdrawn his forces from the siege of Herat, and being on his way to Teheran. The Indian forces notwithstanding continue their march to Affghanistan to settle that country into an ally of the Indian Empire. The Burmese, on the other side seem however desirous for war with the Company, and the latter's Ambassador, Col. Benson, is said to have met with anything but courteous treatment on his way to Ava, whence one of the Princes, a son of the dethroned monarch, has made his escape, and is now collecting, it is said, a force to oppose the usurper Tharawaddie. This as well as the intelligence of peace with Persia may probaly incline the latter to more friendly behaviour towards the Company.

In the Straits the Company have declared Quedah, recently reconquered by the Malays from Siam, in a state of blockade, some treaties existing between the English and Siam, in which the former guarantee to the latter the quiet possession of Quedah.

We have to acknowledge receipt of the first number of the "Malacca Register" dated 3d January. This paper our readers may remember had a short existence of a few months about a year ago, when circumstances compelled it for a time to discontinue. It has now reappeared, and we wish every success to our new cotemporary.

From our Extracts from the Singapore Free Press it will be seen that a meeting was held there concerning the connecting of Point de Galle, Singapore and China by Steam navigation, on a former occasion, when a meeting was held there for a similar purpose, at the request of Mr. Wetmore, we expressed our apprehension that for the present at least, the expenses of connecting China with the proposed plan, would probably exceed the receipts, and at the meeting at that time held this seemed to be the general feeling. We see no reason for changing our opinion now, however desirous we may be that circumstances were such as to warrant the plan. The qualities of a steam vessel to China as a sea boat require to be so very superior for the contending with the rough China Sea, that her expense would probably be a great objection—foreign residents in China are too few in number, and the country holds out so very little prospect of pleasure or gratification to the tourists, that passengers would be but few, and the owners of the numerous clippers would, in the beginning at least, give to their own vessels all the freight of bullion they could obtain.

It will be seen from another extract from the same paper that the public sales of the Tin belonging to the Batavia Government will no longer take place. We have heard from good authority that the whole quantity reserved for the India and China markets will in future be only 2000 Piculs per Annum. We also notice in these papers that the ports of Australasia, or at least of the British Colonies there, have been shut against all trade under the Dutch Flag

Our papers received per Ardaseer are the Singapore Free Press from 1st December to 12th January, the Pinang Gazette from 1st to 29th December, and the Malacca Register of 3rd January.

By the American vessel Indus, Capt. Mott, very important news has been received from Mexico. The Indus left Mazatlan on the 23rd December, and brings intelligence that early in that month the French made an attack upon the Castle of San Juan de Ulua and took it after a bombardment of five hours, when nearly one half of the garrison had perished from the shells that fell thickly upon them from all quarters. The French then commenced to bombard the town of Vera Cruz and had already destroyed a considerable part of the town, when the Mexican general Pereira capitulated with his army consisting of 2 a 3000 men, in order to save the rest of the City from destruction. The supreme government however refused to recognize his capitulation, and sent the famous General Santa Anna to collect what forces he could, and drive the French out of Vera Cruz. He accordingly led on the attack and fell at the head of his troops almost at the first shot. The French were compelled to retreat to their ships, whence they recommenced the bombardment, and only stopped when they had utterly levelled Vera Cruz with the ground. An additional French force was daily expected, when the French would likely force their way up the country. A change of the Mexican Ministry was also expected, which in the opinion of many would lead to a pacific negociation. Previous to the attack on San Juan de Ulua French and Mexican commissioners had met at Xalapa, but as they could arrange nothing, by the suaviter in modo, the Admiral determined to try the effect of the fortiter in re. President Bustamente was in the neighborhood of Vera Cruz at the head of the Mexican army, which was daily increasing it's numbers, and would be still more effective were it not that a civil war was raging in the country.

A terrible Hurricane took place at Mazatlan early in November when nine vessels were destroyed. Fears are entertained for the safety of the Lucy which sailed from this in August last.

The Panama, Benjamin, from Newyork, 28th October, has made an extraordinarily short passage, considering the season of the year;—we have not yet seen any papers by her, but she may possibly bring later dates from England than we now have by way of Bombay.

We noticed last week the unseasonable heat we then experienced; the whole of this week has been very cold and wet, the thermometer ranging between 45° and 50° or about 30° lower than last week.

It will be seen from the account we copy from the Register that the circumstance of a poor woman dying in the Hospital of the Medical Missionary Society, has brought that establishment under the notice of the local authorities. The Namhoy's report will probably be as favorable as he dare to give, he himself having, not many weeks since, derived benefit from Doctor Parker's medical skill, and it is to be hoped that the Hospital will in future enjoy the, at least passive, protection of the local authorities.

Our Cotemporary of the Register does argue in a manner peculiarly his own, and it requires readers with associations of ideas similar to his to appreciate the force and beauty of his logic; to such readers we unfortunately do not belong, or we might understand why, when we charge him with having taken without acknowledgment a Chinese translation from our paper of the 6th October, he supposes to have refuted that charge by explaining under what circumstances he did so on another occasion, namely on the 18th September. For the sake of our argument we must consequently confess that it appears to us not to be shaken in the least, but as to the balance due to us of $78—alas! we have no chance now of ever fingering it, for, says our Cotemporary, "that, we 'have dissipated into viewless air'"—a process how accomplished the Register does not explain, but, having no cause to doubt his word, however we may wonder at his taste of spending money on such unsubstantial dissipation, we have become perfectly aware that, the caput litis, i. e. the $78 being no more in existence, it is of no use to prolong the dispute. Thus our "shameless effrontery" has served us to no good purpose, and our "insatiate avidity" has come to nought.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

ARRIVED.—Brit. Ardaseer, MacIntyre, from Bombay 26th November, and Singapore 12th January. Amer. Panama, Benjamin, from New York 29th October. Ameri. Europa, ——, Sandwich Islands.

SAILED OR DESPATCHED.—None.
The Agnes, Gallie, proceeded to sea on the 20th inst. from Hong-kong for Singapore and Calcutta.
PASSENGERS.—Per Sultmany, (Omitted in our last) Messrs. Nanabhoy Framjee Dhunjeebhoy Muncherjee, Dadabhoy Rustomjee, Tamooljee Rustomjee, Nesservanjee Ardaseer, Hormusjee Framjee, Cowasjee Bazenjee, Rustomjee Framjee.
By the overland mail brought by the Ardaseer from Bombay, we learn of the arrival in England of the Golconda, Dorothea, Cordelia, and David Clark.
The latest arrival in Singapore from China was that of the Bombay Castle.
The new Clipper Syren had left the Sandheads on the 22nd November, but on the 12th January had not arrived at Singapore. Fears were entertained of some accident having happened to her.
Last week we noticed the total loss of the Schooner Attavar, Capt. Jackson, on the West Coast with a Cargo of Opium. Particulars since received, are to the following effects that she struck on the rocks to the northward of Nampang Island, about 20 miles to the westward of false St. Johns, whence, a fresh breeze from the northward, blowing at the time with a heavy swell, she could not be got off. The crew passed from the wreck to the shore and succeeded in saving about $3000 and some fire-arms, which did good service in protecting this property from the Chinese, who repeatedly attempted to plunder them. On the day following the disaster, the 4th of January, the crew embarked in a China boat for Macao, agreeing to pay $ 1250 for their passage, but were five days after picked up by the Psyche, Capt. T. Rees, which latter vessel run down to the wreck with the object of saving whatever they could of the property. On her approach the Chinese set the wreck on fire, but on Capt. Rees reaching the burning vessel it was found that she had been plundered of every thing. Empty Opium chests were scattered about the beach. The loss is considerable, the Attavar having, at the time of her loss, 130 Chests of Opium on board.

Vessels laid on for London: Viscount Melbourne, Hindostan, Parrock Hall, Orwell, Ingleborough: for Leith, Isabella: for Liverpool, Tigris.

Latest Dates, from England, 5th October via Bombay. United States, 28th Oct. P Panama. Calcutta, 24th November via Singapore. Bombay, 26th November P Ardaseer. Singapore, 12th January P Ardaseer. Java, 7th December P George IV. Manila, 14th January via Macao.

VESSELS EXPECTED.—From England, Orixa, Ann Jane. Calcutta, Syren, Eleanor, Bencoolen. Bombay, Hellas, Emily Jane, Carnatic, Good Success, Hannah, Stains Castle.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

In consequence of holydays for about ten days, there was no business going on and as yet few or no brokers or dealers have made their appearance. There are therefore few transactions to report and no variation in our quotations.

IMPORTS.

In Woollens and Cotton Goods nothing has been done.

Metals.—A parcel of Lead we hear has been purchased at about $ 6.

Straits Produce.—The importantion of Betelnut per Emma Eugenia consisting of about 300 Piculs we believe sold at Macao for $ 4. and the Pepper from 1 @ 2000 Piculs, a little under $ 7. The purchaser of both is the principal holder, and is desirous to support the market.

Rice,—is without alteration, but rather expected to advance a little.

Cotton.—Bengal and Madras are firmer from the short stock, and holders being firm, but no sales at an advance are reported. Of Bombay the sale of about 800 bales middling to fair quality at 8. has been announced within this day or two, but we believe it was actually made before the holydays, and the only actual sale since that, we know of, is of 200 of first quality at 9. —, prices being thus at about previous rates.

Opium.—The Ardaseer has arrived since our last with upwards of 170 chests Malwa from Bombay and we were glad to find by her advices that parties had already taken the alarm at the state of the trade here, the price there having suddenly fallen fully 100 Rs. and was declining, and we trust the same feeling will have influenced purchasers at the first Calcutta sale. Here the stoppages continues most complete, and on the coast almost equally so. The commissoner has not yet arrived. All is conjecture as to what measures he will adopt, but the most prevailing opinion is that he will do his utmost at first to check, preparatory ultimately if possible, entirely to eradicate the trade. Deliveries at Hongkong to the 15th: Patna old 2, new 17½; Benares new 2; Malwa 23; Total 45½ Chests.

EXPORTS.

Tea.—Nothing doing—the Chinese have scarcely yet returned to business, and foreigners show no disposition to purchase. Quotations are therefore merely nominal. A few green teas were bought previous to the holy-days for immediate shipment, but we have heard of no transactions since.

Nankin Raw Silk.—We have heard of no further purchases, nor do the accounts of beginning of October encourage speculation at the opening prices, for although there was no decline the market was heavy; about 300 bales have come down during the week.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS, for MAKING ADVANCES IN CHINA.

The Goods and Merchandize of Individuals intended for Consignment to England, repayable to the Court of Directors of the East India Company.

1st. The parties to whom Advances may be made shall agree that the respective Consignments be delivered into such Warehouses as the Court of Directors may approve: and that they be subject to the controul of the Court of Directors until the lien of the Company upon the Consignment shall have been satisfied.

2d Upon each Consignment, the value of which is to be ascertained by the authorized Agents of the East India Company, an Advance not exceeding three fifths of such value will be made.*

3d. For repayment of the Advance, Bills of Exchange to be drawn in triplicate, at six months' sight, at the rate per Spanish Dollar, notified in a separate advertisement.

4th. The parties will be required to place in the hands of the H. C. Agents, Bills of Lading of the Consignment and Policies of Insurance effected thereon, both in triplicate.† The bill of Lading must be drawn deliverable to the East India Company, or endorsed to the order of the East India Company. The Policies of Insurance must be effected in the name and on behalf of the East India Company, as the parties interested, or endorsed to their order, but persons desirous of effecting the necessary insurance in England, and of depositing the Policies in the Company's Treasury, will be allowed to do so.

5th. In case of default being made either in acceptance or payment of the Bills the Court of Directors to be authorized, in such manner and at such times as they may see fit, to sell the goods, for the purpose of repayin; the Company the amount of the Advances made thereon, including freight and any other charges or expenses which the Company may have incurred on account of the Consignment, together with interest, should any have accrued; the Company, on the other hand, allowing Discount, where any part of the proceeds shall be realized before the Bills fall due, and the settlement of either surplus or deficiency shall be made with the Consignor; and in India or China, by the Government or Agents from whom he received the Advance, at the rate of Exchange at which the Company may at the time be drawing bills upon such Government or Agents

6th. An Agent in England shall be appointed for each Consignment, to whom the Court of Directors shall be empowered to make over the goods, subject to all the conditions agreed upon with the Company, on payment of the Bills; and with whom they shall be authorized to transact generally all business relating to such goods. The Consignor shall be at liberty to make provision, in case of the party upon whom the Bill is drawn (being also the Agent) having failed, to accept the Bill, for the substitution of another Agent.

7th. After the arrival of the goods in England, and when they shall have been placed in such deposit as may have been agreed upon, the Agent may be put into possession of them before the Bills become due, upon the amount of such Bills (less Discount) being paid together with the Freight and any other charges and expenses which the Company have paid or may be subject to on account of the goods.

8th. The rate of Discount to be allowed by the Company shall be the same as that charged by the Bank of England; and in cases where Interest shall have accrued, such Interest shall be computed at the rate or rates per cent. at which the Company have allowed Discount during the period for which such Interest is chargeable.

9th Parties or their Agents will be required to insure the Goods from Fire, and deposit the Policies with the East India Company; such Insurance to to take effect from the date of the termination of the Sea Risk. Should however the Parties or their Agents fail to effect such Insurance, the East-India Company shall be at liberty to insure the Goods, the expense of which shall be reimbursed to them previously to their making over the Goods to those Parties or their Agents.

10. Parties receiving Advances, to address in each instance a Letter in quadruplicate to the Court of Directors, according to a form which will be furnished by the authorized Agents of the East India Company, signifying their assent to all the foregoing conditions, but more particularly for the purpose of expressly authorizing the sale of the goods by the Company (without either notice to or concurrence of any person whomsoever) at any period after default shall be made either in acceptance or payment of the Bills; also authorizing, in such cases, the repaying to the Company the advances made, either Principal or Interest, together with any other charges or expenses which the Company may have incurred in respect of the goods, and appointing the Agent in England for each transaction.

11th. Parties presenting Tea or Nanking Raw Silk for Hypothecation must give at least two days notice for the former, and one for the latter to the H. C. Agents, of the time at which they will be ready for examination; and in all cases the whole of the Chop of Tea or Bales of Silk so tendered must be produced marked and numbered; in the event of such Tea or Silk remaining in the Hong for more than three days subsequent to examination, notice must be given to the Agents, in order that they may cause the same to be re examined, if they deem it necessary.

12th. Non-resident Parties applying for Advances will be required to furnish their Bills with the Indorsement of a Firm established in Canton.

13th Blank forms of application for advances will be furnished by the H. C. Agents, and it is requested that the several particulars required therein may be accurately specified.

FORM referred to in the preceeding TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

To the Honourable the COURT OF DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

HONOURABLE SIRS,

WITH reference to the Terms and Conditions on which the Government. * by the Advertisement published in the Gazette on , have offered to make advances of Money on the security of Goods and Merchandize, we have the honour to state that, concurring in all those conditions, and availing ourselves of the offer of Government so made, we have drawn Bills of Exchange for £ in your favour, as undermentioned, † against our shipment of on the ship , upon which your Government of have advanced us Company's Rupees, &c

And we hereby agree, that the Consignment of in question by the said ship shall be delivered into such Warehouses as your Honourable Court may approve, and that the Goods therein comprised shall be subject to the control of your Honourable Court until the lien of the Company upon the consignment shall have been satisfied.

In case default shall be made, either in Acceptance or in Payment of the Bills in question, we hereby expressly authorize your Honourable Court, at any period after such default (without either notice to or concurrence on the part of any person whomsoever) to sell the Goods and to repay to the Company the amount of the Advances made thereon, by retaining from the Sale Proceeds the amount of Principal and Interest due upon the Bills (should any have accured), and of all charges; the Company, on the other hand, allowing us discount for any unexpired term the Bills may have to run at the time, or respective times, when the proceeds of the Goods shall be realized, and we consent that the balance of account, whether of surplus or deficiency, if settled in India or China, be paid at the rate of exchange at which you may at the time be drawing Bills upon your Government or Agents there.

We hereby further authorize your Honourable Court, on payment of the Bills to make over the goods, subject to any of the conditions which may then attach to them, to Messrs. , our Agents; with whom we further authorize you to transact generally all business relative to these Goods, and finally to settle the account relating to them

We also engage that our Agents in England shall effect an Insurance from Fire, upon these goods, and deposit the Policies with the East-India Company, such Insurance to commence from the date of the termination of the Sea Risk: and in the event of their failing to effect such Insurance we authorize your Honourable Court to insure the Goods, the expenses to be reimbursed to you previously to your making over the Goods or the Net Proceeds thereof.

The following Clause may be added or not, at the option of the Party.

Should, however, these gentlemen fail to accept the Bills which we have drawn upon them in your favour, we authorize you, in that case, to transact all business relative to these Goods with Messrs. instead of Messrs. and to settle with the former the account relating thereto.

We have the honour to be,
HONOURABLE SIRS,
Your most obedient Servants,

* Or Agents.

† The date and amount of each Bill of Exchange must be inserted at the foot of this letter, together with a reference to the Bill of Lading against which it has been drawn.

* In cases where the Agents see fit, they reserve to themselves the right of declining to advance upon any particular consignment.

The proportion to be advanced to be less than three fifths whenever circumstances may render such a course expedient.

† At least Ten per cent in excess of the advance to be covered by the Policy.

If more than three Bills of Lading are affirmed to, the same must be delivered to the Agents.

Chinese Usurpations.

From a Correspondent

Philantrophists have often charged civilized nations with their propensities for usurpation. Once in the possession of power and the means of destruction, they oppressed the weak and subjugated barbarian nations whilst taking possession of their territory and driving them back to the mountains and deserts of their native land. This does however not solely apply to Europeans, but to every other powerful people that have come in contact with savages. The Chinese have not been behind in aggressions, and in seizing upon the lands belonging to the aborigines. The poor Meaou-tsze and Yaou tribes would have to tell sorry tales about the rapacious ambition of the Chinese, if they were permitted to utter their complaints. In Formosa the aggrandizements of the Celestials are marked with blood, and present a fearful display of cruelties. A heartless military officer lately promised for every head of a native brought to him a reward and, the murders thus committed at the instigation of this bloodhound have been very numerous, and at the same time productive of terrible retaliation. The poor savages are fighting there for existence, and are likely to be overpowered. The all overwhelming influence however which China might have exerted upon southern Asia, has never crushed those nations, for otherwise the whole Transgangetic peninsula and the islands of the Archipelago might have come under the transforming influence of the Celestial Empire, much to the advantage of those countries. Attempts have been made for this purpose, and at the commencement of Kublai's reign the Chinese Mongol flag waved in Siam and on the coast of several of the larger islands. This state of things however lasted only a very short time; the conquerors were swept away by the climate, the enterprizing spirit became extinct, and there remained at the court a century afterwards scarcely the remembrance of the victories, which were so dearly bought. Had China possessed a naval power, and had the Government only been as high spirited as many of the native merchants, we might now see Borneo as thickly peopled and cultivated as Choosan. The enterprize to subjugate Japan, commenced by the Mongol conqueror, utterly failed from ignorance in the art of navigation. The Ming dynasty kept up some connexions with the south by taking several Rajahs who implored the protection of Heaven's son under its fostering care. Whilst the minister decided upon the fates of distant lands, he was even ignorant of their situation. The Emperor was delighted to see these tawny sons of the south in a prostrate attitude, and to confer an investiture of islands upon princes whose name had never been heard before. Thus the petty Rajahs of Solo referred their disputes to Nanking; the king of Acheen repeatedly dispatched a tribute-bearer to the throne, and the Malacca prince complained there openly about the violence of the Portuguese, who had just made their appearance in China. On the Eastern peninsula Chinese influence has always been paramount. Tunkin and Annam, though frequently shaking off the galling yoke of Chinese Mandarins, have nevertheless repeatedly fallen a prey to their wily neighbours. The northern Laos tribes have gloried in imitating the custom of the flowry nation and in receiving the laws from some petty officer on the frontiers. Several chiefs have the insignia of office from the Governor of Yunnan and consider themselves as Chinese magistrates. When last year some disputes about the succession arose amongst a tribe on the frontiers of Burmah, the Chinese marched a small force into the territory in order to keep peace amongst the parties. Those who live nearest to the frontiers have gradually been incorporated with the great nation, and their native soil now constitutes a Foo or Heen of Yunnan. The stubbornness of the Burmahs has greatly retarded the inroads of their neighbours, though some tribes, wearied of their haughty masters, have repeatedly implored the just rule of the sons of Han. Had Yunnan and Kwangse been more populous, the south would have yielded to the irresistible incubus with which a great and powerful nation must always press upon the weaker party. We have read a detail of the two campaigns under Keenlung undertaken to conquer Burmah and to take advantage of the troubles that then divided the unhappy country. If they speak true, it was the Imperial magnanimity that left these poor barbarians in the quiet enjoyment of their homes, and not the annihilation of the invaders, which made the enterprize miscarry. But this ill success has once for all blunted the ambition of the Mantchoos, and they are satisfied with ruling over cultivated fields, without coveting the jungles and swamps of the barbarians.

THE ILLANOONS.—The following particulars relative to the Illanoons, are derived from a source which may be relied on as authentic, and constitute perhaps the most recent information that can be laid before the public regarding the existing condition and habits of these marauders of the Sooloo Sea—

The people whom we call the Illanoons are a distinct race, inhabiting the line of coast comprised within the bight of the Bay of Illano, whence they take their name, in the island of Mindanao, the shore of which is there one continued line of mangrove and swamps. This coast soon communicates with an inland lake of immense extent, which they consider as their stronghold and home, and they are thence termed by the Spaniards in Manila. "Los Illanos de la Laguna," or, "The Illanoons of the Lake." In this place they build and repair their prahus, which they convey to and from the sea by means of ways or platforms constructed of bamboo and rattan placed on the yielding surface of the mangrove roots and branches, over which the vessels are hauled to and fro as occasion requires. On this lake too they reside on board of their prahus with their wives and families, and in short they here live apart as a separate and isolated community. Born and bred to a life of piracy they regard it merely as a means of living, and not as a criminal occupation—Nothing therefore that they meet with in the shape of a native vessel of these seas escapes their attack; but experience has proved that they are extremely quick and intelligent in discriminating and instantly avoiding a canvas sail, or any vessel of European appearance; and so dextrous are they that in a moment they lower mast and sail and are hauled in among the mangrove shores with which the innumerable islands thereabouts abound, and where they disappear and render further search after them unavailing. Thus, although the Manila government maintains a constant establishment at different points of Mindanao especially at Samboangan, it is but rarely that their felucas, or gun-boats, succeed in capturing any of the Illanoons. In the early part of this year however, two of their prahus were surprised and taken, and the crews of both, amounting to about sixty in all, are still in prison at Manila.

The distance to which the Illanoons extend their cruizes is shewn by the late capture off Tringanu, and it was the decided opinion of some Spanish naval officers at Manila, intimately acquainted with the habits of these people, that the prahus captured by the Diana had made their round south of Borneo to the coast of the Peninsula—it appearing that there is a piratical tribe on the North end of that island, equally daring and atrocious, between whom and the Illanoons there has long existed a deadly and inextinguishable enmity, and that the latter in consequence will never pass by the Northern route. But in the event of these two tribes of depredators meeting, it is said a most sanguinary conflict is certain to ensue, and so eager are they to gratify this mutual feeling of inveterate hostility that either of them will even quit sure objects of plunder to attack the other. The principal booty of the Illanoons in these expeditions is the unfortunate beings whom they make captive and sell on all parts of the Eastern and Southern Coasts of Borneo, and the Macassar Straits. To this they chiefly direct their attention after having supplied themselves with a sufficient number to pull at the oar, and do the other work of their prahus. They seldom burden themselves with any thing from the cargo of a prize excepting gold dust or other articles of considerable value and small bulk.

It has been very generally supposed that these Illanoons are subject to, and act under the directions of the Rajah of Sooloo, but from the information obtained by the Spanish authorities at Manila on the subject, there seems every reason to believe that such is not the case. The officers of that government who had been in communication with the Rajah, and who made themselves intimately acquainted with his situation, his resources, and his habits, represent him as possessing neither power nor influence over these people, who are a race purely piratical,—a distinct community of wild, ranging, predatory habits, dependent on no one, and acknowledging no external authority. It is not denied that they frequent the island of Sooloo as they please, quite unmolested and without hindrance of any kind, as they do also the numberless islets and mangrove banks (to which we give the name of the Sooloo Islands) supposed to be subject to the Rajah's sovereignty, and one of these called Bang-een-ghee, Eastward of Sooloo is a principal resort, from the convenience and facility which it affords for their predatory pursuits. It is principally Mangrove, grown upon Coral banks, and is well adapted for protection and concealment. The Spanish Naval Officers engaged in suppressing piracy among the Southern group of the Philippines and the Sooloo Sea, have witnessed at one time about 200 Illanoon prahus, great and small, off this island, and in attemptig to give chase with their Feluças, the pirates have anticipated all pursuit and disappeared in the most extraordinary manner, housing their masts and sails, and taking refuge among the mangroves. These haunts are compared by the Spanish officers to extensive nests or banks of rats, where they can fly from one refuge to another, setting at defiance all means that Europeans can in such situations avail themselves of for overtaking and crushing them.

The island of Basselan is also a place of frequent resort to the Illanoons. Some of its inhabitants likewise are pirates from their birth, and it is not unusual for them to identify themselves with the race of marauders. And although the whole Sooloo groop is subject to visits from them from time to time during their cruizes, they are not in the habit of resorting to any other fixed points except Basselan and Bang-een-ghee, the first of which is an island of very considerable extent. They generally obtain their supplies of ammunition &c., by trafficking with places of their acquaintance which are in communication with the various small Dutch settlements on the coast of Borneo, and the adjacent islands.

The coolness and audacity which the Illanoons sometimes evince are exemplified by the fact of their having been known to enter the Bay of Manila, passing the signal station on the island of Corregidor where two gun-boats are generally stationed, and to capture boats or small vessels within the Bay. It was indeed proved at the trial of the pirates brought in here by the Diana, that two boys had been taken out of a boat near Cavite, which is only eight miles from the town of Manila. From the Laguna which they inhabit, they have been known not unfrequently to push a passage in their prahus out to the Northward by a small river which runs from the lake into the sea at Cayyam, where there is a Spanish Settlement, a Fort, and always a Company of soldiers, whose random shots of musquetry, after getting clear, they have ridiculed by loud shouts amidst wild gestures of defiance. If they have reason to suspect that a particular look-out is kept for them on their passage to seaward, by the Spanish feluccas stationed at Samboangan and its neighbourhood, their quickness and penetration is incredible. They will move their prahus with caution along the edge of the mangrove banks by night, no matter for how short a distance at a time, and haul them up into an impenetrable concealment ere the dawn o day, and at last gain their object by persevering in their progress night after night, while look-outs are kept constantly on the edge of the mangrove banks unseen during the day.

The Spanish officers have indeed confessed that their attempts to capture the Illanoons have been almost uniformly foiled by their quickness, cunning, & sagacity,—and, strange as it may seem, this singular race of marauders, acknowledged foes to all they meet, through the advantages of locality, their own adroitness, the peculiar construction of their prahus, and other natural circumstances equally favourable to their lawless pursuits, maintain in spite of every thing a constant intercourse with their Home on the Laguna, almost without interruption.

So far is the Rajah of Sooloo from being able to exercise any authority over the predatory hordes of the Laguna, that it is said a Treaty entered into some years ago between him and the then governor of Manila, has become a subject of ridicule; as being made with an individual who was a mere cipher, and a Rajah but in name, possessing no control over those whom he calls his subjects, who disregard his authority, and yield him no allegiance.

The foregoing details, present some new features of predatory life in the Eastern seas, and will we think be perused with interest by our readers.—Sing. Free Press. 13th December.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Mr Editor,

We do not think probably of one important thing in connection with executing opium dealers in our square. Good Chinese authority states, that all condemned to death in future, for dealing in opium, must be executed in front of the Factories, it being a transaction in which Foreigners are concerned.

You see therefore the perfect inutility of hauling down flags, interfering with the officers in the discharge of their duty, or frightening the Hong merchants out of their senses, by menacing those, who acting as mere instruments of the Governor, yet endeavour to palliate the offence, which they unwillingly inflict, by selecting, as they did yesterday, the end of a street, and a moment of the day, when the Chinese would most likely be at their meals, for the execution.

Resistance manifests but too plainly our perfect impotence, and the events of the 12th December, teach, us that, instead of receiving sympathy at the hands of the rabble whom we pretend to despise, yet whose supposed interest in our favor, was then judged a matter of congratulation,—we on the contrary increase their contempt.

Abroad, we have no friends; the executions at which we take such umbrage are but the result of our own acts; the right of the Chinese Government to execute criminals where it pleases, we cannot question, however much we feel the cold blooded infliction of having it done at our Gates, and however just is our sensibility at the galling insult.

Let us ask ourselves this question. Were we not importers of opium, and were we not striving, daily to dispose of it, in the face of the multitude of edicts which we have seen issued against it, denouncing the traffic as not only illegal, but involving the lives of many natives—should we be compelled to witness the fronts of our Factories, turned into an execution ground? We invite the blow that strikes, and cry out when we feel it

To say, that the officers of Government are, or have been, interested in the trade, or that they enriched themselves from the fees it produced, is no excuse for us. We live under a despotic Government, and we should always be prepared to find, that those officers, who one day patronised the dealers, on another, denounce them as victims to the laws, and visit upon them their utmost rigor.

I have no desire to trespass longer upon your time, but, in conclusion, beg to intimate, that the quicker the Foreign Community abandon the opium trade, while matters are at the present stand, the fewer executions may they be obliged to witness at their doors. Yours truly, Canton, 27th February, 1839. P.

The Passage Boats.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce.
&c. &c

The several gentlemen of your hyporable Chamber having last year requested us to petition Government to allow a certain number of licensed boats for the convenience (of those) coming to or leaving Canton, we did so, and the great officers of Government were graciously pleased to grant our prayer; certain regulations were made respecting the examination of the licensed boats on entering and leaving (the river) which we handed to your honorable Chamber requesting you to act in accordance therewith. In the copy of the regulations passed by your Chamber for the management of the boats which we received on the 13th day of the 11th moon of last year we find the following: "The owners of the licensed boats must implicitely obey the instructions issued by the Chamber, both as regards their management, and the examination of them by the revenue officers." This distinctly implies their being examined on entering and leaving the river, and this you no doubt fully explained to the owners of the boats

Now, the late refusal of some of them to apply at the Custom Houses to be examined is a violation of your instructions. The object (of Government), in granting the licenses, was to prevent smuggling, but if the boats will not apply for examination, how can it be known whether they are engaged in smuggling or not? Is it not better then, where they are really guiltless of smuggling, to allow themselves to be examined, that their innocence may be manifested? The examination involves no more than a moment's delay; and should the Custom House people on false pretences, cause delay or trouble, the boats can always apply to us that we may petition Government to punish them. It is really exceedingly unreasonable and contrary to the regulations, for these boats to suppose or argue that because they have licenses and do not clandestinely enter or leave the port that there is no occasion for their being examined or for giving up their passports to be stamped and dated.

We now beg to hand you copy of an edict we have received from the Hoppo, which we request you will examine and obey. We further request that you will assemble the Boat owners and obtain their clear replies to the following question: Will they hereafter agree to obey the regulations and on entering and leaving, apply at the Custom Houses to be examined? Should any of them refuse their concurrence it is clear they intend to employ their boats in smuggling and we request that you will take away their license that we may deliver it up to Government and have the boat struck off the list, that some other respectable boat which you, in her stead.

As we are involved in the consequences of their refusal we have to request you will ascertain the reason why the said boats refused to be examined, and inform us of same that we may petition Government on the subject. It is for this we write and with compliments remain

February 21th, 18 9.

Yu, Collector of Customs at the Port of Canton &c. &c. proclaims to the Hung-merchants for their full infoamation:

Whereas a runner and clerk of the Bogue Custom House have presented a petition saying that on the 30th day of the 12th month af last year the "Licensed boat No. 5 belonging to Peirce" entered the Bogue when the runners went alongside to examine: and enquire why she did not stop at the Custom house to be duly examined; the foreigners replied "we have a license to run, and do not of our own accord clandestinely enter or leave the river: there is no occasion therefore to call at the Custom house to be examined" the said runners then requested the license, that the date might be filled in and the stamp affixed, but this they also refused, and would not allow the license to go out of their possession. The foreigners being determined to pass and the tide carrying them on, "we the said runners could not stop them, our boat being small and our men few, but now send up a true report of all the circumstances attending the said boats daring defiance of the laws, that you may act accordingly.

This coming before me the Hoppo. I have examined into the facts and find that in conjunction with the Governor I have already framed certain regulations for the licensed boats. In compliance with the Hong merchants petition I limited the number, selected and and numbered them, and gave them licenses to ply between Canton and Macao, directing the several Custom houses to examine them as they passed.

In consequence of the former report from the Bogue that the two boats belonging to Bovet and Byramjee (orig. Lumche) had not applied at that station to be examined, I forthwith issued my commands to you Hong-merchants to investigate and report at the same time informing the Governor of the circumstances. This is on record. Now the Bogue Custom house again petitions that the licensed boat No. 5 belonging to Peirce insisted upon entering the river without allowing herself to be examined.

I find that you Hong-merchants, conjointly with the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce, when you petitioned for licenses for a certain number of boats, stated that "should the licensed boats engage in smuggling Opium or any other illegalities, they shall be broken up and their licenses taken back from them, as a warning to the rest."—These licenses were given to prevent smuggling: but if after having gained her object and obtained her license, a boat in defiance of the law refuses to apply at the custom stations to be examined, how can we tell whether they have Opium or other smuggled goods on board, or not?

It is clear that these boats seeing that the Opium store ships have no vent for the drug in consequence of the late rigorous prohibition, are intent (under the pretence of carrying letters) upon smuggling it up into the Country. The indignation of the Son of Heaven has now no bounds and the laws are truly terrible and severe. If you the Hong-merchants earnestly endeavor to prevent such doings the evils will be cut off, and the morals of the people become pure

Having gained what they in conjunction with you consulted about, these disobedient and daring boats, under pretence of doing away with smuggling are actually carrying into effect their unlawful schemes, I truly loathe and detest (such conduct.) I find it stated, in the regulations, that should any boat clandestinely enter or leave the port without submitting to be examined, or sail by in the night without applying to be examined, or carry up Opium or other contraband goods or military weapons, she shall be seized, her cargo confiscated, and after a clear investigation be broken up and her license given to some other boat.

I have again requested the Governor to direct the military Officers of the Forts and cruisers to keep the most vigilant watch, to examine and seize, and now command you Hong-merchants to institute the strictest investigation respecting the conduct of the three boats belonging to Bovet, Byramjee and Peirce, what cargo they had on board, and why they refused to allow the Officers to search them, and stamp their passports, and forthwith report.

Haste! Haste! A special edict.

To the Honourable the Chamber of Commerce
&c. &c.

We have now received an edict from the Governor acknowledging our petition of yesterday in reply to His Excellency's commands to drive out of the Canton River all the unlicensed boats, and imperatively to insist on those, which have licenses, appling at the Custom House stations to be examined on entering or leaving the river. His Excellency expresses himself satisfied with our petition and directs us to inform the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce thereof for his information and obedience. His Excellency's commands are now really imperative and may not as in olden times be lightly glanced over: they must really be obeyed and the licensed boats must be directed to obey the late regulations on the subject, and apply at the Custom houses to be examined, when they will be permitted to proceed on their way; if they perversely refuse obedience thereto they must really be broken up, and we therefore sincerely trust that they will in future obey the regulations. We enclose copy of the edict requesting your concurrence.

We have also received an edict from the Hoppo in which His Excellency states that if hereafter any unlicensed boat come up to Canton she will be daringly infringing the established laws, (and must stand the consequences of her disobedience). He also states the 5 licensed boats must hereafter obey the regulations and apply at the Custom houses to be examined when they well be allowed to proceed on their way; if they do not all obey, the two boats, not yet licensed, will not be allowed to run as passage boats.

We request your attention and obedience thereto and with compliments remains, The Hong-merchants.

February 26th, 1839.

Having reported that we had, in obedience to His Excellency's commands, driven all the unlicensed boats out of the Canton river, and imperatively insisted on the licensed boats applying at the Custom houses for examination on entering or leaving the river, we received a reply from His Excellency in which he expressed himself satisfied with our report and commanded us to inform the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce of its contents for his obedience. The two unlicensed boats His Excellency desires us to bring up forthwith, and to report their arrival that they may be examined and stamped. He again issues strict orders to those boats already licensed to apply at the several stations for examination on quitting Canton for Macao or on arrival from Macao, in obedience to the fixed regulations, "should there hereafter be the least opposition the boats will according to the new regulations be broken up, as no violation of the laws will be permitted, but will on discovery be punished. Wait further orders from the Hoppo's Office."

S. FEARON,
Chinese Interpreter G. C. C

To the Hong Merchants.
Gentlemen,—

We do ourselves the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 24th inst. accompanying an Edict from the Hoppo regarding the licensed passage Boats.

It is with much regret that we hear of any of the Boats having thrown obstacles in the way of their examination by the proper authorities; but we feel convinced that such irregularity can only have arisen from some misunderstanding of the parties in charge of them, and not either from the Boats being engaged in illicit traffic, or from any other evil intention.

The men in charge of these Boats are natives of India, imperfectly acquainted with the language of other foreigners, or of the Chinese, and being of the lower orders, may not at first clearly understand the new regulations.

To prevent a recurrence of any ground of complaint, we have given written directions to the Owners of the Boats that they must be properly examined on coming to or quitting Canton; and further, that in order to enable the Custom House Officers at the Bogue to examine, on all occasions, when they may wish to do so, the Boats shall always anchor there for the space of one hour, giving the Officers every facility to inspect the Boats and the Baggage, should they come on board for that purpose.

We feel no doubt that these regulations will be found to answer every purpose; and, as it is of great importance to the foreign community that the Boats, whether they may be carrying passengers or letters, should be allowed to pass up and down free from unnecessary detention, we trust you will obtain orders to the Custom House Officers at the Bogue, directing them to proceed on board immediately on the Boat's arrival, that they may be enabled to prosecute their voyage without delay.

We are sir
H. H. LINDSAY.
Chairman.

Regulations for the LICENSED PASSAGE BOATS.

An arriving at or quitting Canton notice is to be given to the Chinese authorities, that the baggage of Passengers, or other articles sent on board or landed may be duly examined.

On passing the Bogue Ports, the boats are to remain as near as convenient to the Wangtong Fort for the space of one hour in order to give the Chinese officers ample time to come on and visit the Boat; should none come within that space the Boats are at liberty to proceed.

If the Licensed Boats engage in any smuggling transaction, they will according to agreement be liable to forfeiture should such facts come under the cognizance of the Chinese authorities, and should it come to the knowledge of the committee that any licensed Boat engages in illegal transactions either inside or outside the river, they will at once request that the license of such Boat may be withdrawn and transferred to some other.

The aid and cooperation of all Passengers is particularly requested towards the compliance with these regulations which are framed solely with a view to the public advantage.

Signed. W. SCOTT.—Secretary,
By order of the Committee.

Canton, 28th February, 1839.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 2nd March.

In our Canton Press Extra of 27th ult. we related how the authorities had succeeded to execute a criminal in front of the Factories. On the day following the execution the Hong-merchants called in a body on many of the most influential foreign merchants stating that they were deputed by the Kwangheep to apologize in a manner for this insult, in as much as that officer, being well aware of the disgust with which the foreigners viewed such exhibitions, chose a spot as distant as the ground allowed, from the houses, and not exactly opposite to any one of them, but facing China street, and that the execution in front of the Factories took necessarily place there in obedience to orders to that effect from the Emperor, which orders he could not disobey. It is impossible to know how much truth there may be in this, but it is more probable that the board of punishments as Peking having confirmed the sentence on Fung-angan it was carried into effect on a spot chosen by the Governor, particularly since in his answer to the late remonstrance from the Chamber of Commerce he expressed his intention of doing so in future. The letter from our Correspondent P. states, and, we believe, on good authority, that other executions will take place is the same manner, and we much fear that this will be so. In the meantime all the national flags have ceased to be hoisted to the no small astonishment of the Chinese, so that the object of by that means shewing them the sense foreigners entertain of the insult, has been attained. This is all we fear that foreigners can do—as to opposing the authorities by force of arms, the attempt would most likely lead to the most disastrous consequences nor is it likely that the community here, in a doing, would eventually be therein assisted by the Governments at home. The present state of the Opium-trade seems to justify the supposition that though probably not suppressed altogether, Canton will cease to be its centre, and it will in future be carried on by vessels fitted out for the purpose, disposing of their merchandize to Chinese smuggler on the coast unconnected with the regular commerce of Canton. At present uncertainty still prevails to a great degree as to the measures the Chinese will ultimately take, nor can we arrive at much certainty before the arrival of the commissioner, who, it is said, has sent an official communication that he will arrive in Canton in about ten days; the return therefore of his having been here some days into nito, or of his being expected every moment at Macao seems to have been without foundation. No accounts have yet been received of the affray on the east-coast we mentioned in our Extra in which Chinese were said to have lost their lives, and is therefore to be hoped that it will turn out more fabrication. The preparations of the Government to proceed offensively against the fleet at Hong kong continue however, and we hear that they have purchased four cannons from the Portuguese Government, and have got some of their soldiers instructed in the firing of them. We do not suppose that they actually intend to make use of these preparations but that they may them rather for intimidation The Hongkong fleet is closely watched by a number of war boats, which render all communication with native boats exceedingly difficult; such in fact is the terror with which they have impressed the Chinese that the ships at Hongkong are dependent on Macao for their provisions; most of the vessels there have now we hear, received directions from their agents to change their anchorage, but it is no yet known whether they will go

The letters by the Lady Grant have not yet been received, but the quantity of Opium to come immediatly is said to be very large. The overland mail of the end of October had not reached Bombay at the time of her sailing.

In the Newyork Morning Herald of 18th October brought by the Panama, and kindly lent us, we find a proclamation form lord Durham, dated 9th October, in which that Nobleman resigns his office of Governor of the Canadas. The document itself we are, from its great length unable to give, but the reason of his resignation he states to be the want of cordial support of his measures by H. M. Government, and the annulling by Ministers of the first and most important act of his lord-ship after his arrival in Canada brought to the Minister's notice. This act was the banishment of a number of persons imprisoned for high-treason, to the Bermudas.

We have been kindly favored with the following particulars of the loss of the American Brig Griffon at Mazatlan, by which her Captain unfortunately lost his life. It will be seen that the hurricane which caused the disaster was of very short duration, only fifty minutes having elapsed between its commencement and the total wreck of the vessel.

"The brig Griffon, captain W. C. Little, lying in the port of Mazatlan moored in eleven fathoms of water with an anchor and thirty fathoms chain on the starboard, and an anchor and forty five fathoms chain on the larboard bow. There was no appearance of bad weather until the morning of the 1st November when in the words of the protest made by Mr. Mahoney, mate of the brig, "at about three A. M. a light breeze sprang up from the eastward; at half past three it came on to blow a strong gale; at a quarter to four the wind shifted to south east and increased, paid out more chain on the starboard anchor; at four A. M. a heavy sea running, paid out all the chain; at ten minutes after four both anchors ahead dragging, the vessel shipping great quantities of water, the gale still increasing until it blew a hurricane; at about a quarter after four the starboard chain parted, and successively the larboard one, at the same time, the gale still blowing with great violence the wind shifted to south west and at twenty minutes after four A. M. the vessel struck on a reef of rocks on the east side of Creston Island, the second stroke parted her about midships, all the masts went by the board at the same time, carrying with them the Captain, three men and a boy; the man and boy succeeded in reaching the shore, but Captain Little disappeared and has not since been found; the remainder of the crew succeeded in getting on shore on the after part " " of the wreck and at day light commenced saving such of the Treasure and other property as was in their power."

From the correspondence between the Hong-merchants and Chamber of Commerce it will be seen that some of the licensed boats have refused to wait at the Bogue to have their passports examined. We believe that the inconsiderate impatience of some of the passengers has been the cause of this disregard of one of the conditions under which these boats are allowed to run, and we hope that the same may not recur again, that the foreign community may not be exposed to the loss of a very valuable privilege which they now enjoy by the license having been granted to these boats. Owners of unlicensed boats still at Whampoa have received intimation from the Hong-merchants immediately to take them out of the river.

Mr. Dempster has requested us to state that amateurs of boatsailing are advised that he is willing to wager his new boat against $300 that she will prove the best sailor on a wind.

The following letter, (if not exactly a verbatim it is substantially a correct copy) has been addressed by the British merchants to H. M. second Superintendent, and it is much to be hoped that the request therein contained will be acceded to, it being not only desirable that a ship of war may always be on this station, but particularly so at this moment, when the preparations of the Chinese give every reason to suppose that they meditate an attack upon the Hong-Kong fleet. Mr. Johnston's answer will also be found below.

To ALEXANDER ROBERT JOHNSTON, esq.
His Majesty Second Superintendent of Trade,
&c., &c., &c.

Sir,—Information having been received of the arrival of H. M. Sloop of War "Larne," in the Macao Roads, also that her stay there was expected to be very short; We, the undersigned British merchants, respectfully request you will convey to H. M. Note. Above rates are from 20th Oct. to 20th April annually: during remaining 6 months the premiums are somewhat higher. Risks on Blocks are $ 9 per Cent per annum, $ 4½ for 6 months, $ 2½ for 3 months and $ ½ per month.

The Local Insurance Offices grant Policies payable in London, Calcutta and Bombay, or in Canton.

WHAMPOA PORT CHARGES, &c.

1st class ves. measg. 1600 cubits & upwards pay 0.7874756 of a Tl. per cubit.
2nd ,, ,, ,, 1200 do. & under 1600 ,, 0.7221091 ,, ,,
3rd ,, ,, under 1200 do. 0.5062341 ,, ,,

N B. The cubit is 14⅛ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4320; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Comprador or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Taels or $ 2223. Linguists fees $ 173½ and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $ 5 to $ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939.50., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 250—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There has been rather more demand for both grey and white LONGCLOTHS within this day or two, but without any material alteration in price. grey selling at from 3. 90 @ 4.10 and the white at 4. 20 @ 4. 30 A few thousand pieces of the grey have been disposed of, but the sale of white has been more limited. They are required for the boats proceeding to the northward COTTON YARN—the only sale we hear of is of about 300 bales, low numbers, we believe Nos 18 @ 24, of low quality at 22 @ 24 $—this article is without improvement.

WOOLLENS.—Previous prices are obtainable for SPANISH STRIPES but the demand is not brisk. We hear of only one or two small sales of a few hundred pieces at 1.30 @ 1.35 LONGELLS may be quoted nearly ¼ dollar lower; a parcel of about 6000 Pieces of good quality and assortment having been sold during the week as low, we understand, as 7.60 @ 7.65 at 3 months credit

METALS.—IRON is in demand at our quotations from the very short supply LEAD without improvement but the principal holder appears inclined to support the market.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—We hear of no further transactions and prices for all descriptions may be quoted as before. the supply being moderate.

RICE.—without alteration.

COTTON.—There was a little more business doing in the beginning of the week, but the arrival of the David Scott from Bengal with 5000 bales and two or three more from that side and as many from Bombay being reported at hand the market is rather flatter, particularly for the Bombay kinds of which we hear of only sales of one or two small parcels at about previous prices. In Bengal a sale of about 1400 bales of middling to fair quality is reported at 10.2 and one of 800 @ 10.0 of superior quality as high as 10.8. Madras may be quoted a little higher, 9.8 being offered for the best quality, but there have been no sales, we believe.

OPIUM.—We have no alteration whatever to notice in the state of the Opium-trade, except that the deliveries on the East and West-coast have been checked as effectually almost as at Lintin. The Commissioner has not yet arrived, but the Chinese all appear to think that the most rigorous measures will be acted upon. The Lady Grant is in from Bombay with about 800 Chests, but the Syren from Bengal of which apprehensions are entertained, nor any of the Clippers with the Opium of the first sale.

EXPORTS.

TEA.—The only transactions during the week have been purchases of about 3,000 Chests Young Hyson and a few Imperials and Gunpowders of the lower descriptions, all probably for America. The price asked for Twankay is still considerably higher than purchasers are willing to pay, and for Hyson there is no demand.—Reports say that not a single chop of Congou has changed hands since the holidays and the business done in other black Teas is wholly unimportant.

NANKIN SILK.—about 4 @ 500 bales more of Silk have been purchased during the week at about the opening prices, say from 510 @ 550.

The Philippine Islands.

Art. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Don Marinas De Mergs, De Tello, &c. Continued from A. D. 1595 to 1624. From the Chinese Repository for January, (Concluded from the last Canton Press.

From this triumph, the governor returned with fresh ardor to the plan of driving the Dutch from their positions to the southward. The interval to A. D. 1617 was employed in naval preparations, when the expedition, consisting of six large ships and a number of small vessels, and carrying 2000 Spaniards, sailed tor the Moluccas, commanded by the governor in person. The Dutch fleet, however, gave the Spanish no opportunity for a naval fight, and de Silva saw reasons for not venturing an attack on Amboyna. After some inconsiderable acquisitions on Gilolo, &c, the squadron returned with but little glory to Manila. The departure of de Silva and the subsequent destruction of several of his ships by wreck, left the Dutch free to strengthen themselves in their new possessions As they pressed upon Ternate and Tidore, the governors at these settlements, appealed for succor to their superiors at Manila, and these in their turn urged the necessity of a strong cooperation for the destruction of the common enemy, on the vicerégal representative at Goa. The envoys of de Silva were successful in this suit, and four large Portuguese ships sailed in May 1614, to join the Spanish fleet at Manila. Their progress was so slow, that they determined, on reaching Malacca, to winter there. This port was soon after invested by the fleet of the king of Acheen, and one of the four ships was burned, in the action which followed. Next came a Dutch fleet, and its repeated attacks resulted in the destruction of the three remaining ships destined to cooperate with de Silva. Intelligence that this reinforcement was on its way had, however, reached Manila, and every nerve was strained to equip a powerful squadron, the largest indeed ever seen at the islands. By December 1615, ten ships (the largest of 2000 tons), carrying 5000 men and 300 pieces of cannon, were ready for sea, and with Portuguese reinforcements this seemed sufficient to sweep the Dutch from the Archipelago. The squadron from Goa, however, did not arrive, and de Silva determined to seek them at Malacca. He had no sooner set sail, than Manila was thrown into confusion by the sudden appearance of a Dutch fleet of four ships at the mouth of the harbor. This squadron had come out by Cape Horn, and after doing some mischief on the coasts of South America, had crossed the Pacific, and now made a most unwelcome visit. The extensive preparations of the governor had exhausted the resources of the city, and had the Dutch been aware of its destitution both of men and arms, and made a sudden attack, they might have made themselves its masters. But after lying at anchor ten days, they weighed and sailed for Ternate.

Meantime the fleet of de Silva pursued its course, and arrived safely at Malacca, the last of February. Here the fate of the Goa fleet was learned, and here a still more sad event awaited the expedition. Its able and brave commander—the originator and soul of the whole—sickened and died, after a short illness, the 19th April. Disheartened by this irreparable loss, the armament returned to Manila, without attempting anything, and with its reappearance, vanished all the high wrought expectations, its originators had cherished of seeing the Spanish arms extended over the whole Archipelago.

In the same year that Catholicism lost one of its ablest champions in de Silva, it was delivered from one of its most cruel persecutors, Dayfu, the usurping emperor of Japan. It will be remembered, that it was to this person, as his guardian, that Taiko when dying committed his infant son. When the imperial ward became old enough to penetrate the ambitious designs of his guardian, he quarrelled with him: and the Catholic fathers, on the division of parties which then took place, ranged themselves on the side of the lawful heir of the throne. After some years of confusion, Dayfu resorted to a treacherous composition, by which he pretended to resign the regency, and to retire to his own feudal domain. A period of quiet followed, when Darfu, seeing his young sovereign off his guard, fell on him at Osuca, and in the conflict which ensued the unfortunate prince disappeared from the scene, and his real fate was never known.

The usurper was now master of the country, and it was not long before the Catholic priests and their followers felt the full weight of his arm. A general persecution arose, and the only coursen its cruelty offered, were death, concealment, or exile. Macao and Manila were filled with the fugitives, including among their number some numbers of the noblest feudal families in Japan. Some of these had already died abroad, some had ventured to revisit their native country in disguise, when the death of Dayfu gave the rest of the band of exiles liberty to return.

The intelligence of the death of de Silva reached Spain early in 1617, and Don Alonzo Fazardo was commissioned to succeeded him in the government of the Philippines. It was the king's wish that he should carry with him a force sufficient to decide the sovereignty of the eastern seas, but the state of Spanish affairs at the period was unfavorable, and Don Alonzo came out with a small suite, arriving at Manila in July, 1618. Three months before his arrival, the Real Audiencia had been compelled to exert itself to repel a Dutch fleet of ten ships, which appeared at the entrance of the bay. In this they had been successful, destroying four of the blockading squadron, but unfortunately the Spanish fleet, proceeding in its turn to the southward, was completely scattered in a storm.

Don Alonzo proceeded to carry out his instructions for the relief of the natives, &c., but was unable to check the Dutch in the ascendancy they were gaining from day to day. Their squadrons continued to hover about Manila, as well as to frequent the entrance to the Straits foSt. Bernardino, in order to capture the galleons on thier way from New-Spain. Unable to shield themselves by more military measures, the people of Manila placed the galleons heneceforth under the especial protection of San Nicolas de Tolentino, and the viceroy of Mexico ordered that they should take sometimes the southern route by the Straits of St. Bernardino, sometimes the northern by the Bashee passage, keeping their courses secret until they had sailed.

The first years of Taxardo's government were marked by the founding of the convent of Santa Clara at Manila; the quelling of disturbances in Leyte and Bobol; the establishment of a permanent post on Paragua (Palawan); the successful prosecution of the Catholic missions in Zambales, Calamianes, &c., &c. To these enterprises, there was added, soon after Taxardo's arrival, an embassy to Japan. The son of Dayfu, had however resolved to tread in his father's footsteps, and though the Spanish envoys were received with attention, their presents were rejected, and their suit for renewed intercourse unconditionally refused.

In the summer of 1622, the government of Macao, was called on to defend the settlement from a Dutch invasion, planned, say our authorities, under disappointment at the failure of their previous designs on the Philippines, and in expectation of it, a petition was forwarded to Manila, for further aid. A small Spanish force was accordingly dispatched, but before its arrival, the Dutch had made their descent, and met with a brave repulse. Landing with 900 troops and many Japanese and Malay auxiliaries, they were encountered by the Portuguese, without the gates, and driven to their shipping with heavy loss. The attrack not being renewed, the Spanish subsidy reembarked for Manila, but being carried by stress of weather to Siam, their ship and company were conspired against, by a Japanese and Siamese party, and captured and cut off.

About the same time, a tragic event took place at Manila, which contributed to bring the administration of Taxardo to a melancholy close. Married to a Spanish lady of noble birth, bun of little fidelity, he traced her to the house where the parties allowed her for confession, poignarded her with his own hands. The sacrifice to injured honor once made, Faxardo sunk into a deep melancholy, and after two years of sorrow and suffering, died in August A. D. 1624. Laid by the direction of his will in the Augustine chapel, by the side of her he had both loved and immolated, he closed his passionate, but sad career, and with him closes the first century of Spanish connection with Eastern Asia.

Bay of Fooning-foo.

From a Correspondent.

Few ports on the Chinese coast are so little known as the Bay of Fooning foo in Fokien. It resembles a great lake interspersed with numerous islands of a most fantastical shape, whilst the back ground of the main is remarkable for the high towering mountains that run towards the Booe hills. The city from which this inlet has received its name is situated in Lat. 26° 51', not far from the frontiers of Keangse. Being separated from the adjacent territory by almost inaccessible mountains, it is a very insulated spot. The inhabitants differ from their countrymen of the same province by being devoid of that enterprizing spirit which prompts them to visit the most distant regions in pursuit of gain. But they are at the same time more simple in their manners, and less given to those vices which constitute the bane of commercial nations. When arriving in these quarters, one is led to believe, that the craggy cliffs and barren mountains are only the habitation of wild beasts, but the solitude which reigns around is soon broken by approaching nearer the valleys, from whence swarms of human beings issue. The pine is the only tree that thrives well on the ridges, and though the tea plant is cultivated, it can by no means be said to flourish, though nearly in the same latitude as the Booe hills. It is perhaps the want of skill on the part of the natives and not an ungrateful soil to which the small success in raising this useful shrub may be ascribed. The islands here about constitute the habitations of many thousands fishermen and peasants who are less under the rod of the mandarins than the people on shore. Free and courteous in their intercourse with strangers, they live unmolested uhtil the naval officers pay there a visit to exact the annual tribute. Since the minority of Kanghe, when the guardians issued orders that all the inhabitants of the coast and islands should retire for several miles into the interior, it has become illegal to colonize on the islands. Since the revocation of this arbitrary edict however, only a small number of Chinese have been allowed to cultivate the soil, and to build huts, and the commanders of the naval station are answerable for the due observance of this law. As however the islanders will increase in spite of all regulations, they must fee their superiors, and for this purpose the men of war approach their shore to claim their due. On some islets the number of colonists during the winter is very inconsiderable, but as soon as the spring commences they flock thither in very great numbers to recommence their agricultural pursuits. Few earn more than to satisfy their immediate wants, and a Chinaman whose greatest virtue is contentment with his lot, does not grumble if he has only sufficient sweet potatoes boiled in the pure element to make a hearty meal. There are excellent anchorages for vessels, sheltered against all winds, but the best having never being surveyed has some hidden dangers, and great caution ought to be used by those who, for the first time, visit these waters. A rear admiral with a small squadron has the command of this bay, but he seldom leaves his snug harbour to brave the boisterous sea. The present one is rather a stupid man who has very little cruized beyond his own jurisdiction, and only occasionally visits the neighbouring metropolis to be a spectator at the annual review.

British Opium Smugglers.—It is an old and sensible observation that the world is a strange compound of wisdom and folly. Every day we have glaring instances of an inconsistency in the actions of societies and communities, which, if exhibited by an individual, would inevitably consign him to an abode in a Lunatic Asylum.

We were led to the above reflection by some paragraphs which have recently appeared in certain of the English papers, relative to the endeavor to force the trade of opium in the celestial empire, contrary to the open mandates of the Emperor—mandates founded on the best and most enlightened principles.

All who are familiar with the dreadful effects produced by the excessive use of opium—effects ten times more to be deprecated than those attendant on the immoderate use of spirituous liquors—must respect the motives which have induced the Emperor of China to forbid the importation of this baleful drug into his extensive dominions. The opium trade has, however, long been the most profitable branch of commerce between the British East Indies and the Celestial Empire. The christian subjects of the British Government have held the monopoly of this trade, and its suppression, of course, interferes greatly with their gains.—Behold them, therefore, not content with smuggling the forbidden poison into the Chinese ports, but actually equipping vessels of war to attack the revenue boats whose duty it is to enforce the laws of the empire.

Opium has thus been carried violently and by force of arms into the heart of the Celestial Empire, by the subjects and citizens of a nation whose efforts in the cause of temperance have made them remarkable to the whole world—whose exertions in effecting the abolition of slavery have involved them in great trouble and expense, and whose tenderness to ultra sectarianism has been a matter of history since the days of Oliver Cromwell. Nor can this open violation of moral and international law be regarded merely as the act of private individuals, since, in such cases, it is the duty of the government to interfere—to take an active part in the suppression of such enormities. This duty they have neglected, and by that neglect encouraged the most lawless and unprincipled traffic the imagination can suggest. And this, too, at the very time that the same government has been and is exerting every nerve, from motives of mistaken philanthropy, to abolish slavery in the West Indies—an experiment already attended with a train of difficulties and disasters which will soon entirely destroy the prosperity of those Islands under the British sway.

What will be the course of the Emperor of China in the present exigency it is difficult to determine. The most violent acts in so aggravated a case could hardly be blamed. Some have suggested that the exportation of tea to England will be prohibited. If so, very serious results may be following. The loss of the tea trade would be an immense injury to British commerce. The present condition of affairs is remarkable, and adds another instance to the many on record of the marvellous inconsistency of human nature.—N. Y. Eve Star.

English Market.

LONDON, 26th October, 1838.

The Quarterly Tea Sales, which began on the 1st instant, finished to-day—they comprised

183,305	packages black	=	13,130,350 lbs.
65,215	,, green	=	3,618,105
246,520			16,748,455

As the quantity put up so much exceeded that of July, say 16.748.455 lbs. against 14,135,000 lbs. and only 4.351,000 lbs. then met with buyers, we could but expect dull sales, and very great reserve on the part of the dealers, even if some reduction in the previously ruling prices should be submitted to.

The Sales commenced very heavily—a disposition to support prices was evinced, but on the third day the importers submitted to the biddings in most instances, and thus allowing their Teas to be sold at prices that were considered to be scarcely remunerative on the most advantageous purchases at Canton; the dealers bought with confidence, but with great caution as to price, principally of common and good Congous when in course of sale, and also privately, of many that had passed, to an exteit far beyond an average Quarter's consumption—and towards the close of the Sales there was an improvement of ¼d. to 1d. per lb. on these descriptions, and ½d. to ¾d. per lb. on Twankays—but with none on the blackish leaf and superior Congous, the sale of which has been very limited, and thus the qualities that have always been relied on as the most likely to be currently demanded, are left in a state of greater depression than any others, and the relative situation they held two years ago as to common Congous, is reversed.

These Sales shew us that quantity will govern prices, the lowness of which has induced the dealers to buy largely—but we have yet to learn how they will follow up their purchases, should the next Quarterly Sales be proportionately great:—the rule that applies to all other articles of commerce must affect Tea—viz. Stock—Supply—Consumption.

We remark in these Sales an increased demand for Yonng Hyson,—a reduced one for Hysons—a neglect of fine Souchongs and Pekoes.

The result shews a disposal of

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CAPT. PARRY, DATED HONG KONG, 2ND MARCH, 1839

"As to the reports of Hong Kong annoyances prevalent at Canton, all are not true. The Mandarin Junks have been of late more numerous than usual, and have prevented our usual enstomers from coming off so frequently. A few grogshops that furnished drunken sailors on Sundays with Samshoo, have been burnt, a very good riddance. This has been the amount of all the great annoyances you have heard of. The mandarin people are civil enough to us. I have heard of five rafts preparing to destroy us and we have been on our guard against them. I am of opinion they intend no such measures; and we need do nothing harsh, while they are quiet. We had messages from the large mandarin yesterday and to day, asking us to move for two or three weeks any where we please. His opinion is the commissioner will be down in about seven days; and he is anxious for our disappearance from the inner waters. We intend leaving on Mouday morning, and looking out for some place in the outer waters. I think obout the South end of Lantao."

REPORT OF THE 1ST OPIUM SALE IN CALCUTTA.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to wait on you with the Result of the H. Co's First Opium Sale held this day, Patna opened at 915, declined successively to 850, at which rate 70 to 80 lots were realized, and subsequently attained 870; the first portion of the Sale was steadily maintained with a slight fluctuation of 5 to 10 Rs. per Chest; after the division the Drug opened at 850 and rapidly declined to 815, at which price the greater portion continued realizing, the biddings were extremely languid, in consequence of the principal purchasers evincing no anxiety to secure their quantity. Benares opened at 775, fell successively to 705, gradually advanced to 755, and declined to 735 until the conclusion. Biddings in this quality were more animated than the preceding, Native Speculators entered in both descriptions of the Drug to a considerable extent, with prospect of realizing here at lucrative prices, as they anticipated the next arrivals to convey intelligence of a re-action in your market.

The immediate exports from hence by the following Clippers may be estimated at 5250 Chests of both qualities, as hereunder:

Gentlemen,—I have had the honor to receive your letter to the address of Mr. Johnston upon the subject of Her Majesty's Sloop "Larne's" continuance on this station: and in reply I beg to acquaint you that I had already moved Captain Blake to remain for the purpose of affording me an opportunity to communicate with the British Indian Government, and the commander in chief, from this place.

The period of her further delay must be regulated with careful attention to the orders under which that Officer is acting in the furtherance of the other exigencies of the Public service; as well as by circumstances on the spot of which I am not yet in a situation to judge.

I may observe, however, that my chief object in requesting Captain Blake to remain, was to enable me to report to the authorities above mentioned; in order that such immediate and effectual steps may be taken for the protection of British interests in this quarter as the emergencies of the case appear to them to demand.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient Humble Servant.

Gentlemen,—I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 26th Ulto, to the address of the Deputy Superintendent and I beg to acquaint you that it is not my intention to hoist the British Flag at Canton in the present posture of circumstances.

I am sensible, Gentlemen, of the extreme hazard to which the lives and property of the whole Foreign Community are exposed by the recurrence of so dismal and exciting an event as that which forms the subject of your letter; And it will be my duty to make an early communication to Her Majesty's Subjects in explanation of the proceedings I propose to take for leading the Governor to refrain from measures that cannot fail to burden His Excellency and His Government, with the responsibility of some terrible catastrophe.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Your Obedient Humble Servant.

THE OPIUM TRADE.—The attention not only of the commercial community of China and India, but of England and America also has lately, more than before, been drawn to the anomalous state in which this enormous trade finds itself, and to the dangers to which it has been exposed during the last two or three years, and which are greater at the present moment than ever. It is well known that the importation of Opium into China from India, is by no means of a recent date, it having been for many years an emolument of the Company's servants in India, before, attracted by the great profits therefrom derived, the Government of India took it, in 1773, into their own hands, and have ever since kept it as a strict monopoly, deriving therefrom an immense revenue, which has, with little interruption gone on increasing to meet the encreased demand in China. We find that before the year 1767 (See Phipp's Commerce of Bengal) the imports into China did not much exceed 200 chests, but that in that year already 1000 chests were imported, and it is probable that it must have very much increased within the next five or six years, for then it attracted the cupidity of the Bengal Government, and the trade became a Government Monopoly which it has now continued to be during near seventy years. Up to the year 1826 it appears that the Company did not greatly increase the quantity brought into the Calcutta market, this varying from 3300 to 5000 chests per annum, but the profit had become much greater, the price being three times as much as it had been 25 years before.* In the mean time the monopoly of the Company was threatened by competition from some of the free native states, and by Opium from Turkey, and this as well as the Malwa Opium had for some time enjoyed the advantage of high prices caused by the restriction of the quantity produced for the Company. In 1822 already we find† the quantity of Malwa Opium imported from Bombay and Damaun to amount to 3865 chests, whilst that from Bengal during the same year was only 3293 chests, and the Bombay price in that year was rather more than 2000 Rs. per chest, whilst it is supposed that the drug may be produced at the small price of 1 0 Rupees, thus permitting the native princes to gain enormous profits, and to undersell the Company whenever this was desirable. This, as well as the increasing demand in China seem to have caused the Company to encrease the quantity annually made, and they have continued acting on this plan ever since the season of 1826-27, until within the last 12 years they have increased the quartity from not quite 4000 chests to 20,226 chests to be brought forward this year. The Malwa production has kept pace meanwhile with that of Behar and Benares, and a quantity equal to the Bengal drug is ready to come from Bombay and Damaun this season—making a total of about 40,000 Chests, whilst 19 years since the quantity exported from Calcutta and Bombay did not exceed 6500 chests altogether.

From the very beginning of this singular trade the Peking Government has opposed it by edicts, and these became more frequent as the government became aware of its annual encrease, and justly looked upon it as not only pernicious to the moral and temporal welfare of its subjects, but as on an evil which threatened to empoverish the Empire. It is singular however, that with a few trifling exceptions, such as now and then seizing a few native smugglers, no active measures were ever taken for the suppression of the trade until within about two years ago. Up to 1823 the deliveries of Opium from Whampoa were as regular as since that time they have been from Lintin, and the Cum-sing-moon and Cap-suy-moon, whither the receiving ships were then from persecutions suffered at Whampoa obliged to proceed. It is true that the trade was every now and then subjected to temporary stoppages and embarrassments, which sometimes assumed the appearance as if they were caused by measures from Peking, but they were invariably found to proceed from the machinations of the lower Government-officers, who attempted to raise the fees regularly paid them for the permission of the traffic. Thus, it will be seen that, though the Imperial Government professed itself inimical against the Opium trade, it was carried on entirely by means of the connivance of it's officers, nay, they became at length the smugglers themselves, receiving the Opium from on board the Ships at Lintin, into the Government cruizers, and delivering it to the dealers or traders. Until within the last two years foreigners did not themselves attempt to smuggle—they merely delivered from on board their ships—as soon as the Opium was over the side it was on account of the Chinese purchaser. However, notoriously illegal the trade was, it is yet no less notorious, as appears from what we have said on the subject, that not only was it connived at but even protected by the local authorities, and it may be attributed chiefly to their intrigues in favor of a practice by which they were gainers of immense sums, that the Imperial threats were ever set aside. In fact it is said that the boats employed by the Chinese Government, nominally on the preventive service, were let out by their Commanders for the transport of Opium for very high sums monthly, and such was the avidity with which the mandarines watched a trade which they had succeeded in making their own, that it was next to impossible for the natives to smuggle without their connivance; the mandarines had a regular price, which was fixed every season, and varied, we believe, from ‡20 to 50 a chest.

The great increase of the production of the drug both in Malwa and for the Company had rendered it for some time difficult to dispose of the whole quantity at one spot, and then attempts were made to find other markets for it. Accordingly a vessel was fitted out to take the drug to the East and North-coasts, but it was only after repeated attempts, the first of which were by no means successful, that the trade on the East-coast became regularly established, and from four to six vessels were until within the last years engaged in that trade.

At length however it appears that Chinese statesmen became seriously alarmed at the growing evil, and if we are to believe some of the documents published by them on that subject, the vice of intoxication by smoking Opium began to invade every rank of society; even women were known addicted to it, nor can we wonder that it should have become so general when we take into account the enormous quantities annually imported to the value of 17,000, 000 of Dollars, and the powerful narcotic qualities of the drug. The Government at the same time saw millions upon millions of silver disappear from the country and from it's scarcity, the circulating medium (cash, a small coin of a very base metal) became depreciated, so much so that whilst heretofore a Tael of Silver might be bought for 1000, it was now worth 1500 cash and upwards. These evils were all produced by a trade from which the Government drew no immediate advantage; the importation of the article being altogether prohibited, no duties of course were levied on it. The statesmen at Peking were divided on the matter; some thinking that the use of Opium being so widely spread it would be impossible to stop it's importation, and that under such circumstances it would be wise to legalize the importation, and levy a duty on it. The Vice-President of the sacrificial court entertaining these views, drew up a memorial‡ which was presented to the Emperor, and by his Government referred to the consideration of the provincial Governments. It was at that time the opinion of many that, had Hew nae tsze not been well assured that his recommendation of importing Opium legally, would be well received and acted upon, he would not have ventured upon giving it, and speculation in the article here increased immediately. The Governor of Canton reported favorably on this memorial|| but in Peking itself it found much opposition, and the censor Heu kew tseen drew up a memorial combating the views of the Vice-President, and insisting on the total suppression of the trade§. Choo tsun and Wang ping followed on the same side, and it appeared then that the Government at Peking favored the opinion of the latter, whose memorials were also sent to the Governor of Canton to report upon. Choo tsun and Heu kew had, it appears, obtained very particular information as to how the trade was carried on, and gave in their memorials the names of the foreigners engaged in it, and it became soon apparent that they were the more powerful party by the Governor here publishing an edict ordering a number of foreign residents, supposed to have been engaged in the foreign Opium-trade, to leave the Country ¶ This, though it at first created a good deal of sensation, was soon forgotten, but meanwhile rigorous measures were resorted to at Lintin, and all the brokers fled, so that the trade was interrupted for several months, but was again resumed with encreased activity after that time, it appearing that the hostility of mandarines gave way after they had made an arrangement for very high fees. Circumstances however soon arose which made the Mandarines break this arrangement, and in May 1837 the persecution of Opium-smugglers was more severe than before; the boats were broken up or burnt where ever found, and deliveries at Lintin began to be effected with difficulty whilst a large stock, purchased at unusually high prices, was undisposed of. Matters were again arranged and we find the deliveries at Lintin for the month of July to have exceeded 4000 chests. Soon after however the trade was again stopped, and it became impossible to dispose of the drug except on the coasts and to Junks proceeding northward, the Mandarins vigilantly preventing any of it entering the Canton river. To evade their vigilance it was now for the first time for many years brought up in Ships to Whampoa, and in large decked boats even to the fronts of the Factories. This river trade very soon became of great extent and not less than about forty boats from between 15 to 70 tons were constantly employed in it; nor can this have been suffered without the connivance of the mandarines, who no doubt found it to be to their interest, in receiving bribes for every chest landed. The number of vessels distributing the drug on the East and West coast had also been much augmented, there being generally not less than from 15to 20 engaged in that trade. From that time forward we never were without some rumour as to the severe measures intended, and many edicts appeared, without being however much attended to. The boats on the river had carried on their illicit trade during upwards of a year, perfectly openly, frequently, we believe, landing Opium in open day, or delivering it to revenue cruizers at Whampoa. This long impunity naturally increased the boldness of the smugglers, and the authorities probably found at last that its great notoriety rendered their interference indispensable. A police force went accordingly in September last year to Whampoa to search the houses there, but were opposed, some officers were wounded and some soldiers killed, and the greatest part of the male population, at least of one tribe or family, fled from Whampoa. This greatly interrupted the deliveries at Whampoa, and the owners and commanders of these boats now brought them up to Canton, and went even higher up the river to dispose of their cargo.

The enemies of the Opium trade at Peking seem during all this while to have continued to memorialize the Government against it, and one of the Imperial Ministers, Kwang Tseo-tsze went so far as to recommend that even smokers be punished with death. Copies of these memorials were sent to the different Provincial Governments to report upon, and it is said, that though many of the Vice-roys did not agree to the extreme severity being practised which Hwang-tseo-tsze recommended, they all agreed that dealers in it ought to suffer capital punishment, and in recommending, that if the importation of the drug could not be otherwise prevented, to close the ports against all foreign trade whatsoever. The strictest measures were at the same time enjoined on the provincial governments, and these have been executed with so much vigilance and fidelity that so small a quantity of the Opium has made it's way into China within the last three months, that the trade has since that time been virtually suspended. Unfortunately smuggeling of Opium into one of the foreign factories was detected whilst these severe measures were being taken, which at all events served as a pretext to the authorities for additional severities to Hong-merchants and foreigners, and a week after this the attempt was made to strangle an Opium-dealer in front of our dwellings which was then prevented, but which has since been successfully repeated.

A Mandarin of high rank has been despatched to Canton and is now daily expected, who, independent of the Governor, is to suppress this trade, and it will depend of course on the measures taken by him, whether or not there is any prospect for the trade reviving.

We have thus given a succinct account of the occurrences in the Opium trade during the last few years for the information of our distant readers, who may but too easily be led astray by what is said on the subject in both the English and North American newspapers, and which is likely to prejudice the public mind more against the Opium trade than it deserves. As a proof of the reasoning employed by these we give in another column an extract from an American paper, in which it is said that the English have fitted out ships of war to introduce the Opium into the heart of the Chinese empire by force of arms! an assertion by no means founded on fact. It is true that the Opium clippers, and particularly those destined for the East coast-trade have a greater complement of men, at least the latter, than is required for merely sailing them, and that they are armed sufficiently for the protection of the valuable property under their hatches, but this common prudence requires, as the coast swarms with Chinese craft of all sorts which it is necessary should know that these vessels can resist any attempt made to capture them. The boats that carried on the Whampoa trade had a few muskets and perhaps a small gun, but these arms were merely intended for defence. The American Editor wishes his remarks to carry out "the old and sensible observation that this world is strange compound of wisdom and folly" and as shewing that we have every day glaring instances of the inconsistency in the actions of societies and communities which if committed by an individual would send him to a lunatic asylum. We see no such inconsistency in this particular instance of the Opium traffic, where, as is usually the case, those that pursued it had merely their own individual advantage in view without giving a thought we believe to the mischief it was likely to occasion; it must not be lost sight of that the real opposition to the trade is of very recent date, and that by many it was and is still considered to be not more blameable in itself than a trade in wine or spirits. The advancement of one's own interest gives to actions and things frequently a hue very different from what the disinterested view it in, and this is notably displayed by our cotemporary of the Evening Star where he states that the English exerted every nerve in the mistaken policy of abolishing slavery in their West India possessions—Why does this paper call the just though tardy atonement made for centuries of crime, a mis aken policy? Is it because of the inconsistency of human actions, or because slavery still exists and continues profitable in part of the Union whence the Evening Star writes? The thing comes to this, the Evening star condemns alike the Opium trade and emancipation—the former because his sense of justice is not warped by his interest, and the latter from the contrary cause

We have not proposed to ourselves in these remarks, which have already run to a greater length than we wished, to touch at all on the question of the morality of the Opium trade, or on the evil it has entailed on China —we merely wish to look upon it in its commercial or financial point of view; and considered under these aspects it will be found that those engaged in it at the present moment, and who own the large stock now accumulated outside are not only in a situation of peculiar hardship if the Chinese government continues its uncompromising rigor against the trade, but that they also may have some claim upon China for taking these abrupt measures, which by altogether suppressing a trade which has been connived at by the highest local authorities during more than seventy years, entails an enormous loss upon those engaged in it at the present moment, who would have avoided it had they been able to know that the threats held out were sincere. But we are here cut off from all access to the Imperial Government, seeing only such Documents as the Provincial authorities chose to publish, and though these have frequently, through the Hong-merchants, acquainted us with what they termed Imperial Edicts against the Opium-trade, denouncing heavy punishments against the offenders, yet at the very time of these documents appearing, the traffic continued to be carried on uninterruptedly by means of boats under the command of their servants, and it was impossible to conclude otherwise than that they did so with the cognizance of their masters, nor can there be a doubt that this was the case; it is certain moreover that many of the oldest residents in Canton considered that many of the Edicts published, or played into the hands of foreigners, purporting to come from Peking, were no better than forgeries made to influence the market. Under such a state of things there will, within a few days, be accumulated in the Chinese waters upwards of 15.000 chests of which the cost is equal to about two millions sterling.—What is to be done with them? Must it's owners sit down quietly under so enormous a loss without a hope of redress? or ought they not rather insist on the Chinese still taking off the stock—though they may not allow of any importations hereafter? We consider the solution of these questions very difficult, and offer these remarks with great diffidence, but are certainly very loath to suppose that the whole loss is to fall on the present holders. The H. E. I. Company, which from its great avidity of revenue has increased the production of Opium so enormously, and consequently in the same ratio its introduction into China, that it has at length roused the indignation of the Chinese Government, and thus brought indirectly things to their present issue, will no doubt take into consideration the present distress of those who have so long contributed to its revenue, and make a handsome restitution of part of the profits the Indian Government has derived from the Opium-trade.

By the Ariel the overland mail to the 27th October has been received, bringing dates as we see from the Bombay Courier Extra of 2d January to the 6th November from London and the 8th from Paris. The political news from England are of little interest, generally speaking Lord Durham's resignation fills the papers with a quantity of speculation on the results of that step, and it is said that the Queen has sent him anautograph requesting his continuance in his office, which regal request it was expected His Lordship would obey. There is also some rumour of the Earl Spencer and of Lord Stanley having been sent for by the Queen, for the formation of a new Ministry. Nothing seems however to have been decided and Lord Melbourne continued in office. Meetings for the establishment of a Steam-boat Company for navigation to India had been held—Capital proposed to be 400.000 £, annual profits 70,000 £. Prince Louis Napoleon had arrived in London, and it was expected that the diffeaences between the French and Swiss would now be amicably settled. There have been changes in the Mini-try of Spain Finance committees composed of men of all political shades—there have been battles won by the Christinos and won by the Carlistas, which latter seem to be gradually gaining ground. Don Carlos' son and the Princes of Beyra have passed into Spain, and it appears that the question of succession in that unhappy country is as far from being settled as ever. The accounts from the West Indies an generally favorable, though in some of the Islands the labourers still en-ist on higher wages than the planters are willing to pay. Sir H. Ellis is spoken of as likely to be appointed Governor of Bombay. Accounts from the United States to the 20th Oct. mention a reaction in favor of the Loco-focos or democratical party; the London papers, particularly the Times which in money affairs is considered to have the best information and to command very able pens, discourages the paper circulation in the United States, and has lately published some very able papers condemning Mr. Biddle's speculation in Cotton by which, according to the Times' shewing the United States Bank will lose £ 500,000. A Hurricane visited London in the last days of October which did a great deal of damage; chimney stalks and pots without number were thrown down, trees uprooted, houses unroofed, newly built walls thrown down &c. &c.

It is said that the Russians muster a strong naval force in the Euxine—Admiral Stopford with the British squadron keeps close to the Dardanelles to be at hand if necessary. The Spanish chiefs instead of fighting amuse themselves with executing their prisoners of war—Cabrera a Carlist chief it said to have had 95 serjeants of his prisoners executed—Espartero not to be behind hand in so noble a race for fame has sent for 400 carlist prisoners to have them shot. Don Carlos, amidst these atrocities has spent his time in celebrating his nuptials with his niece the Princess of Beira! The Great Western had arrived from Newyork after a passage of 12 days with 126 passengers, and has left Bristol again on the 28th October with 120.

We give in another part a letter from Captain Parry from Hongkong which would lead readers to suppose that the Chinese intend no mischief to the Hongkong fleect. We never thought that the Chinese would attack without giving due notice before hand, nor do we deem that their attacks, should they make a demonstaction, will be very dangerous, but nevertheless, the Hongkong fleet has for the present removed to Lantao Island. The commissioner is expected to arrive here in three or four days.

Our readers will find Capt. Elliot's answers to the two letters we published last week in another column. We hear that that officer's protest regarding the execution of a Chinaman in front of the factories was sent to the Vice-roy on Wednesday last; nothing has transpired as to the nature of this document, which, as promised, will no doubt be made public as soon as the answer has been received. A public Notice from H. M. Superintendent will be found in our advertising columns, cautioning boats not licenced to leave the river without delay. We are too well aware of the importance of the privilege of having licenced boats, not to be well pleased with the steps taken by Capt. Elliot to ensure their continuance.

By the Lady Grant we have received the Singapore Free Press of 24th and 31st of January, that of the 17th of that month being still wanting, probably coming on in the Belhaven. We observe that our brother Editor of Singapore does not agree with us in some of our observations on the conduct on H. M. Superintendents. Want of space as well as some other considerations prevent us from entering on this subject at present, to which we shall probably have occasion to recur in a future number. The Prices Current of the same paper of the 7th February has come to hand from which we notice besides what we mention under the head of Shipping Intelligence that the Algerine from Calcutta had also arrived at Singapore on her way to China. Private accounts from that port represent the news from China to have had a paralizing effect on the Opium-market there also, not more than 300 @ 320 a cash having been offered for a few chests of Benares.

CAUTION.—Two valuable eight day CHRONOMETERS, one by French, and the other by Wyldenham, the first No. 4176, and the latter No. 1948; and two small gold WATCHES, (one by McCabe, maker of the other unknown) having been intrusted by me to ROBERT EDWARDS who lately left China, to be sent to London for repair; and he not having accounted to me for one or either of them; the Public are hereby cautioned against purchasing said CHRONOMETERS and WATCHES as they are my properly. JAS. P. STURGIS.

Canton, 24th January, 1839.

NOTICE—With reference to an advertisement in the Canton Press headed "CAUTION" and dated 24th January, we feel it our duty to notify publicly, as we have already represented to Mr. J. P. Sturgis personally, in November last; that we have been instructed by Mr. Robert Edwards, late of Canton, to dispose of the two Chronometers alluded to in that advertisement, in the event of the said Mr. Sturgis still retaining possession of a box of Dollars, the property of the said Mr. Edwards; the proceeds of the Chronometers to meet the value of the said box of Dollars, and the surplus, if any, to be handed over to the said Mr. Sturgis.

As the constituted attorneys of Mr. R Edwards, we have to state that the box of Dollars referred to herein is retained by the aforenamed Mr. Sturgis for an unacknowledged claim in 1833, which he has on Mr. Edwards; and further we know, that the watches mentioned in the said advertisement are not yet returned from England.

BOVET, BROTHERS & Co.

Canton, 31th January, 1839.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

To Her Majesty's Subjects.

Canton, 7th March, 1839.

It has been most pressingly represented to the Chief Superintendent by the Security Merchants that in the actual watchful temper of the Government, they are exposed to grave consequences, and apprehend the early withdrawal of the Licences lately granted to the Passage Boats, on account of the continued entrance and stay in the River of many others than those small Vessels.

He entertains no doubt that these fears are well founded. Neither can he forget that this privilege was not gained without His own earnest assurances to the merchants for submission to the Government, that He would always use every proper effort in his power to secure the efficacy of the arrangement.

He gave this pledge for the sake of the substantial concernments of the Trade, and the comforts of the Community: And He certainly need not insist upon the excessive mischief which would result, if these authorized means of intercourse were lost, upon grounds that would amply justify the Provincial Government, and render their recovery and gradual extension perfectly hopeless.

He has therefore now to require that all small vessels, British owned, other than those having licences, should proceed out of the River immediately, and not return within the same.

And He has further to give notice that for the sake of the considerations above mentioned, He will not shrink from the duty of declaring to this Government the names of any British Subjects, owners of small vessels not having licences, who shall fail to comply with this requisition forthwith: And He will also request that these Boats may be immediately removed, to the end that the general interests may not be exposed to great and lasting injury on their account.

By order of the Chief Superintendent.

EDWARD ELMSLIE

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—The demand for both grey and white Long-cloths continues good, and the sales have been considerable during the week particularly of the grey, but without any advance in price, which is likely to be still further checked by the importations of the Ann Jane and the Orixa. Cotton Yarn a further large sale we understand of inferior Yarn Nos. 18 to 24 generally, has taken place, price about 23 @ 25 according to quality, these are ruinously low rates, but a short time ago it was almost impracticable to sell such Yarn at any price, this quality has been purchased for the Chinchew market. There is little improvement in either the price or demand for the better descriptions of which the stock is large in first hands. Chintzes continue very depressed without inquiry the market not having yet recovered from the over supply of inferior Kinds, which were sold very low.

Woollens.—Spanish Stripes are selling at our former quotations of 1.25 @ 140 and 1.45 for particular marks. Of these latter about 1400 pieces have been sold during the week. The demand is not brisk, but Importers are not inclined to submit to lower rates. Longells, the sale which we reported last week of 6000 pieces was at rather under 7.60 and at 4 months cre.lit. The market has since advanced and the same party sold a day or two since 100 pieces at about 30 cents higher, we hear of no other transaction at these low rates.

Metals.—The supply of Iron has been very short and for some modern te importations as high as nearly $ 4 per bar and upwards of $ for small nail rod have been paid. Lead continues at about $ at which the principal holder is willing to purchase. Quicksilver, could not at present be sold at even $ 100 we believe a large supply of native having been lately received. Tin Plates are difficult of sale, the consumption it is said having greatly fallen off.

Straits Produce,—without alteration.

Rice.—There appeared some disposition to speculate in this article in the beginning of the week, and prices advanced nearly 10 Cents, but it has been rather checked by the rain which has since fallen.

Sandalwood,—is quoted very lowmot more than $ 19 @ 20 being procurable for the best.

Cotton.—The demand for the better descriptions of Bombay Cotton is firmer and for good quality 9 @ 9. 2 could be obtained—the price of Bengal is also supported, and for good Baida 10 5 @ 10 is offered, Madras has rather receded, and a Sale of Timevelly was effected a day or two since @ 9 6, but it was not of the best quality. Inferior Cotton of all descriptions continues low.

Opium.—The state of the Trade continues unaltered, and no opinion can be formed of its future prospects until the arrival of the commissioner expected within this day or two. Meanwhile some of the Holders appear inclined to sell at any price, but there are no buyers. The receiving ships have left Hong-Kong for the Southward of Lantao and in consequence of the entire suspension of Deliveries the owners of the Receiving ships have been obliged to make a charge of $ 1 ₱ Mensem per Chest, on Opium from the 1st. Inst. There is an equal stagnation of the Trade on the Coast by advices just received. Heavy supplies are coming in from Bengal and Bombay, and until the January news reaches India, will no doubt continue. We have received no report on the new Drug.

EXPORTS.

Tea,—Extensive purchases of common Young Hyson have been made at 28 @ 29 T., but there is no other business doing of any importance; these transactions, no doubt, have reference to the American market. The unfavorable advices just received from England render parties extremely cautious of buying for that quarter, especially as the closing of the Company's Treasury must ere long reduce prices.

Raw Silk.—Nearly one half of the whole stock now here, which does not exceed 4,500 bales, has been purchased at fully the opening price for the fine, and latterly perhaps at a little advance as the quantity of that description was reduced. The rates being from 535 @ 550 for the finest, and 510 @ 525 for good quality. We have heard of no sales of Cargo Silk, the advices just received from England are not very encouraging.

Exchanges.—The Company's Agents have closed their Treasury both for Bills on India and Hypothecation, which is likely in some degree to influence the Exchange on England.

The Philippine Islands.

ART. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia; government of De Silva, Tabora, Zerezo, and De Corcuera, &c. Continued from A. D. 1624 to 1677. From the Chinese Repository for February,

On the death of Faxardo, the colonial administration was again divided; the Audiencia exercising the civil authority, and Don G. de Silva holding the military command. His courage and conduct were very soon and rather too severely tried. A Dutch squadron appeared off the harbor, and the Audiencia required De Silva, to pursue them with a fleet of nearly equal force. This service he executed with so little promptness and efficiency, that the Audiencia deposed him, on his return, and kept him a close prisoner for a considerable time.

When the death of Faxardo was announced in Mexico, the appointment of provisional governor was conferred on Don Fernando de Silva, who had already resided many years in the colony, and had acquired a large property there in trade. He arrived safely in Manila and was very favorably received. At that time, the designs of the Dutch in forming settlements on Formosa were attracting much attention in the Philippines, and the new governor, with the approbation of his advisers secular and ecclesiastical, determined to establish on that island a rival post. A secret expedition was therefore despatched in February, 1626, and a lodgment effected on the shores of a good port, named by the colonists, "Santissima Trinidad." The Dominican friars who accompanied the expedition, applied themselves to the language, and by degrees the frightened natives were won back to their deserted houses, by kindness and gifts. In this work, the Catholic ministers were much aided by a still earlier colonist, a Japanese. He had fled himself at the first approach of the Spaniards, but when assured of their peaceful designs, he exerted all his influence to bring back the fugitives, and led the way to the rapid conversions which followed, by presenting his own little daughter at the baptismal font. In this way, say the Catholic missionaries, a spiritual harvest soon came to be gathered, and children were its first-fruits.

Two settlements were now planned, bearing the native names—of Camaurri and Panchui. They were afterwards strengthened by succors from Manila, and to their influence it was attributed that the Dutch desisted from their design to colonise Formosa, and intercept the Spanish trade.

Don Fernando had been scarcely a year in possession of his office, when he was superseded by Don Juan Niño de Tabora, who reached Manila in June 1626. Tabora was a military man, and came from the camp before Breda, to preside over this remote colony of Spain. Large drafts were granted him on the treasury of Mexico, and a further reinforcement of 600 men. He had just entered on the guardianship of the infant colony, when he was joined by Dona Magdalena de Shldivat y Mendoza, who came from Mexico, to give him her already plighted hand. Modern colonisation has since furnished many instances of what was, in those days, a strange example of adventurous fidelity and love.

An instance of attachment of quite another kind, and still more singular was exhibited at Manila, not long after this. The illustrious archbishop Fr. Miguel Garcia had consecrated a rich custodia and viril,* and placed it in the cathedral, whence it was soon after stolen by some sacrilegious hands. The affliction of the venerable prelate at this loss knew no bounds. He refused all consolation, and gave himself up to penitence and grief. Retiring to a secluded oratory, he pursued his lonely macerations, till his health gave way. The assiduities of a hundred of his clergy could not assuage his illness, which terminated fatally on Corpus Christi day. After his death, it was ascertained that the treasure, the loss of which he could not bear, had been partly broken up for its silver, and partly used as a plaything for a child. Not long after this, the colony sustained a real loss in the burning of Cavite, when the whole town, with a vast quantity of merchandise, naval stores, &c., was consumed. The military movements of this period were confined to a repulse of the Dutch from the Formosan settlements, and an unsuccessful descent on Sûlû.

The religious enterprise of the day was again turned on the conversion of the Cambojans to the Catholic faith, and the Dominican fathers, who were the first to feel the impulse, addressed a letter to the king, by the hands of a Chinese merchant, who in due time brought the following reply. "The friendship between us and the Spaniards of Luzon is very great. As the teeth and lips each press against and guard the other, so should our friendship continue to be. As to the padres who wish to come to my dominions, I will give them welcome, and they shall choose their field when they arrive." On the strength of this invitation, four ecclesiastics set out for Camboja, and being well received by the son and successor of their invitor, they proceeded to rear a church, while their nautical companions employed themselves in building a ship. The friars were soon stopped in their progress, by a decree forbidding the conversion of the Cambojans, and thus restricting them to the Chinese and Japanese. The only clue given to this altered state of things is furnished in the confession, that the quarrels of the Spaniards among themselves ran so high, that it was with great difficulty they were ever carried back safely to the Philippines. The friars pursued their labors, after the departure of the Spanish ships, but with so little success, that when the mission was abandoned two years and a half after its commencement, they had baptised but one convert—a little girl—the daughter of a Japanese.

In the second year of Tabora's government, his levee was attended by envoys from the king of Siam, the Japanese prince of Arima and Satzuma, and some of the chiefs of Mindanao. An envoy from China is also said to have visited Manila; but, had the credentials of any of these so-called representatives been accurately tested, it is not probable they would have been found possessed of very large powers, or entitled to a very high rank.

The friendly professions of the southern chiefs did not prevent a rising in the province of Caraga, marked by unusual atrocities, in the following year, 1629. A much more formidable enemy continued to press upon the Spaniards, on the south, and Tabora, unable to cope with them alone, dispatched an envoy to the viceroy of India—the Conde de Lenares—to confer with the Goa government as to a union of forces for the expulsion of the Dutch. The count received the messenger very kindly and furnished him with the supplies he asked for the Cavite arsenal, but no further co-operation ensued. The citizens of Manila, always republican enough in their way of canvassing public measures, expressed their dissatisfaction at this mission, without waiting to see its fruitless result. They did not like the withdrawal of a ship for public purposes, which they could have employed much more gainfully in trade. But when the subject came before his majesty, he sustained the governor, and charged him anew to keep up a communication with Goa, and to seek a union of forces in case of need.

The administration of Tabora lasted till 1632, when, after exposing himself at the wreck of a Chinese vessel, he fell sick and died, the 22d July. He was buried with all the honors due to a worthy and lamented governor, in the church of the Jesuits, where also the remains of the faithful Dona Magdalena were not long after laid. With his death, the administration devolved again on the Audiencia, until the arrival of Don Juan Zerezo de Salamanca from Mexico, with provisional powers.

Thus far, in the course of these sketches, we have noticed but a few out of the series of depredations committed on the Spanish colonists and the settlements under their protection, by the pirates of Mindanao and Sûlû. In fact, say our authorities—these incursions were scarcely ever intermitted for a single year; accounts of the destruction of sacred vessels, the loss of valuable lives, &c., were constantly coming up to Manila, and frequent and severe were the chastisements inflicted on the depredators, without effecting, however, any permanent good. To accomplish the desired object —to place a constant check over the piratical squadrons, Zerezo established in 1635, the presidio of Zamboangan, a post which, with some interruptions, has ever since been sustained. The utility or inutility of this new post was still warmly discussed at Manila, when Zerezo was superseded by Don S Hurtado de Corcuera, the eleventh proprietary governor, who arrived on the 25th June. With a new incumbent came a new quarrel, a long and intricate litigation ensuing between him and the archbishop; the one a rigid and unscrupulous soldier, and the other a weak but well-intentioned old man. In the course of this contest, the venerable prelate was at one time transported as a prisoner to the nearly desert island of "Corregidor," at the mouth of the bay. Restored afterwards to his cathedral, his old opponent still gave him much trouble, from which he was released by death in 1641.

Four years before this, repeated depredations had compelled Corcuera to do his utmost to lay a check on Corralat, the chief of the piratical rajás of Mindanao Proceeding himself in command of the squadron prepared for this service, he drove Corralat as a fugitive from his capital, and destroyed twenty or thirty of his towns. Early the following year, he directed his course to the Sûlû group, and took possession of the rajá's chief port, but being recalled to Manila, he was obliged to leave it to his successor to prosecute the war. In the course of the campaign which followed, the unfortunate rajá was driven from his native islands, extreme severities were visited on the inhabitants in retaliation for their long continued piracies, yet after all the group was not effectually reduced, nor added permanently to the possessions of the Spanish crown.

The Sandwich Islands.

From the Sandwich Islands Gazette.

The harbor of Honoiulu, Oahu, Sandwich Islands is, safe, commodious and in almost every respect advantageous for the shipping which continually resort to it. The local merits of this harbor are however enthralled by the factitious means which are employed to increase its facilities. To wit. A most skilful and experienced pilot: Buoys in the passage: Good anchorage: Good harbor anchorage: Protection from the sea in every direction: To these add the existence of commercial establishments in the town, from which every variety of merchandise can be obtained for the replenishment of ships stores; mechanics of every description, inferior to none in the world in their various departments; excellent hotels for officers and seamen; a church, billiard-rooms, and bowling alleys, with other facilities for improvement and recreation: Consular establishments; and last, though we hope not least, a newspaper.—With all these and many more advantages the port of Honolulu presents every inducement to shipmasters in the Pacific, who have for their object the safe and speedy termination of their voyages. The harbor dues are not extravagant, although perhaps they are as high as may be justified:—the great evil of too much grog selling, in complaint of which so much has been said and done, has now fallen under the particular supervision of the government, which appears to be determined to control the matter.

Situated thus, it might be supposed that the Port of Honolulu would have the preference to the harbor, or roadstead, of Lahaina, Maui;—and so it has the preference, but yet fifty or sixty ships have imprudently ventured to risk their valuable cargoes in an unprotected anchorage, liable to the most imminent danger, and completely at the mercy of the wind and weather: And for what reason has this great risk been run? To save a few dollars in port charges, and a few more in the purchase of vegetables and other refreshments: We know of no other ostensible reason for this risk, and until we do, shall ascribe it to that which we have stated. Is it right that property and lives are thus jeopardized to save a few dollars? Will the loss of the life of one poor sailor be repaired by the paltry sum to be saved at Maui? Or even if thousands of dollars were to be gained, would the sacrifice of one man, be he of ever so humble a condition, find its apology,—leaving out of question the risk of property? We refer our readers to the communication of Captain Coggeshall in our marine list; the disaster of the ship Walter Scott under his command, eventuated in the loss of three men!

One word more. It may be said of us that the interests of the residents at Oahu are advocated in this instance of the depreciation of the Lahaina anchorage, and not that of the shipping; Prudent shipmasters are not of that opinion, and we have received our impressions of Lahaina from the testimony of very many gentlemen decidedly more competent to judge of the case in question than ourself. With our present opinion we confidently and earnestly recommend to shipmasters to come to the Harbor of Honolulu, in all cases in preference to the roadstead of Lahaina.—Sandwich Island Gazette, November, 24.

BRUTALITY TOWARDS CATHOLIC PRIESTS AT WALLIS ISLAND.

It is with horror that we are compelled to record another instance of savage brutality towards two catholics by the natives of one of the "isles of the sea." The anxiety manifested by the Rev. Mr Thomar to secure the publicity of this act, is heartily sympathized in by others, and we hope the mention of it in our journal may be the means of bringing aid from some quarter to the unfortunate gentlemen who are suffering a lingering torture, in danger of death. The Revd. Mr Battalino, and a catechist were the missionaries left there by the Bishop, and it is probably those gentlemen who are alluded to in the account of Capt. Barney. Every friend of humanity must shudder at the awful position of the two priests, and even the intolerant authors of similar persecutions at Oahu and Tahiti, will perhaps not be lost to all sympathy for them.

Captain Barney of the Whaleship Barclay reports that some natives of Vavou had been driven by the winds to Wallis Island last December, or January, were kept prisoners for some time, when they made their escape and got to Vavou in April—they state that the two catholic missionaries who were left there last year, were in confinement, that two trials had been held over them by the king and chiefs. At both trials they were sentenced to death by the chiefs "in council" the king only dissenting. The natives treated them with the greatest cruelty, giving them very little to eat or drink:

The Vavouans were of opinion the Missionaries could not survive long, under such treatment as they received. The principal charge was that they taught Religion! That it was contrary to law. to teach any new religion on Wallis' Island!!! This account was given Captain Barney by the Rev. Wm. Thomas, Methodist Missionary at Vavou, two of the above natives being present, were often questioned by Mr. Thomas while stating the above. Mr. Thomas said he hoped Captain Barney might be able to give the above circulation, that the two Missionaries lives might be saved.—Sandwich Island Gazette, November, 17.

THE EDITOR AT HOME.

On Tuesday next at eleven o'clock A. M. the editor will be happy to meet the patrons of the Gazette, one and all, at a sociable dejeuner a la fourchette at the new printing office, Oahuena Cottage.

The table will be frugally but solidly spread,—not with types and blank paper as usual,—but with wholesome sandwiches, turkey salad, and other equally digestible viands: It will not be expected that the only fluid to be absorbed will be the ink and lye of the printer, but au contraire, claret, coffee, and cold water,—(for those who prefer it.)—The printer has kindly agreed to put on his Sunday's best on this most interesting occasion, and the grim devils are to dance attendance to our guests.

It will afford us great pleasure to see all our subscribing, corresponding, and advertising patrons, and those of the community who have only good wishes for us, we shall meet, if they will come, with a hearty welcome. The masters and officers, of vessels in port, to whom we are continually in debt for useful and interesting maritime news, will, we trust, honour us by nibbling a crumb of our biscuit and cheese.

Having searched and re-searched all the historical narrations in our small library, we have come to the conviction, that,—since the days of Cadmus,—never was a breakfast before offered by an editor in his cell;—and we shall perhaps have the credit of originality in this case, yet, we beg to say that we are more prompted by feelings of gratitude than of oddity; for gratitude prompts us to feed those who have fed us!—It is our patrons who spread our frugal board daily, it is we who invite them to participate in our fare.—Sandwich Island Gazette Oct. 27.

ATTEMPT TO ROB AND MURDER THE UNITED STATES CONSUL AND HIS LADY, AT TAHITI, SOCIETY ISLANDS.

Tahiti, June 9th, 1838.

On Sunday morning, between the hours of one and two, the whole town of Papeeti, on this island, was alarmed at the discovery of the assassination of Moerenhaut, Esq., United States Consul, and his lady: They were found in their house weltering in their own blood. Surgical assistance was immediately called, and, upon examination the wounds inflicted upon Mr. Moerenhaut, seven in number, were not mortal, those received by Mrs. Moerenhaut, one of which was upon the head by a blow from an axe or some similar sharp instrument, were so severe as to leave no hopes of recovery.

The assassins, who evidently entered the house for the purpose of plunder, were disturbed in the nefarious undertaking by Mr. Moerenhaut, who, aroused by a noise in the sitting room, which he supposed to have been made by a cat accidentally shut up there, left his sleeping apartment with a light; upon entering the sitting room door, before, any person was perceived, Mr. Moerenhaut received a wound upon the head which caused him to drop the light from his hand, and to retreat to his chamber; so determined, however, were the murderers that they followed up their attack with stabs and blows, with their knife or hatchet, while the cries of murder became so faint that they could not be heard by the neighbours: Mrs. Moerenhaut came instantly to assist her husband in his struggle with the murderers, and received a wound in the side, and another upon the head, which left her incapable of giving any further alarm. The neighbours however had been aroused by a strange noise, and the groans of the wounded lady and gentleman; they allowed some time to elapse before they ventured to go to ascertain the cause of alarm, thus it was that the murderers had an opportunity to escape; they left however in their hurry a pair of shoes, and a knife, which led to the discovery of one of the persons concerned in this shocking outrage. Upon the arrival of the native servant to find out the meaning of the noise in the house, Mrs. Moerenhaut was sufficiently sensible to give a brief explanation of the affair, and to order the servant to raise an alarm; the white residents instantly assembled, and with Pritchard Esq, H. B. M. Consul, and the masters of the vessels then lying in port, came promptly to assist in dressing the wounds of the unfortunate sufferers. Steps were instantly taken to detect the blood thirsty monsters who committed the outrage: It appeared that the house was entered by means of cutting away the window sash; plunder was evidently the first object in view, and the subsequent attempt to murder was perhaps made to prevent detection. It is suppose the murderers left their victims for dead.

The peculiar nature of the attack gave no certain evidence to Mr. Moerenhaut and his lady, of the identity of the individuals by whom it was made; their suspicions, however, fell upon a man by the name of Joseph Gale: A reward of two hundred dollars was offered to any person who would lead to the detection of the offenders. At daylight the shoes found in the house proved to be the property of a black Spaniard by the name of Manuel; when a knowledge of this fact transpired, a court was immediately convened to examine the said Manuel; G. Pritchard, Esq. presided as judge.

It was proved that Manuel had been out on the night and at the time of the assassination; it was also proved that the knife found in the house was was one he had used when eating his supper on the night before the event: His clothes were discovered sunk with stones in the sea, opposite his house, the clothes were covered with blood: it was ascertained that he had borrowed an axe from the natives on the Saturday. Manuel denied all these charges and said the blood upon his clothes was in consequence of a disease under which he was laboring; that the knife he had loaned on the Saturday to Joseph Gale the man so strongly suspected by Mr. and Mrs. Moerenhaut: that he had not been out on the night of the murder. After the questioning, the court ordered Manuel to be closely confined in irons to await his trial by the laws of the islands.

Nothing could exceed the indignation of the natives, the Queen, and chiefs towards the perpetrators of the outrage; Dispatches were immediately sent to the several districts of the island and Moria to assemble the judges and chiefs to devise measures to prevent a recurrence of such atrocity and likewise to pronunce judgment upon the criminals. In the afternoon Joseph Gale was put under arrest upon suspicion of being an accomplice; On the Tuesday following a confession was made by Manuel, in which he owned that he was concerned in the assault, but accused Joseph Gale of having committed it, while he was keeping a watch outside the house, he further stated that when the alarm was given he made off, leaving his shoes behind him; that he lent Joseph Gale the knife when in the room, and that Gale was the only one who inflicted the wound, he, Manuel claiming to be innocent of the murder.

Captain Stokes furthermore informed us that when he left Tahiti the recovery of Mrs. Moerenhaut was despaired of, but Mr. Moerenhaut was convalescent.—Sandwich Island Gazette, Sept. 8.

The Bonin Islands.*

There are at the present time on North Island about forty inhabitants,—composed of Americans and Englishmen with a few Sandwich Island natives. They all obtain a good livelihood by keeping hogs, poultry, and goats, and by cultivating vegetables for the supply of the whalers, who frequently visit Port Louis on going to or coming from Japan. The wild hogs are so numerous that it is an easy matter for each of the residents to obtain from 50 to 80 of them During the few months which intervene between the arrivals of shipping, the hogs are soon tamed in pens, and become as good as if bred in a farm yard. The turtles do not visit the inhabited island so much as the others, but still the residents catch a sufficiency, in the season for their daily consumption, besides salting a few barrels for winter; they also obtain oil enough to burn for a twelvemonth. The soil is very favorable to the growth of every vegetable which has hitherto been tried;—yams, potatoes, pumpkins, onions &c. may be obtained in abundance;—in a short time there will be a good supply of water melons, bananas, oranges, pine apples and sugar cane. The interior of the island is rich with medicinal plants.

The Papaver album is to be met with occasionally and no doubt, if properly cultivated, would well repay any one who would undertake it, though it is probable, from the nature of the climate, it would not yield so good opium as that from the East Indies The common elder is dispersed liberally over the whole of the island; sassafras is here also very abundant. The castor tree, and fennel, with many others, are frequently found.

The land is very mountainous, exhibiting very evidently the marks of volcanic destruction. The Bay in which the ships anchor is said to have formerly been a large crater, when visited by the Japanese,—since extinguished by one of its sides falling in and admitting the sea; it certainly has very much the appearance of having once been the seat of violent combustion, and strongly reminded me of the Volcano of Kirauea. The island is very mountainous and it requires a great deal of exertion on the part of the farmers to clear their ground, but, on the other hand, the valleys are freely watered with rivulets running into the sea. The gale which we experienced on the 16th of May, had a desolating effect on the cultivated land. I was on shore a few days afterward, and was surprised to see the devastation caused by the tempest: Some of the largest trees had been torn up by the roots, the houses partially damaged, and nearly the whole of the indian corn, of which there were many acres planted, entirely destroyed; exhibiting as black an appearance as if struck by lightning: The loss will be very severe to the landholders, as the season was too far advanced to hope for another crop,—the sea had risen so high as to reach almost to the oors of some houses which at other times are at least five hundred feet from high water mark. The morning of the 17th brought employment to several of the inhabitants, in collecting large fish which had been left on their shores by the reflux of the sea.

It may be interesting to state that the "extraordinary tide" which occurred at the Sandwich Islands on the 7th of November 1837, was also experienced at the Bonin Islands a distance of about four thousand miles, at nearly the same hour. The exact time I could not ascertain as most of the inhabitants reside some distance from the beach and were not aware of the occurrence till about 10 o'clock: most of them suppose that the first influx took place about ½ past 8 or 9 in the evening; it was not so extensive as that which occurred at Hilo, but lasted a longer time. The principal loss sustained was that of some canoes and implements which were on the beach. Sandwich Island Gazette October 13th.

Siam.

We are given to understand that the Commanders of British vessels at Bangkok make serious complaints against the means made use of by the nobles and officers of the country to decoy seamen from their ships, by offering them higher wages, and holding out other inducements for them to leave their ships, and join the Siamese service. A few English sailors had been thus led to quit their vessels; but finding the Lascars more accessible to the temptations offered, the Siamese had latterly confined their operations to that class of seamen, and with so much success that few ships manned by native crews leave the port of Bangkok with their proper complement of men—often exposing the ship to danger, and always to inconvenience. This mode of proceeding it appears is patronised by the government—but the men who are seduced away from their vessel are not it appears on that account better treated, generally looking in vain for the fulfilment of the bargain made with them, and being often subjected to very bad treatment. Having entered another service the consequence is their own look out—but we should think it would be easy for our government, by remonstrating against the practice complained of, to induce the Siamese to abandon a course which exposes our shipping frequenting their ports to so much inconvenience and we hope this complaint may assume a form that will excite attention in the proper quarter.—*Sing. Circular.

To Her Majesty's Subjects.

Canton, 9th March, 1839.

With reference to his circular of the 4th instant, the undersigned has now the honor to promulgate a copy of his address to the governor concerning the late execution before these factories.

And having this day ascertained by a formal message from his excellency, that he does not propose to reply to him in a direct shape,—it only remains for the undersigned to announce to her majesty's subjects, his own intention to report the circumstance to her majesty's government by the earliest opportunity.

To this representation he will join his own strong opinion, that the lives and properties of the whole foreign community would be exposed to perilous jeopardy on every repeated occasion of an execution in the same situation.

Pending further instructions from his government, his own address has served the purpose of a protest, which was the main object of its transmission.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent

To His Excellency the Governor of the Two Kwang, &c. &c. &c.

Canton, 4th March. 1839.

The undersigned, &c. &c presuming to offer no objections to the right of this Government to execute native criminals wheresoever it may think fit within the limits of the empire, desires only to observe that no such circumstances have ever had place in the immediate vicinity of the foreign dwellings until the 26th ultimo, during an intercourse of nearly two hundred years; and he has now to request on the behalf of the government of his nation, that his excellency will be pleased to order their future discontinuance in this situation.

A native of the Western countries, your excellency will hold the undersigned excused for observing, that, agreeably to the genius of those people, nothing could be more distressing to them than the execution of a criminal before their doors.

He dares not conceal from your excellency a very general impression, upon the part of the foreign community, that the considerate protection of this government is in a great degree withdrawn from them.

The effect of such feeling need not be pressed upon the attention of a high officer versed in the government of men. It deprives the wise and the thoughtful of their just and restraining influence, and renders the rash, desperate.

The undersigned is afraid, therefore, that it would be impossible to stay the hands of every excited individual, in such a crisis of intense agitation as another execution before these factories would produce; and one fatal blow might lead to death, destruction of property, and disturbance of the lower orders of the native population, which the most anxious efforts of the honorable officers could not prevent.

These are the profound sentiments of his heart; and claiming as the officer of his nation, the protection of the great emperor, the undersigned must once more request your excellency to signify to him the calming declaration, that it is not the purpose of this wise and just government to leave the whole foreign community exposed to the most imminent risks of disaster.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to offer to your excellency the renewed expressions of his highest consideration.

(Signed.) CHARLES ELLIOT.

Passage Boats.

To Mr. Lindsay of the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce, &c. &c.

A respectful communication.

On receipt of your letter stating that hereafter the licensed passage boats should submit to the custom-house examinations, we reported same to H. E. the governor, whose reply we beg to enclose requesting your attention thereto.

We have also received another edict from the hoppo, stating that on the 19th and 20th instant the licensed boats Nos. 2 and 4 belonging to Markwick had passed through the Bogue without applying to be examined.

This is truly most unreasonable conduct, and if repeated, we must petition to have their licenses taken away and transferred to some other boats. We have handed a copy of the edict to Markwick, who says the boats did not apply because it was dark when they passed through the Bogue: but this is no excuse, and we must request your honorable chamber to assemble all the boat owners and inform them that whether they pass the custom houses during the day or during the night, they must apply to be examined and have their passports stamped. If they will not do this, we will, according to the regulations, petition government to take away their licenses, and give them to other boats, as it will then be clear that they will not respect the instructions of your honorable chamber.

It is for this we write, and with compliments remain,

March 7th 1839. The Hong merchants.

Reply of—Tang, President of the board of war, governor of the two Kwang provinces &c. &c. to the Hong merchants.

In compliance with the prayer of your petition, I have given directions to the admiral and collector of customs to command the forts, cruisers and custom house people at the Bogue, to examine and dispatch, immediately they arrive, all licensed boats which may hereafter enter or leave the river—let there be not a moment's detention nor delay.

Let this be transmitted to the chairman and sureties * of the chamber of commerce, who must give the most imperative instructions to the licensed boats, to apply at the custom houses to be examined and and have their passports stamped according to law, whenever they either leave or enter the river. Hereafter if any boat dares to disobey the laws, she shall be seized and detained, and be dealt with according to law.

Let the hong merchants also be circumspect, for truly I will not shew a particle of indulgence. Given under my hand, this 19th day of the 1st moon. March, 4th 1839.

S. FEARON.
Chinese Interpreter G. C. C.

Canton, 7th March, 1839.

Sir, I have the honor to inclose for the information of the General Chamber of Commerce, the copy of a Public Notice to Her Majesty's Subjects, which I have felt myself compelled to issue.

Conscious that the Chamber concurs with me in the urgent importance of preserving an uninterrupted and authorized intercourse by the outer passage, and of preventing the recurrence of most serious embarrassments within the river, and at the factories, I may rely with confidence on the best support the Committee can afford me for obviating the disagreeable necessity of an appeal to the provincial government on this occasion.

The expected arrival of the commissioner affords another pressing reason for circumspection in relation to the pertinacious intrusion of unlicensed boats; some of them probably engaged, or ready to be engaged in pursuits, at all risks, which might aggravate the peril of momentous and delicate interests in a very high degree.

I beg you, Sir, to assure the Committee that I will shrink from no personal responsibility in preventing such reckless mischief; and I must add, that the impressions under which this letter is written are founded upon no light grounds for apprehension of sudden incohvenience.

I have &c.

President of the Genl. C. of Commerce, Canton.

To Captain C. Elliot, &c. &c.

Sir,—We have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 7th March, enclosing a copy of a Public Notice issued by you to the subjects of her Britannic Majesty, requiring the immediate departure from the river of all unlicensed boats, being owned by British subjects. The committee beg to say that they fully and entirely concur with you in the urgent necessity of all unlicensed boats quitting the river, at the present crisis, deeply feeling the grave and serious inconvenience to which the general trade of the port may be subjected from their perseverance remaining within the river in defiance of the orders of the Chinese government; and they beg to inform you that both collectively and individually they have exerted all the influence they possessed to induce their peaceable departure. They earnestly hope these measures will prove effectual, and fully concur in the expediency of steps being taken to ensure this desired result. But taking into consideration our peculiar and anomalous position in this country, they must feel it their duty to express their opinion that any reference to the Chinese government pointing out individuals to them by name might be attended with injurious consequences.

I have, &c.
H. H. LINDSAY,—Chairman, &c.

* The Members of the Chamber who secure the boats.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 16th March.

Some correspondence, it will be seen, has again passed between the General Chamber of Commerce and the Hong-merchants, and also with Capt. Elliot, concerning the irregularity of the licensed boats in not applying to have their passports stamped at the Bogue, and the immediate withdrawal of such boats from the river as are not licensed. We consider the licencing of these Passage-boats a privilege far too precious to allow it to be endangered by the neglect on the part of the tindals of the torms prescribed, and which, it must be remembered, the Chamber of Commerce pledged themselves should be complied with, and we hope therefore that no more cause for complaint will be given at the Bogue. We would also advise the owners or managers of these boats to be careful not to admit any articles on board which can come under the denomination of cargo, as that will also expose them to the loss of their licenses and perhaps of their boats, the Chamber of Commerce being pledged that these boats should serve only for the conveyance of letters and Passengers with their luggage. The non observance of this has lately subjected a boat, which had some tea and sugar-candy on board, to four days detention at the Bogue, and the despatches which she carried for the Ardaseer, though they left Canton on the 9th, were taken on from the Bogue by another boat on the 12th only. The boat in question was, after a linguist had been despatched from here, taken back to Canton in charge of the linguist and a Mandarin, but struck somewhere near Whampoa, when the above mentioned goods were put on board an English ship there; the boat filled soon after, and is now aground in Junk-river. As to the correspondence of Capt. Elliot with the Chamber regarding the driving out of unlicenced boats, we are of the opinion of the latter that, though it be desirable that these boats should be gone, Capt. Elliot's proposal to point out individuals by name, might be attended with injurious consequences. We do give Capt. Elliot credit for the best intentions, but let us ask what has he gained by his late correspondence with the Government, and is he in a situation to protect his countrymen against any act of violence or injustice of the Chinese? We should think not, for we have a proof of this in the Circular which will be found in another column, from which it will be seen that the mode of communication with the local authories, to the apparent adjustment of which we owed the hoisting of the British flag, is as far from being settled as ever. From private information indeed we learn that the Viceroy sent an answer through the Hong-merchants, the tenor of which is said not to have been conciliating—this Capt. Elliot refused to receive except through the Government officers, which the Viceroy objected to, describing the matter of the correspondence to be of too little importance. If we see therefore the efforts of H. M. Superintendents to protect his countrymen against the acts of the Chinese disregarded, why should that same officer offer his services to the latter for the punishment of the irregularities of the former? The usefulness of Capt. Elliot's efforts seem to be confined to one side only, and it is not his countrymen who derive advantage from it. Governments obtain obedience from the governed in proportion to the protection they can afford when therefore the British Govt. shall have placed itself on such a footing with the Chinese as to be by them regarded or respected, and its representations attended to, we shall be the first to approve of any steps taken by the officers of Great Britain to render the intercourse between the two nations as smooth and friendly as can be; but before this happens we really think the threats to denounce his countrymen to the Chinese authorities, made by Capt Elliot, premature. We are aware that the continuance of the unlicenced boats in the river may lead to unpleasant consequences and think H. M. Superintendent perfectly right to obtain their removal by any means in his power, save application for assistance from, or denunciation to, the Chinese Government.

It is not often that any thing besides periodicals issues from the Press at Canton, but we have now to notice the appearance of a new work of the title of "The lasting resentment of Miss Keaou Lwan Wang," a Chinese tale, translated from the Original by "Sloth." Such is the name under which the translator appears before the public in this work, which, as we learn from the preface, is his coup d'essai. The story itself will be found to possess considerable interest, and appended to it are a number of notes; by means of both of these we are allowed glimpses of the social life of the Chinese which will repay the perusal; to the Sinologue this publication will present still greater attraction, and to all such as are connected with China it will be a pleasing proof that not only commerce but also the literature of the Chinese attracts the attention and and study of foreign residents here. We hope that the translator will continue his labors, which we doubt not will be thankfully received by the public.

We find that in the review of the Opium trade we gave in our last we have committed an error in stating that the Opium ships removed from Whampoa in 1823, whilst they really did so in 1821; we beg to correct this, which is however the only error that we are conscious to have been guilty of, in spite of the regret of our cotemporary at our many inaccuracies in treating of so important a subject. We are well aware of its importance but do not consider that we are to blame if the Register, to be able to accuse us of ignorance, quotes a sentence from us, interpolating, in parenthesis, a word of his own, which completely alters the meaning of what we said, making it appear as if we had spoken of Newyork as of a slave holding state; we congratulate our cotemporary on having found so novel a mode of quotation, but we think he ought to inform his readers of it whenever he takes such liberties with the text.

Melancholy Accident.—We are sorry to have to report an accident which happened on the river on the night of Monday last to the crew of a boat belonging to the British ship St. Vincent, by which a number of lives were lost. The boat with a crew of 8 men, 2 boys and the chief mate left Canton on Monday evening to return to Whampoa, the crew having been on shore on liberty. They left Canton some time before dark, but owing to a strong southerly wind then blowing and a contrary tide, the night was far advanced, when, as is supposed, somewhere near Howqua's fort, a large China boat, sailing up the river with a fair breeze, whilst the ship's boat had also a sail set and was probably standing across the river, came in contact with and upset her. One man was fortunate enough to get into the Chop-boat at the moment of the boat being upset, and though he called out to the Chinese in her to stop to assist his comrades, they were deaf to his entreaties, but running their boat close to the bank of the river, there forced the English sailor again into the water whence he had to wade on shore. The chief-mate succeeded in holding fast by the boat, as likewise the boatswain, but the latter, either from exhaustion dropped off, or attempted by swimming to gain the land, as he left the boat a short time before the chief-mate was picked up by a mandarin boat after he supposes to have been about two hours in the water. The boatswain has not since been heard of, and there can be little doubt that he as well as the other six men and two boys, nine persons in all, have been drowned, though none of their bodies have yet been found. The accounts from the two survivors are unsatisfactory as to the exact spot of the catastrophe, and this may be explained partly by the great darkness of the night, and partly, we are afraid, by the state in which liberty men are but too apt to be returning to their ships, which made them keep a bad look out, for it appears that the first notice the survivors had of the Chinese boat approaching was their being upset. As far as we can learn there is no reason to impute this misfortune to more than accident, though the putting the man on shore in the manner they did, and their not attempting to save the lives of the other sufferers makes the conduct of the Chinese appear in a very bad light. We hear that the survivors will give their circumstantial account of this melancholy affair to H. M. Superintendent, and, should it appear that the Chinese acted with the inhumanity imputed to them, we hope that the Superintendent will address the local Government on the subject, that the persons in the China boat which run down that of the St. Vincent may be found out and punished. Much time has already been lost, and redress, if such be desirable, will become more difficult to obtain the longer the application is delayed. We may take this opportunity to remark on the danger of the practice which we see but too often followed in Canton of allowing boats with liberty men to leave Canton for Whampoa, a distance of 14 miles, as night is coming on; the men are frequently intoxicated and therefore little able to manage their boat; to save trouble they hoist their sail, and boatsailing between this and Whampoa is at all times dangerous, owing partly to the many Chinese craft and partly to the unequality of the wind; thus fatal accidents have frequently happened, though none until now there at once so many lives were lost; we hope that this sad experience will lead to the adoption of some means for preventing similar disasters in future.

The Imperial Commissioner so long expected has at last arrived, H. E. reached in Canton on Sunday morning last the 10th inst. Various of course are the rumours afloat concerning his acts and intentions, but it would appear that until now he has not taken any active steps beyond those already existing against the Opium-trade. If we may believe the reports from Chinese, a good many of the inferior mandarins, as well as servants of the Kwang-heep have been arrested by his order, other mandarines have been deprived of their buttons &c. &c. Nothing certain has as yet transpired, except that we believe the Hong-merchants have been required to produce Allam, formerly an Opium-broker, who established a Hong at the time of Heunseteze's memorial, in the hope of seeing the Opium-trade legalized, and another outside-man of the name of Chy-nam; both these persons have absconded some time since. Among the rumours of the day is one according to which the Kwang-heep is deeply implicated in the Opium-trade, and likely to suffer for it. The hopes of the Chinese that the Governor of the two Kwang provinces also was in a dangerous predicament, seem likely to be disappointed, since it is said that the Imperial Commissioner has not only accepted of his hospitality, but also will in his company make the projected tour along the coast of Kwang tung. These high officers, it is said, are to leave Canton this day, either for Macao, or for Soo chow fuh (Namoa) direct. We understand that in this expedition they are to be accompanied by four Hong merchants (or their clerks) and by an equal number of Linguists or their followers. That the commissioner is about going to the coast is, we believe, certain, but the point first to the visited, or the measures he intends to take, are to us as much problems as ever. We have before said that his arrival has given rise to a great many rumours, in which there may or may not be truth, but by giving these we shall at least expose to our readers the state of the public mind at present. The Chinese one and all affirm that this Commissioner "hab number one good man" that he "hab consciencie pigeon" *—how far this will be proved remains to be seen hereafter, it being the fate of almost all the great officers of state coming to these remote regions to be represented by fame as the best of mankind, upon whom a few years stay in Canton seems to have a most deteriorating effect; after that period no one ever hears their virtues praised. As we are detailing rumours, we may as well mention that it is said that 600 veterans of the "dragon guard" have marched into Macao and encamped there—also that the importation into Macao of Opium has been completely stopped. This latter, under present circumstances, we never doubted would come to pass, since it cannot be supposed that the Chinese would permit Macao to carry on a trade the suppression of which seems at present to be the thing of the most absorbing interest in the politics of the Chinese. We have thus given the on dits that have come to our ears regarding the movements of the Commissioner—we suppose that the next days will reveal something to be relied on as to his intentions.

* That he is not venal but acts as he thinks right.

CAUTION.—Two valuable gilt day CHRONOMETERS, one by French, and the other by Wolenham, the first No. 4476, and the latter No. 1242; and two small gold WATCHES, (one by Mc Cabe, maker of the other unknown) having been entrusted by me to ROBERT EDWARDS who lately left China, to be sent to London for repair; and he not having accounted to me for one or either of them; the Public are hereby cautioned against purchasing said CHRONOMETERS and WATCHES as they are my properly. JAS. P. STURGIS.

Canton, 24th January, 1839.

NOTICE—With reference to an advertisement in the Canton Press headed "CAUTION" and dated 24th January, we feel it our duty to notify publicly, as we have already represented to Mr. J. P. Sturgis personally, in November last; that we have been instructed by Mr. Robert Edwards, late of Canton, to dispose of the two Chronometers alluded to in that advertisement, in the event of the said Mr. Sturgis still retaining possession of a box of Dollars, the property of the said Mr. Edwards; the proceeds of the Chronometers to meet the value of the said box of Dollars, and the surplus, if any, to be handed over to the said Mr. Sturgis.

As the constituted attorneys of Mr. R Edwards, we have to state that the box of Dollars referred to herein is retained by the aforenamed Mr. Sturgis for an unacknowledged claim in 1833, which he has on Mr Edwards; and further we know, that the watches mentioned in the said advertisement are not yet returned from England.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

To Her Majesty's Subjects.

Canton, 7th March, 1839.

It has been most pressingly represented to the Chief Superintendent by the Security Merchants that in the actual untoward temper of the Government, they are exposed to grave consequences, and apprehend the early withdrawal of the Licences lately granted to the Passage Boats, on account of the continued entrance and stay in the River of many others than those small Vessels.

He entertains no doubt that these fears are well founded: Neither can he forget that this privilege was not gained without His own earnest assurances to the merchants for submission to the Government, that He would always use every proper effort in his power to secure the efficacy of the arrangement.

He gave this pledge for the sake of the substantial concernments of the Trade, and the comforts of the Community: And He certainly need not insist upon the excessive mischief which would result, if these authorized means of intercourse were lost, upon grounds that would amply justify the Provincial Government, and render their recovery and gradual extension perfectly hopeless.

He has therefore now to require that all small vessels, British owned, other than those having licences, should proceed out of the River immediately, and not return within the same.

And He has further to give notice that for the sake of the considerations above mentioned, He will not shrink from the duty of declaring to this Government the names of any British Subjects, owners of small vessels not having licences, who shall fail to comply with this requisition forthwith; And He will also request that these Boats may be immediately removed, to the end that the general interests may not be exposed to great and lasting injury on their account.

By order of the Chief Superintendent.

EDWARD ELMSLIE
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—Sales of Longcloths to some extent have been made during the week at about previous rates. The white at $ 4 for common and from 4.30 @ 4.50 for good quality. Cotton Yarn—there is some little enquiry for good yarn but a very low prices, say 28 @ 32 and for small parcels of fine Water twist we hear 34 @ 36 has been offered."

Woollens.—There has been little alteration during the week; a sale of 3 @ 400 Pieces of inferior Spanish Stripes was reported at about 1.25 or under, and 1000 pieces of superior quality yesterday as high as 1.55 or higher, but we have not received the particulars. Longells—a sale of 3500 pieces of good quality and assortment was effected in the early part of week at 8½, and some have, we believe been since sold at a little advance—some inferior have also been disposed of at about $ 7.

Metals.—Iron maintains its price from the very short supply. Lead is also firmer. Quick Silver is without demand at even our reduced quotation. Tin Plates are without enquiry.

Straits Produce.—without importations or transactions.

Rice.—there has been a good deal of speculation during the week, and the price has advanced fully 10 cents.

Cotton.—The demand has been rather languid during the week for all kinds. About 1400 bales of Bombay of middling quality sold at 8.7. and 600 bales of Madras 9.7 @ 9.8 Good Banda would sell at from 10.6 @ 10.8.

Opium.—The stoppage of the trade both here and on the coast continues complete. There are reports of both Patna and Malwa selling in Macao at from 200 @ 300 in small quantities. The speculation may be induced by the reports that the Portuguese Government intend to prohibit further importations. Nothing has yet transpired of the measures to be adopted by the Commissioner—it is said he is about to visit Macao and the different ports on the Coast. Meanwile some seizures of Opium merchants have taken place, and examinations are being carried on.

EXPORTS.

Nankin Raw Silk.—We hear of no further purchases of Silk, but the Silkmen do not yet seem inclined to submit to lower prices.

Tea.—A few chops of Congou have been bought at Taels 18 @ 22 and Twankay is enquired for, but high prices are still demanded by the holders, although they have within this day or two seemed rather more inclined to meet the market. In Young Hysons a fair business has been done at rather advanced prices.

The Ann, Gay, from Calcutta is just reported in. She left the Sandheads on the 28th January, Singapore on the 15th February, and arrived at Lantao on the 13th at 7 A. M.

Extortions of the Mandarins.

From a Correspondent.

The well authenticated charges against the extortion of civilians seem to be considered by the generality of Chinese as a matter of course. None of the superior officers can be ignorant that their underlings indulge largely in peculations, and even the monarch at the capital must be aware of the actual state of things. The question however is not how to put a stop to the evil, but rather to prevent its becoming too inveterate and public. We do think that most of the higher authorities believe, that under existing circumstances unlawful exactions are unavoidable, and that to do away with them entirely would require a radical change in the national character and in the constitution of the country.

Most functionaries serve for some time before they enter upon office in the capacity of clerks or assistants, to learn the routine of business. As soon as they are called to fill a station they never come alone. Each of them has his domestics, who are either their personal friends, or remain in the magistracy as heirlooms There are three distinct orders known under the name of Seangkung, Laoyae and Muishang, who serve in various capacities without receiving a salary from Government or being considered as servants in its employ. Instead of demanding any money from their patrons, they are often to buy their offices and in the course of the functions, to make considerable presents to keep their places. These men then who are more or less literary characters are let loose upon the community, and serve in the capacity of middle men, informers, protectors, receivers, suborners, attorneys etc. Few Mandarins would dare to infringe openly the law, but they become their tools, and are often used, to speak the language of the vulgar, as cats paw; if they are successful, they share the gains with their masters, and if they get into a scrape, they ought to bear the whole brunt. We must therefore expect, and running is their characteristic, and that as much business they are often superior to their employers. The executive part of Government being entrusted to their hands, they exercise a paramount influence upon the nation, and are much feared and courted. The runners, an inferior class, who are partly paid by Government, are under their direction and perform the more disagreeable part of their oppressive measures.

When it is moreover remembered that perhaps one third of the Mandarins have bought their offices, and that they must again indemnify themselves for the outlay; when it is further considered that in many instances their salary is inadequate for their maintenance, we ought by no means to wonder, but they do their best to make the most of their situation. Add, moreover, to this their apprehension of being denounced for some misdeed, and the necessity of having a sum of money always ready for buying off of penalty, the constant demand upon them for fees payable to their superiors, with several other items, and their condition will appear by no means enviable. They however cannot plead their perilous circumstances as an excuse for injustice, but it is extremely difficult to remain honest, generous, and loyal, where temptation, the force of example and general practice all cooperate to warp their minds and render them callous against the claims of humanity and public justice. The system is vicious and the agents participate in all its defects, being moreover deeply tinged with a hankering after filthy lucre.

The vengeance of the Spaniards had hardly been poured out on the unhappy Sôlôans, when the vicinity of Manila became the theatre of a far more bloody and wanton revenge. Notwithstanding the unprovoked massacre of their countrymen, in 1693, the Chinese colonists had come again to number 33,000, when Corcuera's administration began. It is admitted that cause for discontent had been given in the large tributes levied on them from time to time, but much of the evidence necessary to estimate their provocations is however now lost, and we must leave in obscurity the true causes of the rising of November 1639. It began on the shores of the Laguna de Bay, and extended thence to the capital and the other towns where the Chinese were settled. It was a prolonged massacre rather than a contest. The unarmed masses of the Chinese were attacked by the Spanish and Indian troops, wherever they were found, and, in the course of the four following months, 22,000 perished. This indiscriminate butchery was effected with the loss of only 350 of the assailants, a proportion which indicates the weakness of the resistance, and shews that defencelessness did not pull the appetite for blood. Indeed, it is difficult to avoid the impression, that these 22,000 unfortunate adventurers fell victims to a conspiracy of jealous and rapacious colonists, who hated them for their superior numbers, industry, and enterprise, and after goading them to revolt by insufferable oppressions, cut them off, with remorseless cruelty, from their long coveted possessions.

We now approach the period when Catholicism received its deathblow in the Japanese empire. It has been already mentioned that the hopes reposed by the converts on the death of Daifu were disappointed; magistracy had grown more cruel with the reign of his successor. A long persecution followed, in which the sword, the rack, the fosse, the filthy dungeon, and the boiling springs of mount Ungen were resorted to, in succession, to shake the Christian's constancy. No respect was paid to sex or age in these cruel and remorseless efforts to exterminate Catholicism, and when the charred and calcined bodies of the victims fell from their crosses, they were scattered over the face of the waters, that no relic might remain, to kindle the same indomitable spirit in others.

By way of adding derision to cruelty, a Japanese envoy was sent to Manila with a present of 150 lepers, that the Spaniards might have subjects on which to exercise the Christian virtue of charity.

So long as the missionaries fell, one by one, and at considerable intervals, victims to the fury of their enemies, adventurous men were found in the monastic establishments of Macao and Manila to fill the places left vacant by their deaths But when hetacombs came to smoke, instead of single sacrifices, on the altar of persecution, and it was evident the emperor was bent on the rooting out of Christianity, the heads of the churches reluctantly admitted, that the door to Japan was closed for the present, if not for ever. It was in 1640, under Corcuera's administration, a little after the Chinese massacre, that an ecclesiastical council called by the archbishop, decreed, that to persist in efforts to propagate the gospel in Japan, was but to send missionaries to the knife, and that those missions should be suspended until God be pleased to make a new opening for them. Nearly at the same moment, the Portuguese envoys, who had been sent to negotiate for the annulling of the decree cutting off their intercourse, were suffering death at Nangasaki.

Twice after this, the Jesuit order renewed its efforts to throw missionaries into Japan, through Manila, and as often the adventurous men who offered themselves for the service, were discovered on landing and immediately executed. Several of the foreign priests remained shut up in the empire, but from this time they were lost sight of, nor was it ever exactly known, whether, or at what times, they followed their predecessors to the stake or the crater. That a few instances of apostacy did occur, seems admitted, but the great majority of the martired priests and converts met their fate with wonderful constancy. It would be uncharitable, indeed, in the face of such examples, to extend the suspicion of apostacy to such as remained in the country, and were no more heard of. Thus terminated the intercourse between the Philippines and the Japanese empire. Could it have been continued, it would have brought great advantage to both countries. But the catastrophe, much as it is to be lamented, was the natural result of many and efficient causes. National antipathy, commercial rivalry, ecclesiastical dissension, and colonial usurpation, had long been before the eyes of the Japanese, in their worst forms, as inseparable concomitants of foreign intercourse. The jealousy and the aversion of a line of sovereigns, just enthroned on the ruins of a feudal oligarchy, were awakened, the exclusion of foreigners became the policy of the empire, and we have evidence that it still subsists in unimpaired strength, after the lapse of two centuries. *

While the Spanish colonists were busily engaged in massacring their best subjects, and were themselves, as if by a just retribution, the victims of the cruel policy of the Japanese, the Dutch were steadily pursuing their conquests. In 1640 they possessed themselves of Malacca, then a most important mart, and two years after, they drove the Spaniards from their settlements on Formosa. The loss of these valuable outposts was keenly felt in the colony, but instead of being able to attempt their recovery, the citizens were summoned, by the report of a Dutch invasion, to repair and guard the defences of Manila. A large Dutch fleet did soon appear on the coast, and strenuous efforts were made—by landing parties, our authorities say—to stir up the natives to revolt, a result which, we are told, was prevented, by their firm attachment to Christianity. The first object of the fleet undoubtedly was, to intercept the Acapulco ships. but, after watching the northern and southern passages for some time in vain, and meeting the Spanish coast squadron in several actions, they retired without investing Manila.

It has been already mentioned, that the union of the Spanish and Portuguese crowns in 1580 did not by any means produce a unity of feeling and interests between the adventurers from the two countries when they met in Eastern Asia. The Spaniards felt a right to participate in the advantages hitherto engrossed by the Portuguese whosought to keep intact their old monopoly. When, therefore, the announcement of the separation of 1640came, it was followed by an immediate revolt of all the Portuguese colonies from Spanish authority. Corcuerasaw the desirableness of preserving the connection between Macao and Manila, and to secure this end, dispatched an envoy to that city, to Don Sebastian Lobo, the acting governor; this officer, as well as many of the chief inhabitants, was friendly to the connection, but the common people, excited by the occasion, rose at the mention of adherence to Spain, imprisoned the envoy, murdered the governor, and declared for Portugal. An order to liberate the envoy was afterwards received from Goa, but it came accompanied by others requiring all the Spanish residents, secular and religious, to withdraw to Manila. Perhaps an exception would have been made, as to the execution of these orders, in favor of the Spanish nuns who had come over six years before, to found the nunnery of Santa Clara. But the fundadoras did not avail of it, embarking with many other exiles, in March 1644, on their return to Manila. Soon after setting sail, a storm came on, which drove them to Turon, where the ship was embargoed by the Cochinchinese governor. The wife of this magistrate was a Christian, and did not suffer the religieuses to suffer for lack of kind supplies, while under durance by her husband's authority. A higher honor awaited them when the royal order came for the whole party to repair to court without allowing any to excuse themselves. When the strangers reached the capital, the nuns were given to the care of the queen and her attendants, where they were treated for several days, with refreshments, shows, and dances, not at all in keeping with their former life in a convent. When the royal curiosity was gratified, they were dismissed with honor, and, arriving at Manila without further accident, they were welcomed back in the kindest manner by the people and the governor.

To the detail of the gay adventures of the banished Clarisas, succeeds an account of some remarkable volcanic phenomena. On the 4th of January (1646?) a mountain at Aringay in Ylocos, another at Sulu, and a third ot Sanguil in Mindanao, broke forth simultaneously into active eruption, as if a subterranean communication subsisted between them, or as if the fuel for their fires were laid up in the same secret storehouse. The Sulum volcano ejected vast quantities of seashells and other testaceous substances. Along the sides of the Ylocos crater, three pueblos were first devastated by the fire, and their site then obliterated and deeply covered by an eruption of water. The sky of all the southern islands was darkened by clouds of ashes, † the Archipelago shook, from Ternate to Camboja, and the roar of the hidden combustion was heard throughout this extent, as the rumbling of distant artillery.

The administration of Corcuera lasted nine years, when a process of "residencia" was instituted against him, i. e., he called to a formal and judicial account for his stewardship. His arbitrary administration had long before offended and alienated some of the most powerful classes of the colonists. The Franciscan fathers had preferred sundry charges—among which were, the charging freight on supplies sent to their remote missions, the withholding the royal grants of sacramental wine and oil, &c. The Augustine Recollects had also quarrelled with him, because he pulled down the church and convent they had begun to build on the plain of Bagumbayan, on the allegation that it interfered with his plan of fortifying the southern approaches to the city. These and many other smothered discontents broke out, on the suspension of Corcuera's functions, in August 1644, by the arrival of Don Diego Faxardo as his successor. The Recollects were among the first to prosecute the ex-governor, and, getting a verdict again-t him with $25,000 damages, they triumphantly went to work to pull down his fort and rebuild their convent. This was but the beginning of prosecution. Corcuera's property was sequestrated and he himself thrown into prison. Confined in a narrow apartment in the citadel, cut off from all friendly intercourse save with his confessor, he gave himself up to religious exercises, until his spiritual guide was obliged to interpose to moderate the severity of his macerations. The proverbial slowness of Spanish justice was fully verified in the five years' confinement of the unfortunate Corcuera. At the expiration of this time, the king was pleased to direct his release and return to Spain, whence he went as governor to the Canaries. We are not informed whether his severe castigation taught him leniency in his new office, nor whether any censure was ever passed upon the persons who had inflicted it.

* The attempt of the abbé Sidotti in 1709 has been noticed in the account of Portuguese and Spanish intercourse with Japan in our 6th vol. p. 473. We shall have occasion to mention, further on, the several parties of Japanese which have, at different times, been thrown by shipwreck on the shores of Luzon, &c. &c.

† The fall of quantities of ashes is mentioned under a date ten years earlier (followed by a visitation of Locusts), though the descent is not there traced to any particular eruption.

WEST COAST OF SUMATRA, DESTRUCTION OF MUCHE.—On the arrival here of the United States Frigate Columbia, a report got into circulation that Commodore READ with the naval force under his command had made reprisals on the West Coast, for the treacherous attack on the American merchant-ship Eclipse some months ago at the port of Muckei, when the Captain was killed, several of the crew wounded, and the vessel plundered of a large amount in specie and merchandize —and respecting the manner in which this outrage has been avenged we have obtained the following particulars:—

Commodore READ was at Colombo when intelligence was communicated to him of what had befallen the Eclipse—he lost no time in repairing to the scene of the outrage, and appeared off Qualiah Batoo about the 22d of December last. He touched at this place for the purpose of prosecuting his inquiries, and was not long in ascertaining that almost every Rajah on the coast, from Muckie Qualiah to Batoo, was implicated in the transaction, and had received some share of the plunder of the Eclipse. Information was also obtained that one of the principal actors in the tragedy was at Qualiah Batoo, under the protection of the Rajah of the district, although it could not positively be brought home to the latter that he had actually been a sharer in the plunder. The delivery of the offender and of the property brought with him to the place, was however immediately required by the Captain of the John Adams sloop-of-war in person. The Rajah did not deny that the party was on the spot, but attempted excuses for not being able to deliver him up, by representing that he was very popular in the place, and that there might be some risk in endeavouring to apprehend him and bring him on board. It was then intimated to the Rajah that no excuse of this kind could be received, that no credit would be given to any representation of his that it was not in his power to seize and deliver up any man acknowledged to be residing within his jurisdiction, and that if he was not secured and sent on board of the Columbia next day, he would be regarded as equally culpable, and dealt with accordingly. This threat having failed of effect, it was then determined to show the Rajah that such conduct would not be put up with, and the ships were hauled in as near to the forts as they could lie in safety, when they opened a canonade on the town, which was kept up for a quarter of an hour, in the hope of compelling the Rajah to surrender the individual who had been demanded at his hands.

This proceeding still failing of success, and the object contended for not appearing to call for stronger and more decisive measures, the squadron then proceeded to Muckei.—This was understood to be the place from which the nefarious expedition had sailed, and to which the perpetrators belonged, while its chiefs were at the same time known to have sanctioned the outrage. Having arrived at the anchorage off Muckei, the surrender of the culprits and of the property taken was demanded. The Rajah confessed that five of them were then in and about the place, and in the possession of part of the property, but expressed apprehension that they could not be taken, for the purpose of being delivered up to the Commodore. He was told that unless the culprits were delivered up, he should be considered as giving them his protection, and as being in receipt of a part of the property plundered from the Eclipse. These threats having been repeated here, as at Qualiah Batoo, without effect, and finding that no redress or satisfaction was to be obtained, a party of three hundred men and thirty officers were landed from the squadron, who in the short space of an hour and a half completely destroyed the town.

There was no effusion of blood on either side, the inhabitants having on the approach of the assailants all fled into the jungle, altho' a battery mounting five guns, as well as the nature of the ground, offered means of resistance which might have caused some annoyance to assailing force, if availed of.

It was also ascertained that another Chief on the Coast had participated in the plunder, although none of the marauders were living in his territory.—The share he acknowledged to have received was Drs. 2,000, but wisely preferring to reimburse the money and escape the alternative awaiting his refusal, he compounded with the Commodore to pay the amount in two years—an indulgence which was graciously accorded him.

It is doubtless much to be regretted that retaliatory acts of this description must involve in their consequences both the innocent and the guilty—but there seems to be no other available mode of proceeding with States and governments that encourage their subjects in acts of spoliation and murder, and condescend themselves to become sharers in the booty. When such acts of reprisal, unavoidably but unfortunately indiscriminate as to individuals, seem necessary however to be resorted to, it is certainly indispensable that every means should be taken, and every precaution used, to guard against inflicting punishment on any tribe or place guiltless of the particular offence. And in the present case there seems no doubt that the act of retribution was fairly called for, and fully justified.—Singapore Free Press, 14th February.

Passage Boats.

To Mr. Wetmore of the Honorable Chamber of Commerce.

A respectful communication.

A great Officer having just arrived in Canton for the express and sole purpose of putting an end to the opium traffic, which he is determined to pluck up by the root ere he desist from his labour, the laws on the subject are severe in the extreme and truly may not be slighted.

We request you will publish this letter in the newspapers, that all masters of vessels being fully informed on the subject may obey the law and bring no opium into the port. We have also to request that you will give the strictest orders to the boat owners not to bring a single grain of opium up to Canton, for our lives and property depend on their obedience.

We earnestly request that you will not pass over the present letter as of no importance, and with compliments remain,

To Mr. Wetmore and other Gentlemen of the Honourable the Chamber of Commerce.

A respectful communication.

Hereafter the licensed passage boats must not carry so many kinds of provisions on board; either when they leave or enter the river;—they must use stone ballast and on no account iron shot &c., which are contraband articles.

Unless the strictest attention is paid to this, the revenue officers will seize and cause much inconvenience, and the peaceful egress and ingress of the boats be interrupted.—It is for this we write, and with compliments remain.

Canton, 14th March, 1839.

To the Hong Merchants.

Gentlemen,—We beg to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of yesterday end of this date, advising of the detention of the licensed boat No. 5. at the Bogue Forts, in consequence of this boat having on board several small articles for Macao.

We are obliged to you for these early communications, and are pleased to observe the officers of the customs at the Bogue station have detained the boat for further examination.

We gave instantly on receipt of your first communication a letter, addressed to the preson in charge of the boat, into the hands of Atom linguist, directing the boat to return to Canton that a thorough investigation may take place.

We have made enquiries of the person who despatched the boat from Canton, and learn from him that the owner of the boat is now at Macao, and has been there for some days.—Amongst the articles taken on board we have ascertained the following; 2 half Tea chests containing letters, 1.25 catty Box Tea. 4,10 do. 3 5 do. 4 Tubs Sugar 1 Bag do. 1 Box Sugar Candy. 1 Box Clothes, 1 Leather Box containing letters & were intended to be landed at Macao, and that they were all embarked under the inspection of the officers of the Customs stationed at the point in front of the Factories, and who received the sum of $ being the amount of duties assessed by them on said articles; after which they gave permission to the boat to proceed to Macao, all which appears strictly conformable to the established regulations.

It seems in the present instance every requisite supposed duty was performed by the person who had charge of the boat, and we hope that after a careful examination of the matter, it will prove to have been conducted strictly in accordance with the established regulations as understood by this Chamber and fully explained to you.

CANTON PRESS EXTRAORDINARY.

WEDNESDAY, 20th MARCH, 1839.

We take the earliest opportunity of publishing the two following important documents, a translation of which we owe to the kindness of Mr. Morrison; it will be seen that they are Edicts addressed by the Imperial Commissioner Lin, one to the Foreigners, and the other to the Hong merchants, threatening both with the utmost severity of the law if the Opium trade is not entirely put a stop to, and requiring moreover foreigners to give up all the Opium now at Lintin to the Chinese Government, hinting that by such compliance the Imperial favor will be obtained, but that opposition to these orders will involve in danger the whole foreign trade and even the lives of foreigners. The Imperial Commissioner allows only three days for an answer. We refrain, for obvious reasons, from any comments on these documents, but would recommend to the foreign community immediately to call a meeting to deliberate on what is best to be done under these circumstances.

An order to prevent foreigners from leaving for Macao has just been issued as will be seen below.

EDICT.

From the Imperial Commissioner to Foreigners of all nations.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner of the Celestial Court, a Director of the Board of War, and Governor of Hookwang, issues his commands to the foreigners of every nation, requiring of all full acquaintance with the tenor thereof.

It is known that the foreign vessels, which come for a reciprocal trade to Kwangtung, have derived from that trade very large profits. This is evidenced by the facts,—that, whereas the vessels annually resorting hither were formerly reckoned hardly by tens, their number has of late years amounted to a hundred and several times ten: and that whatever commodities they may have brought, none have failed to find a full consumption; whatever they may have sought to purchase, never have they been unable readily to do so. Let them but ask themselves whether between heaven and earth, any place affording so advantageous a commercial mart is elsewhere to be found. It is because our Great Emperors, in their universal benevolence, have granted you commercial privileges, that you have been favored with these advantages. Let our ports once be closed against you, and for what profits can your several nations any longer look? Yet more,—our tea and our rhubarb—seeing that, should you foreigners be deprived of them, you therein lose the means of preserving life,—are without stint or grudge granted to you for exportation, year by year, beyond the seas. Favors never have been greater!

Are you grateful for these favors? You must then fear the laws, and in seeking profit for yourselves, must not do hurt to others. Why do you bring to our land the opium, which in your own lands is not made use of, by it defrauding men of their property, and causing injury to their lives? I find that with this thing you have seduced and deluded the people of China for tens of years past: and countless are the unjust hoards that you have thus acquired. Such conduct rouses indignation in every human heart, and is utterly inexcusable in the eye of Celestial Reason.

The prohibitions formerly enacted by the Celestial Court against opium were comparatively lax, and it was yet possible to smuggle the drug into the various ports. Of this the great Emperor having now heard, his wrath has been fearfully aroused, nor will it rest till the evil be utterly extirpated. Whoever, among the people of this inner land deal in opium, or establish houses for the smoking of it, shall be instantly visited with the extreme penalty of the laws; and it is in contemplation to render capital also the crime of smoking the drug.

Having come into the territory of the Celestial Court, you should pay obedience to its laws and statutes, equally with the natives of the land. I, the High Commissioner, having my home in the maritime province of Fuhkeen, and consequently having early had intimate acquaintance with all the arts and shifts of the outer foreigners, for this reason, have been honored by the Great Emperor with the full powers and privileges of 'a High 'Imperial Commissioner, who, having repeatedly 'performed meritorious services, is sent to settle 'the affairs of the outer frontier.'

Should I search closely into the offences of these foreigners in forcing for a number of years the sale of opium, they would be found already beyond the bounds of indulgence. But, reflecting that they are men from distant lands, and that they have not before been aware that the prohibition of opium is so severe, I cannot bear, in the present plain enforcement of the laws and restrictions, to cut them off without instructive monition.

I find that on board the warehousing vessels which you now have lying at anchor in the Lintin and other offings, there are stored up several times ten thousand chests of opium, which it is your purpose and desire illicitly to dispose of by sale. You do not consider, however, the present severity of the measures in operation for seizure of it at the ports. Where will you again find any that will dare to give it escort? And similar measures for the seizure of it are in operation also in every province. Where else then will you yet find opportunity of disposing of it? At the present time the dealings in opium are brought utterly to a stand, and all men are convinced that it is a nauseous poison. Why will you be at the pains then of laying it up on board your foreign store-ships, and of keeping them long anchored on the face of the open sea,—not only spending to no purpose your labor and your wealth, but exposed also to unforeseen dangers from storms or from fire.

I proceed to issue my commands. When these commands reach the said foreign-merchants, let them with all haste pay obedience thereto. Let them deliver up to government every particle of the opium on board their store ships. Let it be ascertained by the Hong merchants, who are the parties so delivering it up, and what number of chests, as also what total quantity in catties and taels, is delivered up under each name. Let these particulars be brought together in a clear tabular form, and be presented to government, in order that the opium may all be received in plain conformity thereto, that it may be burnt and destroyed, and that thus the evil may be entirely extirpated. There must not be the smallest atom concealed or withheld.

At the same time let these foreigners give a bond, written jointly in the foreign and Chinese languages, making a declaration to this effect: 'That their 'vessels which shall hereafter resort hither will 'never again dare to bring opium with them; and 'that should any be brought, as soon as discovery 'shall be made of it, the goods shall be forfeited to government, and the parties shall suffer the extreme penalties of the law: and that such punishment will be willingly submitted to.'

I have heard that you foreigners are used to attach great importance to the word 'good faith.' If then you will really do as I, the High Commissioner, have commanded,—will deliver up every particle of the opium that is already here, and will stay altogether its future introduction,—as this will prove also that you are capable of feeling contrition for your offences, and of entertaining a salutary dread of punishment, the past may yet be left unnoticed. I, the High Commissioner, will in that case, in conjunction with the Governor and Lieut-Governor, address the throne, imploring the Great Emperor to vouchsafe extraordinary favor, and not alone to remit the punishment of your past errors, but also —as we will further request—to devise some mode of bestowing on you his imperial rewards, as an encouragement of the spirit of contrition and wholesome dread thus manifested by you. After this, you will continue to enjoy the advantages of commercial intercourse; and as you will not lose the character of being 'good foreigners,' and will be enabled to acquire profits and get wealth by an honest trade, will you not indeed stand in a most honorable position?

If, however, you obstinately adhere to your folly and refuse to awake,—if you think to make up a tale covering over your illicit dealings,—or to set up as a pretext that the opium is brought by foreign seamen, and the foreign merchants have nothing to do with it,—or to pretend craftily that you will carry it back to your countries, or will throw it into the sea,—or to take occasion to go to other provinces in search of a door of consumption,—or to stifle inquiry by delivering up only one or two tenths of the whole quantity; in any of these cases, it will be evident that you retain a spirit of contumacy and disobedience, that you uphold vice and will not reform. Then, although it is the maxim of the Celestial Court to treat with tenderness and great mildness men from afar, yet as it cannot suffer them to indulge in scornful and contemptuous trifling with it, it will become requisite to comprehend you also in the severe course of punishment prescribed by the new law.

On this occasion, I the high Commissioner, having come from the capital, have personally received the sacred commands, that wherever a law exists, it is to be fully enforced. And as I have brought these full powers and privileges, enabling me to perform whatever seems to me right,—powers with which those ordinarily given, for inquiring and acting in regard to other matters, are by no means comparable,—so long as the opium traffic remains unexterminated, so long will I delay my return. I swear that I will progress with this matter from its beginning to its ending, and that not a thought of stopping half way shall for a moment be indulged.

Furthermore, observing the present condition of the popular mind, I find so universal a spirit of indignation aroused, that, should you foreigners remain dead to a sense of contrition and amendment, and continue to make gain your sole object, there will not only be arrayed against you the martial terrors and powerful energies of our naval and military forces;—it will be but necessary to call on the able-bodies of the people [the militia or posse comitatus], and these alone will be more than adequate to the placing all your lives within my power. Besides, either by the temporary stoppage of your trade, or by the permanent closing of the ports against you, what difficulty can there be in effectually cutting off your intercourse? Our central empire, comprising a territory of many thousands of miles, and possessing in rich abundance all the products of the ground, has no benefit to derive from the purchase of your foreign commodities, and you may therefore well fear, that from the moment such measures are taken, the livelihood of your several nations must come to an end. You, who have travelled so far to conduct your commercial business, how is it that you are not yet alive to the great difference between the condition of vigorous exertion and that of easy repose—the wide distance between the power of the few and the power of the many?

As to those crafty foreigners, who, residing in the foreign factories, have been in the habit of dealing in opium, I, the high commissioner, have early been provided with a list of them by name. At the same time those good foreigners who have not sold opium must also not fail to be distinguished. Such of them as will point out their depraved fellow-foreigners, will compel them to deliver up their opium, and will step forth among the foremost to give the required bonds.—these shall be regarded as the good foreigners. And I, the high commissioner, will at once for their encouragement reward them liberally. It rests with yourselves alone to choose whether you will have weal or woe, honor or disgrace.

I am now about to command the Hong merchants to proceed to your factories, to instruct and admonish you. A term of three days is prescribed for an address to be sent in reply to me. And at the same time let your duly attested and faithful bonds be given, waiting for me in conjunction with the Governor and Lieut-Governor to appoint a time for the opium to be delivered up. Do not indulge in idle expectations, or seek to postpone matters, deferring to repent until its lateness render it ineffectual.—A special edict.

Taoukwang 19th year 2d Month, 4th day

Chinese Secretary and Interpreter to the Superintendents of British Trade in China.

EDICT

From the Imperial Commissioner to the Hong merchants.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner, director of the Board of War, and Governor of Hookwang, issues his commands to the Hong merchants, requiring of them full acquaintance with the tenor thereof.

The commercial intercourse subsisting in Kwangtung between the Chinese and foreigners has continued for a period of more than three hundred years. What was there to render impossible a free commercial interchange of goods between these parties themselves? Nothing. It was then the desire of preventing an illicit intercourse, and of guarding against contraband commodities, that rendered necessary the establishment of a class of Hong merchants.

Respectfully searching, I find, under date the 21st year of Keaking (1816), an imperial edict,—"rendering the Hong merchants responsible for the "ascertainment of the question, whether or not any "foreign vessel imports opium; and, in case of her "so doing, for the rejection of all her cargo, for the "refusal to let her trade, and for the driving of her "back to her country." Respect and obedience being paid hereto, this edict was duly recorded. And I find, that, on each occasion of a foreign vessel entering the port, the said Hong merchants have always given bonds that she brought no opium with her.

In consequence of such bonds, vessels have been allowed to enter the port and break bulk, nor has any vessel ever been sent back. And even now, while the opium is pervading and filling with its poisonous influence the whole empire, the said Hong merchants still continue indiscriminately to give such bonds, declaring that the ships that resort hither have brought none of it. Are they not indeed dreaming, and snoring in their dreams?

If they say that the opium which they bring is discharged beforehand and left on board the warehousing vessels at Lintin, and that the bonds given as to their bringing none, have reference to the vessels as entering the port, what is this but to 'shut the ears while the jingling bell is being stolen'—to provide for themselves a ground of excuse? The feelings that prompt such conduct will still less bear scrutiny. It is as if a man, to guard his house at night, should appoint a watchman, and that nevertheless his property should be bundled up and carried away, while yet the watchman should declare that there had been no thief. If this would not be regarded as combination in the theft, as what then would it be regarded?

Moreover, the foreign factories are built by the said Hong merchants, and by them are rented to the foreigners as residences; the hong-men and all the working people in the factories are hired by the same merchants; and the 'Macheen' (or outside shopmen) are in their employ; the neighboring shroff shops too are those with which the Hong merchants have dealings. Yet for more than ten years past, there has not been a shroff shop that has not given bills, nor a 'Macheen' that has not had transactions with the opium-preparers, nor a hongmen or other workman that has not had connexions with the fast-boats. There have been besides the writers' houses (or broker's shops) for preparing letters; and brokers, for carrying the orders, would pass in and out of the foreign residences, day and night, without ever being questioned by any one. The Shroffs' and Hong merchants' coolies, and carriers, of all grades, would in the daytime openly go into the factories, and would at night afford escort down to the boats. Can the Hong merchants aver that they have heard and seen nothing of all this? Or, as they have agreed to conceal it and bring no part of it to light, will any one believe them when they assert that they have had no secret share in the matter?

I have heard, that formerly, when the foreigners came to the factories, they would go in full dress, with swords by their sides, to wait upon the several Hong merchants, and would often meet with a denial, nor would they soon or have their visits returned, until after a second visit. But of late years there have been those who will sue to the foreigners for patronage, and will even pass beyond the custom houses or go to Macao to meet them. And so far has this proceeded, that [a party in] the Tungyu Hong gave a sedan chair to the chief supercargo Baynes, whereupon the same chief supercargo turned round, and would not suffer the Hong merchants to enter his factory in chairs. Many have been the instances of this misconduct and subversion of what is right and fitting. What sense of shame indeed does there yet remain? Though it be true that this has arisen from the conduct of probationary Hong merchants, who have shown the example of such artful demeanor, and that the original merchants, men of property and family, would never have descended to this stage of degradation: yet all now are equally involved in the stench of it, and truly I burn with shame for you.

With you there seems to be no other consideration than that of growing rich, and being left to carry on your trade; and you seem to regard the mine of all your profits as lying in the attaching of foreigners to you. You leave no room for the consideration that the profits enjoyed by foreigners are those granted by the Celestial Court; and that if some day they should irritate the sacred wrath to the cutting off of their trade and closing of the custom-houses, not a mite of profit will there be for any of those nations to look for: and what then will there be for you?

They, regardless of the rich favors wherewith they are imbued by the Court, take depraved natives for their bosom friends. In the public offices of the inner land, there is not a movement or a pause, but the foreigners are fully informed of it. But if any question is put to the Hong merchants regarding foreign affairs, they turn about for ways in which to gloze over and conceal the facts, nor will they utter the truth. Thus it is in regard to the exportation of the pure silver beyond sea, a thing so very strictly prohibited. Did the foreigners really barter goods for goods, what silver would there be for them to carry away? But more than this, the Hong merchants once represented, that each year, in addition to the interchange of commodities by barter, the foreigners require always to bring into the inner land foreign money to the amount of four or five millions of dollars. Were this really the case, how comes it that of late years the foreign Ships have brought into the port no new foreign money, and that the foreign silver existing in the country has daily been diminishing in quantity? And how happens it, that among the Hong merchants there have been bankrupts whose debts to foreigners have exceeded a million of money? It is clear that these four words, 'goods bartered for goods,' are totally and altogether false.

There is one thing yet more extraordinary. These Hong Merchants, sheltering themselves under a memorial of a former Superintendent of Customs, a, which requested temporarily as a trial, that three tenths of any surplus foreign money should be allowed to be taken away,—have acted as though this request had passed into an established law, and have yearly, under cover of this, solicited permission to embark money. They have had numerous boxes made, such as are employed for the remission of revenue. And they have even represented for the foreigners, that, in such a year, a foreigner left so much money in such and such hands, and that now he has entrusted such and such a person to convey it home for him: and they have secretly concerted with the clerks of the custom-house to put this upon the records.—Thus, while on the one hand the Hong Merchants give these bonds, the silver, on the other hand, is exported,—their words and deeds are contrary one to another, and this is passed quietly over without exciting surprise. And when the imperial pleasure has been expressed, that inquiry should be made, they have with one simple address glozed over and set at rest the whole matter.

With regard too to foreigners, such as Jardine and others, who have been in the habit of selling opium,—all of them most artful and crafty men,—when the imperial pleasure was expressed, two years ago, that their conduct should be inquired into, and that they should be driven forth, the said Hong merchants still strenuously defended them. Such language as this was used: 'that when it could be discovered that there had been any concert in selling opium, any money taken, or orders given, punishment would then be willingly submitted to.' Such a bond is yet to be found among the archives! Let them ask themselves, whether, according to this bond, punishment should, or should not, be inflicted?

Again, the opium on board Innes' vessel was seized within the river, showing that the bonds given even for vessels that have entered the port have been no less unworthy of confidence.

Last winter, seven passage boats, on the reiterated representations of these merchants, newly received permission to run, and already smuggling of goods, and importation of gunpowder, have been the consequence. If you, say these things were without your knowledge, of what use then are you? If they took place with your knowledge, death is too light a punishment for you.

It is computed that the loss of the silver of China, during a period of several years past, by exportation beyond sea, has been not less than some hundreds of millions. The imperial commands have been repeatedly received, in reference to the importation of opium and exportation of pure silver, reproving all the officers of every degree, in the most severe terms, yet these Hong merchants have continued in the same course of filthy and disgraceful conduct, to the great indignation and gnashing of teeth of every one. I, the high commissioner, in obeying the imperial commands, in accordance with which I have come to Canton, shall first punish the depraved natives. And it is by no means certain that these Hong merchants will not be within the number.

I proceed to command that investigation be made. Upon my commands reaching the said Hong Merchants, let them immediately state clearly the truth, that matters may be thoroughly arranged in consistence with the laws. The utter annihilation of the opium trade being now my first object, I have given commands to the foreigners, to deliver up to government all the myriads of chests of opium which they have on board their warehousing vessels. And I have also called on them to subscribe a bond, in Chinese and in the foreign languages jointly, declaring that henceforth they will never venture to bring opium, and that if any should again be brought, upon discovery thereof, the parties concerned shall immediately suffer execution of the laws, and the property shall be confiscated to government. These commands are now given to the Hong merchants, that they may convey them to the foreign factories and plainly make them known. It is requisite that they should acquire an earnest severity of deportment, that the energetic character of the commands may be clearly made to appear. They must not continue to exhibit a contumacious disposition or to color over the matter, nor may they again give utterance to any expressions of solicitation. It is imperative on them, to act with energy and lofty tiness of tone, and to unite in enjoining these commands. Three days are prescribed, within which they must obtain the required bonds, and report in reply hereto. If it be found that this matter cannot at once be arranged by them, it will be apparent, without inquiry, that they are constantly acting in concert with depraved foreigners, and that their minds have a perverted inclination. And I, the high Commissioner, will forthwith solicit the royal death-warrant, and select for execution one or two of the most unworthy of their number, confiscating their property to government, and thus will I show a lucid warning. Say not that you did not receive early notice. A special edict.

Chinese Secretary and Interpreter to the Superintendents of British Trade in China.

We have just time to publish the following, issued this morning;

To Mr. Wetmore and the other gentlemen of the honble Chamber of Commerce,

A respectful communication.

We beg to call your attention to the enclosed copy of an Edict we have just received from H. E. the Hoppo commanding that, during the present state of affairs, no foreigners be permitted to apply for leave to go down to Macao.

Please circulate this among the residents that all, knowing, may obey. It is for this we write and with compliments remain,

The HONG MERCHANTS.

EDICT.

Yu, Hoppo &c. &c. proclaims to the Hong-merchants for their full information.

Pending the stay of the Commissioner in Canton and while the consequences of his investigations, both to foreigners and natives, are yet uncertain, all foreign residents are forbidden to go down to Macao. I therefore issue this Ediet to the Hong merchants. On receipt of it let them instantly communicate to the foreigners its purport for their information and obedience. For the present they must not petition for leave to go down to Macao.

Do not oppose—a special edict. March 19th 1839.

Extortions of the Mandarins.

From a Correspondent.

The well authenticated charges against the extortion of civilians seem to be considered by the generality of Chinese as a matter of course. None of the superior officers can be ignorant that their underlings indulge largely in peculations, and even the monarch at the capital must be aware of the actual state of things. The question however is not how to put a stop to the evil, but rather to prevent its becoming too inveterate and public. We do think that most of the higher authorities believe, that under existing circumstances unlawful exactions are unavoidable, and that to do away with them entirely would require a radical change in the national character and in the constitution of the country.

Most functionaries serve for some time before they enter upon office in the capacity of clerks or assistants, to learn the routine of business. As soon as they are called to fill a station they never come alone. Each of them has his domestics, who are either their personal friends, or remain in the magistracy as heirlooms There are three distinct orders known under the name of Seangkung, Laoutae and Munshang, who serve in various capacities without receiving a salary from Government or being considered as servants in its employ. Instead of demanding any money from their patrons, they have often to buy their offices and in the course of its functions, to make considerable presents to keep their places. These men then who are more or less literary characters are let loose upon the community, and serve in the capacity of middle men, informers, protectors, receivers, suborners, attorneys etc. Few Mandarins would dare to infringe openly the law, but they become their tools, and are often used, to speak the language of the vulgar, as cats paw; if they are successful, they share the gains with their masters, and if they get into a scrape, they ought to bear the whole brunt. We must therefore expect, that cunning is their characteristic, and that as men of business they are often superior to their employers. The executive part of Government being entrusted to their hands, they exercise a paramount influence upon the nation, and are much feared and courted. The runners, an inferior class, who are partly paid by Government, are under their direction and perform the more disagreeable part of their oppressive measures.

When it is moreover remembered that perhaps one third of the Mandarins have bought their offices, and that they must again indemnify themselves for the outlay; when it is further considered that in many instances their salary is inadequate for their maintenance, we ought by no means to wonder, that they do their best to make the most of their situation. Add, moreover, to this their apprehension of being denounced for some misdeed, and the necessity of having a sum of money always ready for buying off of penalty, the constant demand upon them for fees payable to their superiors, with several other items, and their condition will appear by no means enviable. They however cannot plead their perilous circumstances as an excuse for injustice, but it is extremely difficult to remain honest, generous, and loyal, where temptation, the force of example and general practice all cooperate to warp their minds and render them callous against the claims of humanity and public justice. The system is vicious and the agents participate in all its defects, being moreover deeply tinged with a hankering after filthy lucre.

The vengeance of the Spaniards had hardly been poured out on the unhappy Sangleans, when the vicinity of Manila became the theatre of a far more bloody and wanton revenge. Notwithstanding the unprovoked massacre of their countrymen, in 1603, the Chinese colonists had come again to number 33,000. when Corcuera's administration began. It is admitted that cause for discontent had been given in the large tributes levied on them from time to time, but much of the evidence necessary to estimate their provocations is however now lost, and we must leave in obscurity the true causes of the rising of November 1639. It began on the shores of the Laguna de Bay, and extended thence to the capital and the other towns where the Chinese were settled. It was a prolonged massacre rather than a contest. The unarmed masses of the Chinese were attacked by the Spanish and Indian troops, wherever they were found, and, in the course of the four following months, 27,000 perished. This indiscriminate butchery was effected with the less of only 350 of the assailants, a proportion which indicates the weakness of the resistance, and shews that defencelessness did not pall the appetite for blood. Indeed, it is difficult to avoid the impression, that these 27,000 unfortunate adventurers fell victims to a conspiracy of jealous and rapacious colonists, who hated them for their superior numbers, industry, and wealth, and after goading them to revolt by insufferable oppressions, cut them off, with remorseless cruelty, from their long coveted possessions.

We now approach the period when Catholicism received its deathblow in the Japanese empire. It has been already mentioned that the hopes reposed by the converts on the death of Dayfu were disappointed; malignity had grown more cruel with the reign of his successor. A long persecution followed, in which the sword, the rack, the fosse, the filthy dungeon, and the boiling springs of mount Ungen were resorted to, in succession, to shake the Christian's constancy. No respect was paid to sex or age in these cruel and remorseless efforts to exterminate Catholicism, and when the charred and calcined bodies of the victims fell from their crosses, they were scattered over the face of the waters, that no relic might remain, to kindle the same indomitable spirit in others.

By way of adding derision to cruelty, a Japanese envoy was sent to Manila with a present of 150 lepers, that the Spaniards might have subjects on which to exercise the Christian virtue of charity.

So long as the missionaries fell, one by one, and at considerable intervals, victims to the fury of their enemies, adventurous men were found in the monastic establishments of Macao and Manila to fill the places left vacant by their deaths. But when betacombs came to smoke, instead of single sacrifices, on the altar of persecution, and it was evident the emperor was bent on the rooting out of Christianity, the heads of the churches reluctantly admitted, that the door to Japan was closed for the present, if not for ever. It was in 1640, under Corcuera's administration, a little after the Chinese massacre, that an ecclesiastical council called by the archbishop, decreed, that to persist in efforts to propagate the gospel in Japan, was but to send missionaries to the knife, and that those missions should be suspended until God be pleased to make a new opening for them. Nearly at the same moment, the Portuguese envoys, who had been sent to negotiate for the annulling of the decree cutting off their intercourse, were suffering death at Nangasaki.

Twice after this, the Jesuit order renewed its efforts to throw missionaries into Japan, through Manila, and as often the adventurous men who offered themselves for the service, were discovered on landing and immediately executed. Several of the foreign priests remained shut up in the empire, but from this time they were lost sight of, nor was it ever exactly known, whether, or at what times, they followed their predecessors to the stake or the crater. That a few instances of apostacy did occur, seems admitted, but the great majority of the martired priests and converts met their fate with wonderful constancy. It would be uncharitable, indeed, in the face of such examples, to extend the suspicion of apostacy to such as remained in the country, and were no more heard of. Thus terminated the intercourse between the Philippines and the Japanese empire. Could it have been continued, it would have brought great advantage to both countries. But the catastrophe, much as it is to be lamented, was the natural result of many and efficient causes. National antipathy, commercial rivalry, ecclesiastical dissension, and colonial usurpation, had long been before the eyes of the Japanese, in their worst forms, as inseparable concomitants of foreign intercourse. The jealousy and the aversion of a line of sovereigns, just enthroned on the ruins of a feudal oligarchy, were awakened, the exclusion of foreigners became the policy of the empire, and we have evidence that it still subsists in unimpaired strength, after the lapse of two centuries. *

While the Spanish colonists were busily engaged in massacring their best subjects, and were themselves, as if by a just retribution, the victims of the cruel policy of the Japanese, the Dutch were steadily pursuing their conquests. In 1640 they possessed themselves of Malacca, then a most important mart, and two years after, they drove the Spaniards from their settlements on Formosa. The loss of these valuable outposts was keenly felt in the colony, but instead of being able to attempt their recovery, the citizens were summoned, by the report of a Dutch invasion, to repair and guard the defences of Manila. A large Dutch fleet did soon appear on the coast, and strenuous efforts were made—by landing parties, our authorities say—to stir up the natives to revolt, a result which, we are told, was prevented, by their firm attachment to Christianity. The first object of the fleet undoubtedly was, to intercept the Acapulco ships, but, after watching the northern and southern passages for some time in vain, and meeting the Spanish coast squadron in several actions, they retired without investing Manila.

It has been already mentioned, that the union of the Spanish and Portuguese crowns in 1580 did not by any means produce a unity of feeling and interests between the adventurers from the two countries when they met in Eastern Asia. The Spaniards felt a right to participate in the advantages hitherto engrossed by the Portuguese whosought to keep intact their old monopoly. When, therefore, the establishment of the separation of 1640came, it was followed by an immediate revolt of all the Portuguese colonies from Spanish authority. Corcuera saw the desirableness of preserving the connection between Macao and Manila, and to secure this end, dispatched an envoy to that city, to Don Sebastian Lobo, the acting governor; this officer, as well as many of the chief inhabitants, was friendly to the connection, but the common people, excited by the occasion, rose at the instigation of adherence to Spain, imprisoned the envoy, murdered the governor, and declared for Portugal. An order to liberate the envoy was afterwards received from Goa, but it came accompanied by others requiring all the Spanish residents, secular and religious, to withdraw to Manila. Perhaps an exception would have been made, as to the execution of these orders, in favor of the Spanish nuns who had come over six years before, to found the nunnery of Santa Clara. But the fundadoras did not avail of it, embarking with many other exiles, in March 1644, on their return to Manila. Soon after setting sail, a storm came on, which drove them to Turon, where the ship was embargoed by the Cochinchinese government. The wife of this magistrate was a Christian, and did not suffer the religieuses to suffer for lack of kind supplies, while under durance by her husband's authority. A higher honor awaited them when the royal order came for the whole party to repair to court without allowing any to excuse themselves. When the strangers reached the capital, the nuns were given to the care of the queen and her attendants, where they were treated for several days, with refreshments, shows, and dances, not at all in keeping with their former life in a convent. When the royal curiosity was gratified, they were dismissed with honor, and, arriving at Manila without further accident, they were welcomed back in the kindest manner by the people and the governor.

To the detail of the gay adventures of the banished Clarisas, succeeds an account of some remarkable volcanic phenomena. On the 4th of January (1646?) a mountain at Aringay in Ylocos, another at Salu, and a third ot Sanguil in Mindanao, broke forth simultaneously into active eruption, as if a subterranean communication subsisted between them, or as if the fuel for their fires were laid up in the same secret storehouse. The Suluan vulcano ejected vast quantities of seashells and other testaceous substances. Along the sides of the Ylocos crater, three pueblos were first devasted by the fire, and their site then obliterated and deeply covered by an eruption of water. The sky of all the southern islands was darkened by clouds of ashes, † the Archipelago shook, from Ternate to Camboja, and the roar of the hidden combustion was heard throughout this extent, as the rumbling of distant artillery.

The administration of Corcuera lasted nine years, when a process of "residencia" was instituted against him, i. e., he called to a formal and judicial account for his stewardship. His arbitrary administration had long before offended and alienated some of the most powerful classes of the colonists. The Franciscan fathers had preferred sundry charges—among which were, the charging freight on supplies sent to their remote missions, the withholding the royal grants of sacramental wine and oil, &c. The Augustine Recollects had also quarrelled with him, because he pulled down the church and convent they had begun to build on the plain of Bagumbayan, on the allegation that it interfered with his plan of fortifying the southern approaches to the city These and many other smothered discontents broke out, on the suspension of Corcuera's functions, in August 1641, by the arrival of Don Diego Faxardo as his successor. The Recollects were among the first to prosecute the ex-governor, and, getting a verdict again-t him with $25,000 damages, they triumphantly went to work to pull down his fort and rebuild their convent. This was but the beginning of persecution. Corcuera's property was sequestrated and he himself thrown into prison Confined in a narrow apartment in the citadel, cut off from all friendly intercourse save with his confessor, he gave himself up to religious exercises, until his spiritual guide was obliged to interpose to moderate the severity of his macerations. The proverbial slowness of Spanish Justice was fully verified in the five years' confinement of the unfortunate Corcuera. At the expiration of this time, the king was pleased to direct his release and return to Spain, whence he went as governor to the Canaries. We are not informed whether his severe castigation taught him leniency in his new office, nor whether any censure was ever passed upon the persons who had inflicted it.

WEST COAST OF SUMATRA, DESTRUCTION OF MUCKEI.—On the arrival here of the United States Frigate Columbia, a report got into circulation that Commodore READ with the naval force under his command had made reprisals on the West Coast, for the treacherous attack on the American merchant-ship Eclipse, some months ago at the port of Muckei, when the Captain was killed, several of the crew wounded, and the vessel plunderd of a large amount in specie and merchandize —and respecting the manner in which this outrage has been avenged we have obtained the following particulars:—

Commodore READ was at Colombo when intelligence was communicated to him of what had befallen the Eclipse—he lost no time in repairing to the scene of the outrage, and appeared off Qualluh Batoo about the 22d of December last. He touched at this place for the purpose of prosecuting his inquiries, and was not long in ascertaining that almost every Rajah on the coast, from Muckie Qualluh to Batoo, was implicated in the transaction, and had received some share of the plunder of the Eclipse. Information was also obtained that one of the principal actors in the tragedy was at Qualluh Batoo, under the protection of the Rajah of the district, although it could not positively be brought home to the latter that he had actually been a sharer in the plunder. The delivery of the offender and of the property brought with him to the place, was however immediately required by the Captain of the John Adams sloop-of-war in person. The Rajah did not deny that the party was on the spot, but attempted excuses for not being able to deliver him up, by representing that he was very populous in the place, and that there might be some risk in endeavouring to apprehend him and bring him on board. It was then intimated to the Rajah that no excuse of this kind could be received, that no credit would be given to any representation of his that it was not in his power to seize and deliver up any man acknowledged to be residing within his jurisdiction, and that if he was not secured and sent on board of the Columbia next day, the Rajah himself should be regarded as equally culpable, and dealt with accordingly. This threat having failed of effect, it was then determined to show the Rajah that such conduct would not be put up with, and the ships were hauled in as near to the forts as they could lie in endeavouring to apprehend him and bring him on board. If the government intended strictly to prohibit the taking of small articles, necessaries of life and other trifles from going on board of the licensed boats, if should have been clearly defined and so understood by the officers of the customs. Had this been the case the present occurrence would not have happened. We do not regret this occurrence, inasmuch as it will enable the government to sift the matter, and then they will be fully assured, that knowingly there is no intention to depart in the least from the fixed regulations framed for the management of the licensed boats.

Yü Collector of Customs at the Port of Canton, &c. &c., to the Hong merchants who state that the smuggled tea, sugar candy, &c., seized on board the Snipe had been transhipped at Whampoa and brought up to Canton.

Let the said goods be sold according to law, and their proceeds confiscated to Government. Let the boat which is called "the licensed boat No. 5" and which is now aground at Whampoa be forthwith brought up to Canton by the Hong merchants who must report the same to me that I may request the Governor to depute an officer to accompany an officer from my department to superintend the breaking up of the boat.

Let this order be made known to the Chamber of Commerce for its information and obedience. Let the Hong merchants and Linguists strictly question the said foreigner Peirce as to whom the smuggled goods belong, where they were shipped and whither destined—do not allow the least prevarication, but forthwith report, that I may act accordingly. If you presume to gloss over the matter in the slightest degree, truly your punishment shall not be trifling, I will not indulge you!

The Hong Merchants.

March 22nd 1839.

Yu, Collector of Customs, &c. &c. at the Port of Canton, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

Respecting Peirce's boat which was seized at the Bogue for attempting to smuggle Tea &c. out of the river, I before commanded the Hong merchants to bring her up to Canton with all dispatch, that on their reporting her arrival I might depute an officer to accompany one from the Governor's Office to superintend the breaking up of the boat—I have now received a communication from H. E. the Governor informing me that he has commanded the Kwangchowhee and the Namhoy yune to accompany in person an officer from the Custom House to proceed on board of her and superintend her being broken up and to report same.

On receipt of this I, the Hoppo, besides commanding an Officer to hold himself in readiness to obey, also issue an edict to you Hong merchants, for your information and instant obedience. Forthwith bring up to Canton the licensed boat No. 5. belonging to Peirce that she may be broken up.

Canton, March 21st, 1832.

To the Hong merchants.
Gentlemen,

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of the Proclamation issued to all Foreigners by the Imperial Commissioner. It has been received with profound respect by this Chamber and they have had a meeting this morning of its members, who have directed me, as their Chairman, to report to you as follows "viz.

"That the Communications made by the Commissioner of the Imperial will are of such vital importance, and involve such complicated interests that a reply to them cannot be given without the "greatest deliberation, and that a Committee "should now therefore be appointed to take the "measures into consideration, and report their "opinion to the Chamber at the earliest possible pe- "riod*. That in the mean time a Deputation from this Meeting do wait upon the Hong merchants "to state to them what has been done, who may "at the same time state, that there is an unanimous feeling in the community of the absolute "necessity of the foreign residents of Canton having no connexion with the opium traffic."

It affords me great satisfaction to be able to inform you that, agreeably to the Resolution of the Chamber, a Committee has been appointed, who will report in time, to enable a definite reply to be given on or before Wednesday next the 27th instant; and I need not assure you how very anxious the Chamber are, that this important question should be disposed of, and your minds as well as those of all right thinking people be set at ease.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient.
W. S. WETMORE
Chairman.

The Opium-trade.

In our last week's paper we noticed the arrival in Canton of H. E. the Imperial commissioner Lin, and mentioned that this event, in the absence of any certain knowledge of his proceedings, had given rise to numerous rumours, as to what his measures would be. It appears certain that he has, to obtain the favor of the people, relaxed the punishment of most of such as have hitherto been imprisoned both for dealing in and for smoking of Opium, the former of which are to be punished with less severity than the law warrants, and the latter having been liberated from prison without any punishment whatever. H. E. has likewise made known that he will himself defray all the expenses of his household, and not allow any of his followers to be a burthen to the people or the local magistrates. These measures, by conciliating the minds of the Chinese, cannot fail to strengthen him in the exercise of the unlimited powers delegated to him by the Imperial Government as "a high Imperial "Commissioner, who, having repeatedly performed "meritorious offices, is sent to settle the affairs of "the outer frontier." Such is his title, and he is furnished with an Imperial seal which is said so invest its keeper for the time being with all the despotic power of the Emperor himself, and which, on account of the enormous power it conveys, has been only twice or three times entrusted to high officers of state. The last time this very seal, now held by Lin, was entrusted to the keeping of a subject, was to quell the rebellion of the Tartar-prince Jehangir about seven or eight years ago.

Such is the nature of the powers entrusted to this officer for the special purpose of eradicating the trade in Opium and its use in the Empire, and it is probable that he stands deeply pledged to the Imperial Government for his success, and that failure in his mission would involve him in disgrace and punishment. It is therefore not to be doubted that he will exert himself to the utmost to attain his object, nor can for the present any expectation be entertained but that the Opium trade will be speedily suppressed altogether.

Since the Commissioner's arrival several seizures of suspected persons have been made in China-street and Hog-lane, and a great many of such as fear to be implicated have fled; but what most interests the foreign community are the steps he has taken since his arrival towards Hong merchants and foreigners themselves. The former have repeatedly been called before him, and been examined as to the nature of their intercourse with the latter; in H. E's. presence they were kept kneeling all the time the examination was being carried on. The Linguists also were called before H. E., and on Sunday last even the Compradores of many of the foreign houses, who were questioned on the nature of the business transacted by their masters, and it is said that they gave satisfactory information, and were graciously dismissed with a present of two Taels in silver each.

On Monday last at length appeared two documents, one addressed to the Hong-merchants and the other to foreigners, which we published in an Extra on Wednesday the 20th inst. In these documents H. E. upbraids the Hong-merchants for having suffered, in disobedience to Imperial mandates, the importation of Opium into Whampoa, and for having connived at and facilitated the transaction of business in the drug—for having allowed foreigners too much familiarity in their intercourse—for being too subservient to them—for disregard of proprieties in the prosecution of wealth—for giving information to foreigners on what passes in the government offices—for allowing the exportation of silver—&c., and finally threatens them with death to one or two of them, if within three days foreigners do not give up all the Opium now outside. In his commands to foreigners H. E. first expatiates upon the great favors showered upon them by the Emperor to be permitted to trade, since without Rhubarb and Tea they are unable to live, and then states that, as the strictest watch is kept in all the provinces against the introduction of Opium, it will be only to the ruin of foreigners to keep it still on board of their vessels in the offings—that he therefore orders foreigners to deliver up to his government every chest of Opium, that it may be burnt, and that by such act of obedience they may deserve the Imperial reward. They are moreover to give a bond that vessels hereafter will not bring Opium, but that if they still should be discovered smuggling it, the foreigners will be content to suffer the loss of their goods and the extreme penalty of the law. H. E. further informs foreigners that the indignation of the whole population is roused against them, and that in proceeding to possess himself of their persons, should they continue refractory, it will not even be necessary to call out the military, but that the able-bodied of the nation (a kind of militia, or posse comitatus, or perhaps special constables) will be quite sufficient for that purpose.

H. E. moreover informs them that he is perfectly aware of the names of such among the foreigners who have dealt in Opium, and of others that have not, and if these latter will come forward and point out their depraved countrymen, they are promised a liberal reward. The same term of three days is also given to foreigners in which they are to present an address to H. E. in reply to his edict.

In consequence of the receipt of these edicts great excitement prevailed among the foreign community, and the Hong merchants encreased this by the danger threatening them seeming more immediate. They all assembled in Consoo on Tuesday night last, and requested to be met there by a number of the most influential of the foreign merchants whom they entreated, as they had any regard for their, the Hong merchants, lives, that they would lose no time in giving a reply to H. E. Any longer delay, they said, would cause two of them to be executed on the day following. Harrassed as these poor Hong merchants have been, first, with the different rumours that preceded the commissioner's arrival, next with his threats and their frequent attendance upon the commissioner, they appear to have considered their situation as really very dangerous, and to have feared that the Yum chuy would carry his threats against them into effect. It is impossible to say whether these were meant to be acted upon, but on the following day (Thursday) a general meeting of the members of the Chamber of Commerce was held, of which the result will be seen in the letter from the Chairman to the Hong merchants, in a preceding column. From this it will be seen that a committee was appointed to take into consideration the Yum-chuy's edict, and report upon it at the earliest opportunity to the Chamber, and a deputation to the Hong merchants to acquaint that body with the result. These, after this communication had been made to them, all went into the city to deliver it to the commissioner, and returned to the Factories at about 10 o'clock at night, stating that the answer from the Chamber had appeared by no means satisfactory to the commissioner, and that, if some Opium were not immediately given up, not only their own lives would be forfeited but those of foreigners generally would be in imminent danger. In the meanwhile, all communication with the coast and even Whampoa had been cut off, numerous Mandarin boats being stationed in the river to prevent any foreigners leaving Canton, and the trade had also been stopped. No cargo was allowed to leave, and Granthops for such vessels as had completed their Cargoes were refused. All foreigners were therefore virtually prisoners here, and completely in the power of the Chinese Government, and their lives and property at their mercy. Under these circumstances, after the return of the Hong merchants at 10 o'clock at night another meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce, the result of which was, after a good deal of discussion, and after the Hong merchants had solemnly and individually declared that, if about a thousand chests of Opium were not given up immediately, they would most certainly be executed, to offer to deliver up 1037 chests of Opium to the Government, to be destroyed—this, of course under protest, that the coercive measures of the Chinese Government and the consideration of the danger in which the Hong-merchants were, forced them to this abandonment of property. With this resolution from the foreign merchants the Hong-merchants early in the morning yesterday, returned into the City where they saw the Vice-roy only: and though as yet (Saturday morning), they have not made any official communication of what result that interview has been, it is understood that it was by to means satisfactory, and that the quantity offered was by the Vice-roy declared to be insufficient. No direct answer has been received from the Commissioner, but we hear that demands for the delivery of an additional quantity were made last night.

Matters remain in this uncertain state this morning; nothing has been heard from the Commissioner since Thursday night, but it is evident that the Government is taking every precaution to support their pretensions by force, if necessary. No intercourse, even with Whampoa, is permitted; boats are allowed to come up to Canton, but cannot return thither; the river in front of the factories is filled with mandarin boats and other craft containing troops; we hear of a number of soldiers having been called into the city and to be ready for service at a moment's warning, and yesterday morning a detachment of soldiers landed in front of the Factories and marched into the City. If the Chinese Government by the course of intimidation they pursue, partly by means of threatening the lives of the Hong merchants and partly by depriving the foreigners, resident here, of their liberty, obtain possession of the Opium now in the Chinese seas, instead of allowing it to be sent away, it will of course become a question for the Governments of the respective merchants here, in what manner the Chinese are to make good the value of the Opium. Yesterday in the afternoon, a message was sent purporting to be from the Imperial Commissioner inviting Mr. Dent to go to the City-gate to meet him there. Mr. Dent, we understand, expressed to the Hong merchants his willingness to meet H. E. at the City-gate provided H. E. would furnish him with a safe conduct under his own seal, and provided he were not detained above 24 hours. The Hong merchants, after many attempts to change this resolve, were at last obliged to report it to the authorities, and afterwards again, late at night, urged Mr. Dent to promise to go, representing that his refusal would place their lives in imminent danger. This morning early the Qwang-chow-foo and several other officers assembled at the Consoo, attended by all the Hong merchants two of whom (Howqua and Mowqua) had a chain hung round their necks, and three others were said to be imprisoned in the City and they again proceeded to Mr. Dent's house to urge him to meet the Commissioner, assuring him that if he did not comply with this summons two of them were to be executed immediately. The answer being the same as before, the Hong merchants asked for a meeting to be called at the Chamber of Commerce, and there at about one o'clock, met the foreign community, and Howqua again represented that yesterday's refusal of Mr. Dent to comply with the summons had already subjected them to the loss of their buttons, and to the degrading punishment of the chain; that the Commissioner was determined to see Mr. Dent, and that, if they (the Hong merchants) could not prevail on him to go, on the very day, two of them would most infallibly lose their lives. Mr Leslie answered on behalf of Mr Dent, that if a safe conduct under the seal of the Commissioner were given to Mr. Dent he would immediately go, but on no account willingly without it. Howqua then addressed the Chamber, asking it as a body to express an opinion, as to whether they thought Mr. Dent's conduct just and reasonable, in refusing to go and see the Yum-chuy, whence he was certain to return unharmed, thereby exposing the merchants to degradation and even to the loss of their lives. The Chamber answered that it was without their province as a body to judge Mr. Dent's conduct, but that if Howqua wished it, the opinion of every one present individually would be taken. This the Hong merchants refused, and then requested that Mr Dent be asked to attend at the Chamber, but being told that under the circumstances in which that gentleman now found himself, he was resolved not to leave his house on any plea, Howqua proposed that those present at the meeting should proceed with them to Mr Dent's house, to obtain a definitive answer to give to the officers then waiting for it at the Consoo-house. The meeting accordingly proceeded to Mr. Dent's, who again expressed his willingness to go, but only under the safe conduct from the Commissioner, and the opinion of those present being taken, and they were the majority of foreign residents, was unanimous that without such guarantee it was unadvisable for Mr. Dent to go. The safe conduct the Kwang-chow-foo declared in the Consoo-house is was impossible to obtain, as he dared not even ask the Commissioner for it, but the Kwang-chow-foo gave the assurance that there was no intention whatever to keep Mr. Dent a prisoner or to maltreat him, and being pressed on this subject he most solemnly avowed this to be his own conviction, but that he could of course not answer for what the Commissioner would do. Messages were frequently sent from the Consoo-house, but Mr. Dent adhering by his original purpose, the same answer continued to be returned, until at length as about 9 o'clock the Deputy Kwang-chow-foo, the Namhoyune and another officer went to Mr. Dent's, and there stated that they had the most positive commands that Mr. Dent must on that day see the Yum-chuy, and his not going would bring disgrace on them. Mr. Thom, who interpreted for Mr. Dent, then informed these officers, that being the unanimous opinion of the foreign community that Mr. Dent should not go without the safe conduct, no other answer could be returned. the officers appeared very anxious to gain their end and even entreated Mr. Dent's compliance, and seeing all their efforts fail they declared that they would not leave the house except with Mr. Dent, protesting all the while that no evil whatever should befal Mr. Dent, and the Deputy Kwang-chow-foo even assured that he would himself escort Mr Dent back that same evening. The answer returned to that being still the same, they at last proposed that as their efforts were unavailing Mr. Dent's partner, Mr. Inglis, should go to the Consoo-house to take this answer to the Kwang-chow-foo; this was accordingly done, and it being there represented to this Gentleman that it would be desirable that he should state Mr. Dent's resolve to some high officers then waiting in the City, he, accompanied by Messrs. Tom, Slade, and Fearon went there, and they were received by the judge, the treasurer, the salt Commissioner and grain inspector, the four highest officers of the province with the exception of the Governor and Deputy Governor. The questions asked had reference exclusively to Mr. Dent's refusal to go without the safe conduct, and they solemnly declared that no evil was intended to Mr Dent, that the Commissioner only required some information from him. After a stay of about two hours, the Gentlemen were allowed to depart, escorted by a number of Police, and Mr. Thom was presented with two pieces of silk and two jars of wine as a mark of favour. At night the tops of the houses and the entrances of the foreign Hongs were guarded by a great number of Hong-coolies to prevent Mr Dent' escape, the merchants being held responsible for his presence in Canton. In this position affairs remain this night (Saturday) for though the Hong merchants have again at midnight urged their request that Mr. Dent should go, nothing has happened materially to affect the question. The refusal of Mr. Dent to go without a safeconduct from the Yum-chuy himself, and its approval by the foreign residents, are caused by the treatment Mr. Flint suffered, who being invited so visit the Viceroy in the year 1759, was sent to prison to Casa branca and kept there three years.

We give a correspondence of the Chamber of Commerce with the Hong merchants regarding the passage boat Snipe, which, it will be seen, is by the Hoppo's order to be broken up, for having had a few packages of sugar and tea on board. We mentioned this case last week, and then regretted that the owners or managers of these boats, endangered the valuable privilege of the passage boats, by putting merchandize on board. In this case however it appears that the penalty threatened is disproportioned to the fault committed, these few packages having been put on board here with the concurrence of the tidewaiter who received the fees usual for such kinds of shipments, and who ought to be held responsible; no proof of having received the fee can however be brought against this man, as he did not give a pass for the goods, and if accused to the authorities, he will, of course, deny the transaction altogether.

We have still time to mention that accounts have been received from Macao according to which Capt. Elliot has placed the outside shipping under the protection of H. M. S Larne. The shipping was to go to Hong-Kong, and to be ready to resist any act of aggression on the part of the Chinese. In the absence of Capt Blake, the fleet is under command of Capt. Parry of the Hercules.—Sunday morning.

N. B. OF IMPORTS ALL DUTIES ARE PAID BY THE PURCHASER, AND OF EXPORTS BY THE SELLER BOATHIRE IS PAID BY THE SELLER.

NOTE. Opium can only be delivered at Lintin &c. where also higher prices are obtainable for Camblets, Saltpetre, Ginseng and other Goods, on which the duties at Whampoa are high.—Ships with Rice, Cotton, &c. sometimes discharge at Macao or tranship their Cargoes, at Lintin &c. to other Vessels, bound to Whampoa, and thereby avoid Port Charges. The ship rents outside, and River Freights, are various and high.—Small invoices of Wine, Beer, Pickles &c. Confectionary Stationery, Cutlery, Crockery ware, &c., for foreigners consumption, are sold at Auction duty paid.

Note. Alum, and Cassia are procurable cheaper at Lintin, Macao, &c; and Raw Silk, Silk piece goods &c, are sometimes shipped thro' the latter Port to vaoid double duties, chargeable on those goods, if more than 100 Peculs are required for the ship when at Whampoa.

RATES OF INSURANCE AT CANTON.

On first class vessels in the 10th Canton and Union Offices of China, & various Agents of Offices established in Calcutta and Bombay.

Note. Above rates are from 20th Oct to 20th April annually; during remaining 6 months the premiums are somes hat higher. Risks on Blocks are $ 9 per Cent per annum, $ 4½ for 6 months, $ 2½ for 3 months and $ 1 per month.

The Local Insurance Offices grant Policies payable in London, Calcutta and Bombay, or in Canton.

WHAMPOA PORT CHARGES, &c.

1st class ves. measg. 1600 cubits & upwards pay 0.7874256 of a Tl. per cubit.
2nd ,, ,, ,, 1200 do. & under 1600 ,, 0.7221091 ,, ,,
3rd ,, ,, under 1200 do. 0.5062341 ,, ,,

N. B. The cubit is 14¼ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4320; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Comha; or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Taels or $ 2223. Linguists fee $ 173½ and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $ 5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Houg-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939.50., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 2.0—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The shipping off and landing of goods has been stopped within this day or two, and as it appears doubtful how long this may continue, there has been some speculation in one or two articles.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The demand for LONGCLOTHS both grey and white continues good, with perhaps some little advance in prices. In CORVEN YARN we have heard of no sales but of small parcels, and the market for this article continues inactive.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES have been purchased readily at some little advance, and and a sale of 1000 Pieces fair quality was made two days since at 1.40 LONGELLS have improved fully ¼ a dollar, 6/ being now offered for well assorted colors.

METALS.—We hear no transactions.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—There have been no importations during the week; the only alteration reported is we believe in Rattans.

RICE.—the market having been fully supplied from the country, prices have fallen a little.

COTTON.—the Bombay staple is in good demand at two or three mace advance, but we have heard only of small sales. Bengal remains as before; Madras a little firmer.

OPIUM.—A reference to the proceedings that have occurred during the week, given in another part of the paper will shew the state of the trade, and it is unnecessary to state more than that nothing whatever is doing.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—No further sales, and the dealers appear disposed to sell at considerable reduction, but there is little of first quality remaining

TEA.—business to some extent was done in the early part of the week, but transactions are of course now entirely suspended.

Canton, 23rd March, 1839.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The shipping off and landing of goods has been stopped within this day or two, and as it appears doubtful how long this may continue, there has been some speculation in one or two articles.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The demand for LONGCLOTHS both grey and white continues good, with perhaps some little advance in prices. In COTTON YARN we have heard of no sales but of small parcels, and the market for this article continues inactive.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES have been purchased readily at some little advance, and and a sale of 1000 Pieces fair quality was made two days since at 1.40 LONGELLS have improved fully ¼ a dollar, 84 being now offered for well assorted colors.

METALS.—We hear no transactions.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—There have been no importations during the week; the only alteration reported is we believe in Rattans.

RICE.—the market having been fullly supplied from the country, prices have fallen a little.

COTTON.—the Bombay staple is in good demand at two or three mace advance, but we have heard only of small sales. Bengal remains as before; Madras a little firmer.

OPIUM.—A reference to the proceedings that have occurred during the week, given in another part of the paper will shew the state of the trade, and it is unnecessary to state more than that nothing whatever is doing.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN ZILK.—No further sales, and the dealers appear disposed to sell at considerable reduction, but there is little of first quality remaining

TEA.—business to some extent was done in the early part of the week, but transactions are of course now entirely suspended.

Theory and Practice.

From a Correspondent.

Keen lung's reign is an many respects remarkable for the uncommon severity displayed by the Government on several occasions. It must at the same time, be confessed, that its unwonted rigor, often stifled the spirit of discontent, which was then more frequently breaking out, than even in our times. The province of Keang nan suffered in 1758 very much on account of the bad harvest, and the people began to repine under the Mantchoo rule. There lived at that time a scholar well versed in the classics, who clothed the complaints of the suffering peasants in the language of the sages, and composed a spirited treatise in which he bitterly upbraided the mandarins for not taking measures to relieve the wants of the populace. This paper however he kept secret, being satisfied to think, that if he were permitted to stand up as the champion of the starving multitude, he would prove an able advocate. Unfortunately however this copy fell into the hands of a second person and he hastened to denounce the author to Government. Conscience struck, the Governor and Lieut. Governor immediately seized the writer, and condemned him to death for having used seditious and slanderous language. As moreover two other scholars had dared to transcribe this nefarious paper, they sentenced them to wear the cangue for several months, a punishment which was afterwards commuted into banishment and bastinado. The Emperor on receiving the memorial for approval, shewed his utmost indignation at being represented as if he did not care for the lives and happiness of his subjects, and he felt this the more keenly because during the 18 years of his reign he had expended more than 24,800,000 Shih of rice to succour the people in time of need. Willing however to exhibit mercy even towards a miscreant, he changed the capital punishment into transportation to the banks of the Amour.

The examinations had become a mere matter of routine, and the scholars, instead of being desirous of entering into the spirit of the sages, only endeavoured to write smooth sentences, full of cadence without meaning. Keen lung being himself an author and poet could not suffer this degenerate state of the literati, and therefore strictly enjoined the literary chancelors only to approve of essays written in a language at once racy and chaste, and to treat the candidates who composed mere words without thought, with the utmost contempt. In addition to this he instituted a court of inquiry of which the members were to make his ideas the standard of either approving or rejecting essays. The edict being duly received, all the literary magistrates responded to the imperial wishes, and the whole host of aspirants for honors and emoluments were renovated.

The heartless treatment of prisoners in China is too well known to need any further comment; but then it is a very extraordinary circumstance, that the laws of the Celestial Empire should ordain it otherwise, and yet the practice still continue. Keen lung having received repeated reports of criminals constantly dying before the sentence was pronounced upon them, finally issued on order, that they should not be made subject to harrassing and bad usage, but mercifully handled until they could appear before the judge. To secure their lives, he made the keepers responsible for giving them in proper time food and raiment, and strongly prohibited the slightest approach to torturing. How far this law influences the conduct of gaolers of the present day, an inspection of the prisons will teach us.

From the Sandwich Island Spectator.

CRATER OF KIRAUEA, HAWAII.

Sandwich Islands.

The following graphic sketch has kindly been furnished by Count Strzelecki, a Polish nobleman, and scientific traveller, who has for some time resided in the United States and in Mexico, and is now visiting various portions of the Pacific in H. B. M. S. Fly.

My Dear Sir,—Your kind request to supply the valuable publication of the Spectator, with an account of my visit to the Volcano of Kirauea on Hawaii, both pains and flatters me; for I regret much that my limited stay here, the daily current and accumulating objects of new and interesting inquiries render any circumstantial description of it really impossible to me. A few facts, and fewer observations which a hasty and rough sketch bring forth, is all I am able for the moment to supply you with; I cannot even attempt to give you the slightest idea of the impressions which the awful sublimity of the volcano produced upon my imagination; that part of our being does not yield as easily as memory—it does not reproduce sensations; the rapture—the enthusiasm once gone by, is lost for ever.

What I remember, and long shall recollect, as showing the mighty influence of mighty objects upon me, are the difficulties I had to struggle with, before my eye could be torn away from the idle, vacant, but ecstatic gazing with which I regarded the great Whole, down to the analitical part of the wondrous and unparalled scene before me; I say unparalleled, because having visited most of the European and American volcanos, I find the greatest of them inferior to Kirauea crater in intensity, grandeur, and extent or area.

The abrupt and precipitous cliff which forms the N. N. E. wall of the crater,—found, after my repeated observations, to be elevated 4,104 feet above the level of the sea—overhangs an area of 3,150,000 square yards of half-cooled scoria, sunk to the depth of 300 yards, and containing more than 328,000 square yards of convulsed torrents of earths in igneous fusion, and gaseous fluids constantly effervescing—boiling—spouting—rolling in all directions like waves of a disturbed sea, violently beating the edge of the caldrons like an infuriated surf and like surf spreading all around its spray in the form of capillary glass which fills the air, and adheres in a flaky and pendulous form to the distorted and broken masses of the lava all around; five caldrons each of about 5,701 square yards, almost at the level of the great area, and containing only the 12th part of the red liquid; the sixth caldron is encircled by a wall of accumulated scoria of fifty yards high, forming the S. S. W. point—the Hale mau mau of the natives to which the bones of the former high chiefs were consigned—the sacrifices to the goddess Pele offered—the abyss of abysses, the caldron of caldrons—exhibiting the most frightful area of about 300,900 square yards bubbling red hot lava—changing incessantly its level—sometimes rolling the long curled waves with broken masses of cooled crust to one side of the horrible laboratory—sometimes, as if they had made a mistake, turning them back with spouting fury, and a subterraneous, terrific noise of a sound more infernal than earthly; around are blocks of lava, scoria, slags of every description and combination, here elevated, by the endless number of superimposed layers, in perpendicular walls of 1,000 feet high—there torn asunder, dispersed cracked, or remoulded—every where terror, convulsion—mighty engine of nature—and nothingness of man!

No where does the solution of the great problem of volcanic fires by Sir Humphrey Davy, receive a more palpable illustration than here; the access of the water to the heated masses of these minerals of a saline and earthy bases, by which that philosopher explained the convulsions of volcanic fires, is displayed here in most portentous, most awful effects. It is only to those millions of vents all around the crater, through which the superabundance of steam escapes—to the millions of fissures through which the sulphurous and sulphuric acids liberate themselves from beneath, that the preservation of Hawaii from utter destruction, by the expansive force of steam and gasses, can be ascribed.

The nature of the volcano, with its uncommonly intense heat, and so many wide and easy openings, is, to eject nothing without alteration, and to sublime every variety of substance which the concomitants of the volcanic fires embrace. Thus; here is the rare volcanic glass in capillary forms, and many perfect citrifications; the muriate of ammonia in efflorescence, often conchoidal, often in elongated hexahedrals—and in one single instance, even in that rare form of a cubic chrystal; thus, the sulphuret of arsenic, both as realgar and orpiment; the sulphur itself in most beautiful incrustations, chrystalized in cubic or truncated octohedrons; the petro aluminaris of Soolfa, (Italy,) or alkaline sulphate of alumine, imbedded sometimes in crevices of lava, sometimes in argillaceous earth; thus, the singular and rare cavernous lava, known hitherto to exist only in Iceland—its large tumefactions in blisters and bubbles, form a crust of the finest gloss to an arch of four feet thick, forming caverns through which the superabundance of lava in the crater discharges itself, as through subterraneous tunnels, in all directions of the island.

A prolific imagination can find here a vast field for fanciful speculation on the origin, duration and probable or possible results of the continued operations of this frightful and gigantic volcano. Science will never tire in the study of Nature; but, alas! beyond what she sees, and what strict inductive forms allow her to conclude, she must stop—admire—bow and repeat.

Sapientias hujus mundi stultitia est.

With the greatest respect and consideration, believe me, my Dear Sir,

Sandwich Islands Gazette.

We have considered it to be the best plan to give the occurrences of the week in the shape of a Journal, confining ourselves mostly to facts. It will be seen that our paper, instead of being issued on Saturday has been delayed two days, caused principally by the absence of our coolies.

Sunday 24th March.—This day passed off quietly, owing it is thought to the knowledge the Chinese have of the respect paid by Europeans to the Sunday. The following proclamations were received from Macao.

CIRCULAR TO H. B. M. SUBJECTS.

The Chief Superintendent of the trade of British Subjects in China having received information that H. M. subjects are detained against their will in Canton, and having other urgent reasons for the withdrawal of all confidence in the just and moderate disposition of the provincial Government, has now to request that all ships of H. M. subjects at the outer anchorages should proceed forthwith to Hong-Kong, and, hoisting their national colors, be prepared to resist every act of aggression upon the part of the Chinese Government. In the absence of Capt. Blake of H. M. Sloop Larne, Capt. Parry of the Hercules will make the necessary dispositions for putting the ships in a posture of defence, and in the absence of Capt Parry that duty will devolve on Capt. Wallace of the Mermaid, and the Chief Superintendent in H. M. name requires all British subjects to whom these presents may come, to respect the authority of the persons charged with the duty of providing for the protection of British lives and property. Macao, 22d March, 1839.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of trade of British Subjects in China.

Her Majesty's Sloop Larne, at anchor in Macao Roads, March 22d, 1839.

With reference to my Circular of this day's date it is desirable that the ships of H. M. subjects at the outer anchorages should proceed forthwith to Hong-Kong placing themselves in the absence of Capt. Blake of H. M. Sloop Larne, under the guidance of Capt. Parry of the Hercules and in the absence of Capt. Parry under the guidance of Capt. Wallace of the Mermaid.

Commanders of British Ships will make every preparation to resist aggression upon the part of the Chinese Government, but they will be very careful to refrain from provoking attack.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of the trade of British Subject in China.

Until 6 o'clock in the evening nothing had transpired concerning the measures the Yum-chae was likely to take in consequence of Mr. Dent's refusal to go into the city; a little after six Capt Elliot, arrived in a four oared boat belonging to the Larne at the Company's Garden. Capt. Elliot had proceeded in the Louisa cutter as far as Howqua's fort, though some ineffectual attempts had been made to stop his progress. From Howqua's fort he proceeded in the Larne's boat, and no opposition was made, although several Mandarin boats followed him, watching his motions. Capt. Elliot's arrival was immediately generally known; the English flag was hoisted, and Capt. Elliot accompanied by a great number of the Foreign residents proceeded without loss of time to Mr. Dent's, to take that gentleman under his protection, and walked with him to the Hall of the Superintendents, where he still remains. On Capt. Elliots arrival in the Hall, where every one of the foreigners present in Canton had assembled, he read to the meeting the following proclamation:

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

L. S.

Macao, 23rd March, 1839.

The considerations that have moved the Undersigned, to give public notice to all Her Majesty's Subjects that he is without confidence in the justice and moderation of the provincial government, are:—

The dangerous, unprecedented, and unexplained circumstance of a public execution before the Factories at Canton, to the imminent hazard of life and property, and total disregard of the honor and dignity of his own and the other Western governments, whose flags were recently flying in that square; the unusual assemblage of troops, vessels of war, fire-ships, and other menacing preparations; the communication, by the command of the provincial government, that in the present posture of affairs the Foreigners were no longer to seek for passports to leave Canton (according to the genius of our own countries, and the principles of reason, if not an act of declared war, at least its immediate and inevitable preliminary); and lastly, the threatening language of the High Commissioner and provincial authorities, of the most general application, and dark and violent character.

Holding it, therefore, impossible to maintain continued peaceful intercourse with safety, honor, or advantage, till definite and satisfactory explanations have passed in all these particulars, both as respects the past and the future, the undersigned has now to give further notice that he shall forthwith demand passports for all such of Her Majesty's subjects as may think fit to proceed outside, within the space of ten days from the date that his application reaches the government; such date hereafter to be made known.

And he has to counsel and enjoin all Her Majesty's subjects in urgent terms to make immediate preparations for moving their property on board the ships "Reliance," "Orwell," and "George the 4th," or other British vessels at Whampoa, to be conveyed to Macao: forwarding him, without delay, a sealed declaration and list of all actual claims against Chinese subjects, together with an estimate of all loss or damage to be suffered by reason of these proceedings of the Chinese government.

And he has further to give notice, that the Portuguese government of this settlement has already pledged itself to afford Her Majesty's Subjects resident here, every protection in its power so long as they shall be pursuing no course of traffic within the limits of the settlement at variance with the laws of this empire. And he has most especially to warn Her Majesty's Subjects that such strong measures as it may be necessary to adopt on the part of Her Majesty's government, without further notice than the present, cannot be prejudiced by their continued residence in Canton (beyond the period now fixed), upon their own responsibility, or without further guarantees from the Undersigned.

And he has further to give notice that if the passports shall be refused for more than three days, from the date that his application shall reach the provincial government, he will be driven to the conclusion that it is their purpose to detain all Her Majesty's Subjects as hostages; and to endeavour to intimidate them into unsuitable concessions and terms, by the restraint of their persons, or by violence upon their lives or property, or by the death of native merchants in immediate connexion with them, both by ties of friendship and of interest; or by the like treatment of their native servants.

The Undersigned, in conclusion, most respectfully submits these observations to the attention of all the foreigners in China: And the respective Governments closely united by a community of feeling and interests, not only in their own quarters of the Globe, but most especially in this peculiar country, he feels that he is performing an act of duty in offering them every humble assistance in his power on this and all similar occasions, when they may be of opinion, that he can be useful to them.

Given under my hand and seal of Office at Macao, this twenty third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty nine.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subject in China.

This was received by loud and hearty cheers, and every one seemed glad of Capt. Elliot's arrival, and to think that affairs were likely now to take a better turn, particularly as that officer's presence served as a rallying point, which had hitherto been wanting.

Howqua took Capt. Elliots letter for the Viceroy, and up to a late hour this night no answer has been received. Immediately after Capt. Elliot's arrival notice was given to all native servants to quit, and they accordingly left the Hongs without loss of time. The mob which had collected in front, attracted by the news of Capt. Elliot's presence was dispersed by a strong police force which had been partly on the spot all day, but was now reinforced, and every thing was soon reduced to perfect order and quiet. The river near the factories was cleared of all the boats usually there, and in lieu of them three rows of boats filled with police and soldiers stationed there, completely hemming us in, and rendering escape altogether impossible. The streets leading into the square from the town were blocked up, and no native allowed to remain or to go into any one of the foreign factories. The strongest guard was of course before the Company's hall to prevent Mr. Dent's escape, and the men on duty there, coolies belonging to the Hong merchants, were armed with pikes and shields, which they held ready for use whenever the door of the English hong was opened to admit people or allow them to get out. Howqua and Mowqua, who had made their appearance in the Superintendents hall, not ten minutes after Capt. Elliots arrival, returned to the hall several times during the night, but without any thing being known as to the nature of their negotiations. The inhabitants of the British hong organized themselves into a night watch consisting of one to keep the gate, and two others to patrole—being relieved every two hours.

Monday.—This day has passed over very quietly—the Chinese have completed their police regulations, and not a Chinese is to be seen in front of our houses down to the river, except such as are on duty. Howqua and other Hong merchants are repeatedly going to see the Superintendent, but nothing has transpired. In the afternoon a chop from the Kwang chow foo was said to have been received by Capt. Elliot. This night four instead of three gentlemen formed the watch, one taking his post in the Superintendents verandah. The night passed over quietly, with the exception of one gentleman being mistaken by the police for Mr. Dent, and stopped—the mistake was immediately rectified. In the afternoon Messrs. Thom and Fearon were asked by the Hong merchants to go to the Consoo house, and when there, were asked to go into the City, the Yum chae being anxious to see them; Capt. Elliot however, we are told, did not wish them to go.

Tuesday.—Every thing quiet in the morning, but the guard near the houses has been reinforced and the coolies are busy building sheds to live under. The Hong-merchants came several times, and at about 1 o'clock brought two Chops said to be from the Vice-roy. Their nature not known but it was said that things were going on favorably. In the evening some reports prevailed of a boat or two from Whampoa having attempted to force her way to Canton, which turned out a false alarm. This evening the pleasure boats were removed from in front of the British hong and carried to the middle of the square. The Hong merchants, in setting the watch of their coolies for the night gave strict directions that they should be watchful, and not sleep at their posts, as they had been seen to do by the mandarins on a previous night, for which they had been reproved. The night passed over very quietly, and it is said that Lin had incognito himself inspected the preparations. The following proclamation was this day issued; a translation of which was kindly handed us by Mr. Fearon.

PROCLAMATION FROM THE KIN CHAE TO THE FOREIGNERS OF ALL NATIONS.

Lin, a High Officer of the Celestial Empire, specially appointed by His Imperial Majesty to put down the Opium trade, hereby issues his commands to the Foreigners of all nations, under the form of four specific reasons, why they should make haste and deliver up their Opium.

First. Ye ought to make a speedy delivery thereof, because the dictates of Heavenly reason so require it.

I have examined and found, that during the last several tens of years, by means of your destructive Opium poison, ye have duped our people out of I know not how many myriads of myriads of money. While ye, scheming after private advantage, have directed your minds to the sole object of gain, our people have been losing their properties, and compromising their lives! The reason of Heaven loves to make a just return! and think you that there will be no retribution? Even now, if you make speedy delivery of your Opium, possibly by your repentance ye may yet avert God's wrath and curse, but if you will not, then your wickedness being so much greater, so much heavier calamities will overtake you in the end! Oh! ye foreigners! ye are distant from your native lands many tens of thousands of miles! while on ship board whether coming or going ye must cross a vast and trackless ocean! On its bosom ye are exposed to God's visitations in the shape of the thunderbolt, and the raging storm, ye run the hazard of being swallowed up by the monsters of the deep! Every instant of your lives is passed on the brink of danger, and under such circumstances, dread ye not the judgment of High Heaven? Now the grand and majestic virtue of our Great Emperor, is quite the same as that of Imperial Heaven, and our sovereign Lord and Master anxiously wishing to cut off the Opium Trade for ever, affords a manifest proof that such is no less the Holy Will of Heaven itself! It is then a traffic that Heaven frowns upon with disgust, and where is the wretch that may oppose it's stern decree? Were proof of this required, I might adduce the instance of the English Taepan Roberts who openly set himself against our laws! this man endeavoured to obtain possession of Macao by violence, and on that spot Death overtook him! Lord

Napier in the 14th year of Taoukwang (1834) illegally forced his way thro' the Bogue, but he had no sooner done so than he was stricken with grief and dismay, and soon afterwards expired! Morrison, who had darkly enticed him to his ruin, died that very year also! These are facts which are recorded in the newspapers of every country, and manifest distinctly that the Will of Heaven may not be opposed! and oh ye foreigners! do ye still refuse to fear and tremble thereat?

Secondly. Ye ought to make speedy delivery of your Opium, in conformity with the laws of the land.

I have heard it said, that Opium is not permitted to be smoked in your own countries, but on the other hand is forbid by the sternest laws, the smoker of it being doomed to death! this shows clearly that you know Opium to be a life-destroying drug. Now if you forbid your own people to smoke it, and yet do not forbid them to sell it to us that it may be smoked, this is not in conformity with the golden rule of "doing as ye would be done by:" Again, if your laws prohibit its being sold, and ye yet persist in clandestinely selling it, then are ye sporting and trifling with the laws of your own country! In addition to all this, the laws of our Empire look upon the vender of Opium, as guilty of a graver crime than he who merely smokes it, and we visit his offence accordingly with a much heavier punishment! Now as respects you foreigners, altho' ye drew your first breath in distant countries, nevertheless your riches and your sustenance are derived from our Dynasty alone. Moreover ye dwell in this our Central land many years of your lives and pass but few years of your lives at home; the food that ye consume every day, as well as the stores of wealth which ye amass, are neither more nor less than the goodness of our Emperor, of which ye have a much larger share than falls to the lot of the natives of the country themselves, and how then shall it be supposed for a moment, that ye alone of all men, are not to stand in awe of the supreme majesty of our laws? Altho' Opium was prohibited in former times, yet the penalty attached to an infringement of the prohibitions, involved not any punishment of extraordinary severity, this was caused by the mild nature of the laws by which these realms are governed, and therefore you were allowed to continue your clandestine traffic, without any very minute investigation being made into your conduct. Now however our Holy Emperor boils with indignation, and burns with desire no put an end to it, so it is, that henceforward not only is the native who sells it, but also he who does no more than smoke it, on the same principle doomed to die! Pause and reflect! were ye not to bring this Opium to our shores, oh! ye foreigners! how should the natives of our land be able to traffic in it, or where should they get it to smoke! the blood of our own people which has been spilt by reason of the Opium traffic, lies consequently at your door! why then should we thus deal out Death to our own subjects, and you alone be exempt from the direful doom! I, the High Commisssoner, looking up to my Imperial master, and implanting in my breast his own strong desire to love and cherish the men from afar, nevertheless graciously spare you your lives, I ask for nothing more than that you give me up all the Opium in your possession, and that you write out a bond to the following effect, that you will henceforth and for ever never more deal in Opium, or if you dare to bring any more Opium hither, you are willing that the cargo be confiscated, and the people put to death. This is graciously pardoning what is past, and taking proper precautions against the future; why any longer cherish a foolish indiscriminate fondness! Still further, without enquiring into the quantity of Opium which you have sold during a succession of years, the amount of which is absolutely incalculable, let us only speak about that which you brought last year, and disposed of to us clandestinely. It was I ween no trifle, hardly equal to the quantity which you have now stored up in your receiving ships; this quantity then ye must deliver up to the last fraction so as ensure the mutual benefit of all parties; what prospect is there of our ever again permitting you by means of your noxious drug, to obtain dishonestly the wealth of our poor deluded people, and entice them to commit an act, by which their lives are forfeited to the laws of their country! I have with the most profound respect examined the Code of this great Tartaro-Chinese Dynasty (i. e. the Ta Tsing Leuh le) and I find it writ therein, that if a Chinese or a foreigner violate the laws, he shall be judged and condemned by the same statute. Now on previous occasions we have doomed foreigners to death, as in the case of a foreigner having killed a native, he must pay the penalty of his own life, as the forfeit of his crime, &c., &c., instances of which are all duly recorded. Now stop and reflect, if you slay a man, it is nothing more than the crime of a moment, and still the law requires you to pay with your own life, the life you have taken, and in the case of him who sells Opium, this is done with direct intent to dupe people out of their properties, and deprive them of their lives. Moreover, the properties that you thus fraudulently get possession of, and the lives that you thus take away, are not those of a single individual nor of a single family, and ought a crime of this magnitude to be punished with death or not? and yet will ye not speedily deliver up your Opium in order to save your lives! oh! ye foreigners! reflect on this deeply—give heed thereunto!

Thirdly. You ought to make a speedy delivery of your Opium because of the common feelings of mankind.

Ye who come to Canton to trade, earn by this market a profit of three hundred per cent (or reap profit from three different sources). Every article of merchandize which you bring, no matter whether it be coarse or fine, whole or broken in pieces, there is nothing which does not find a vent here; and as respects the produce of this inner land, be it for eating, for clothing, for using in any way, or for mere sale, there is not an article which we do not permit you to transport and take away with you. Thus not only do you reap the profit of our central land by the goods which you bring, but you gather profit from all countries, by such of our produce as you take away. Suppose then that you did not carry on this traffic in Opium any longer, then the quantity of legal business that you did would be much increased, and so much more consequently would be the three hundred per cent profit that you should reap; thus might you get rich as before, and your consciences being void of offence, and no evil deeds laying in store for you against a day of retribution, how happy! how joyful might ye feel! But if ye are determined to carry on this Trade in Opium, it must cause your general intercourse with us to be cut off! And I would like to ask of you, where in the wide universe will ye find such an excellent commercial mart as this is! Moreover without laying special stress upon our Tea and Rhubarb, articles without which your very lives would come to an end, and our different kinds of silk, wanting which ye could not carry on your manufactures, there are under the specification of food, white Sugar, Sugar Candy, Cassia and Cassia buds; under the head of articles of use, Vermillion, Gamboge, Alum, Camphor, &c., &c. How can your countries possibly do without these items! And yet the products of our Central land are most profusely superabundant, nor have we the slightest occasion for any of your Imports from abroad! If by reason of Opium the port is closed against you, how can it be said that it was not you, who brought the catastrophe upon yourselves! And further, no man now dares to buy your Opium, and yet ye keep it stored upon board your receiving ships, where ye must pay so much rent per month, and where ye must hire workmen to watch it and guard it, and why all this great and us less expense! If they are overtaken by a storm, or if fire lay hold on them, they are capsized and submerged in the waves, or swallowed up amid the destroying blaze! These are all things which may very possibly happen, and what plan so good as to deliver up the Opium and obtain an abundant reward in it's stead!

Fourthly. You ought to deliver up your Opium without loss of time, seeing the force of circumstances requires it.

Ye from afar have crossed a vast ocean and come hither for the purposes of business and to carry on a lawful trade. For this end you must depend entirely on living with the people of the land on terms of friendship and harmony, and fulfilling the duties of your respective stations; thus may ye be able to reap profit, and shun danger. By reason of your unlawful traffic in Opium, you have involved our simple people in guilt and misery; there is not a good or upright man whose heart does not grieve and whose head does not ache at it, especially in reference to those who have been induced to sell and smoke opium, and have been put to death on that account. More particularly the common country people cherish a feeling anything but friendly,—the rage of the multitude is a thing difficult to be repressed, and this is a circumstance that you ought to look forward to with the deepest anxiety! It is said of you men from a far, that you adhere pertinaciously to the terms truth and justice. Now our Mandarins are all proclaiming to you and adjuring you by the words of "truth and justice" and on the contrary we find you to possess not the slightest iota of either! Are your hearts tranquil at this? Do you yet give in to the force of circumstances or not? Moreover it is in it's nature a commodity which ought never to be sold at all, and now is a time in which it is not permitted to be sold, so what hardship is there, or what regret do you feel in being compelled to part with it? Still further, it is an article which is not consumed in your own country, worse than useless will it be for you to take it back, and if you do not surrender it to the mandarins, what can you do with it by keeping it on hand? So soon as you shall have delivered it up, your commerce will become more rich, more flourishing than before, and with marks of politeness heaped upon you to the ove flowing. Will not this be great happiness to you indeed?

I, the High Commissioner, as well as the Viceroy and Fooyuen, cannot bear the idea of doing anything harsh or cruel, so I care not about wearying myself with instructing and admonishing you at this great length! Happiness and misery, glory and disgrace are all in your own hands, say not that I did not give you early warning thereof!

A special proclamation! to be stuck up before the Foreign Factories.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd moon, 12th day,

Canton 26th March 1839.

Wednesday the 27th March.—This morning early Capt. Elliot published the following Circular.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

I, CHARLES ELLIOT, Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China, presently forcibly detained by the Provincial Government, together with all the merchants of my own and the other Foreign nations settled here, without supplies of food, deprived of our servants, and cut off from all intercourse with our respective countries (notwithstanding my own official demand to be set at liberty so that I might act without restraint), have now received the commands of the high Commissioner issued directly to me under the seals of the honble officers to deliver over into his hands all the opium held by the people of my country.

Now I, the said Chief Superintendent, thus constrained by paramount motives affecting the safety of the lives and liberty of all the Foreigners here present in Canton, and by other very weighty causes, do hereby in the name and on the behalf of Her Britanic Majesty's government enjoin and require all Her Majesty's subjects now present in Canton forthwith to make a surrender to me for the service of Her said Majesty's government, to be delivered over to the government of China, of all the opium under their respective control: and to hold the British ships and vessels engaged in she trade of opium subject to my immediate direction: And to forward to me without delay a sealed list of all the British owned opium in their respective possession. And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do now, in the most full and unreserved manner, hold myself responsible for, and on the bealf of Her Britanic Majesty's government, to all and each of Her Majesty's subjects surrendering the said British owned opium into my hands, to be delivered over to the Chinese government. And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do further specially caution all Her Majesty's subjects here present in Canton, owners of or charged with the management of opium, the property of British subjects, that failing the surrender of the said opium, into my hands at or before six o'clock this day, I, the said Chief Superintendent, hereby declare Her Majesty's government wholly free of all manner of responsibility or liability in respect of the said British owned opium.

"And it is specially to be understood that the proof of British property and value of all British opium surrendered to me agreeably to this notice shall be determined upon principles and in a manner hereafter to be defined by Her Majesty Government.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Canton in China this twenty seventh day of March one thousand eight hundred and thirty nine at six of the clock in the morning.

True Copy
EDWARD ELMSLIE.
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

We believe that every British subject has complied with the requisition, and merchants of other nations have also made over to the British Superintendent whatever Opium they held on account of British subjects. The quantity of Opium thus offered to him amounts to 20,283 chests. Nothing worth noticing passed during the day—the servants are still away but any one that likes may go and buy provisions; the Chinese therefore have no wish now to starve us into compliance, though on monday last Chinese were not allowed to sell anything to foreigners. The guard of coolies mustered as strong this night as before, and having since yesterday built up their shiels they proceed with more regularity. In the square there are five partitions to the shed, each containing about 50 men from their respective hongs, the names of which are written on their lanthorns and caps. They relieve each other in patroling, two Hong-parties being continually moving. At night the square presents a very picturesque appearance, all the men carrying lanthorns, and the different sheds being profusely illuminated as well as the watch boats on the river. Hitherto the people behave very civilly, and there seems to exist no ill feeling against foreigners. In fact the only signs of a disposition to riot were given at the moment of Capt. Elliot's landing; when the Chinese saw foreigners run to meet the Superintendent, they, not knowing the exact cause, thought something extraordinary must have happened, and the square was filled with a mob in a moment. Since that time however, the square being kept quite clear of people, we see nothing of them in front, but the communication with the backstreets not being stopped, foreigners go there and have an opportunity of witnessing that no ill feeling exists.

Thursday 28th March 8 A. M.—Nothing has yet transpired as to H. E.'s intentions with regard to the Opium. This morning a Chop was received from the Kwang chou foo, which is as follows.

PROCLAMATION TO THE FOREIGNERS OF ALL NATIONS.

Chow, Kwang Chow Foo, &c., &c., proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

The following official communication has been received from Lin the imperial commissioner, &c., dated the 13th day of the 2nd mouth.

The foreigners of all nations have presented the petition.

"The foreign merchants of all nations in Canton have received, with profound respect, the Edict of His Excellency, the Imperial Commissioner, and now beg leave respectfully to address His Excellency, having already communicated, through the Hong merchants, their intention of doing so with the least possible delay.

"They beg to represent that being now made fully aware of the imperial commands for the entire abolition of the traffic in opium, the undersigned Foreign merchants hereby pledge themselves not to deal in opium, nor to attempt to introduce it into the Chinese empire.

"Having now recorded their solemn pledge, they have only further respectfully to state to His Excellency that as individual foreign merchants they do not possess the power of controlling such extensive and important matters as those treated of in His Excellency's edict; and they trust His Excellency will approve of leaving a final settlement to be arranged through the representatives of their respective nations. Canton, 25th March. 1839."

This coming before me, the Commissioner, it appears by the petition that in obedience to my commands, they dare no longer traffic in opium. Their reverencial obedience is thus manifested. They also earnestly entreat that as my will involved such important and heavy results, I will direct the superintendents and consuls of their several nations to manage the business.

Now as respects the delivering up of the opium, the superintendent Elliot has this day handed up a duly prepared petition to deliver up the opium; and I, the Commissioner, in due course commanded that the most minute particulars be examined into and handed up in the form of a clear and distinct report: when he must wait till I fix a day for receiving the opium. This is on record. As respects Elliot, therefore: there is no occasion for my again issuing my instructions; but the consuls must forthwith clearly petition as to who they are, and their names and surnames, so as to enable me to act accordingly, and issue an Edict immediately for their instruction.

This Edict is now issued to the Kwang-Chow-Foo for his information and obedience. Let him forthwith send a reply with instructions to the hong-merchants to transmit copies of it to the foreigners of all nations for their information and obedience, and report same, A special Edict.

On receipt of this I, uniting the circumstances, issue this Edict. On receipt of it let the said foreing merchants, in obedience thereto, forthwith statein a clear petition the names and surnames of the Consuls. Do not oppose. A special Edict.

March 27th, 1839.

The back doors were blocked up on Saturday last—and admission into the backstreets is permitted only through old Chinastreet, all the other vomitories are blocked up and a watch set to guard them. Doctor Parker has hitherto been permitted to go to his Hospital but this day he was refused admittance into Hoglane. The Chinese outside seem to be very anxious for the result, they having been dependent for their living on the foreign trade. In the evening of this day Capt. Elliot issued the following notice to His Britannic Majesty Subjects

NOTICE.

I Charles Elliot Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China, do require any British Subject or Subjects, in the name of Her Britanic Majesty's Government, who may have Opium within his or their Factory to aknowledge the same to him in person within the space of two hours from this date.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

Canton 6 P. M 28th March 1839.

It appears as if the Chinese relax in their very great vigilance and coolies have been ordered by the Hong merchants to bring water; a great quantity of pigs, sheep and poultry were brought to the Consoo house this evening, and it is said they will be made a present of by the Yum chuy to the foreign residents, probably as a set off for the Opium given up. The patroles of coolies went their round as regularly as before.

A letter from the Yum chuy was received this morning addressed to the French, American and Dutch consuls, of which the following is a translation, (we are as yet unable to give it).

From this it will be seen that he requires them to give between them, a quantity of Opium similar to that offered by the British Superintendent. Strict orders were given this evening to bring all the pleasure boats on shore, they were accordingly brought in amidst tremendous noise brought from the river and all deposited in the middle of the square, where they now are, many of them broken to pieces through the careless manner of handling them. One wherry was taken ont of the old Company's long and added to those in the square. Howqua and Mowqua frequently called on Capt. Elliot during the day, and at times remained several hours with him.

Saturday, 30th March.—This morning we hear that no one is allowed to go down China street to market—this new vexations prohibition is caused, they say, by some foreigners going to the Consoo-house last night when the Kwang-chou foo and other officers were assembled there, and the Kwang-chou-foo is reported to have said that, when they wanted any foreigners to come to them, they did not go, but came when not required; that therefore they should no longer be permitted to go into the backstreets. Another reason for this prohibition may be the desire to force us to accept of the Yumchy's present of poultry, pigs, &c. which we stated were brought to the Consoo-house on Thursday night; these were offered to foreigners in the morning yesterday, but refused we believe, without exception. During the day some Parsee servants were allowed with a passport to go to market. Another cause of this greater strictness may have been the Nam-hoy-yune's intended visit to the front of the factories which took place at about two o'clock in the afternoon. He came accompanied by several other mandarins and walked over the square up to the British Hong, looked down the passage which divides the Company's garden from the house and walked away again. The impression seems to be general that things are far from being settled; this is however merely guessed at, nothing having transpired as to the nature of Capt Elliot's negotiation with the authorities. We omitted to mention that two buckets of springwater were carried to each house yesterday by order of the Hong-merchants.

Sunday 31st March.—Provisions, such as fowls, eggs, mutton and vegetables were offered this morning by the linguists in all the houses, but by many refused unless payment were taken for them. while the Chinese insisted upon giving them as a present. A long document containing the Yum-chue's correspondence was pasted this afternoon on the wall of the Company's garden, which for want of space and time we must defer giving until our next. Foreigners were informed this day that since they were to receive no receiving provisions gratis, the linguists would in future supply them with them against payment

Monday 1st April.—This morning another part of the correspondence between the Commissioner and Capt. Elliot and the American and Dutch Consuls was published in the square. Its purport is briefly to the following effect. The Commissioner says that Capt. Elliot proposes that Mr. Johnston should go down to Hong-Kong to be present at the delivery of the Opium—this, H. E. says, is not necessary—why not make each British Subject give an order for Opium, such as they were in the habit of giving to the Opium dealers; this Capt. Elliot should endorse, and then give to H. E., who would then send down for it, without Mr. Johnston's presence being necessary. If, says H. E., Capt. Elliot has power sufficient to obtain the making over to him all the Opium belonging to British subjects, he surely may also have that of ordering such documents to be made out. To Mr. Snow, the American Consul, His Excellency says, that he cannot understand the reason why, as he, the Consul, has informed him, his countrymen should have delivered unto Capt. Elliot's keeping some 1500 Chests of Opium, rather than to him—he says there must be some double dealing there. (The Opium here spoken of is declared to be British property and as such was by the consignees given over to Capt Elliot.) To the Dutch Consul, Mr. van Basel, H. E. says in answer to a letter from him, that though he or his countrymen have no Opium, yet that he cannot for the sake of allowing one vessel to depart, permit the whole of his plans to be deranged. He recommends to the Dutch Consul to influence his neighbours to give over all traffic in Opium.

We ought to have mentioned before that in consequence of a letter from Mr. King, the Commissioner sent him a gracious answer which was ordered to be stuck up on Mr. King's door, in which it is said that though H. E. is aware of Mr. King's having abstained from the Opium trade, yet he cannot allow his servants yet to return, as such concession would interfere with his plans; he however recommends Mr. King to disseminate his maxims among his neighbours.

We have, before going to Press, Monday noon, nothing new to communicate. Communication with outside natives is jealously watched against, and for some time nothing has been heard either from Macao or Whampoa. H. E. at same time says that the trade will be reopened the moment the Opium has all been delivered over to him.

A. D. 1624 to 1677. tory for February. Continued from last weeks.

The quiet of Manila was not restored by the persecution and removal of Corcuera. The military austerity of Faxardo led him to seek to enforce unanimity by imprisonments and banishments; but when the prisons and the presidios were both filled by these expedients, the evil went on increasing. The colonists divided into parties, and inflamed with mutual animosities, were plying the trade of persecution, when their dissensions received from Providence a severe and unexpected castigation.

It was the evening of St. Andrew's day (1645), the deliverance of the city from the pirate Limaon had just been commemorated in the streets and before the altars; the ball and the dance were preparing; the serene sky, the smooth sea, the delicious temperature, were lending, as they still lend, their charms to the gayest holiday of the Philippine winter. Suddenly the waters of the bay were stirred from beneath; the river rose in its bed; globes of fire broke from the cleft soil; there was a rush in the air, as of an invisible tempest; they were the heralds of the terrible earthquake. The first shocks were severe, and were followed by others still more destructive. The cries of the living for mercy mingled with the crash of falling buildings, and the groans of the sufferers buried beneath the masses of rubbish. The dawn of the following day came, and the city was a pile of ruins. Almost all the public buildings—the cathedral, the churches, convents, colleges—were destroyed or irreparably enjured, and six hundred bodies were disinterred from beneath the wreck of private mansions.

In the midst of this awful visitation, superstition found time to invent a new wonder. While the shocks were following each other in fatal succession, the image of St. Francisco in the pueblo of Dilao, was seen to weep and sweat profusely. For three hours, its hands were stretched forth in the attitude of earnest intercession. This prodigy called forth the pious gratitude of the spared citizens, and the image was unanimously voted by the civil and ecclesiastical authorities, protector and advocate against earthquaker, under the title of St. Francisco of tears (San Francisco de las lagrimas).

When Manila rose again from its ruins, it was in a humbler style of architecture. The lofty terraces and projecting galleries, in which the wealthy citizens had delighted, were foregone, and though the balcony and the azotea so necessary in the climate were preserved, yet in the moderate elevation of the houses, not exceeding two stories, and in the overlopping timbers, the visiter saw, as he may still see, that the terrors of the fatal night of St. Andrew's were not soon forgotten.

Faxardo had now ample employment in rebuilding the city, under whose ruins, it would appear, that many bitter discords were for ever buried. From these useful labors he was in part drawn away by a revival of old depredations; these difficulties were waived for a time, by a boundary treaty with Corralat in Mindanao, and an armistice with the Sûlûans, under whose provisions the islands accepted the protection of Spain, while the Spanish troops were withdrawn from them.

The ruins of Manila were but ill repaired when the bay was again entered by a Dutch fleet, the 10th of June (1646). Their unexpected appearance and the state of the city gave them great advantages, but several days were suffered to elapse before they could resolve on an attack upon Cavite. The garrison made a brave defence, the Dutch commander was mortally wounded, and the citizens in pious gratitude for the retirement of their enemies, ascribed all the merit of the repulse to the miraculous image of the Virgin of Antipolo!

The government of Faxardo, severe from the beginning, had become more and more harsh, under the influence of Venegas, his military adviser and secretary. Convinced, at last, that this favorite had abused his confidence, he gave him up to public trial in Sept. 1651 when the unhappy man was put to the rack and his fortune confiscated. His case was afterwards referred to the king, but the royal mercy came too late, for Venegas had already died in prison, and the popular aversion had gone so far as to deny him honorable burial. We will add one anecdote more of Faxardo's official bearing, though it may be difficult to decide whether it be an illustration of misplaced leniency or of still more refined severity. A foreigner, holding employment in the colony, had become obnoxious to the Inquisition, and the commissary of the holy office received orders to apprehend him and send him to Mexico. The colonial agent of the tribunal proceeded to put his orders in execution, without the formality of a notice to the governor. The unbending soldier, the persecutor of Corcuera might have been expected to resent this irregular supercession of his authority, but the mildest possible rebuke—a gentle chiding at being deprived of the opportunity of cooperating in so honorable a service—was all that the governor inflicted on the commissary.

During the last years of Faxardo's government, the colony seems to have been much neglected by the mother-country, and long intervals elapsed between the arrival of naos from Acapulco. The archiepiscopal seat had been vacant ever since the death of the unfortunate Fr. Guerrero. Great was the joy of the citizens, when it was announced in July 1653, that the galleon was at hand, having on board a new archbishop, as well as new governor in the person of Don Sabiniano Maurique de Lara.

Faxardo was now destined to feel in his turn the rigors of a public prosecution. After an administration of nine years, and at the age of 96, a "residencia" was instituted, and serious charges proved against him. His case was referred to court, and his prosecutor, more mild to him than he had been to Corcuera suffered the Jesuit convent to give him an asylum, where death anticipated the royal decision.

De Dara entered on his government, at a period of extreme corruption of morals at Manila. Unblushing dishonesty in commercial transactions, unrelned malice and hatred in private life, are said to have characterised the time, and these unhappy features were overshadowed by an all prevalent licentiousness and sensuality. To meet this sad state of things, pope Innocent X. benignly despatched a apostolic brief to the archbishop, "absolving every excess or crime whatever, in which the residents or visitors at the Philippines might be found implicated." Plenary indulgences were conceded "a los que tuvissen disposicion suficiente," i. e. to all who chose to ask and pay for them.

When these gracious privileges were made public in March 1654, "the disputation to receive them was universal." The throng at the confessionals was so great, that the rite was administered, in the city alone, to 40,000 persons. When the 22d of March came, the day fixed for the benediction of the islands, high mass was celebrated, and the ceremonial closed amid general joy, and "extraordinery consolations." De Lara lent himself most devoutly to these religious observances, and seconded the archbishop with a liberal contribution toward rebuilding his ruined cathedral. These ceremonies did not avert from the colony a long train of disasters. Several galleons were lost or miscarried: clouds of locusts ate up the harvests; and the small pox made great ravages. The piratical incursions of the Mindanaons were prosecuted to the very entrance of the bay of Manila, and in one of these, their booty included a thousand captives. On St. Bernard's day, August 20th, 1668, Manila was again visited by destructive shocks of earthquake. Many of the lately rebuilt edifices were shaken down, and, but for the safer style of building and the occurrence of the shocks in the day-time, the loss of life and property would have been terrible. * Two years after this, disturbances arose in Pampanga, out of the hardships suffered by the natives, in services required by the crown, and particularly in the cutting and preparation of timber. The revolt extended to the neighboring provinces, and the followers of the leaders in the insurrection swelled at one time to 40,000. This threatening combination was however dissolved, the year after, by a small Spanish force, and the ringleaders in the mutiny were apprehended and executed.

We noticed briefly the contents of the following documents last week, and now publish their translation.

General replies of the High Commissioner published by him in the form of proclamation, before the factories.

Reply of the 27th March, to the address of the English Superintendent Elliot surrendering Opium.

"The representation that in obedience to the commands he will deliver up the opium manifests a respectful sense of duty and understanding of matters. I find that the store-ships at present in these seas are in all twenty-two; and the general amount of the opium they have on board, I am already informed of by my inquiries The Superintendent can have no difficulty in instantly ascertaining from all the foreigners in the factories the precise amounts, and immediately writing out and presenting a clear statement thereof, to enable me, the commissioner, in conjunction with the governor and lieut governor, at once to declare a certain period, when we will ourselves go to receive what is delivered up. He must not make an untrue report, lest he bring on himself the offence of concealing, deceiving, and glossing over. Beware of this!

Reply of the 28th March, to the address of the English Superintendent Elliot stating the amount of Opium surrendered, 20283 Chests.

By this address it appears, that the amount of opium has been ascertained, and the needful examination and receipt thereof are respectfully awaited. The real sincerity and faithfulness thus shown are worthy of praise. I find that the amount of 20,283 chests, stated by the said superintendent, has reference only to such as is brought by the English foreigners. I, the commissioner, have assuredly no suspicion that there is any insincerity behind. And the statement that there is some at other ports elsewhere. I presume also to be the fact. But I have considered, that, before the issuing of the orders to deliver up, it is difficult to feel assured that there has been no opium laid up in the several foreign factories, nor any brought in the various vessels at Whampoa. The question does not now stop with what is in deposit on board the store ships: but at this time, when punishment is not to be inflicted on past offences, it is essential that all the opium, wherever laid up, should be completely surrendered. Assuredly the offences of those who have before laid up a store thereof shall not be visited upon them.

"I have now, in conjunction with the governor and lieut. governor, determined on the rules to be observed in regard to the delivery of the opium. Besides sending a copy thereof separately to the prefect of Kwang-chow Foo, that he may desire the hong merchants to make known the same. I also require of the said superintendent instantly to ascertain what quantity of opium there may be in the foreign factories, and on the 29th officers shall be deputed to receive the same:—what quantity of opium there may be on board the ships at Whampoa, to examine and receive which officers shall be sent on the 30th:—and what quantity there is on board the twenty two store-ships outside, to examine and receive which I, the commissioner, and the governor, will ourselves go to the Bocca Tigris. Whatever there may be stored up at other ports, since the said superintendent has promised to deliver up the whole, he should of course be held responsible for the delivery of, from time to time as it shall arrive. Should the amount be in excess of the 20,283 chests, it must still be fully surrendered. In so doing the sincerity of the purpose will be shown. And assuredly no blame shall be attached to the inaccuracy of the original report, on account of such excess.

"Besides this, the American, French, and Dutch nations have also Consuls in superintendence of affairs, to whom orders have now been given in like manner to pay obedience, and speedily to represent the real amounts, waiting till examination can be made and the whole received. Though the said superintendent be peculiarly charged with the controul of the English foreigners; yet having been permitted by the crown, in consequence of the governor's representation, to remain as superintendent in the foreign factories, he should spread abroad his monitions, so that all may speedily deliver up what opium they have, so as to enable us to memorialize the throne conjointly, and request a conferment of favors from the great emperor, in order to afford encouragement and stimulate exertion. Now is the time for the foreigners of all nations to repent of their faults: and pass over to the side of virtue. This is the day and time for reformation: and if embraced, the enjoyment of unending advantages will be the result. Let none on any account make excuses, or seek delay, so as to incur cause for future repentance.

Reply of the 29th March, to the English Superintendent Elliot's address requesting that as usual the compradors and servants should be allowed, and that the passage boats should be permitted to run between this, the outer anchorages, and Macao.

"Yesterday the said superintendent, when addressing me in reply, promised for himself that he would certainly deliver up the opium of his nation to the amount 20,283 chests, surrendering the whole quantity as he should bring it into his hands: I therefore answered, in his praise, and at the same time clearly gave directions in regard to the places where and times when the delivery should be made. And I besides sent, in a separate form, a list of rules, and required of him to write foreign letters (or orders), to enable me to depute officers to proceed therewith to the store-ships, and call on them to make the delivery. This was a most simple, convenient, and easy mode of proceeding. If the said Superintendent were really acting with sincerity of purpose, he certainly should have speedily proceeded to obey my commands. Though he say, that in the foreign factories, and on board the ships at Whampoa, there is now no opium, yet the opium laid up on board the 22 store-ships is all deposited therein by the foreigners residing in the factories. Ordinarily, when combining with Chinese traitors to dispose thereof clandestinely, it has been always practicable to obtain foreign orders written at the factories, and giving the same to the fast boats to proceed therewith outside, and get possession of the commodity. How is it then that on this occasion, when surrendering the opium, there is no knowledge of this mode of operation?

"In the present address, it is represented that now, while the north wind is blowing, it is feared that vessels outside having opium on board may perhaps set sail and go away. Now I find that of late the store-ships have all returned to Lintin, Macao roads, and the other anchorages, and there remained; doubtless because they have heard that commands have been issued requiring delivery of the opium, and therefore have not dared to sail far away. They are yet disposed to await and pay obedience; while you would desire to stir them up and make them go. I would ask, seeing that you have taken on you the responsibility in this matter, how, if the store-ships should dare the to sail away, you will be able to sustain the heavy criminality attaching to you?

"The address talks too of close restraint, as it were imprisonment; which is still more laughable. I find that from the 18th of March, when the commands were given to all the foreigners to deliver up their opium, every thing remained as usual, until the 24th, when you came in a boat to Canton, and that night wished to take Dent and abscond with him. It was after this that cruisers were stationed to examine and observe all that went in and out. It was because you were void of truth and good faith, that it became unavoidably necessary to take preventive steps. As to the compradors, and others, they are in fact Chinese traitors, who would also suggest absconding and escape. How then could the withdrawal of them be omitted? Yesterday, too, when you had made a statement of the amount of opium, I at once conferred on you a reward, consisting of sundry articles of food. Is this the manner in which prisoners are ever treated?

"I the High Commissioner, in conjunction with the governor and lieut.-governor, looking up to the great emperor, embody his all-comprehending kindness, and in our treatment of you foreigners of every nation never go beyond these two words, favor and justice. Such as display contumacy and contempt, how can they have ought but justice dealt out to them!" But such as shew a respectful sense of duty, shall assuredly be tenderly intreated with favor.

"Do you now simply command plainly all the foreigners, with instant speed to prepare letters, and hand them in to government, to enable it to give commands to all the store-ships to deliver up in orderly succession the opium, and as soon as this shall be delivered up, every thing shall without fail be restored to its ordinary condition. This requisition is indeed conformable to reason: what difficulty is there in complying with it? If in place of speedily making delivery, you make pretexts for diverting attention, in the hope that after the strict preventive measures shall be withdrawn you may form some other scheme, who cannot see through such artful devices? And will you be enabled to make a repetition of such attempts?

"Besides deputing officers to proceed to the Hong merchant's Consoo house, there to give verbal commands and to prevent delay, you are also hereby required to act speedily in obedience to this my reply. Do not again be working at excuses and delay, thereby drawing on yourself cause for future repentance."

Reply of the 30th of March to the English Superintendent Elliot's address, proposing to send Johnston outside.

"This address represents, that the Deputy Superintendent, Johnston, shall be sent outside, to call together all the vessels, and deliver up the whole amount of opium; and gives conveyance to an order to him for my perusal. I, the high commissioner, have carefully examined the terms of this order; and though I find therein nothing improper, yet considering that in a previous address the said Superintendent stated, that taking on him the power entrusted to him by his sovereign he had required of the people of his nation immediately to deliver up the whole of the opium,—it is plain to me that as the said Superintendent has the power of making such a requisition, he can have no difficulty in giving orders directly to all the store-ships; and what necessity then is there for committing the matter to Johnston, and thus multiplying the twists and bends of the transaction.

"I, the high commissioner, have given reiterated official replies, requiring of all the foreigners to write orders themselves, on the ground that, in the ordinary manner of selling the opium, they have always thus disembarked the goods, without committing an error once in a hundred times. Why then is not the opium surrendered in this comparatively simple, convenient, and easy way?

"Let me now weigh the matter for you. The said Superintendent having power to act, and having repeatedly acknowledged before me his responsibility, can have not the smallest loophole of escape therefrom. How can he possibly have the power to require of all the foreigners to deliver up the opium, and yet not have the power to require that they write orders for the same? It is his duty then immediately to pay obedience to my reiterated commands, and speedily to require of all the foreigners severally to write foreign orders for the number of chests of opium they have on board each vessel by name, and to present the same to government through the said Superintendent, covered by a general order from himself, that these being conveyed to the store-ships they may in orderly succession make delivery. The earlier the day of the complete delivery, the earlier will be that day for the commercial intercourse to resume its ordinary course, not stopping merely at the giving permission to the passage boats to run.

"The said Superintendent must know that I, the commissioner, give my commands and cautions in full sincerity, and must speedily pay implicit obedience. He must not be turning inconstantly this way and that, bringing thereby criminality and cause of sorrow on himself.

The foreign order is sent back herewith.

An edict from Lin, imperial commissioner, &c., to the American consul Snow, communicated by Choo, perfect of Canton.

An official communication has been received from Lin, governor of Hookwang, and high imperial commissioner; it is as follows.

"On the 16th day, of the 2nd month, of the 19th year of Taoukwang, (30th of March, 1839.) the American consul, Snow, presented an address as follows. (here the address is copied.)

"This having come before me, the high imperial commissioner, I find that already, before this time, the English Superintendent Elliot, presented an address, declaring that the opium belonging to English Subjects, which he had required of them to deliver up to him, was 20283 chests, and that he had no control over the people of other countries not under British rule. This declaration of Elliot's is clear and explicit. Now I, the high imperial commanded Snow, the American consul, to make out a clear and full statement of all the opium of his country and present the same for delivery. But he comes forward in reply, with this statement that already 1540 chests have been taken and delivered up to Elliot; to be handed over to government. This really is greatly at variance with Elliot's statement, and is a dull pretext. I command obedience to the previous instructions, that a full and true statement be made out and be presented for delivery. Let there be no concealment to involve guilt.

"Wherefore, I send this dispatch to the prefect, that he may immediately convey it to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmited to the said consul Snow, to obey the same without opposition."

Having received the above, I forthwith without any delay transmit it to the said foreign consul, Snow, in order that he may obey the same without opposition. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd month, 16th day.
(March 30th, 18 9.)

An Edict from Lin, the commissioner to Mr. van Basel, Dutch Consul in China, communicated by Choo, the Prefect of Canton.

An official communication has been received from Lin the Governor of Wookwang, a great minister of state and Imperial Commissioner; it is as follows:

"On the 16th day, 2nd moon, of the 19th year of Taoukwang (30th of March 1839.) the Dutch Consul van Basel presented an address in the following terms:

(Mr. van Basel had in his address informed H. E. the commissioner that neither he nor any of his nation held any Opium; informing H. E. at the same time of his having in vain applied to the Hoppo for leave for himself to go to Macao, and for the grand chop of a Dutch ship now at Whampoa—that he therefore considered himself and the people of his nation forcibly detained, and the Consul again asks that leave to depart may be given.—)

This coming before me, a great minister of state it is replied: Now because all the Opium of the several nations has not been given up, the holds of the ships have been closed in conformity with the laws, and for the sake of a single vessel of your nation it is impracticable to break in upon the present preventive measures. And although the said foreigner has no Opium, he ought still to induce all the foreigners resident in the Factories immediately to give up all the Opium in their possession. Then, as usual, the ship's holds shall be opened and the trade resumed. Moreover, no apprehension need be entertained respecting the detention of your country's vessel.

"Wherefore this edict is now despatched to the prefect of Canton that he may immediately deliver the same to the Hong merchants to be by them transmitted to the said Dutch Consul van Basel, that he may act in conformity there o without opposition."

Now, having received this edict I immediately transmit it to the said Consul van Basel, that he may act in conformity thereto without opposition.

April 1st, 1839.

An Edict from the Imperial Commissioner Lin addressed to the Foreign Consuls, Mr. Snow and others, communicated by Choo, the prefect of Canton.

An official communication has been received from H. E. Lin, Governor of Hoo kwang, a great Minister of State and Imperial Commissioner; it is as follows:

"I, a great minister of state, having received the Emperor's decree to repair to Canton to make enquiries and act respecting the business of Opium, did, without delay on my arrival here, give commands to foreigners of every nation to deliver up their Opium, and to give bonds never more to bring it to this country. The said foreign Consul Snow, the Dutch Consul van Basel, and the French Consul van Loffelt must all have seen and heard these commands. Now, on the 27th instant the foreign merchants of every nation presented an address, declaring that hereafter, in coming to Canton to trade, they will never more bring any Opium, but intimating that orders should be given for referring business of great importance to the controul of their respective Consuls. Of such importance is evidently the delivering up of the Opium. The said foreign merchants being of different nations, and their cargo belonging to different owners, declared it to be difficult to determine what ought to be done, unless the business were referred to some responsible head. It is necessary therefore to enjoin it on all the said foreign Consuls, that they severally take up the business in detail, make clear enquiry in distinct order, and prepare and present complete lists of all the Opium in order that it may be delivered up. Then all will be safe and secure.

"Now the English Superintendent Elliot has sent in his report stating there are in his possession 20,283 Chests which he is ready to deliver up. I, a great minister of state, have given my perspicuous reply, and have named a period for it to be received. This is on record. The traffic in Opium hitherto carried on by the American and other foreign merchants has not been less than that of the English. Why is it therefore that the said Consuls have not made out a true statement and delivered it up to Government? Truly this conduct has been very remiss.

"Wherefore this Edict is despatched to the Kwang chow foo (or prefect of Canton); on the receipt of it let him immediately instruct the Hong merchants to convey the same to all the said Consuls, Snow and others, that they may without delay prepare full statements of all the Opium in the possession of the merchants of their respective countries and deliver up the same, and wait till I, a great minister of state, confer with the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and appoint a period for its being examined and received at the same time with that delivered up by the English. Let not the smallest quantity be concealed. If the said Consuls conform implicitly to these commands, and make a complete and entire delivery, not only shall the past be forgiven, but it will be incumbent on me to memorialize the Emperor, and to request that a remuneration may be made. But if there be any procrastination indulged, or if the whole be not given up, they will involve themselves in guilt, when repentance will be unavailing."

Having received these commands, I do now convey them to all the said Consuls, Snow and others, that they may, without delay, prepare full statements of all the Opium in the possession of the merchants of their respective countries, and deliver up the same, and wait till the Imperial Commissioner, the great minister of state, confers with the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, appointing a period for its being examined and received, at the same time with that delivered up by the English.

Let not the smallest quantity be concealed. If the said Consuls conform implicitly to these commands, and make a complete and entire delivery, not only shall the past be forgiven, but it will become necessary to memorialize the Emperor and request that a remuneration may be made. But if there be any procrastination indulged, or the whole be not given up, they will involve themselves in guilt when repentance will be unavailing. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd moon, 14th day,
March 28th, 1839.

REPLY OF THE 27TH MARCH,

To WETMORE, CHAIRMAN OF THE GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Choo, Kwang chow foo, &c., proclaims to Wetmore, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce, for his full information.

The following communication has just been received from Lin, imperial commissioner, &c.

"On the 15th day, of the 2nd month.

"The Chairman, &c., Petitions as Follows:—

General Chamber of Commerce.

Canton, March 28th, 1839.

A Respectful Address

The Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce has received with profound respect, the Proclamation of H. E. the Commissioner, addressed to all Foreigners in Canton; and in compliance with the requisition of said document reports, that Peter Wanten Snow is Consul for the United States of America. Magdalinus Jacobus Senn Van Basel, Consul of the King of Holland, and J. P. Van Loffelt, at present at Macao, is reported to be the acting Consul for the King of the French.

W. S. WETMORE.—Chairman.

It appears that the object of this petition being brought before me is to hand up a list of the names and surnames of the several nation's Consuls: to which, as is proper, I reply.

I, the commissioner, having previously informed myself, by examination, (of their names), as was proper, yesterday issued another edict commanding the said several countries to send in a true and just account detailing the quantity of opium in their possession, and to wait till I was ready to receive it. Why have they not yet petitioned to this effect?

Let the said foreigners be forthwith urgently admonished by the said Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce to make out the required document, and at an early day to deliver up their opium. Do not attempt to escape this duty, lest you yourself become involved in error. In consideration of the circumstances I issue this edict for your information and obedience.

This proclamation is to be sent to the Kwang chow foo, who will deliver it to the hong merchants with orders to transmit it to the said Wetmore, for his instant obedience. Do not oppose!"

Upon receipt of the above I, as is proper, forthwith issue this edict to the said Wetmore, who upon receipt of it must accord his instant obedience. Do not oppose. A special edict March 30th 1839.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 6th April.

Monday at noon, 1st April.—Howqua, Mowqua and the other Hong-merchants have given notice to the foreigners, warning them not to induce any of their servants to enter their Hong—there being a likelyhood of the Mandarins coming to search them—and any native found therein would infallibly be put to death—the Hong-merchants therefore consider that the blood of any native thus found and put to death will be on the head of such foreigners as may have induced him to be in the factory. In the evening some Mandarins came to the square to superintend the bricking up the streets leading to the square, with the exception of old China street which is the only one through which communication is allowed, but to those on duty only; every other Chinese must get a passport to be permitted to go—no European under whatever pretext is allowed to enter China street. It is not known what the reason of this excess of precaution may be—except it be that some apprehensions are entertained of the populace.

Tuesday, 2d April.—Hong-merchants as usual frequently calling on the Superintendent. A new Chop from the Yum chae was stuck up this day, being his commands the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, and which is as follows, viz:

PROCLAMATION

To WETMORE, CHAIRMAN OF THE GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Choo, Kwangchow Foo &c. Proclaims to Wetmore, Chairman of the general chamber of commerce, for his full information.

The following has just been received from H. E. LIN, imperial commissioner, &c.

On the 18th day of the 2d month, of the 19th year of Taoukwang, Wetmore, Chairman &c. petitioned as follows.

March 30th 1839.

To His Excellency Lin, The High Imperial Commissioner &c. &c.

A respectful address.

The chairman of this Chamber has received the Edict your Excellency was pleased to address to him under this day's date.

In reply he begs to state, that the Consuls of the United States of America and of the King of Holland, have faithfully answered the Edict of your Excellency to them directed.

I have the honor to be,
Your Excellency's
most obedient &c. &c.
W. S. WETMORE.
Chairman.

"This coming before me the commissioner, &c., I, as is proper, reply.—I find on examination, that the American nation ought to deliver up some opium, yet, up to this time, they have not handed up any account of the quantity they are to deliver up. I have already sternly commanded their consul, Snow, in my reply to his petition on the subject, to be urgent: this is on record. Now I have looked into the petition of the said chairman and find it a mere tissue of senseless prattle. It is of the greatest importance that the opium be delivered up and received at the present time; how, then, can I allow myself to be trifled with in this way? Let the said consul, Snow, forthwith hand up in a responsive petition, a clear and detailed account of the quantity &c., to be delivered up, so that it may be examined and received at the same time with the smoking "filth" which the English have given up; do not let him attempt the least concealment, lest he involve himself in unpleasant consequences.

Uniting the circumstances, I send this edict to the Kwangchowfoo, who must instantly hand it over to the hong merchants with instructions to deliver it to the said chairman, Wetmore, for his information and obedience, do not oppose, &c. &c." Upon receipt of the above, and uniting the circumstances, I at once issue an edict, upon receipt of which, the said chairman, Wetmore, must accord his instant obedience thereto, and forthwith make out a true and detailed account of the quantity &c. of opium—(American property) which the said consul, Snow, must hand up in a responsive edict, and forthwith deliver up the opium.

Should there be any further delay, or glossing over, you may become involved in the consequences of the high commissioner's displeasure.

Do not then, oh chairman! any longer oppose and evade this heavy matter.

Tremble, haste, haste, a special edict. April, 1st 1839.

In the evening it became known that Capt. Elliot had received a Chop, direct from the Commissioner, (those hitherto received came through the Kwangchow-foo) by which he agrees to Mr. Johnston's proceeding to Lintin to deliver over to the Chinese Government all the Opium now there. We hear that the Commissioner says that after the delivery of the first 5000 chests, our servants shall return, after the next 5000, the boats to be removed: the following 5000 will open our intercourse with Whampoa; and the delivery of the remainder will establish every thing on the former footing. If on the other hand the deliveries should not be truly made, water is first to be denied us; if after three days foreigners do not repent, we are to be kept without food, and if after 10 days all the Opium shall not have been delivered then the law must take it's course, i. e. the foreigners must be executed.

The guard of coolies in front seems to be somewhat relaxing; there is not on this, the continual patroling of other nights.

Wednesday, 3rd April.—This morning Capt. Elliot issued the following proclamation:

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

The undersigned has now to announce that arrangements have been made for the delivery of the Opium lately surrendered to him for Her Majesty's Service, by which His Excellency, the High Commissioner, has stipulated that the servants shall be restored after one fourth of the whole be delivered: the passage boats be permitted to run after one half be delivered, the trade opened after three fourths be delivered, and every thing to proceed as usual after the whole be delivered (the signification of which last expression the undersigned does not understand).

Breach of faith (and His Excellency, not unnaturally, is pleased to suppose, that breach of faith may be possible) is to be visited after three days of loose performance of engagements with the cutting off of supplies of fresh water, after three days more with the stoppage of food, and after three days more, with the last degree of severity on the undersigned himself.

He passes by these grave forms of speech without comment.

But with the papers actually before him, and all the circumstances in hand, he is satisfied that the effectual liberation of the Queen's Subjects, and all the other Foreigners in Canton, depends upon the promptitude with which this arrangement is completed.

The maintenance of the national character, and the validity of the claim for indemnity depend upon that scrupulousness of fidelity with which he is well assured his countrymen will enable him to fulfil his public obligations to this government.

As soon as the whole opium surrendered to him be delivered over to the Chinese officers, it will be the duty of the undersigned to communicate with his countrymen again.

But it is a present relief to him to express to the whole foreign community his admiration for the patience and kindly feeling which has uniformly distinguished this community throughout these trying circumstances.

And he offers his own countrymen his grateful thanks for their confidence in his sincerest efforts to lead them safely out of their actual straight.

The ultimate satisfactory solution of the remaining difficulties need give no man an anxious thought.

The permanent stability of the British trade with this empire, with honor and advantage to all parties, rests upon a firm foundation; upon the wisdom, justice, and power of Her Majesty's Government.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China.

3rd April, 1839.

and Mr. Johnston, accompanied by Mr. Thom, left for Macao in a Chop-boat at about 6 o'clock in the evening. A Mr. Givens (deputed officer) two Hong merchants and two Linguists have also been sent down. The first account of a partial delivery will not, probably, reach us before six or seven days are over, and these will we presume, pass over quietly enough in our prison. Servants continue to be denied to all, and if our readers find this paper badly printed, they have to blame the Chinese for it who oblige us to become press-man in person, assisted by a few friends who, from want of trade, are for the present without employment.

The Yumchae has published an admonitory address to the people in the shape of a pamphlet, expatiating on the evils produced by the smoking of Opium, and the criminality of indulging this taste. He informs the natives that they are required to give over smoking altogether within the next two months; if after three months any smoker shall be discovered, he is to be put to death; he moreover requires that every five inhabitants be bound for each other for the non-transgression of his law.

Thursday 4th April.—Every thing remains in statu quo—the coolies remain watching the factories, and the backstreets continue to be guarded both against foreigners and natives. This evening it is reported that the Yumchae has required of the Governor of Macao to give up the forts; this rumour requires, however, confirmation. A meeting for the foreign community at the Chamber of Commerce was requested by the Hong merchants to be held tomorrow at noon—it is supposed that the merchants will there propose the signing of some bond against the trading in Opium.

Friday 5th April.—The general meeting of the foreign residents at the Chamber of Commerce did not take place, but the Committee met to receive a communication from the Hong merchants, which as anticipated was a proposal to H. M. Superintendent and to other consuls to sign a long document which is to the effect that the Foreign merchants, thankful for the unbounded favors showered on them by the Emperor, have, knowing the trade in Opium to be an illegal one, reverently delivered over to the Government all the Opium they had in the outside waters they promise henceforward to abstain from all traffic in Opium, and promise that, should ships arrive within the next six months with Opium on board, this must be sent back up, when the ships will be allowed to load and unload—should after the expiration of six months (or after autumn) vessels still continue to arrive with Opium, they are to be confiscated, ship and cargo, and the bond is to the effect that the crews of such ships are to be put to death, and that foreigners willingly submit to the justice of the doom.—That such a document cannot be signed by any one is evident. This day a number of large Cargo boats was despatched from here to the Bogue to lade the Opium that is to be delivered. It is also said that the Yumchae and Governor will themselves proceed to the Bogue in a day or two.

Saturday, 6th April.—The following Edict addressed by H. E. to the Dutch Consul has been received this morning. Another to the Consul of the United States has also been issued of which we know not yet fully the particulars.

"An edict from the imperial commissioner addressed to the Dutch Consul van Basel.

An official communication has been received from his excellency Lin, high imperial commissioner &c. governor of Hoo kwang: it is as follows.

"Another address has been presented from the Dutch consul van Basel, in which he says, (Mr. van Basel had only reiterated his demand for passports for himself and Dutch subjects, there being no reason to detain them and a ship at Whampoa, aware as H. E. expresses himself that neither the Consul nor his countrymen possess any Opium.)

"This coming before me, the high commissioner, I immediately reply. On a former occasion the said foreigner presented an address, requesting a passport to go to Macao. At that time the reply was given, that, as the opium of the several nations was not all given up, it was inconvenient, for the sake of his country's ship, to break up the preventive measures. This is on record.

"Now the English Superintendent, Elliot, has sent Johnston to proceed to the Nine Islands and the Macao roads, and there assemble the receiving Ships, and deliver up the whole of the opium. This done—and to examine and receive it will not require much time,—then all the soldiers and the guards shall be taken away, and the trade return to its usual channels. The said foreigner ought to remain quiet, and not repeat so often his communications.

"Wherefore I dispatch this edict to the prefect of Canton, that he may immediately convey the same to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmitted to the said consul, van Basel, for his implicit obedience."

Having received the above, I immediately convey the same to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmitted to the said consul, van Basel, for his implicit obedience. A special edict.

19th year. (April 5th, 1832.)

Maulmain.

BURMESE AFFAIRS.—We must put our small sheet to press without being able to furnish our readers with any intelligence either from Amarapoora or Rangoon. Indeed, we can scarcely expect to gain information from the latter place unless by the despatch of some public vessel. Our last accounts represented the trade there as about at a stand, consequently we cannot expect to hear frequently from thence, as formerly, by the arrival of trading vessels. Even native boats will scarcely venture to come in this direction so long as the people of Rangoon, as it is reported, have their fears excited under an expectation that preparations are being made here for attacking that place. We mentioned last week, that many of the inhabitants had actually left the town, and that those who remained were ready for a run, as soon as they should see the danger approach. We have no reason to expect, therefore, any certain intelligence of the state of affairs there till the return of the George Swinton, which we presume will be immediately on the arrival at Rangoon of despatches from Col. Benson.—Maulmain Chronicle, Dec. 19.

MISSION TO SIAM.—We hear Dr. Richardson has within a day or two past taken his departure for Bankok overland, in prosecution of the object of his mission, which we mentioned in our paper of October 10th. We hope he will prevail with the Court of Siam to open a free passage for Chinese trading caravans to come to Maulmain. It may be he will find the King of Siam not in very good humour on account of affairs which have recently occurred in Quedah. From our latest accounts we learn that the Malays had possessed themselves of that province, and that the King of Siam had determined to attempt the recovery of it. Should he have succeeded, an event not altogether improbable, by the time of Dr. Richardson's arrival, and no interference on the part of the Straits Government should have taken place to prevent the full execution of his designs, a circumstance nearly to be looked for, we trust the mission will be well received, and that the obstacles which have heretofore prevented the Chinese from coming to Maulmain will be removed.—Ibid.

ADVERTISEMENT—The undersigned has been appointed Agent in Singapore for the sale of the works published by the "Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge" as also Agent for the sale of Chambers's Edinburgh Journal, and the other publications of Messrs. W. and R. Chambers, Edinburgh. He has lately received copies of most of the above works, including Penny Magazine, Penny Cyclopedia, Chambers Journal etc. which are for sale at the London publishing prices, exchange at 4s 2d. per dollar, or 2 cents per penny. He will also be happy to receive orders for and undertakes to procure at the London publishing prices at the above exchange, without any charges added, any of the publications of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge and of Messrs W. and R. Chambers,—as any other works parties may wish to order, provided the price be paid at the time of ordering, or guarantee be given that the work or works will be received and paid for on delivery. On the arrival at Singapore of the works ordered, they will be handed over to such agents as the parties may appoint to receive them— or be forwarded direct by earliest opportunity, at the expense of the parties.

Orders in China may be left with Rev. E. C Bridgman, or J. R. Morrison Esq. Canton—and S. W. Williams Esq Macao—with whom Catalogues of the D. U. K. Society's publications may be seen. Catalogues may also be seen at the Morrison Education Society's Library, Canton—and at Macao.

MEETING OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL WITH MAHA RAJAH RUNJEET SING.

(From our Correspondent.)

Ferozepore, November 29th.—The interview between Lord Auckland and the Maharajah those 'two sons of glory,' came off this morning, realising in its pomp and glittering variety, all the anticipation of the uninitiated. At day break, the guard of honor consisting of a squadron of H. M's.–16th Lancers, a squadron of the 4th Light Cavalry, the Camel Battery, a troop of Horse Artillery, H. M's. 3d, Buffs, the 43d, 31st, 2d, and 49th Regiments N. I., the Body Guard, and the flank companies of the European Regiment, got under arms, and proceeded to form a street, leading to the Durbar tents of the Governor General which were enclosed in an extensive area formed of Kunauts. Soon afterwards Major Wade, Mr W. H. McNaghten, Mr. J. R. Colvin, Mr. H. Torrens, Sir Willoughby Cotton, and Brigadier Arnold, proceeded (accompanied by a detachment of the 4th Cavalry, and a number of officers) to the encampment of Runjeet Sing across the river, to escort His H. hn as to the Governor General's camp. And now were seen numerous cavaliers and gentlemen, hurrying, some on elephants, some on horseback, some on camels, to rendezvous at the Durbar tent and witness the imposing ceremony of the visit; and it is no exaggeration to say that this congregation of the gay and the gallant was in itself a sight worth travelling a great distance to behold. There were some two or three hundred officers, many of different regiments off duty, and these, with a great number of Staff and General officers, many of whom bore the orders of the Bath of Hanover, of the Lion and the Sun, and of the Bright Star of the East, presented a picture of military splendor rarely exhibited in India. At about half past 8 o'clock, Lord Auckland came into the area, and was received by the flank companies of the European Regiment, who duty at the tents, with presented arms. [En passant it may be remarked, that many officers expressed in our hearing their admiration at the appearance of the men of these companies—most of whom are of good stature, healthy, and well set up.] About half past nine the distant clangor of a band of indescribable musicians announced the approach of the Maharajah. Now was 'mounting in hot haste; down went the assembled elephants to receive the Governor General, Sir H. Fane and their cortege; off went horsemen and chobdars, a goodly troop, to precede the procession, and in three minutes the whole body, forming two lines of elephants, marched up the street of regiments to meet the Maharajah. And now the guns of the Camel Battery spat forth their salutation, and horses reared, and troops presented arms and bands struck up our 'National Anthem.' Seiks galloped in and out in wild disorder, and dust arose even to the point of enveloping the proud procession. At the end of the street, (so happily was the whole thing timed and arranged) the Maharajah appeared in the centre of a line of elephants and met the Governor General and his gorgeous suite Just as his Lordship had reached its termination. I had ridden to this point outside the line of troops, and had thus as excellent a view of the rencontre and 'embracement' as a dense cloud of dust would permit. The Maharajah, simply clothed in a red tunic and trowers and a turban of the same description—without one single trinket to adorn a person which 'not to speak it profanely' would be very little the better, or the worse, of such adorning; the Maharajah, be it known, was now received into Lord Auckland's howdah and the whole pageant wheeled about to proceed to the Durbar. To describe the rush that was made to reach the audience tent and secure a good position while the formal interview took place is utterly beyond the compass of your feeble historian. As the time advanced, Seik chieftains 'all clinquant, all in gold,' or clothed in every diversity of color and every imaginable variety of picturesque costume, armed to the teeth with spear, sabre, shield, and lighted matchlock—scrambled onwards, competing with the British red coats for a 'peep at the tumasha.' Arrived at the tents, which were already nearly crammed to suffocation, the Maharajah (giving precedence to Lord Auckland) alighted, and leaning upon the arm of His Lordship and Sir Henry Fane made his way into the tent. But such was the density of the mob of militaires and uncouth Punjaubees composing Runjeet's guard of honor, and so utterly dark was the whole apartment, from the crowd that blocked up the entrance, that it was with the greatest difficulty His Highness reached one of the couches to the right of the tent where the Miss Edens,' with Mrs. Churchill, Mrs. Sale, Mrs. W. H. McNaghten and several other ladies sat to receive him. Indeed, if he had not had the luck to be helped through by the good stout arm of 'stalwart Fane,' who is accustomed to force passages, it is doubtful if the Maharajah could have reached the couch at all. Here Major Wade came up and did Dragoman for Lord Auckland and the ladies for a few minutes: After this, the Governor General, aided as before by Sir Henry, took the Maharajah into an inner tent, where chairs of state were arranged and the et cetlos excluded. About 30 gentlemen, and the ladies alone, with Runjeet's prime minister, his son, and some of the principal sirdars, were permitted to assist at this part of the business; and the more effectually to preserve this exclusiveness, the companies of the European regiment were called in, and with a few troopers of the Body Guard formed a lane for the passage of the party to and fro. Within this tent the portable presents were produced, and exhibited, a good selection from the choicest articles to be found in the boutiques of Mortion & Co., Hamilton, Pittar, and id genus omne. But the gift of gifts, that, before which the Maharajah bent with the devotion of a preux chevalier, and the affection of a faithful and ancient ally, was a full length portrait of our gracious little Queen, painted by Miss Eden for the occasion and encompassed by a fitting frame of solid gold and jewelled cornices. On receiving this present, which was brought in by Major General Sir Willoughby Cotton, (while the camel battery fired a royal salute) the Maharajah, through Major Wade's interpretation, signified his intention to hang it up in his tent and fire a salute in its honor! A good deal of edifying conversation passed between the Governor General and his royal visitor, but it is not necessary to record it here. Suffice it to say that it was of course of a highly complimentary and agreeable character,—that His Lordship expressed himself delighted with the opportunity of meeting Runjeet Singh, and of presenting His Highness with this proof of the integrity and good feeling of the British Government, &c., &c., and that Sir Henry Fane, in his own frank, soldier-like way, intimated how delighted he would be to shew the Maharajah the 'brave army,' &c. When all had been said that it was thought requisite to say on the occasion, the Maharajah, escorted as before, proceeded to another tent to see the Howitzers, the caparisoned elephant and the magnificent horses which had been prepared for his acceptance. It would be pleasant, to record that this part of the ceremonies came off without any accident calculated to cloud the auspicious day; but truth compels the historiographer to chronicle that on approaching the Howitzers, His Highness and Sir Henry Fane stumbled over a few layers of spherical cases which were deposited, for the sake of display, in front of the Howitzers, and for a second, lay prostrate. Sir Henry scrambled up (I dare say he only fell from courtesy, though "twas so dark, Hal, thou couldst not see thine own hand") and assisted the Maharajah to rise, who then proceeded to inspect the gifts. The Howitzers were extolled, the elephants praised, and the horses admired, though His Highness's taste in the latter article differs from that of the English, inasmuch as he was most taken with that which our countrymen deemed the least entitled to approbation.

The interview and its attendant ceremonies having now ceased, the Maharajah was attended to his elephant, which he duly mounted, and amidst compliments, hurrahs, the discharge of cannon and the discourse of hautboys, returned to the place from whence he came, preceded and followed, as before, by a horde of retainers and accompanied by Sir W. Cotton and some political officers. The troop swore then marched off the ground, and the crowds of spectators returned at mid-day to their houses and their breakfast.

I should not omit to mention that the Maharajah expressed himself greatly delighted with the camel battery, and actually returned, after he had gone on a quarter of a mile, to see it fire off (if I may employ the word) before him.

Of the Maharajah so much has been said that it is not necessary here to say any thing. His appearance did not disappoint the spectators as most had been prepared for a mean exterior; but certainly his litterees published in Calcutta does not convey a correct notion of his outward man.

Of the Seikhs who came over with His Highness, it may be observed that they are generally considered fine looking men, having magnificent, manly features and good eyes, with broad chests, set off by striking costumes; but their limbs are poor, and derive little advantage from the light trowser worn by them in general. They seem a cheerful, good tempered, and bold set of men, but it is said that, on their own side of the Sutledge, they are not very courteous to our people. Of this we shall be better able to judge to-morrow, when Lord Auckland goes over, with a large escort, to return Runjeet's call.

Pray plead for the imperfection of this sketch. It is written hurriedly just as I have returned fatigued from the meeting.—Englishman, December 15.

MEETING BETWEEN THE MAHARAJAH RUNJEET SING AND THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

'———— Each following day,
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders its.'

From our own Correspondent.

November 30.—This was devoted to a return of the visit of the Maharajah, and most truly may it be said, that it was the 'master' of yesterday. The Seikhs fairly 'o'none down' the English.

At break of day, the 16th Lancers and the 2nd Cavalry sprang into their saddles and went ahead, under the command of Col. Arnold, to occupy the opposite (or right) bank of the Sutledge at the foot of the bridge of boats, and wait the coming of the Governor General. His Lordship was not long in his preparations for a start. Before sunrise, the body guard were paraded outside the enclosures, and very soon afterwards Lord Auckland, with Sir W. Macnaghten, Mr. Colvin and Mr. Torrens; Sir W. Casement, Sir W. Cotton, Colonel Skinner, Major Wade, and several Staff Officers and Brigadiers, to the number of about thirty, left the tents, as before, on elephants in two close columns, the movement being announced by a salute from the guns of the Horse Artillery attached to the escort. Scarcely any regimental officers were permitted to accompany the procession, as the apprehension of a crush had induced the Maharajah to limit h's invitations to some fifty or sixty gentlemen of the highest rank or immediately about the persons of the Governor General and Commander-in-chief. (N. B. I was indebted for my own happy position in the select cortege, to the courtesy of Mr. Secretary Colvin.)

When the procession had gone a few hundred yards, a deputation consisting of Shere Sing, the Maharajah's second son, and Dhian Sing, his Prime Minister, with several other Rajahs and Sirdars, similarly mounted, and escorted by some two or three hundred irregular cavalry and a company of regular infantry, met his Lordship and turned about to accompany him to the camp of the Maharajah. The march, over a space of about three miles, now became extremely picturesque and interesting. The pace of elephants kept the horde of Seikhs at a hard gallop, thereby affording them an excellent opportunity of displaying to advantage their equitation and martial bearing. The costumes of the cavaliers was of course of a very motley complexion, and their arms, appointments, horses and equipments were not perhaps of an order to challenge close inspection; but the tout ensemble of the pageant was so extremely unlike anything that one sees any where else—there was such a pleasant dash of poetry and romance in the congregation of daring horsemen, bearing lance, targe, and matchlock and flaunting in all varieties of colour, and diversities of uniform, that criticism was entirely disarmed. On reaching the bridge of boats, which is admirably contrived by Lieut. Wood of the Indian Navy, (who in a little boat of his own was looking at the procession,) the elephants crossed single, preceded by the body guard. When the transmit had been completed, the Governor General was joined by the Commander in chief, Generals Duncan, Torrens and Churchill, Colonel Dashwood and the Brigadier's staff and visitors, attached to His Excellency's camp, and the whole body moved forwards in a mass. A few minutes brought up the procession with the 16th Lancers, and 2nd Cavalry, who had formed a street, and now saluted His Lordship and his train with a flourish of kettle drums and trumpets. Nothing could exceed the splendor of the coup d'œil presented by the Lancers. Whether their costume, appointments or horses be considered, it was a sight of which every Englishman might reasonably be proud. Reaching the end of the street, and crossing a small nullah or caution of the river, which murmured through the plain, the Governor General was now saluted with an irregular discharge from a hundred jingalls or zambooras mounted on as many camels and occupying a slight rise of ground on the banks of the Maharajah's line. Entering the entering scenery, the procession entered upon an apparently endless street formed by an irregularly disposed line and fort of the rabble of the Punjaub, and in the distance ever 'Ally' was deserted coming for battle, with the customary pomp and pageantry, the great his distinguished visitor. It may be questioned if the perfect beauty of the whole scene at this juncture could be surpassed by any display that the utmost stretch of human ingenuity and fancy combined could possibly achieve. Talk of a coronation! The sun shone out with great brilliancy: on either side of the two gorgeous masses of stupendous and highly adorned elephants, bearing their golden howdahs and elegantly appareled tenants, were long rows of armed and bearded horsemen, whose brilliant helmets glittered in the sun, whose stern and resolved expressions of countenance were in admirable keeping with the calmness of their attitude and the steadiness of their richly caparisoned charges. Beyond the squadrons of cavalry, (all of whom by the way were dressed in scarlet with green or yellow facings,) were regiments of infantry, two deep, horse artillery in yellow uniforms, and an elegant suite of crimson cloth tents variegated with yellow ornaments. In the neighborhood of all this was an extensive encampment and crowds of people or followers, but arranged in rows with as much regularity and preserving as strict and decorous a silence, that not a sound interrupted the music of the military bands which conveyed to perpetrate 'God save the Queen.'

When the Maharajah, simply attired, as yesterday, in a crimson shawl with a few thin stripes of gold upon his tunic, met the Governor General, Lord Auckland stepped into his Highness's howdah, and the two lines of elephants forming a junction, moved onwards together. The artillery of the Punjaub honored this moment with a royal salute.

On reaching the royal tents which were in the centre of a vast enclosure formed of scarlet and yellow cloth kanauts, the line entered by a canopied gateway, and was received by a steady and numerous band of picked warriors, bearshaded troops, armed with matchlock and sabre and principally habited in crimson silk or kincaub tunics, with head dresses of the same material and occasionally a bright coat of mail, or mailed head piece. Dismounting, the whole party proceeded to the principal tents and seated themselves on gold and silver chairs placed upon exquisite shawl carpets beneath a spacious sumiana or awning of the same beautiful and costly material. Lord Auckland was placed on the right hand of the Maharajah, Sir Henry Fane on his left, while Sir W. H. Mc Naghten, retired in the splendid court uniform of a British Ambassador, occupied a seat on Lord A's right and acted as interpreter during the conversations which followed. Around and behind the distinguished passengers were crowds of Aides-de camp and other staff officers; numerous Rajahs and Sirdars arrayed in the most gorgeous costumes; while in the centre of the display stood the rest of the British officers and gentlemen, and many of Runjeet Sing's chief soldiers. The introductions now commenced. They were followed by the introduction of a numerous band of nautch girls, some of when danced a la mode ordinaire, and ogled the visitors after a fashion somewhat extraordinaire. The display of presents, consisting of shawls, jewels, barbaric pearl and gold, horses &c., ensued; fruit and sweetmeats were produced, and the durbar then broke up, without, however, the excellent order and state which had been observed from the commencement being in the least degree disturbed. Indeed truth compels me to say, that the Maharajah's arrangements (naturally indeed) completely eclipsed all those that the best care of the English could make:

'———— All was royal,
In the disposing of it naught rebelled.
Order gave each thing view.'

The same observances were followed on the return home to camp, and thus ended the second day's magnificent ceremonials.

To-morrow and Sunday are to be blank days, preparatory to the grand review of the British troops.

Englishman, Dec. 17.

Aug. 11. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of De Silva, Tabora, Sarria, and De Corcuera, &c. Continued from A. D. 1674 to 1677. From the Chinese Repository for February. Continued from last week.

Besides these domestic disquietudes, de Lara had reason to apprehend at this time a formidable invasion of the colony. The successful pirate Koxinga (Cosinga), after driving the Dutch from their posts on Formosa, gave ominous notice to the governor of the necessity of the Philippines. To accomplish this conquest, he had invited the P. Victorio Ricchi into his service on envoy, the padre yielding to the necessity, in the hope of bringing about an accommodation. The envoy arrived at Manila in May 1662, and was received in due character by the governor. It was now time to take active measures for the averting of a storm which had already deluged the European settlements on Formosa. The Spanish troops were withdrawn from Terrenate, Zamboanga, and other outposts, and concentrated on Manila. Unhappily, these were not the only preventive measures. It was feared that the whole Chinese population would side with Koxinga, on his appearance, and by their numbers decide the event in his favor. It was proposed to put them all to death, and this project was suggested, not by any authorities (not because of its barbarity, but) because it would relieve the colony from the burden of their labourers. A milder alternative was then adopted, the embarkation of Chinese being authorized on board the junks in the bay, while the expected wars treated, to hold their fields and their industry. This parallel of policies, acting on the minds of the Chinese, drove on the resentments of former oppressors. Blind rage with the fear of a massacre, and of universal oppression, they put to death every Spaniard they could find in revenge, the fire of the city walls was turned on the closely built dwellings. Many were then cut down, others threw themselves into boats and escaped by sea; a few contented outside. The larger number of 3000 or 4000 were quieted by the assurances of the governor, and retired to their homes, but were confined to a suburb on the river, where they perished by the joint hands of the Spaniards, and their imperial foe. For this murderous tragedy, as for those which preceded it, there is no justification.

The P. Ricchi was now dispatched with formal assurances to Koxinga, telling him that the Spanish nation obeyed only God and their kings, and that Manila could in short subject the massacre of his people, until his demands were executed. This reply was drawn up with much care and spirit, and being observed printed and sent to Spain, it received a merited approval. Before it reached China, however, Koxinga was dead, and Kaeng, and told him their tale, and called on him to avenge the butchery of their companions at Manila. Enraged by these accounts, he gave orders to prepare for the invasion, but his preparations were but begun when death overtook him, the following January.

It was well for the P. Ricchi, when he came with his bold answer, that Koxinga was no more, and that his son and successor was a milder man than his father. He remembered the padre to return to Manila on a second embassy, and, through his address and moderation, a friendly commerce was reestablished.

After presiding over the affairs of the colony, through ten years of trouble and difficulty and depression, De Lara returned to Spain, and after a brief interval, died at an advanced age, in his native city, Madrid. He succeeded in his office by Don Diego Salcedo, who landed in Cagayan in September 1663, and proceeded overland to Manila. His early attention to the commercial interests of the colony, gained him many friends at first, but he soon lost his popularity. An fond of money as any of those around him, he did not scruple to use his authority as governor, to engage in trade himself to a large share of the profits of the Mexican traffic. The popular dissatisfaction went on increasing for several years, until it found an instrument in the commissary of the holy office. This individual, an Augustine friar, who had obtained his post by compliances which even the Dominicans refused, collected evidence of many usurpation entrusted to the life of the governor, and succeeded to institute a process against him. This done, he entered the palace by night, with an armed party, and seizing Salcedo in his bed, carried him off to the Augustine convent, chained and fettered. This daring act, though nothing could be more lawful, was not unanimously applauded, as the governor was a favorite with the people. The Dominicans, especially, were loud in their complaints, and while the two senior sisters were contending for the right of succession, the youngest, Don Juan Manuel, got possession of the governor-ship Salcedo was now unchained, a prisoner of the holy office, for Mexico. The vessel put back and he was remanded to his old prison. Embarked again in 1670, he sunk under his mortifications, and died before the voyage was terminated. When this event came before the Spanish authorities at the whole proceedings was declared void, and the friscle Inquisitory, in his turn, was ordered a prisoner to Acapulco. His fate here a still closer resemblance to his victim's, in that he too died an shipboard, and nearly on the same parallel where Salcedo perished.

Don Juan Manuel did not long enjoy the place to which his address had raised him. The vessel of 1669 brought a successor to Salcedo in Don Manuel de Leon, a veteran soldier, who had fought at Nordlingen and Lutzen. Manuel took refuge in the Augustine convent, and while the disputes were pending as to the mode of his return, death opened to him an honorable release. His property was, however, confiscated, and his effects even embalmed and cancelled.

De Leon's first cares were given, as those of many of his predecessors had been, to the arrival of commerce. An envoy was sent to Macao by whom means the friendly intercourse, which had been suspended since 1640, was again reopened. A trade was also revived with Canton, Ningpo, and the ports of India, and soon became so flourishing as to attract sixty vessels in one season to the bay of Manila. Among the earliest importations from Macao was a gay Portuguese, Don Juan de Tavora. He was attracted to Manila by the fame of its bullfights and other public entertainments, and so enamoured did he become of these idle shows, that he spent all his property on them, and died soon after, so poor as to owe his burial to charity.

After eight years of quiet and equitable government, De Leon died (April 11th, 1677), bequeathing his property to pious uses, and leaving his authority to the Audiencia. The colony lost at the same time an old ally in the raja of Siao, whose little group fell under the power of the Hollanders. This loss is made interesting by the fact stated in connection with it, that the Siaoans at first resisted the attempts of the protestants to draw them away from the faith the Spanish missionaries had long inculcated, but that after a time catholicism lost its hold, and they became zealous heretics.

A stillmore interesting episode belongs to the period we have just been tracing, viz, the account of the first settlement or conquest of the Marianne islands. Some of these had been seen by Magellan in his memorable voyage, and called "las Velas." The navigators who came after him passed directly through the group on their way from Mexico to Zebu, and named it, the Archipelago of San Lazaro. At a later time, they got the name of the Ladrone islands, and this they bore in 1662, when the P. de San Victores, passing them on his route to Manila, was touched with compassion at the long neglected, still degraded, condition of the natives. On his arrival in the colony, he applied himself to preach a mission to the Ladrones, and pressed his appeals so in season and out of season, that he was at last allowed by superior authority. Thus thwarted at Manila, he procured letters to influential individuals at court, and these were so far effectual, as to elicit a royal order in 1666, for the christianization of the islands. The P. San Victores now returned to Mexico to forward the mission, and the city moved by an earthquake, (which it had not been by his sermons,) came forward with a liberal contribution. Being joined by some Jesuit friars, Victores embarked in March 1668, and landed at Guajan (or Guam) the most important of the islands. Doña Mariana de Austria having been his best patron at Madrid, he gave the group the name of "Mariana."

Though not fertile, they at that time yielded a simple sustenance to a large population. Among these, were many who had received baptism from the chaplains of the galleon of 1638, which had been wrecked at Guan, and after their example, others came forward to ask the same rite from the associates of Victores. He fixed himself at the chief town, Agana, and proceeded to found a church and a college, while his companions went on missions to Tinian, Zarpos, and other islands.

Considerable opposition was made to their progress, especially by a pagan Chinese who had been wrecked with his junk on Guam, 20 years before, and who resisted them with all his influence. But, on the whole, their success was rapid, the faith being preached extensively, and the infant church numbering, in a few months, 13,000 converts and 20,000 catechumens. Unhappily, these rich first fruits were not followed by a corresponding harvest. For reasons which we can imagine, though they are not stated to us, the colonists lost the affection of the natives, and the friendly welcome was succeeded by deadly hostility. In the course of the dissafection, collisions took place, and several of the Spanish clergy, and the zealous Victores among them, fell victims to the fury of the aborigines Still these simple men were no match for their antagonists, strengthened as they were from time to time by the passing galleons. The death of the first sufferers was avenged by the burning of the native hamlets, and when the contest ended with the submission of the survivors, their numbers, which must have been ten times as great at first, were reduced to 4000. To account for this tremendous reduction, we are told, that these aborigines were great lovers of their native liberty, and that the Spanish yoke was so insupportable to them, that women sought sterility and practiced infanticide, that they might not entail it on their offspring, and that men rather chose the means, than were ill. In what the weight of this burden consisted, we are not distinctly informed, though it appears not to have lain in any impost or tribute. Whatever it was, its imposition drove this insular tribe to desperation, and reduced them, though long lived enough to yield 120 persons of 100 years old and upwards to the host in the first years of the mission, to the verge of extermination. The Spanish post on Guam continued to be maintained (as it still is), and the galleons annually took refreshments in its roadsteads, so long as they went on their yearly way from Acapulco to Manila; but the spirit and power of the natives were broken for ever. Such were the fruits of European intercourse in these remote "isles of the sea," and such we may add, is one of a thousand resembling pictures of what Christian colonization has done for paganism and for humanity.

Burmah.

Col. Benson.—The Steamer George Swanton left town on Monday morning for Rangoon, but having fallen in with the George Swanton in the river, with late despatches from the Resident at Ava, took her in tow, and returned with her to town. The intelligence we have been enabled to glean by this opportunity is of a complicated nature. It would seem that the Resident had again been fully prepared to make a start from the Capital, and that he had once more abandoned the intention, and resumed his pleasant position on his sandbank. At Rangoon, the idea seemed to prevail, that a perfectly good understanding had once more been established with the Court, though there appeared to be no cessation in warlike preparations. Rumours being again to be afloat of a general arming throughout the country, and some reports state that should the Resident quit the country, he is to be followed by an army of 60,000 men, who are to make a push for these provinces. Amid all these rumours of hostile preparations and intentions, the British subjects residing at Rangoon, appear to enjoy comparative comfort, for which they ought to be very grateful to Captain Crozer of H. M. ship Rosetta, who has consented to keep his ship at Rangoon till something definite be known as to our future relations with the country.

We understand that both the Steamer and the George Swanton will proceed immediately to Rangoon, there to await the upshot of affairs. We most sincerely hope that when they return to this place they may be freighted with the Resident and his suite. It is indeed high time that he should come away from the scene of insult and disgrace to which he has been subject during three months. The last accounts from the Residency, extend, we hear, to the 12th inst.—Moulmein Chronicle, Dec. 26.

Intelligence from Ava.—As the last accounts which have reached us from the Residency at Amarapoora extend to the 12th ult, we presume we shall have to wait a considerable time for further intelligence, unless indeed, any thing should occur to overstretch the patience and temper of the Resident, and induce him finally to quit the place. This is a consummation most ardently to be desired, for it is high time to resort to other means of settling our Burmese relations, more especially as all native reports seem to concur in leading to the belief that the Burmese Government is making active preparations for a war with us, whether we will or no. There is one report that has amused us exceedingly, which is, that the King has said "those English cannot movetan army without paying every man for fighting, and every man for carrying provisions. Now my army costs nothing, and therefore I can hold out till they have spent all their money." We hope this speech really came from His Majesty, as it will enable us to form a very good estimate of the quality of his troops, and of their relative time during which each party can hold out. Let native reports be what they may, we cannot bring ourselves to think it likely we shall ever be attacked. Any preparations that may be making, must, we conceive, be for defence against us, though it does not appear that they have much to dread on that score, for we hear little or no note of preparation on our side, barring a report which we see in one of the Bengal papers by the last arrival, that three Native Regiments were about to embark at Madras for this place, a report which we entirely discredit.—Ibid, January. 2.—Sing. Free Press 14th February.

A sixth Continent.—An extraordinary phenomenon presented in the Southern Ocean, may render our settlements in New South Wales of still more eminent importance. A sixth continent is in the act of growth before our eyes! The Pacific is spotted with islands through the immense space of nearly fifty degrees of longitude, and as many of latitude. Every one of these islands seems to be merely a central spot for the formation of coral banks, which, by a perpetual progress, are rising from the unfathomable depths of the sea. The union of a few of these masses of rock shapes itself into an island; the seeds of plants are carried to it by the birds or by the waves; and, from the moment that it overtops the waters it is covered with vegetation. The new island constitutes, in its turn, a centre of growth to another circle. The great powers of nature appear to be still in peculiar activity in this region; and, to her tardier process, she sometimes takes the assistance of the volcano and the earthquake From the South of New Zealand to the North of the Sandwich Islands, the waters absolutely teem with those future seats of civilization. Still, the coral insect, the diminutive builder of all these mighty piles, is at work; the ocean is intersected with myriads of those lines of foundation, and, when the rocky substructure shall have excluded the sea, then will come the dominion of man.—Lit. Paper.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 13th April.

We have continued the journal of occurrences, but it will be seen that very little of interest has occurred during this week. The proposal of the bond by which it was intended to make foreigners say that they were willing to suffer death if they were guilty of smuggling Opium, seems for the present to have been dropped. The suspension until better times of the functions of the Chamber of Commerce deserves notice as one of the occurrences of the week of importance. and we congratulate the Committee on the resolution to which they have come, as the Chinese seemed to be anxious to lay before the Chamber the decision or answer of questions purely political, and therefore without its reach, it's operations being confined, by constitution, to commercial objects only.

The Yumchae's absence from Canton has of course produced a cessation of chops, and nothing new passes in our prison. None of the servants are yet returned, except that here and there a coolie makes his appearance for an hour or two each day. People are still obliged to prepare their dinners themselves, and we fancy that three weeks practice must have afforded them some insight into culinary secrets. The efforts of our neighbours to cook their own dinners are however considerably assisted by dishes coming from the kitchens of our Parsee friends, who, having servants of their own nation, are enabled to assist those that have none, and they have done and continue doing so in the most liberal manner to whoever will avail himself of their kindness.

Saturday evening, 6th April.—It was this day reported that a ship's boat had attempted to come up to Canton from Whampoa. She proceeded as far as Howqua's fort, when the Chinese fired upon her with blank cartridge (they say) and the boat returned to Whampoa without accomplishing her object. It is understood that Capt. Elliot received this evening a Chop under the seal of the Commissioner proposing to him to sign the bond, which we mentioned had yesterday been submitted to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce.

Sunday, 7th April.—The Coolies remain watching the square as before, and the rows of boats also remain in front of the houses, altho' that composed of Cargo-boats has been some-what thinned, eight having been sent down to receive the Opium. We heard this day from a linguist that Mr. Johnston and Mr. Thom had arrived at Heangshan (about half way between this and Macao) on Friday last in the afternoon. They must therefore have had a very long passage. The Hong-merchants have proposed to the Committee of the Chamber and to the American and Dutch Consuls to meet them in the Consoo-house to morrow—it is supposed with the view again to confer about the Opium-pledge to be signed; it is said that the document now to be produced is very much modified.

Monday, 8th April.—We hear this morning of the arrival below of the Mangalore from Bombay and the Manly from Manilla, where the Harlequin from this had arrived. A French ship La Favorite from Manila is also reported in. The following are the minutes of a meeting of the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, from which it will be seen that the functions of that body are for the present suspended.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Canton, 8th April, 1839.

Minutes of a Meeting of the committee adjourned from the 5th inst, on bond proposed by the Cohong. Present, Messrs. Wetmore, chairman, Fox, deputy-chairman, Beynine, Thomson, Dinshaw Fordoonjee, Adam, Heerjeebhoy Rustomjee, Bell, Delano.

It was moved by Mr. Delano, seconded by H. Rustomjee, and carried unanimously:—

That, as this chamber was instituted for purposes of a commercial nature exclusively, it is expedient that the committee do not become involved in any further correspondence of a political or personal nature, with the local Chinese authorities; nor committed by any promises or engagements to them, which it may become impossible to fulfil.

That, in as much as we are prisoners in our Factories, surrounded by an armed force, our trade stopped, and all communication with Whampoa, Macao, and the fleet outside, denied to us, it becomes necessary that the functions of this committee should cease until the restoration of our trade, the liberty of egress from Canton, and of communication with the outer waters, enables the chamber to serve the community in a legitimate manner.

It was then moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Mr. Beynine, and carried unanimously:—That a copy of the foregoing resolution be communicated to the hong merchants by the chairman.

Thanks were voted to the chairman by acclamation and the meeting was adjourned sine die.

This evening the Kwang chow foo came to the Consoo-house there to meet the U. S. and the Dutch Consuls, and the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, which latter office had become extinct since the morning. It being understood that all British merchants had left the management of affairs to their Superintendent, none of them were asked to attend.

The parties that attended the meeting were Mr. Snow, the United States, and Mr. van Basel the Dutch Consul, Mr. Wetmore, Mr. Delano and Mr. King, and Mr. Ecarot as interpreter. These gentlemen were met by some of the Hong merchants and one by one introduced to the Kwang-chow-foo. Nothing, we believe, deserving particular notice took place at the meeting—the whole of the conversation on the part of the Kwang chow foo being nearly confined to insisting on the necessity there was that the bond should be signed, and on the part of foreigners to insist on the impossibility of doing this. The Kwang-chow-foo also put a number of questions to the interpreter regarding European affairs and noted down his answers. The meeting lasted upwards of two hours, and a threat was made to retain the Consuls if they did not sign the bond, but they were at last allowed to depart at about 10 o'clock, the Kwang chow foo declaring that by to morrow at noon he must have the bond duly signed. and that he would not admit any excuses.

The bond in the same as the one before offered to the Chamber and Commerce, and afterwards to Capt. Elliot, and the following is a translation.

"A duly prepared bond, to be voluntarily given by the English Superintendent, Elliot, and deputy Superintendent, Johnston, at the head of the English merchants, A &c., the Indian merchants, B &c., the Moorish merchants, C &c., the ( ) merchants, D and the ( ) merchants, E and the ( ) merchants F &c.,—respecting the eternal stop away with the opium traffic.

We do hereby pledge ourselves (with and for) the merchants of the English nation, and of the several countries her dependencies, residing and trading in the city of Canton, and who, elsewhere and unacquainted with the tender benevolence of the celestial court, have heaped up delightful gain to a countless extent. That whereas certain persons, avaricionsly bent on making profit, have of late years brought the smoking filth, called opium, into the Chinese waters, and there stored it up in receiving vessels for the purpose of selling it; all which is in direct contravention of the prohibitory laws of the celestial kingdom.

The great emperor has now appointed a high officer of state to come to Canton to enquire into and manage the business and we now begin to learn that the prohibitory laws are really severe in the extreme Utterly unable to overcome the alarm and trepidation into which we have been thrown, we reverently deliver up to government every particle of opium on board the receiving ships, earnestly entreating that a memorial may be sent to the great emperor, praying him, in his great mercy, to overlook our past offences.

The empty receiving ships shall be all sent back to their countries. Elliot and Johnston shall forthwith petition the King of their country, sternly to command all the merchants tremblingly to obey the prohibitory laws of the celestial empire, which forbid the importation of opium into China; and to leave off manufacturing the drug. Should opium be discovered on board any merchant vessel arriving in Canton after the autumn of this year, the said vessel and all her cargo shall be confiscated to government and she shall not be allowed to trade; and all the parties concerned shall, in compliance with the laws of the celestial empire, be put to death, willingly submitting to their doom. All vessels which, having sailed from their countries before the present rigorous prohibitions were known, shall arrive in China during the spring or summer months, shall immediately they arrive, deliver up all the opium they may have on board, without daring to secrete the least particle.

We do conjointly declare that this our bond is just and true."

Tuesday 9th April.—This morning intelligence was received by the Hong merchants that Mr. Johnston had arrived in Macao on Sunday morning the 7th April, and that on the following day he would proceed to Lankeet whither we are told two of the Opium-ships are gone. We hear that Mr. Johnston was not suffered to land at Macao but that Mr. Thom went on shore accompanied and closely watched by the Hong merchants Of course the bond required by the Kwang chow foo to be ready signed at noon this day has not been forthcoming and an invitation from that officer that the Consuls should again meet him at the Consoo-house was not attended to. A written refusal to sign the bond was however sent to the Consoo-house by Mr. Wetmore and Mr. van Basel, with their reasons for such refusal—this was after copies had been taken of it, returned to the Consuls as inadmissable, the Kwang chow foo declaring that he could not receive any communication except the bond duly signed.

"By my soul I swear,
"There is no power in the tongue of man
"To alter me: I stay here on my bond."—

Wednesday, 10th April. We expect now soon to hear of the delivery of the first instalment of Opium and it will then be seen whether this bond is meant to oppose new obstacles to our liberation from prison—that it cannot be signed by any one except upon the extremest degree of compulsion is evident—under such a bond not only the lives of such as signed it would be exposed to imminent danger every hour, from any denunciation, false or true, that might be made against them, but the signers must necessarily appear to the Chinese as if they had power over the lives of their countrymen, and if any of these latter suffer in consequence of their acquiescence, their respective governments would no doubt hold them responsible for such misfortunes. If this argument applies to private individuals, how much more to the officers of the western nations, and they of course cannot but persist in their resistance to this demand of the Chinese.

This evening the Yum chae, accompanied by the Governor, and Hoppo has left Canton for the Bogue. He is fortunate in having a fine northerly breeze, which has succeeded a very fresh southerly breeze that blew all day yesterday followed by a very heavy fall of rain.

Thursday 11th April.—We hear nothing from Macao to rely on with certainty. Two Opium ships it is said, are already at Lankeet, but nothing known whether deliveries have commenced. The Anchaze or criminal judge came to the square this evening at about 10 o'clock, to see that all was right.

Friday 12th April.—This morning news from Macao, to be relied on, were received. From these it appears that Mr. Johnston arrived at Macao on Sunday the 7th in the evening, but that the Mandarins at once opposed his landing; he had several interviews with the Mandarins concerning the manner of the delivery of the Opium, which was agreed on, we believe, after some warm dispute. On Monday night Mr. Johnston after having gone into the Superintendent's cutter, the Luisa, went on shore in Macao, and was ready to set sail in her for Lankeet, accompanied by Mr. Thom, early in the morning on Tuesday, though it is probable that that day's bad weather may have detained him in port. The Yumchae passed the fleet at Whampoa in the morning yesterday, accompanied by a great many boats. We hear that the Chinese have thrown a raft across the river just below Howqua's fort, to prevent any boats from coming from Whampoa—they did the same thing in Lord Napier's time. This day the four great officers, the judge, treasurer, salt commissioner and grain inspector came into the square in front of the Factories, but it being a rainy day without alighting from their chairs. The absence of the Yumchae probably makes them less solicitous for our safety. The Kwanghoep walks through the square almost every night, and in fact the guard is kept up nearly the same as in the first days. This evening Capt. Elliot published the following public notice:

Public Notice.

To H. B. M. Subjects.

Canton 12th April 1839.

The undersigned is sensible that Her Majesty's subjects being owners of, or having the control over ships or vessels in the Opium-trade on the coasts of China who recently transmitted a solemn pledge to the high commissioner not to attempt to introduce Opium into the Empire, must be most anxious to fulfil their obligations with all speed and fidelity; and therefore he need do no more than request them to seize the earliest safe opportunity for the rest of those vessels from their actual pursuits.

But it is his duty to remind others Her Majesty's subjects not bound by such engagements, and every man of common humanity, be he of what nation he may, that the liberties and possibly the lives of the whole foreign community now shut up at Canton hang upon their present forbearance. A seizure of Opium would immediately afford a pretext for their continued imprisonment and, it may well be, for worse treatment, and would be used with no inconsiderable effect in justification of the past and actual violences of this government.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

Saturday morning 13th April.—Before going to Press we hear that letters have been received from Lankeet, advising the delivery from on board the two ships there, the Hercules and Austen, of about 50 chests on Thursday last—the rough weather was the cause of no more having been delivered to the Chinese. If the weather has been more favorable yesterday a large quantity, perhaps the first instalment of 5000 chests, may have passed into the possession of the Yumchae, and it is said this morning that the Chop is preparing for the servants to be ordered back to the Factories. We also learn that Capt. Elliot has received letters from the Yumchae and the Governor desiring him to order all the Opium-ships to go at once to Lankeet, no doubt with the view of hastening the delivery. It now remains to be seen whether all difficulties as to the reopening of communication will have been removed by Capt. Elliot's engagement being so punctually performed; the promise to that effect has been given under the commissioner's Imperial seal, and it is to be hoped that the non-signing of the Opium-bond will not oppose fresh obstacles to the removal of the present grievances. Nothing more has for some days, we believe, been heard of this bond—whether the Chinese will relinquish their pretensions on that head altogether it is difficult to foresee, though it is probable as they must now be convinced how utterly impossible it is for either Consuls or merchants of any nation to sign away the lives of themselves or countrymen.

N. B. The cubit is 14¼ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products.—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4320; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3720; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Comha; or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Tuels or $ 2222. It originates here $ 1734 and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $ 5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939.86., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 250—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.36—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

THE CANTON PRESS.

VOL. 4. No. 5.

Canton, Saturday, 20th April, 1839.

No. 189.

We have judged it convenient to our readers to republish in this number all the official documents that have appeared up to this day, as well as the journal of occurrences since the Imperial Commissioner's arrival, and think it not out of place to prefix these documents with a short review of the principal occurrences that have brought about or influenced the present crisis.

The opposition of the Government, by threatening edicts, to the introduction of Opium, is of long standing, but notwithstanding this the trade continued up to within two years one of the safest and most regular—the only difficulty being now and then a higher fee exacted by the mandarines from the smugglers, and a temporary stoppage of deliveries until this point was adjusted. With the facility of introduction the taste for the drug increased in a most extraordinary degree, and the consumption which twenty years ago did not amount to 6 or 7000, has within the last few years exceeded 30 000 Chests. The exports of produce from China are not of value sufficient to pay for this importation, which does not fall much short of 20 Millions of dollars and the consequence was that a large quantity of native silver was annually exported—the exact amount of which it is difficult to give, but it cannot have been less than three and four millions of Tacls. The silver mines of China are said not to be very productive, and it is probable that the greater scarcity of silver in the country, and its consequent high price first called the attention of Chinese statesmen to the growing evil. About three years ago Heu nae tse's re-organized the Peking Government proposing that as the taste for Opium had become so general as not to be easily suppressed it would be better to legalize its importation and levy a duty on it. This memorial was sent to the provincial Government here, which reported favorably on it, and it was by many supposed that the trade would be openly permitted, and on the strength of this belief the cultivation in India was still more extended. A strong party in the Government however entertained views directly opposite to Heu nae tse's and sent in strong remonstrances to the government, depicting the evils entailed on the nation by the indulging in the vice of smoking as most alarming, and recommending the strongest measures for its total suppression. The provincial Government consequently received orders to proceed with vigour against the Opium trade, and it was at the end of the year 1838 suspended during a few months. It soon reopened, and the quantity delivered in the following was larger than in any former year, nor was the trade altogether checked until December last. Meanwhile the party favorable to the total suppression of the introduction of Opium meant to have acted with considerable activity, and the attention of the Government was kept alive and though, as we have said, the deliveries in the year before last, were very considerable, yet interruptions occurred frequently, and deliveries at Lintin became so difficult to effect, that people found it advantageous to risk the taking of Opium to Whampoa. This new mode of disposing of the drug soon became general and upwards of forty boats were employed in it, nor were they for many months interrupted, though carrying on their trade in the most open and daring manner. The trade to the coast of China also increased, and instead of four or five vessels which before had been regularly employed in it, their number now exceeded twenty. This activity on the part of the Opium-dealers at last excited the Government to greater exertion and on a memorial from Hwang Tsoo tsze to the Imperial Government, recommending that the punishment of death be awarded to all dealers and smokers, being promulged, this was sent to all the Viceroys and high officers of state to report upon. A few of these reports we have seen, and published two, one from Keshen, Viceroy of Pechelee and the other from Chow teen-tsoo, superintendent general of the transport of grain. These documents and we believe that all the reports agree in substance, though they consider the punishment of death for smoking as too severe, all recommended that dealers in it should be put to death, and that rather than suffer the continuance of the trade all intercourse with foreigners should be abandoned. The last named of these officers also recommended the putting to death some ones of foreigners.

In September last police were sent to the village of Whampoa to search the houses for Opium—none was found but the people resisted, and in the scuffle some mandarins were killed or wounded. The greater part of the male population fled and the Opium-trade at Whampoa was for a time totally interrupted, though it subsequently revived somewhat. The restrictive measures of the Government became from this time more severe, and but few deliveries took place outside, and from the moment that a seizure was made in Canton of some Opium when about to be conveyed into one of the foreign factories' on the 3d December last, we may date its almost total suspension. In consequence of this seizure the whole foreign trade was stopped—the Hong merchants threatened to demolish the house of Mr. Innes, into which the Opium seized was to have been conveyed, if Mr. Innes did not leave Canton. Though this threat was subsequently relinquished, Mr. Innes a few days after left Canton, but the general trade did not open until the 1st of January, and then but partially. Hong-merchants refusing to secure any ships, unless their owners gave a bond rendering themselves liable to a heavy penalty, in case Opium were found on board their ships. This, foreign merchants would not give, and the affair was ultimately arranged, to carry on, for this season, the trade as before, Captain and consignee merely signing an assurance that there was no Opium on board their ships. At about the same time that the seizure of Opium was made in Canton news arrived of junks laden with Opium having been seized in Tien-shan and several other places to the northward, and in consequence of denunciations of the people captured in them a number of Opium dealers both in Macao and Canton were arrested, and the remainder fled and hid themselves. The consternation was general, and to increase this, the local Government attempted the execution of an Opium-dealer in front of the factories on the 12th December last. The executioners were interrupted by the foreigners, and the culprit taken away and immediately after executed in one of the back streets. An immense mob had meanwhile collected and on attempting to drive the people back from the houses, they took up stones and commenced a serious attack upon the factories, into which the foreigners were obliged to take refuge. During about five hours the mob were masters of the square and the lives and property of foreigners were in imminent danger, until at last a strong police force appeared and cleared the place. About this time the government threatened domiciliary visits to search for Opium; this caused great excitement among the people, and they met in temples to discuss the matter. To stay this fermentation the Magistrates issued soothing proclamations, and the searching of the houses was abandoned.

Some time after the Governor published a proclamation threatening both dealers and smokers with death and numerous were the edicts and exhortations to the people to give over smoking. Late in January we heard of an Imperial Commissioner being on his way to Canton, armed with the most unlimited powers, to suppress the Opium-trade, and in consequence of his expected arrival the Governor Tang issued a proclamation to foreigners, ordering them to send away their Opium-ships immediately, failing which all intercourse was to be cut off for ever. At the same time the most active measures to prevent the importation of Opium were taken, not only at Lintin or Hong-kong, but on the coasts also, so that no deliveries whatever could be effected, and it became evident that the Chinese were earnestly bent on the effectual suppression of the trade. In this state of affairs, the foreign community were taken by surprise on the afternoon (February 26th) on hearing that a police force had appeared in the square, and that a man had been strangled there, before any body knew for what purpose they had come. This unfortunate man was one of those concerned in the riot at Whampoa, mentioned above. At last on the 10th March the Commissioner arrived, and it was said that he had shewn great clemency to natives addicted to smoking, and that he had ordered such as were in prison here for it, to be liberated immediately. He then sent off clemency, and by strictly forbidding his followers to live at the expence of the people he gained golden opinions from the native population and on the 17th of last Month published the following edicts:

EDICT

From the Imperial Commissioner to Foreigners of all nations.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner of the Celestial Court, a Director of the Board of War, and Governor of Hookwang, issues his commands to the foreigners of every nation, requiring of all full acquaintance with the tenor thereof.

It is known that the foreign vessels, which come for a reciprocal trade to Kwangtung, have derived from that trade very large profits. This is evidenced by the facts—that, whereas the vessels annually resorting hither were formerly reckoned hardly by tens, their number has of late years amounted to a hundred and several times ten: and that whatever commodities they may have brought, none have failed to find a full consumption; whatever they may have sought to purchase, never have they been unable readily to do so. Let them but ask themselves whether between heaven and earth, any place affording so advantageous a commercial mart is elsewhere to be found. It is because our Great Emperors, in their universal benevolence, have granted you commercial privileges, that you have been favored with these advantages. Let our ports once be closed against you, and for what profits can your several nations any longer look? Yet more,—our teas and our rhubarb (seeing that, should you forfeit them, you therein lose the means of preserving life,—are without stint or grudge granted to you for exportation year by year, beyond the seas. Favors never have been greater!

Are you grateful for these favors? You must then fear the laws, and in seeking profit for yourselves, must not do hurt to others. Why do you bring to our land the opium, which in your own lands is not made use of, to the defrauding men of their property, and causing injury to their lives? I find that with this thing you have seduced and deluded the people of China for tens of years past: and countless are the unjust hoards that you have thus acquired. Such conduct rouses indignation in every human heart, and is utterly inexcusable in the eye of Celestial Reason.

The prohibitions formerly enacted by the Celestial Court against opium were comparatively lax, and it was yet possible to smuggle the drug into the various ports. Of this the great Emperor having now heard, his wrath has been fearfully aroused, nor will it rest till the evil be utterly extirpated. Whoever among the people of this inner land deal in opium, or establish houses for the smoking of it shall be instantly visited with the extreme penalty of the laws; and it is in contemplation to render capital also the crime of smoking the drug.

Having come into the territory of the Celestial Court, you should pay obedience to its laws and statutes, equally with the natives of the land. I, the High Commissioner having my home in the maritime province of Fuhkeen, and consequently am by no means unacquainted with all the arts and shifts of the outer foreigners, for this reason, have been honored by the Great Emperor with the full powers and privileges of a High Imperial Commissioner, who, having repeatedly performed meritorious services, is sent to settle the affairs of the outer frontier.

Should I search closely into the offences of these foreigners in forcing for a number of years the sale of opium, they would be found already beyond the bounds of indulgence. But, reflecting that they are men from distant lands, and that they have not before been aware that the prohibition of opium is so severe, I cannot here, in the present plain enforcement of the laws and re-strictions, to cut them off without instructive monition.

I find that on board the warehousing vessels which you now have lying at anchor in the Lintin and other islands, there are stored up several tens ten thousand chests of opium, which it is your purpose and desire illicitly to dispose of by sale. You do not consider, however the present severity of the measures in operation for seizure of it at the ports. Where will you again find any that will dare to give it secret? And similar measures for the seizure of it are in operation also in every province. Where else then will you yet find opportunity of disposing of it? At the present time the dealings in opium are brought utterly to a stand, and all men are convinced that it is a nauseous poison. Why will you be at the pains then of having it up on board your foreign store ships, and of keeping them long anchored on the face of the open sea—not only pending to no purpose your Lunar and your wealth, but exposed also to unforeseen changes from storms or from fire.

I proceed to issue my commands. When these commands reach the said foreign merchants, let them with all haste pay obedience thereto. Let them deliver up to government every particle of the opium on board their store-ships. Let it be ascertained by the Hong merchants, who are the parties so delivering it up, and what number of chests, or also what total quantity in cattie and taels, is delivered up under each name. Let these particulars be brought together in a clear tabular form, and be presented to government, in order that the opium may all be received in plain conformity thereto, that it may be immediately destroyed, and that thus the evil may be entirely extirpated. There must not be the smallest atom concealed or withheld.

At the same time let these foreigners give a bond, written jointly in the foreign and Chinese languages, making a declaration to this effect: 'That their vessels which shall hereafter resort hither will never again dare to bring opium with them; and that should any be brought, as soon as discovery shall be made of it, the goods shall be forfeited to government, and the parties shall suffer the extreme penalties of the law, and that such punishment will be willingly submitted to.'

I have heard that you foreigners are used to attach great importance to the word 'good faith.' If then you, will really do as I, the High Commissioner, have commanded,—will deliver up every particle of the opium that is already here and will stay altogether in future intreduction—as this will prove also that you are capable of feeling contrition for your offences, and of entertaining a salutary dread of punishment, the past may yet be left unnoticed. I the High Commissioner, will in that case, in conjunction with the Governor and Lieut. Governor, address the throne, imploring the Great Emperor to vouchsafe extraordinary favor, and not alone to remit the punishment of your past errors, but also—as we will further request—to devise some mode of bestowing on you such especial rewards, as an encouragement of the spirit of contrition and wholesome dread thus manifested by you. After this, you will continue to enjoy the advantages of commercial intercourse; and as you will not lose the character of being 'good foreigners,' and will be enabled to acquire profits and get wealth by an honest trade, will you not indeed stand in a most honorable position?

If however, you obstinately adhere to your folly and refuse to awake—if you think to make up a sale covering over your illicit dealings,—or to set up as a pretext that the Opium is brought by foreign women, and that the foreign merchants have nothing to do with it,—or to pretend craftily that you will carry it back to your countries, or will throw into the sea or—to take occasion to go to other provinces in search of a door of consumption,—or to stifle enquiry by delivering up only one or two tenths of the whole quantity in any of these cases, it will be evident that you retain a spirit of contumacy and disobedience, that you uphold vice and will not reform. Then, though it is the maxim of the Celestial Court to treat with kindness men from afar, yet as it cannot suffer them to indulge in scornful and contemptuous trifling with it, it will become necessary to include you also in the severe course of punishment prescribed by the new law.

On this occasion, I, the high Commissioner, having come from the Capital, have personally received the sacred Commands, that wherever a law exists, it is to be fully enforced. And as I have brought these full powers and privileges, enabling me to perform whatever seems to me right,—powers with which those ordinarily given for enquiring and acting in regard to other matters, are by no means comparable,—so long as the opium traffic remains unexterminated, so long will I delay my return. I swear that I will progress with this matter from its beginning to its ending, and that not a thought of stopping half way shall for a moment be indulged.

Furthermore, observing the present condition of the popular mind, I find no universal spirit of indignation aroused, that should you foreigners remain dead to a sense of contrition and amendment, and continue to make gain your sole object, there will not only be arrayed against you the martial terrors and powerful energies of our naval and military forces; it will be but necessary to call on the able-bodied of the people [the militia or youn conscripts], and these alone will be more than adequate to the placing all your lives within my power. Besides, either by the temporary stoppage of your trade, or by the permanent closing of the ports against you, what difficulty can there be in effectually cutting off your intercourse? Our central empire, comprising a territory of many thousands of miles, and possessing in rich produce within itself the means of the ground, has no benefit to derive from the productions of your foreign commodities, and you may therefore well fear, that from the moment such measures are taken, the livelihood of your several nations must come to an end. You, who have travelled so far to conduct your commercial business, how is it that you are not yet alive to the great difference between the condition of vigorous exertion and that of easy repose—the wide distance between the power of the few and the power of the many?

As to these crafty foreigners, who, residing in the foreign factories, have been in the habit of dealing in opium, I, the high commissioner, have early been provided with a list of them by name. At the same time those good foreigners who have not sold must opium also not fail to be distinguished. Such of them as will point out their depraved fellow-foreigners, will compel them to deliver up their opium, and will step forth among the foremost to give the required bonds,—these shall be regarded as the good foreigners. And I, the high commissioner, will at once for their encouragement reward them liberally. It rests with yourselves alone to choose whether you will have weal or woe, honor or disgrace.

I am now about to command the Hong merchants to proceed to your factories, to instruct and admonish you. A term of three days is prescribed for an answer to be sent in reply to me. And at the same time let your duly attested and faithful bonds be given, waiting for me in conjunction with the Governor and the Lieut Governor to appoint a time for the opium to be delivered up. Do not indulge to idle expectations, or seek to postpone matters, deferring to repent until its too late to render it ineffectual.—A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd month, 4th day,

(True Translation,) J. ROB. MORRISON.

Chinese Secretary and Interpreter to the Superintendents of British Trade in China.

EDICT

From the Imperial Commissioner to the Hong merchants.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner, director of the Board of War, and Governor of Hookwang, issues his commands to the Hong merchants, requiring of them full acquaintance with the tenor thereof.

The commercial intercourse subsisting in Kwangtung between the Chinese and foreigners has continued for a period of more than three hundred years. What was there to render impossible a free commercial interchange of goods between these parties themselves? Nothing. It was then the desire of preventing an illicit intercourse, and of guarding against contraband commodities that rendered necessary the establishment of a class of Hong merchants.

Respectfully searching, I find, under date the 21st year of Keaking (1816), an imperial edict,—"rendering the Hong merchants responsible for the "ascertainment of the question, whether or not any "foreign vessel imports opium; and, in case of her "so doing, for the rejection of all her cargo, for the "refusal to let her trade, and for the driving of her "back to her country." Respect and obedience being paid hereto, this edict was duly recorded. And I find, that, on each occasion of a foreign vessel entering the port, the said Hong merchants have always given bonds that she brought no opium with her.

In consequence of such bonds, vessels have been allowed to enter the port and break bulk, nor has any vessel ever been sent back. And even now, while the opium is pervading and filling with its poisonous influence the whole empire, the said Hong merchants still continue indiscriminately to give such bonds, declaring that the ships that resort hither have brought none of it. Are they not indeed dreaming, and snoring in their dreams?

If they say that the opium which they bring is discharged beforehand and left on board the warehousing vessels at Lintin, and that the bonds given as to their bringing none, have reference to the vessels as entering the port, what is this but to shut the ears whilst the jingling bell is being stolen?—to provide for themselves a ground of excuse? The feelings that prompt such conduct will still less bear scrutiny. It is as if a man, to guard his house at night, should appoint a watchman, and that nevertheless his property should be boarded up and carried away, while yet the watchman should declare that there had been no theft. If this would not be regarded as combination in the theft, as what then would it be regarded?

Moreover, the foreign factories are built by the said Hong merchants, and by them are rented to the foreigners as residences; the hong-men and all the working people in the factories are hired by the same merchants; and the 'Macheen' (or outside shopmen) are in their employ; the neighboring shroff shops too are those with which the Hong merchants have dealings. Yet for more than ten years past, there has not been a shroff shop that has not given bills, nor a 'Macheen' that has not had transactions with the opium-preparers, nor a hongman or other workman that has not had connexions with the fast-boats. There have been besides the writers' houses (or broker's shops) for preparing letters; and brokers, for carrying the orders, would pass in and out of the foreign residences, day and night, without ever being questioned by any one. The Shroffs' and Hong merchant's coolies, and carriers, of all grades, would in the day-time openly go into the factories, and would at night afford escort down to the boats. Can the Hong merchants aver that they have heard and seen nothing of all this? Or, as they have agreed to conceal it and bring no part of it to light, will any one believe them when they assert that they have had no secret share in the matter?

I have heard, that formerly, when the foreigners came to the factories, they would go in full dress, with swords by their sides, to wait upon the several Hong merchants, and would often meet with a denial, nor would they be seen or have their visits returned, until after a second visit. But of late years there have been those who will sue to the foreigners for patronage, and will even pass beyond the custom houses or go to Macao to meet them. And so far has this proceeded, that (a party in) the Tungyu Hong gave a sedan chair to the chief supercargo Baynes, whereupon the same chief supercargo turned round, and would not suffer the Hong merchants to enter his factory in chairs. Many have been the instances of this misconduct and subversion of what is right and fitting. What sense of shame indeed does there yet remain? Though it be true that this has arisen from the conduct of probationary Hong merchants, who have shown the example of such artful demeanor, and that the original merchants, men of property and family, would never have descended to this stage of degradation: yet all now are equally involved in the stench of it, and truly I burn with shame for you.

With you there seems to be no other consideration than that of growing rich, and being left to carry on your trade; and you seem to regard the mine of all your profits as lying in the attaching of foreigners to you. You leave no room for the consideration that the profits enjoyed by foreigners are those granted by the Celestial Court; and that if some day they should irritate the sacred wrath to the cutting off of their trade and closing of the custom-houses, not a mite of profit will there be for any of those nations to look for: and what then will there be for you?

They, regardless of the rich favors wherewith they are imbued by the Court, take depraved natives for their bosom friends. In the public offices of the inner land, there is not a movement or a pause, but the foreigners are fully informed of it. But if any question is put to the Hong merchants regarding foreign affairs, they turn about for ways in which to gloss over and conceal the facts, nor will they utter the truth. Thus it is in regard to the exportation of the pure silver beyond sea, a thing so very strictly prohibited. Did the foreigners really barter goods for goods, what silver would there be for them to carry away? But more than this, the Hong merchants once represented, that each year, in addition to the interchange of commodities by barter, the foreigners require always to bring into the inner land foreign money to the amount of four or five millions of dollars. Were this really the case, how comes it that of late years the foreign Ships have brought into the port no new foreign money, and that the foreign silver existing in the country has daily been diminishing in quantity? And how happens it, that among the Hong merchants there have been bankrupts whose debts to foreigners have exceeded a million of money? It is clear that these four words, 'goods bartered for goods,' are totally and altogether false.

There is one thing yet more extraordinary. These Hong Merchants, sheltering themselves under a memorial of a former Superintendent of Customs, which requested temporarily as a trial, that three tenths of any surplus foreign money should be allowed to be taken away,—have acted as though this request had passed into an established law, and have yearly, under cover of this, solicited permission to embark money. They have had numerous boxes made, such as are employed for the remission of revenue. And they have even represented for the foreigners, that, in such a year, a foreigner left so much money in such and such hands, and that now he has entrusted such and such a person to convey it home for him: and they have secretly concerted with the clerks of the custom-house to put this upon the records.—Thus, while on the one hand the Hong merchants give these bonds, the silver, on the other hand, is exported,—their words and deeds are contrary to one to another, and this is passed quietly over without surprise. And when the Imperial pleasure has been expressed, that in quiry should be made, they with one simple address glozed over and set at rest the whole matter.

With regard too to foreigners, such as Jardine and others, who have been in the habit of selling opium,—all of them most artful and crafty men,—when the imperial pleasure was expressed, two years ago, that their conduct should be inquired into, and that they should be driven forth, the said Hong merchants still strenuously defended them. Such language as this was used: 'that whn it could be discovered that there had been any concert in selling opium, any money taken, or orders given, punishment would then be willingly submitted to.' Such a bond is yet to be found among the archives! Let them ask themselves, whether, according to this bond, punishment should, or should not, be inflicted?

* Again, the opium on board Innes' vessel was seized within the river, showing that the bonds, given for vessels that have entered the port have been no less unworthy of confidence.

Last winter, seven passage boats, on the reiterated representations of these merchants, newly received permission to run, and already smuggling of goods, and importation of gunpowder, have been the consequence. If you say these things were without your knowledge, of what use then are you? If they took place with your knowledge, death is too light a punishment for you.

It is computed that the loss of the silver of China, during a period of several years past, by exportation beyond sea, has been not less than some hundreds of millions. The Imperial commands have been repeatedly received, in reference to the importation of opium and exportation of pure silver, reproving all the officers of every degree, in the most severe terms, yet these Hong merchants have continued in the same course of filthy and disgraceful conduct, to the great indignation and gnashing of teeth of every one. I, the high commissioner, in obeying the imperial commands, in accordance with which I have come to Canton, shall first punish the depraved natives. And it is by no means certain that these Hong merchants will not be within the number.

I proceed to command that investigation be made. Upon my commands reaching the said Hong Merchants, let them immediately state clearly the truth, that matters may be thoroughly arranged in consistence with the laws. The utter annihilation of the opium trade being now my first object, I have given commands to the foreigners, to deliver up to government all the myriads of chests of opium which they have on board their warehousing vessels. And I have also called on them to subscribe a bond, in Chinese and in the foreign languages jointly, declaring that henceforth they will never venture to bring opium, and that if any should again be brought, upon discovery thereof, the parties concerned shall immediately suffer execution of the laws, and the property shall be confiscated to government. These commands are now given to the Hong merchants; that they may convey them to the foreign factories and plainly make them known. It is requisite that they should acquire an earnest severity of deportment, that the energetic character of the commands may be clearly made to appear. They must not continue to exhibit a contumacious disposition or to color over the matter, nor may they again give utterance to any expressions of solicitation. It is imperative on them, to act with energy and loftiness of tone, and to unite in enjoining these commands. Three days are prescribed, within which they must obtain the required bonds, and report in reply hereto. If it be found that this matter cannot at once be arranged by them, it will be apparent, without inquiry, that they are constantly acting in concert with depraved foreigners, and that their minds have a perverted inclination. And I, the high Commissioner, will forthwith solicit the royal death-warrant, and select for execution one or two of the most unworthy of their number, confiscating their property to government, and thus will I show a lucid warning. Say not that you did not receive early notice. A special edict.

Two days after these edicts were received the Hoppo stopped all intercourse with the shipping by the following edict.

To Mr. Wetmore and the other gentlemen of the honble Chamber of Commerce.

A respectful communication.

We beg to call your attention to the enclosed copy of an Edict we have just received from H. E. the Hoppo commanding that, during the present state of affairs, no foreigners be permitted to apply for leave to go down to Macao.

Please circulate this among the residents that all knowing, may obey. It is for this we write and with compliments remain.

The HONG MERCHANTS.

EDICT

Yu, Hoppo &c. &c. proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

Pending the stay of the Commissioner in Canton and while the consequence of his investigations, both to foreigners and natives, are yet uncertain, all foreign residents are forbidden to go down to Macao. I therefore issue this Edict to the Hong merchants. On receipt of it let them instantly communicate to the foreigners its purport for their information and obedience. For the present they must not petition for leave to go down to Macao.

Do not oppose—a special edict. March 19, 1839.

Chinese Interpreter, G. C. C.

In consequence of the receipt of these edicts great excitement prevailed among the foreign community, and the Hong merchants encreased this by the danger threatening them seeming more immediate. They all assembled in Consoo on Tuesday night last, and requested to be met there by a number of the most influential of the foreign merchants whom they entreated, as they had any regard for their, the Hong merchants, lives, that they would lose no time in giving a reply to H. E. Any longer delay, they said, would cause two of them to be executed on the day following. Harrassed as these poor Hong merchants have been, first, with the different rumours that preceded and followed the commissioner's arrival, next with his threats and their frequent attendance upon the commissioner, they appear to have considered their situation as really very dangerous, and to have feared that the Yumchuy would carry his threats against them into effect. It is impossible to say whether these were meant to be acted upon, but on the following day (Thursday) a general meeting of the members of the Chamber of Commerce was held, of which the result will be seen in the following letter from the Chairman to the Hong merchants:

General Chamber of Commerce.
Canton, March 21st, 1839.

To the Hong merchants.

Gentlemen,

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of the Proclamation issued to all Foreigners by the Imperial Commissioner. It has been received with profound respect by this Chamber and they have had a meeting this morning of its members, who have directed me, as their Chairmen, to report to you as follows "viz.

"That the Communications made by the Commissioner of the Imperial will are of such vital importance, and involve such complicated interests that a reply to them cannot be given without the greatest deliberation, and that a Committee should now therefore be appointed to take the measures into consideration, and report their opinion to the Chamber at the earliest possible period." That in the mean time a Deputation from this Meeting do wait upon the Hong merchants to state to them what has been done; who may at the same time state, that there is an almost unanimous feeling in the community of the absolute necessity of the foreign residents of Canton having no connexion with the opium traffic."

It affords me great satisfaction to be able to inform you that, agreeably to the Resolution of the Chamber, a Committee has been appointed, who will report in time, to enable a definite reply to be given on or before Wednesday next the 27th instant; and I need not assure you how very anxious the Chamber are, that this important question should be disposed of, and your minds as well as those of all right thinking people be set at ease.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient,
W. S. WETMORE.
Chairman.

From this it will be seen that a committee was appointed to take into consideration the Yumchuy's edict, and report upon it at the earliest opportunity to the Chamber, and a deputation to the Hong merchants to acquaint that body with the result. These, after this communication had been made to them, all went into the city to deliver it to the commissioner, and returned to the Factories at about 10 o'clock at night, stating that the answer from the Chamber had appeared to give entire satisfaction to the commissioner, and that if some Opium were not immediately given up, not only their own lives would be forfeited but those of foreigners generally would be in imminent danger. In the meanwhile, all communication with the coast and even Whampoa had been cut off, numerous mandarin boats being stationed in the river to prevent any foreigners leaving Canton, and the trade had also been stopped. No cargo was allowed to leave, and Grandchops for such vessels as had completed their Cargoes were refused. All foreigners were therefore virtually prisoners here, and completely in the power of the Chinese Government, and their lives and property at their mercy. Under these circumstances after the return of the Hong merchants at 10 o'clock at night another meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce, the result of which was, after a good deal of discussion, and after the Hong merchants had solemnly and individually declared that, if about a thousand chests of Opium were not given up immediately, they would most certainly be executed, to offer to deliver up 1037 chests of Opium to the Government, to be destroyed—this, of course under protest, that the coercive measures of the Chinese Government and the consideration of the danger in which the Hongmerchants were, forced them to this abandonment of property. With this resolution from the foreign merchants the Hong merchants early in the morning yesterday, returned into the City where they saw the Viceroy only; and though as yet (Saturday morning) they have not made any official communication of what result that interview has been, it is understood that it was by no means satisfactory, and that the quantity offered was by the Viceroy declared to be insufficient. No direct answer has been received from the Commissioner, but we hear that demands for the delivery of an additional quantity were made last night.

Matters remain in this uncertain state this morning; nothing has been heard from the Commissioner since Thursday night, but it is evident that the Government is taking every precaution to support their pretensions by force, if necessary. No intercourse, even with Whampoa, is permitted; boats are allowed to come up to Canton, but cannot return thither; the river in front of the factories is filled with mandarin boats and other craft containing troops; we hear of a number of soldiers having been called into the city and to be ready for service at a moment's warning, and yesterday morning a detachment of soldiers landed in front of the Factories and marched into City. If the Chinese Government by the course of intimidation they pursue, partly by means of threatening the lives of the Hong merchants, partly by depriving the foreigners, resident here, of their liberty, obtain possession of the Opium now in the Chinese seas, instead of allowing it to be sold away, it will of course become a question for the Governments of the respective merchants here, in what manner the Chinese are to make good the value of the Opium. Yesterday in the afternoon, a message was sent purporting to be from the Imperial Commissioner inviting Mr. Dent, to go to the City-gate to meet him there. Mr. Dent, we understand, expressed to the Hong merchants his willingness to meet H. E. at the City gate provided H. E. would furnish him with a safe conduct under his own seal, and provided he were not detained above 24 hours. The Hong merchants, after many attempts to change this resolve, were at last obliged to report it to the authorities, and afterwards again, late at night, urged Mr. Dent to promise to go, representing that his refusal would place their lives in imminent danger. This morning early the Qwang-chow-foo and several other officers assembled at the Consoo, attended by all the Hong merchants, two of whom (Howqua and Mowqua) had a chain hung round their necks, and three others were said to be imprisoned in the City; the merchants again went to Mr. Dent's house to urge him to meet the Commissioner, assuring him that, if he did not comply with this summons, two of them were to be executed immediately. The answer being the same as before, the Hong merchants asked for a meeting to be called at the Chamber of Commerce, and there at about one o'clock, met the foreign community, and Howqua again represented that yesterday's refusal of Mr. Dent to comply with the summons had already subjected them to the loss of their buttons, and to the degrading punishment of the chain; that the Commissioner was determined to see Mr. Dent, and that, if they (the Hong merchants) could not prevail on him to go on this very day, two of them would most infallibly lose their lives. Mr. Leslie answered on behalf of Mr. Dent, that if a safe conduct under the seal of the Commissioner were given to Mr. Dent he would immediately go, but on no account willingly without it. Howqua then addressed the Chamber, asking it as a body to express an opinion, as to whether they thought Mr. Dent's conduct just and reasonable, in refusing to go and see the Yum-chae, whence he was certain to return unharmed, thus exposing the merchants to destruction and even to danger of their lives. The meeting answered that it was without their province as a body to judge Mr. Dent's conduct, but that if Howqua wished it, the opinion of every one present individually might be taken. Two the Hong merchants refused, and then requested that Mr. Dent be asked to attend at the Chamber, but being told that under the circumstances in which that gentlemen now found himself, he was resolved not to leave his house on any plea, Howqua proposed that those present at the meeting should proceed with them to Mr. Dent's house, to obtain a definitive answer to give to the officers then waiting for it at the Consoo-house. The meeting accordingly proceeded to Mr. Dent's, who again expressed his willingness to go, but only under the safe conduct from the Commissioner, and the opinion of those present being taken, and they were the majority of foreign residents, was unanimous that without such guarantee it was unadvisable for Mr. Dent to go. This safe conduct the Kwang-chow-foo declared in the Consoo-house it was impossible to obtain, as they dared not even ask the Commissioner for it, but the Kwang-chow-foo gave the assurance, that there was no intention whatever to keep Mr. Dent a prisoner or to maltreat him, and being pressed on this subject, he most solemnly avowed this to be his own conviction, but that he could of course not answer for what the Commissioner would do. Messages were frequently sent from the Consoo-house, but Mr. Dent adhering by his original purpose, the same answer continued to be returned, until at length at about 3 o'clock the Deputy Kwang-chow-foo, the Namhoyyune and another officer went to Mr. Dent's, and there stated that they had the most positive commands that Mr. Dent must on that day see the Yum-chae, and his not going would bring disgrace on them. Mr. Thom, who interpreted for Mr. Dent, then informed these officers, that it being the unanimous opinion of the foreign community that Mr. Dent should not go without the safe conduct, no other answer could be returned; the officers appeared very anxious to gain their end, and even entreated Mr. Dent's compliance, and seeing all their efforts fail, they declared that they would not leave the house except with Mr. Dent, protesting all the while that no evil whatever should befal Mr Dent, and the Deputy Kwang chow-foo even assured that he would himself escort Mr. Dent back that same evening. The answer returned to that being still the same, they at last proposed that as their efforts were unavailing, Mr. Dent's partner, Mr. Inglis, should go to the Consoo house to take this answer to the Kwang-chow-foo; this was accordingly done, and it being there represented to this Gentlemen that it would be desirable that he should state Mr. Dent's resolve to some high officers then waiting in the City, he, accompanied by Messrs. Thom, Slade, and Fearon, went there, and they very received by the judge, treasurer, salt-Commissioner, and grain inspector, the four highest officers of the province with the exception of the Governor and Deputy Governor. The questions asked had reference exclusively to Mr. Dent's refusal to go without the safe conduct, and they solemnly declared that no evil was intended to Mr. Dent, that the Commissioner only required some information from him. After a stay of about two hours, the Gentlemen were allowed to depart, escorted by a number of Police, and Mr. Thom was presented with two pieces of silk and two jars of wine as a mark of favour. At night the tops of the houses and the entrances of the foreign Hongs were guarded by a great number of Hong coolies to prevent Mr. Dent' escape, the merchants being held responsible for his presence in Canton. In this position affairs remain this night (Saturday) for though the Hong merchants have again at midnight urged their request that Mr. Dent should go, nothing has happened materially to affect the question. The refusal of Mr Dent to go without a safeconduct from the Yum-chae himself, and its approval by the foreign residents, are caused by the treatment Mr. Flint suffered, who being invited so visit the Viceroy in the year 1759, was sent to prison to Casa branca and kept there three years.

Sunday 24th March.—This day passed off quietly, owing it is thought to the knowledge the Chinese have of the respect paid the Sunday by Europeans. The following proclamations were received from Macao.

CIRCULAR TO H. B. M. SUBJECTS.

The Chief Superintendent of the trade of British Subjects in China having received information that H. M. subjects are detained against their will in Canton, and having other urgent reasons for the withdrawal of all confidence in the just and moderate disposition of the provincial Government, has now to request that all ships of H. M. subjects at the outer anchorages should proceed forthwith to Hong Kong, and, hoisting their national colors, prepare to resist every act of aggression upon the part of the Chinese Government. In the absence of Captain Blake of H. M. Sloop LARNE, Capt. Parry of the Hercules will make the necessary dispositions for putting the ships in a posture of defence, and in the absence of Capt Parry that duty will devolve on Capt. Wallace of the Mermaid, and the Chief Superintendent in H. M. name requires all British subjects to whom these presents may come, to respect the authority of the persons charged with the duty of providing for the protection of British lives and property. Macao, 22d March, 1839.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintent of the trade of British Subjects in China.

H. M. Sloop LARNE, at anchor in Macao Roads, March 22d 1839.

With reference to my circular of this day's date it is desirable that the ships of H. M. subjects at the outer anchorages should proceed forthwith to Hong Kong placing themselves, in the absence of Captain Blake of H. M. Sloop Larne, under the command of Capt. Parry of the Hercules and in the absence of Capt. Parry, under the guidance of Capt. Wallace of the Mermaid.

Commanders of British ships will make every preparation to resist aggression upon the part of the Chinese Government, but they will be very careful to refrain from provoking attack.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief Superintendent of the trade of British Subjects in China.

Until 6 o'clock this evening nothing had transpired concerning the measures the Yum-chae was likely to take in consequence of Mr. Dent's refusal to go into the city: a little after six Capt. Elliot arrived, in a four-oared boat belonging to H. M. S. Larne, at the Company's Garden. Capt. Elliot had proceeded as far as Howqua's Fort in the Louvra cutter, though some ineffectual attempts had been made to stop his progress. From Howqua's Fort he proceeded in the Larne's boat, and no opposition was made, although several Mandarin boats followed him, watching his motions. Capt. Elliot's arrival was immediately generally known, the British flag was hoisted, and Capt. Elliot, accompanied by a great number of the foreign residents, proceeded without loss of time to Mr. Dent's to take that gentleman under his protection, and walked with him to the Hall of the Superintendents, where he still remains. On Capt. Elliot's arrival in the Hall, where all the foreigners present in Canton had assembled, he read to the meeting the following proclamation:

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Macao, 23rd March, 18 9.

The considerations that have moved the Undersigned to give public notice to all Her Majesty's Subjects that he is without confidence in the justice and moderation of the provincial government, are—

The dangerous, unprecedented, and unexplained circumstance of a public execution before the Factories at Canton, to the imminent hazard of life and property, and total disregard of the honor and dignity of his own and the other Western governments whose flags were recently flying in that square; the unusual assemblage of troops, vessels of war, fire-ships, and other menacing preparations; the communication, by the command of the provincial government, that in the present posture of affairs the foreigners were no longer to seek for passports to leave Canton (according to the genius of our own countries, and the principles of reason, if not an act of declared war, at least its immediate and inevitable preliminary); and lastly, the threatening language of the High Commissioner and provincial authorities, of the most general application, and dark and violent character.

Holding it, therefore, impossible to maintain continued peaceful intercourse with safety, honor, or advantage, till definite and satisfactory explanations have passed in all these particulars, both as respects the past and the future, the undersigned has now to give further notice that he shall forthwith demand passports for all such of Her Majesty's subjects as may think fit to proceed outside, within the space of ten days from the date that his application reaches the government; such date hereafter to be made known.

And he has to counsel and enjoin all Her Majesty's subjects in urgent terms to make immediate preparations for moving their property on board the ships "Reliance," "Orwell" and "George the 4th" or other British vessels at Whampoa, to be conveyed to Macao; forwarding him, without delay, a sealed declaration and list of all actual claims against Chinese subjects, together with an estimate of all loss or damage to be suffered by reason of these proceedings of the Chinese government.

And he has further to give notice, that the Portuguese government of this settlement has already pledged itself to afford Her Majesty's Subjects resident here, every protection in its power so long as they shall be pursuing no course of traffic within the limits of the settlement at variance with the laws of this empire. And he has most especially to warn Her Majesty's Subjects that such strong measures as it may be necessary to adopt on the part of Her Majesty's government, without further notice than the present, cannot be prejudiced by their continued residence in Canton (beyond the period now fixed), upon their own responsibility, or without further guarantees from the Undersigned.

And he has further to give notice that if the passports shall be refused for more than three days, from the date that his application shall reach the provincial government, he will be driven to the conclusion that it is their purpose to detain all Her Majesty's Subjects as hostages; and to endeavour to intimidate them into unsuitable concessions and terms, by the restraint of their persons, or by violence upon their lives or property, or by the death of native merchants in immediate connexion with them, both by ties of friendship and of interest; or by the like treatment of their native servants.

The Undersigned, in conclusion, most respectfully submits these observations to the attention of all the foreigners in China; And the respective Governments closely united by a community of feeling and interests, not only in their own quarters of the Globe, but most especially in this peculiar country, he feels that he is performing an act of duty in offering them every humble assistance in his power on this and all similar occasions, when they may be of opinion, that he can be useful to them.

Given under my hand and seal of Office at Macao, this twenty third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty nine.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subject in China.

This was received by loud and hearty cheers, and every one seemed glad of Capt. Elliot's arrival, and to think that affairs were likely now to take a better turn, particularly as that officer's presence served as a rallying point, which had hitherto been wanting.

Howqua took Capt. Elliot's letter for the Viceroy, and up to a late hour this night no answer has been received. Immediately after Capt. Elliot's arrival notice was given to all native servants to quit, and they accordingly left the Hongs without loss of time. The mob which had collected in front, attracted by the news of Capt. Elliot's presence was dispersed by a strong police force, which had been partly on the spot all day, but was now reinforced, and every thing was soon reduced to perfect order and quiet. The river near the factories was cleared of all the boats usually there, and in lieu of them three rows of boats filled with police and soldiers stationed there, completely hemming us in and rendering escape altogether impossible. The streets leading into the square from the town were blocked up, and no native allowed to remain or to go into any one of the foreign factories. The strongest guard was of course before the Company's hall to prevent Mr. Dent's escape, and the men on duty there, coolies belonging to the Hong merchants, were armed with pikes and shields, which they held ready for use whenever the door of the English Hong was opened to admit people or allow them to get out. Howqua and Mowqua, who had made their appearance in the Superintendents hall, not ten minutes after Capt Elliot's arrival, returned to the hall several times during the night, but without any thing being known as to the nature of their negotiations. The inhabitants of the British hong organized themselves into a night watch consisting of one to keep the gate, and two others to patrole—being relieved every two hours.

Monday.—This day has passed over very quietly—the Chinese have completed their police regulations, and not a native is to be seen in front of our houses down to the river, except such as are on duty. Howqua and other Hong merchants are repeatedly going to see the Superintendent, but nothing has transpired. In the afternoon a chop from the Kwang chow foo was said to have been received by Capt. Elliot. This night four instead of three gentlemen formed the watch, one taking his post in the Superintendent's verandah. The night passed over quietly, with the exception of one gentleman being mistaken by the police for Mr. Dent, and stopped—the mistake was immediately rectified. In the afternoon Messrs. Thom and Fearon were asked by the Hong merchants to go to the Consoo house, and when there, to go into the City, the Yum chae being anxious to see them; Capt. Elliot however, we are told, did not wish them to go.

Tuesday.—Every thing quiet in the morning, but the guard near the houses has been reinforced and the coolies are busy building sheds to live under. The Hong-merchants came several times, and at about 1 o'clock brought two Chops said to be from the Viceroy. Their nature not known but it was said that things were going on favorably. In the evening some reports prevailed of a boat or two from Whampoa having attempted to force her way to Canton, which turned out a false alarm. This evening the pleasure boats were removed from in front of the British hong and carried to the middle of the square. The Hong merchants, in setting the watch of their coolies for the night, gave similar directions that they should be watchful, and not sleep at their posts, as they had been seen to do by the mandarins on a previous night, for which their masters had been reproved. The night passed over very quietly, and it is said that Lin had incognito himself inspected the preparations. The following proclamation was this day issued: a translation of which was kindly handed us by Mr. Fearon.

PROCLAMATION FROM THE KINCHAE TO THE FOREIGNERS OF ALL NATIONS.

Lin, a High Officer of the Celestial Empire, specially appointed by His Imperial Majesty to put down the Opium trade, hereby issues his commands to the Foreigners of all nations under the form of four specific reasons, why they should make haste and deliver up their Opium.

First. Ye ought to make a speedy delivery thereof, because the dictates of Heavenly reason so require it.

I have examined and found, that during the last several tens of years, by means of your destructive Opium poison, ye have duped our people out of I know not how many myriads of myriads of money. While ye, selfseeking after private advantage, have directed your minds to the sole object of gain, our people have been losing their properties, and compromising their lives! The reason of Heaven loves to make a just return! and think you that there will be no retribution? Even now, if you make speedy delivery of your Opium, possibly by your repentance ye may yet avert God's wrath and curse, but if you will not, then your wickedness being so much greater, so much heavier calamities will overtake you in the end! Oh! ye foreigners! ye are distant from your native lands many tens of thousands of miles! while on ship board whether coming or going ye must cross a vast and trackless ocean! On its bosom ye are exposed to God's visitation in the shape of the thunderbolt, and the raging storm, ye run the hazard of being swallowed up by the monsters of the deep! Every instant of your lives is passed on the brink of danger, and under such circumstances, dread ye not the judgment of High Heaven? Now the grand and majestic virtue of our Great Emperor is quite the same as that of Imperial Heaven, and our sovereign Lord and Master anxiously wishing to cut off the Opium Trade for ever, affords a manifest proof that such is no less the Holy Will of Heaven itself! It is then a traffic that Heaven frowns upon with disgust, and where is the wretch that may oppose its stern decree? Were proof of this required, I might adduce the instance of the English Tarpan Roberts who openly set instance of the English Tarpan Roberts who openly set at nought our laws! this man endeavored to obtain possession of Macao by violence, and on that spot Death overtook him! Lord Napier in the 14th year of Taoukwang (1834) illegally forced his way thro' the Bogue, but he had no sooner done so than he was stricken with grief and dismay, and soon afterward expired! Moreover, I have before me facts which are recorded in very year also! These are facts which are recorded in the newspapers of every country, and manifest distinctness. The Will of Heaven may not be opposed! and oh ye foreigners! do ye still refuse to fear and tremble thereat?

Secondly. Ye ought to make speedy delivery of your Opium, in conformity with the laws of the land.

I have heard it said that Opium is not permitted to be smoked in your own countries, but on the other hand is forbid by the sternest laws, the smoker of it being doomed to death! this shows clearly that you know Opium to be a life-destroying drug. Now if you forbid your own people to smoke it, and yet do not forbid them to sell it to us that it may be smoked, this is not in conformity with the golden rule of "doing as ye would be done by:" Again, if your laws prohibit its being sold, and ye yet persist in clandestinely selling it, then are ye sporting and trifling with the laws of your own country! In addition to all this, the laws of our Empire look upon the vender of Opium, as guilty of a graver crime than he who merely smokes it, and we visit his offence accordingly with a much heavier punishment! Now as respects you foreigners, although ye drew your first breath in distant countries, nevertheless your riches and your sustenance are derived from our Dominions, and your ever ye dwell in this our Central land many years of your lives and pass but few years of your lives at home; the food that ye consume every day, as well as the stores of wealth which ye amass, are neither more nor less than the goodness of our Emperor, of which ye have a much larger share than falls to the lot of the natives of the country themselves; and how then shall it be supposed for a moment, that ye alone of all men, are not to stand in awe of the supreme majesty of our laws? Altho' Opium was prohibited in former times, yet the penalty attached to its infringement of the prohibitions, involved not any punishment of extraordinary severity, this was caused by the mild nature of the laws by which these nations are governed, and therefore you were allowed to continue your clandestine traffic, without any very minute investigation being made into your conduct. Now however our Holy Emperor boils with indignation, and burns with desire no put an end to it, so it is, that henceforward not only is the native who sells it but also he who does no more than smoke it, on the same principle doomed to die! Pause and reflect! were ye not to bring this Opium to our shores, oh! ye foreigners! how should the natives of our land be able to traffic in it, where should they get it to smoke! the blood of our own people which has been spilt by reason of the Opium traffic, lies consequently at your door! why then should we thus deal out Death to our own subjects and you alone be exempt from the direful doom! I, the High Commissioner, looking up to my Imperial master, and pondering in my breast his own strong desire to benefit and cherish the men from afar, nevertheless graciously spare you your lives, I ask for nothing more than that you give up all the Opium in your possession, and that you write out a bond to the following effect, that you will henceforth and for ever never more deal in Opium, or if you dare to bring any more Opium hither, you are willing that the cargo be confiscated, and the people put to death. This is graciously pardoning what is past, and taking proper precautions against the future; why any longer cherish a foolish indiscriminate fondness! Still further, without enquiring into the quantity of Opium which you have sold during a succession of years, the amount of which is absolutely incalculable, let us only speak about that which you brought last year, and disposed of to us clandestinely. Now if were no trifle, hardly equal to the quantity which you have now stored up in your receiving ships; this quantity then ye must deliver up to the last fraction so as to ensure the mutual benefit of all parties; what prospect is there of our ever again permitting you by means of your noxious drug, to obtain disconsolately the wealth of our poor deluded people, and entice them to commit an act by which their lives are forfeited to the laws of their country! I have with the most profound respect examined the Code of this great Tartar-Chinese Dynasty (i. e. the Ta Tsing Leuh lo) and I find it writ therein, that if a Chinese or a foreigner violate the laws, he shall be judged and condemned by one same statute. Now on previous occasions we have doomed foreigners to death, as in the case of a foreigner having killed a native, he must pay the penalty of his own life, as the forfeit of his crime, &c., &c., instances of which are all duly recorded. Now as to effect, if you slay a man, it is nothing more than the crime of a moment, and still the law requires you to pay with your own life, the life you have taken and in the case of him who sells Opium, this is done with direct intent to dupe people out of their properties, and deprive them of their lives. Moreover, the properties that you thus fraudulently get possession of, and the lives that you thus take away, are not those of a single individual nor of a single family, and might a crime of this magnitude to be punished with death or not? and yet will ye not speedily deliver up your Opium in order to save your lives! oh! ye foreigners! reflect on this deeply—give heed thereunto!

Thirdly. You ought to make a speedy delivery of your Opium because of the common feelings of mankind.

Ye who come to Canton to trade, earn by this market a profit of three hundred per cent (or reap profit from three different sources). Every article of merchandize which you bring, no matter wether it be coarse or fine, whole or broken in pieces, there is nothing which does not find a vent here; and as respects the produce of this inner land, be it for eating, for clothing, for using in any way, or for mere sale, there is not an article which we do not permit you to transport to take away with you. Thus not only do you reap the profit of our central land by the goods which you bring, but you gather profit from all countries, by such of our produce as you take away. Suppose then that you did not carry on this traffic in Opium any longer, then the quantum of legal business that you did would be much increased, and so much more consequently would be the three hundred per cent. profit that you should receive; thus might you act with a benefit to before, and your consciences being void of offence, and no evil deeds laying in store for you against a day of retribution, how happy! how joyful might ye feel! But if ye are determined to carry on this Trade in Opium, it must cause your general intercourse with us to be cut off! And I would like to ask of you, where in the wide universe will ye find such an excellent commercial mart as this is! Moreover without laying special stress upon our Tea and Rhubarb, articles without which your very lives would come to an end, and our different kinds of silk, wanting which ye could not carry on your manufactures, there are under the specification of food, white Sugar, Sugar Candy, Cassia and Cassia buds; under head of articles of use, Vermilion Gamboge, Alum, Camphor, &c., &c. Now can your countries possibly do without these articles? And yet the products of our Central land are most productive superabundant, nor have we the slightest occasion for any of your Imports from abroad! If by reason of Opium the port is closed against you, how can it be said that it was not you, who brought the catastrophe upon yourselves! And further, no man now dares to buy Opium, and yet ye keep it stored upon board your receiving ships, where ye may so much rent per month, and so much per year; but why not quickly sell it and get rid of it, and why all this great and useless expense! If they are overtaken by a storm, or if fire lay hold on them, they are capsized and submerged in the waves, or swallowed up amid the destroying blaze! These are all things which may very possibly happen, and what plan so good as to deliver up the Opium and obtain an abundant reward in it's stead!

Fourthly. You ought to deliver up your Opium without loss of time, seeing he force of circumstances requires it.

Ye from afar have crossed a vast ocean and come hither for the purposes of business and to carry on a lawful trade. For this end you must depend entirely on living with the people of the land on terms of friendship and harmony, and fulfilling the duties of your respective stations; thus may ye be able to reap profit, and shun danger. By reason of your unlawful traffic in Opium, you have involved our simple people in guilt and misery; there is not a good or upright man whose heart does not grieve and whose head does not ache at it, especially in reference to those who have been seduced to sell and smoke Opium and have been put to death on that account. More particularly the common country people cherish a feeling anything but friendly,—the rage of the multitude is a thing difficult to be repressed, and this is a circumstance that you ought to look forward to with the deepest anxiety! It is said of you men from afar, that ye are particularly fond of the terms truth and justice. Now our Mandarins are all proclaiming to you and adjuring you by the words of "truth and justice" and on the contrary we find you to possess not the slightest iota of either! Are your hearts tranquil at this? Do you yet give in to the force of circumstances or not? Moreover it is, in it's nature a commodity which ought never to be sold or sell, and now in a time in which it is not permitted to be sold, so what hardship is there, or what regret do you feel in being compelled to part with it? Still further, it is an article which is not consumed in your own country, worse than useless will it be for you to take it back, and if you do not surrender it to be manderins, what can you do with it? keeping it in your hand? So soon as you shall have delivered it up, your consumerce will become more rich, more flourishing than before and wide seaths of politeness heaped upon you to the overflowing. Will not this be great happiness to you indeed?

I, the High Commissioner, as well as the Viceroy and Fooyuen, cannot bear the idea of doing anything harsh or cruel, so I care not about wearying myself with constructing and admonishing you at this great length! Happiness and misery, glory, and disgrace are all in your own hands, nay not that I did not give you early warning thereof!

A special proclamation! to be stuck up before the Foreign Factories.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd moon, 12th day,
Canton, 18th March, 1839.

Wednesday the 27th March.—This morning early Capt. Elliot published the following Circular.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

I, Charles Elliot, Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China, presently forcibly detained by the Provincial Government, together with all the members of my own and the other Public Establishment settled here, without supplies of food, deprived of our servants, and cut off from all intercourse with our respective countries (notwithstanding my own official demand to be set at liberty so that I might act without restraint), have now received the commands of the High Commissioner issued directly to me under the seals of the humble officer to deliver over into his hands all the opium held by the people of my country.

Now I, the said Chief Superintendent, thus constrained and paramount motives affecting the safety of the lives and liberty of all the Foreigners here present in Canton, and by other very weighty causes, do hereby, in the name and on the behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's government enjoin and require all Her Majesty's subjects now present in Canton forthwith to make a surrender to me (or the service of Her said Majesty's government, to be delivered over to the government of China, of all the Opium under their respective control: and to hold the British ships and vessels engaged in the trade of Opium subject to my immediate direction: And to the end that me without delay a sealed list of all the British owned Opium in their respective possession. And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do now, in the most full and unreserved manner, hold myself responsible for, and on the behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's government, to all and each of Her Majesty's subjects surrendering the said British owned Opium into my hands, to be delivered over to the Chinese government. And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do further specially caution all Her Majesty's subjects here present in Canton, owners of or charged with the management of Opium, the property of British subjects, that failing the surrender of the said Opium, into my hands at or before six o'clock this day, I, the said Chief Superintendent, hereby declare Her Majesty's government wholly free of all manner of responsibility or liability in respect of the said British owned Opium.

And it is specially to be understood that the proof of British property and value of all British Opium surrendered to me agreeably to this notice shall be determined upon principles and in a manner hereafter to be defined by Her Majesty Government.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Canton in China this twenty seventh day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty nine at six of the clock in the morning.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China.

True Copy,
EDWARD ELMSLIE.
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

We believe that every British subject has complied with the requisition, and merchants of other nations have also made over to the British Superintendent whatever Opium they held on account of British subjects. The quantity of Opium thus offered to him amounts to 20,283 chests. Nothing worth noticing passed during the day—the servant are still away but any one that likes may go and buy provisions; the Chinese therefore have no wish to starve us into submission. Boats left on Monday last Chinese were not allowed to sell anything to foreigners. The guard of coolies mustered as strong this night as before, and having since yesterday built up their sheds they proceed with more regularity. In the square there are fire partitions in the shed, each containing about 50 men from their respective hongs, the names of which are written on their lanthorns and caps. They relieve each other in patrolling, two Hong-parties being continually moving. At night the square presents a very picturesque appearance, all the men carrying lanthorns, and the different sheds being profusely illuminated as well as the watch boats on the river. Hitherto the people be have very civilly, and there seems to exist no ill feeling against foreigners. In fact the only signs of disquiet we have seen were at the arrival of Capt Elliot's landing; when the Chinese saw foreigners run to meet the Superintendent, they, not knowing the exact cause, though something extraordinary must have happened, and the square was filled with a mob in a moment. Since that time however, the square being kept quite clear of people, we see nothing of them in front, the communication with the city by streets not being stopped, foreigners go there and have an opportunity of witnessing that no ill feeling exists:

Thursday 28th March 8 A.M.—Nothing has yet transpired as to H. E.'s intentions with regard to the Opium. This morning a Chop was received from the Kwang chou foo, which is as follows.

PROCLAMATION TO THE FOREIGNERS OF ALL NATIONS.

Chae, Kwang Chow Foo, &c, &c, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

The following official communication has been received from Lin the Imperial Commissioner, &c., dated the 13th day of the 2nd month.

The foreigners of all nations have presented the following petition.

"The foreign merchants of all nations in Canton have received, with the most profound respect, the Edict of His Excellency, the Imperial Commissioner, and now beg leave respectfully to address His Excellency, having already communicated through the Hong merchants, their intention of doing so with the least possible delay.

"They beg to represent that being now made fully aware of the Imperial commands for the entire abolition of the traffic in opium, the undersigned Foreign merchants hereby pledge themselves one to that in opium, nor to attempt to introduce it into the Chinese empire.

"Having now recorded their solemn pledge, they have only further respectfully to state to His Excellency that as individual foreign merchants they do not possess the power of controlling such extensive and important matters as those treated of in His Excellency's edict; and they trust His Excellency will approve of leaving a final settlement to be arranged through the representatives of their respective nations. Canton, 25th March, 1839."

This coming before me, the Commissioner, it appears by the petition that in obedience to my commands, they dare no longer traffic in Opium. Their reverential obedience is thus manifested. They also earnestly entreat that as my will involved such important and heavy results, I will direct the superintendents and consuls of their several nations to manage the business.

Now as respects the delivering up of the opium, the superintendent Elliot has this day handed up a duly prepared petition to deliver up the opium; and I the Commissioner, in due course commanded that the most minute particulars be examined into and handed up in the form of a clear and distinct report: when he must wait till I fix a day for receiving the opium. This is on record. As respects Elliot, therefore, there is no occasion for my again issuing my instructions; but the consuls must forthwith clearly petition as to who they are, and their names and surnames, so as to enable me to act accordingly, and issue an Edict immediately for their instruction.

This Edict is now issued to the Kwang chow foo for his information and obedience. Let him forthwith send a reply with instructions to the Hong merchants to transmit copies of it to the foreigners of all nations for their information and obedience, and report same. A special Edict.

On receipt of this I, uniting the circumstances, issue this Edict. On receipt of it let the said foreigner merchants, in obedience thereto, forthwith state in a clear petition the names and surnames of the Consuls. Do not oppose. A special Edict.

March 27th, 1839. Chinese Interpreter, C. C. C.

The back doors were blocked up on Saturday last—and admission into the hackhatvers is permitted only through old China street, all the other countries are blocked up and a watch set to guard them. Doctor Parker has hitherto been permitted to go to his Hospital but this day he was refused admittance into Hoglane. The Chinese outside seem to be very anxious for the result, they having been dependent for their living on the foreign trade. In the evening of this day Capt. Elliot issued the following notice to Her Brittanic Majesty's Subjects.

NOTICE.

I Charles Elliot Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China, do require any British Subject or Subjects, in the name of Her Britannic Majesy's Goverment, who may have Opium within his or their Factory to acknowledge the same to him in person within the space of two hours from this date.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.
Canton 6 P. M. 28th March 1839.

It appears as if the Chinese relax in their very great vigilance, and coolies have been ordered by the Hong merchants to bring waters a great quantity of pigs, sheep and poultry were brought to the Consoo house this evening, and it is said they will be made a present of by the Yum chae to the foreign residents, probably as a set off for the opium given up. The patroles of coolies went their rounds as regularly as before.

A letter from the Yum chae was recived this morning addressed to the French, American and Dutch consuls, of which the following is a translation: from the Imperial Commissioner Lin addressed to the Foreign Consuls, Mr. Snow and others, communicated by Choo, the prefect of Canton.

Edict

An official communication has been received from H. E. Lin, Governor of Hoakwang, a great Minister of State and Imperial Commissioner; it is as follows:

"I, a great minister of state, having received the Emperor's decree to repair to Canton to make enquiries and act respecting the business of Opium, did, without delay on my arrival here, give commands to foreigners of every nation to deliver up their Opium, and to give bonds never more to bring it to this country. The said foreign Consul Snow, the Dutch Consul van Basel, and the French Consul van Loffelt must all have seen and heard these commands. Now, on the 27th instant the foreign merchants of every nation presented an address, declaring that hereafter in coming to Canton to trade, they will never more bring any Opium, but intimating that orders should be given for referring business of great importance to the control of their respective Consuls. Of such importance is evidently the delivering up of the Opium. The said foreign merchants being of different nations, and their cargo belonging to different owners, declared it to be difficult to determine what ought to be done, unless the business were referred to some responsible head. It is necessary therefore to enjoin it on all the said foreign Consuls, that they severally take up the business in detail, make clear enquiry in distinct order, and prepare and present complete lists of all the Opium in order that it may be delivered up. Then all will be safe and secure.

"Now the English Superintendent Elliot has sent in his report stating there are in his possession 20,283 Chests which he is ready to deliver up. The great minister of state, have given my perspicuous reply, and have named a period for it to be received. This is on record. The traffic in Opium hitherto carried on by the American and other foreign merchants has not been less than that of the English. Why is it therefore that the said Consuls have not made out a true statement and delivered it up to Government? Truly this conduct has been very remiss.

"Whereas this Edict is despatched to the Kwang chow foo (or prefect of Canton); on the receipt of it let him immediately instruct the Hong merchants to convey the same to all the said Consuls, Snow and others, that they may without delay prepare full statements of all the Opium in the possession of the merchants of their respective countries and deliver up the same and wait till I, a great minister of state, confer with the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and appoint a period for its being examined and received at the same time with that delivered up by the English.

Having received these commands, I do now convey them to all the Consuls, Snow and others, that they may, without delay, prepare full statements of all the Opium in the possession of the merchants of their respective countries and deliver up the same, and wait till the Imperial Commissioner, the great minister of state confers with the Governor and Lieutenant Governor appointing a period for its being examined and received, at the same time with that delivered up by the English.

Let not the smallest quantity be concealed. If the said Consuls conform implicitly to these commands, and make a complete and entire delivery, not only shall the past be forgiven, but it will become necessary to memorialize the Emperor and request that a remuneration may be made. But if there be any procrastination indulged, or the whole be not given up, they will involve themselves in guilt when repentance will be unavailing. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd moon, 14th day,
March 28th, 1839.

From this it will be seen that he requires them also to deliver up a quantity of Opium in the same manner as that offered by the British Superintendent. Strict orders were given this evening to bring all the pleasure boats on shore, they were accordingly amidst tremendous noise brought from the river and all deposited in the middle of the square, where they now are, many of them broken to pieces through the careless manner of handling them. One wherry was taken out of the old Company's hong and added to those in the square. Howqua and Mowqua frequently called on Capt. Elliot during the day and at times remained several hours with him.

Saturday, 30th March.—This morning we hear that no one is allowed to go down China street to market—this new vexatious prohibition is caused, they say, by some foreigners going to the Consoo house last night when the Kwang chow foo and other officers were assembled there, and the Kwangchaofoo is reported to have said that, when they wanted any foreigners to come to them, they did not go, but came when not required; that, therefore they should no longer be permitted to go into the back streets. Another reason for this prohibition may be the desire to force us to accept of the Yum-chae's present of poultry pigs, &c. which we stated were brought to the Consoo-house on Thursday night; these were offered to foreigners in the morning yesterday, but refused we believe, without exception. During the day some Parsee servants were allowed with a passport to go to market. Another cause of this greater strictness may have been the Nanboy-yunce's intended visit to the front of the factories which took place at about two o'clock in the afternoon. He came accompanied by several other mandarins and walked over the square up to the British Hong, looked down the passage which divides the Company's garden from the house and walked away again. The impression seems to be general this day that things are far from being settled; this is however merely guessed at, nothing having transpired as to the nature of Capt Elliot's negotiation with the authorities. We omitted to mention that two buckets of springwater were carried to each house yesterday by order of the Hong merchants.

Sunday, 31st March.—Provisions, such as fowls eggs, mutton and vegetables were offered this morning by the linguists in all the houses, but by many refused unless payment was taken for them, while the Chinese insisted upon giving them as a present. A long document containing the Yum-chae's decision was pasted, this afternoon, on the wall of the Company's garden, of which the following is a translation;

GENERAL REPLIES OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER
published by him in the form of proclamation, before the Factories.

REPLY of the 27th March, to the address of the English Superintendent Elliot surrendering Opium.

"The representation that in obedience to the commands he will deliver up the opium, manifests a respectful sense of duty and understanding of matters. I find that the store-ships at present in these waters are in all twenty-two: and the general amount of the opium they have on board, I am already informed of by my enquiries. The Superintendent can have no difficulty in instantly ascertaining from all the foreigners in the factories the precise amounts, and immediately writing out and presenting a clear statement thereof, to enable me, the commissioner, in conjunction with the governor and lieut. governor, at once to declare a certain period, when we will ourselves go to receive what is delivered up. He must not make an untrue report, lest he bring on himself the offence of concealing, deceiving, and glossing-over.

Beware of this!

REPLY of the 28th March, to the address of the English Superintendent Elliot stating the amount of opium delivered up, 20,283 chests.

"By this address it appears, that the amount of opium has been ascertained, and the needful examination and receipt thereof are respectfully awaited. The real sincerity and faithfulness thus shown are worthy of praise. I find that the amount of 20,283 chests, stated by the said Superintendent, has reference only to such as is brought by the English foreigners. I, the commissioner, have assuredly no suspicion that there is any insincerity behind. And the statement that there is also some at other ports elsewhere I presume also to be the fact. But I have considered, that, before the issuing of the orders for delivering up, it is difficult to feel assured that there has been no opium laid up in the several foreign factories, nor any brought in the various vessels at Whampoa. The question does not now stop with what is in deposit on board the store ships: but at this time, when punishment is not to be inflicted on past offences, it is essential that all the opium, wherever laid up, should be completely surrendered. Assuredly the offences of those who have before laid up a store thereof shall not be visited upon them.

"I have now, in conjunction with the governor and lieut.-governor, determined on the rules to be observed in regard to the delivery of the opium. Besides sending a copy thereof separately to the prefect of Kwang-chow-foo, that he may desire the hong merchants to make known the same, I also require of the said superintendent instantly to ascertain what quantity of opium there may be in the foreign factories, and on the 29th officers shall be deputed to receive the same:—what quantity of opium there may be on board the ships at Whampoa, to examine and receive which officers shall be sent on the 30th:—and what quantity there is on board the twenty two store-ships outside, to examine and receive which I, the commissioner, and the governor, will ourselves go to the Bocca Tigris. Whatever there may be stored up at other ports, since the said superintendent has promised to deliver up the whole, he should of course be held responsible for the delivery of, from time to time as it shall arrive. Should the amount be in excess of the 20,283 chests, it must still be fully surrendered. In so doing the sincerity of the purpose will be shown. And assuredly no blame shall be attached to the inaccuracy of the original report on account of such excess.

"Besides this, the American, French, and Dutch nations have also Consuls in superintendence of affairs, to whom orders have now been given in like manner to pay obedience, and speedily to represent the real amounts; waiting till examination can be made and the whole received. Though the said superintendent be peculiarly charged with the control of the English foreigners; yet having been permitted by the crown, in consequence of the governor's representation, to remain as superintendent in the foreign factories, he should appear abroad his monitions, so that all may speedily deliver up what opium they have, so as to enable us to memorialize the throne conjointly, and request a confirmation of favors from the great emperor, in order to afford encouragement and stimulate exertion. Now is the time for the foreigners of all nations to repent of their faults, and pass over to the side of virtue. This is the day and time for reformation; and if embraced, the enjoyment of unending advantages will be the result. Let none on any account make excuses, or seek delay, so as to incur cause for future repentance.

REPLY of the 30th March, to the English Superintendent Elliot's address requesting that as usual the compradors and servants should be allowed, and that the passage boats should be permitted to run between this, the outer anchorages, and Macao.

"Yesterday the said superintendent, when addressing me in reply, promised for himself that he would certainly deliver up the opium of his nation to the amount 20,283 chests, surrendering the whole quantity as he should bring it into his hands: I therefore answered, in his praise, and at the same time clearly gave directions in regard to the place and times when the delivery should be made. And I besides sent, in a separate form a list of rules, and required of him to write foreign letters (or orders), to enable me to depute officers to proceed thereunto to the store-ships, and call on them to make the delivery. This was a most simple, convenient, and easy mode of proceeding. If the said Superintendent were really acting with sincerity of purpose, he certainly should have speedily proceeded to obey my commands. Though he say, that in the foreign factories, and on board the ships at Whampoa, there is now no opium, yet the opium laid up on board the 22 store-ships is all deposited therein by the foreigners residing in the factories. Ordinarily, when combining with Chinese traitors to dispose thereof clandestinely, it has been always practicable to obtain foreign orders written at the factories, and giving the same to the fast boats to proceed there with outside and get possession of the commodity. How is it then that on this occasion, when surrendering the opium, there is no knowledge of this mode of operations?

"In the present address, it is represented that now, while the north wind is blowing, it is feared that vessels outside having opium on board may perhaps set sail and go away. Now I find that of late the store-ships have all returned to Lintin, Macao roads, and the other anchorages, and there remained; doubtless because they have heard that commands have been issued requiring delivery of the opium, and therefore have not dared to sail far away. They are yet disposed to await and pay obedience; while you would desire to stir them up and make them go. I would ask, seeing that you have taken on you the responsibility in this matter, how, if the store-ships should dare to sail away, you will be able to sustain the heavy criminality attaching to you?

"The address talks too of close restraint, as it were imprisonment; which is still more laughable. I find that from the 18th of March, when the commands were given to all the foreigners to deliver up their opium, every thing remained as usual, until the 24th, when you came in a boat to Canton, and that night wished to take Dent and absconb with him. It was after this that cruisers were stationed to examine and observe all that went in and out. It was because you were void of truth and good faith, that it became unavoidably necessary to take preventive steps. As to the compradors, and others, they are in fact Chinese traitors, who would also suggest absconding and escape. How then could the withdrawal of them be omitted? Yesterday, too, when you had made a statement of the amount of opium, I at once confirmed to you a reward, consisting of sundry articles of food. Is this the manner in which prisoners are ever treated?

"I the High Commissioner, in conjunction with the governor and lieut.-governor, looking up to the great emperor, embody his all comprehending kindness, and in our treatment of you foreigners of every nation never go beyond these two words, favor and justice. Such as display constancy and contempt, how can they have ought but justice dealt out to them! But such as shew a respectful sense of duty, shall assuredly be tenderly intreated with favor.

"Do you now simply command plainly all the foreigners, with instant speed to prepare letters, and hand them in to government, to enable it to give commands to all the store-ships to deliver up in orderly succession the opium, and so soon as they shall be delivered up, every thing shall without fail be restored to its ordinary condition. This requisition is indeed conformable to reason: what difficulty is there in complying with it? If in place of speedily making delivery, you make pretexts for diverting attention, in the hope that after the strict preventive measures shall be withdrawn you may form some other scheme, who cannot see through such artful devices? And will you be enabled to make a repetition of such attempts?

"Besides deputing officers to proceed to the Hong merchant's Consoo house, there to give verbal commands and to prevent delay, you are also hereby required to act speedily in obedience to this my reply. Do not again be working at excuses and delay, thereby drawing on yourself cause for future repentance.

REPLY of the 30th of March to the English Superintendent Elliot's address, proposing to send Johnston outside.

"This address represents, that the Deputy Superintendent, Johnston, shall be sent outside, to call together all the vessels, and deliver up the whole amount of opium: and gives conveyance in an order to him for my perusal. I, the high commissioner, have carefully examined the terms of this order, and though I find ther in nothing improper, yet, considering that in a previous address the said Superintendent stated, that taking on him the power entrusted to him by his sovereign he had required of the people of his nation immediately to deliver up the whole of the opium,—it is plain to me that, as the said Superintendent has the power of making such a requisition, he can have no difficulty in giving orders directly to all the storeships; and what necessity then is there for committing the matter to Johnston, and thus multiplying the twists and bends of the transaction.

"I, the high commissioner, have given reiterated official replies, requiring of all the foreigners to write orders themselves, on the ground that, in the ordinary manner of selling the opium, they have always thus disembarked the goods, without committing an error once in a hundred times. Why then is not the opium surrendered in this comparatively simple, convenient, and easy way?

"Let me now weigh the matter for you. The said Superintendent having power to act, and having repeatedly acknowledged before me his responsibility, can have not the smallest loophole of escape therefrom. How can he possibly have the power to require of all the foreigners to deliver up the opium, and yet not have the power to require that they write orders for the same? It is his duty then immediately to pay obedience to my reiterated commands, and speedily to require of all the foreigners severally to write foreign orders for the number of chests of opium they have on board each vessel by name, and to present the same to government through the said Superintendent, covered by a general order from himself, that those being conveyed to the store-ships they may in orderly succession make delivery. The earlier the day of the complete delivery, the earlier will be the day for the commercial intercourse to resume its ordinary course, not stopping merely at the giving permission to the passage boats to run.

"The said Superintendent must know that I, the commissioner, give my commands and cautions in full sincerity, and must speedily pay implicit obedience. He must not be turning inconstantly this way and that, bringing thereby criminality and cause of sorrow on himself.

The foreign order is sent back herewith.

Edict

from Lin, Imperial Commissioner, &c, to the American Consul Snow; communicated by Choo, prefect of Canton.

An official communication has been received from Lin, governor of Hoakwang and high imperial commissioner: it is as follows:—

"On the 16th day, of the 2nd month, of the 19th year of Taoukwang, [26th of March, 1839,] the American consul, Snow, presented an address as follows. [here the address is copied.]

"This having come before me, the high imperial commissioner, I find that already, before this time, the English Superintendent Elliot, presented an address, declaring that the opium belonging to English Subjects, which he had required of them to deliver up to him, was 20,283 chests and that he had no control over the people of other countries not under British rule. Now I, the high imperial commissioner, commanded Snow, the American consul, to make out a clear and full statement of all the opium of his country and present the same for delivery. But he comes forward in reply, with this statement that already 1540 chests have been taken and delivered up to Elliot to be handed over to government. This really is greatly at variance with Elliot's statement, and is a dull pretext. I command obedience to the previous instructions, that a full and true statement be made out and presented for delivery. Let there be no concealment to involve guilt.

"Wherefore, I send this dispatch to the prefect that he may immediately convey it to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmitted to the said consul Snow, to obey the same without opposition.

☞ SEE SUPPLEMENT.

SUPPLEMENT
CANTON PRESS.

Vol. IV. No. 29. Canton, Saturday, 20th April, 1839. No. 181.

Having received the above, I forthwith without any delay transmit it to the said foreign consul Snow, in order that he may obey the same without opposition. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 3d month, 16th day,
[March 30th 1839.]

Edict

from Lin, the commissioner, &c, to Mr. van Basel, Dutch Consul in China; communicated by Choo, the Prefect of Canton.

An official communication has been received from Lin, the governor of Hookwang, a great minister of state and Imperial Commissioner; it is as follows:—

"On the 16th day, 2nd moon, of the 19th year of Taoukwang (30th of March 1839,) the Dutch Consul van Basel presented an address in the following terms:

(Mr. van Basel had in his address informed H. E. the commissioner that neither he nor any of his nation held any Opium; informing H. E. at the same time of his having in vain applied to the Hoppo for leave for himself to go to Macao, and for the grand chop of a Dutch ship now at Whampoa—that he therefore considered himself and the people of his nation forcibly detained, and the Consul again asks that leave to depart may be given.—)

This coming before me, a great minister of state, it is replied: Now because all the Opium of the several nations has not been given up, the holds of the ships have been closed in conformity with the laws, and for the sake of a single vessel of your nation it is impracticable to break in upon the present preventive measures. And although the said foreigner has no Opium, he ought still to induce all the foreigners resident in the Factories immediately to give up all the Opium in their possession.

Then, as usual, the ships holds shall be opened and the trade resumed. Moreover, no apprehension need be entertained respecting the detention of your country's vessel.

Wherefore this edict is now despatched to the prefect of Canton that he may immediately deliver the same to the Hong merchants to be by them transmitted to the said Dutch Consul Van Basel, that he may act in conformity thereto without opposition."

Now, having received this edict I immediately transmit it to the said Dutch Consul Van Basel, that he may act in conformity thereto without opposition.

April 1st, 1839.

Foreigners were informed this day that, since they were averse to receiving provisions gratis, the linguists would, in future, supply them with them against payment.

REPLY OF THE 27th MARCH,

To Wetmore, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce.

Choo, Kwang chow foo, &c. proclaims to Wetmore, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce, for his full information

The following communication has just been respectfully received from Lin imperial commissioner, &c.

"On the 15th day, of the 2nd month.

Wetmore Chairman, &c., Petitions as follows:—

General Chamber of Commerce,

Canton, March 28th, 1839.

A Respectful Address

The Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce has received with profound respect, the Proclamation of H. E. the Commissioner, addressed to all Foreigners in Canton; and in compliance with the requisition of said document reports, that Peter Warren Snow is Consul for the United States of America; Magdalinus Jacobus Senn Van Basel Consul of the King of Holland, and J. P. Van Lofft, at present at Macao, is reported to be the acting Consul for the King of the French.

W. S. WETMORE.—Chairman.

It appears that the object of this petition being brought before me is to hand up a list of the names and surnames of the several nation's Consuls: to which, as is proper, I reply.

I, the commissioner, having previously informed myself, by examination, (of their names), as was proper, yesterday issued another edict commanding the said several countries to send in a true and just account detailing the quantity of opium in their possession, and to wait till I was ready to receive it. Why have they not yet petitioned to this effect?

Let the said foreigners be forthwith urgently admonished by the said Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce to make out the required document, and at an early day to deliver up their opium. Do not attempt to escape this duty, lest you yourself become involved in error. In consideration of the circumstances I issue this edict for your information and obedience.

This proclamation is to be sent to the Kwang chow foo who will deliver it to the hong merchants with orders to transmit it to the said Wetmore, for his instant obedience. Do not oppose!"

Upon receipt of the above I, as is proper, forthwith issue this edict to the said Wetmore, who upon receipt of it must accord his instant obedience. Do not oppose. A special edict.

Monday 1st April.—This morning another part of the correspondence between the Commissioner and Capt. Elliot and the American and Dutch Consuls was published in the square.* Its purport is briefly to the following effect. The Commissioner says that Capt. Elliot proposes that Mr. Johnston should go down to Honqua's Kong to be present at the delivery of the Opium—that H. E. says is not necessary—why not make each British Subject give an order for Opium, such as they were in the habit of giving to the Opium dealers; this Capt. Elliot should indorse, and then give to H. E., who would then send down for it, without Mr Johnston's presence being necessary. If, says H. E., Capt. Elliot has power sufficient to obtain the making over 10 Mds. all the Opium belonging to British subjects, he surely may also have that of ordering such documents to be made out. To Mr Snow, the American Consul, His Excellency says, he cannot understand the reason why, as he, the Consul, has informed him, his countrymen should have delivered unto Capt. Elliot's keeping round 500 Chests of Opium, rather than to him—he says there must be some double dealing there. (The Opium here spoken of is declared to be British property and as such was by the consignees given over to Capt. Elliot.) To the Dutch Consul, Mr. van Basel, H. E says in answer to a letter from him, that though he or his countrymen have no Opium, yet that he cannot for the sake of allowing one vessel to depart, permit the whole of his plans to be deranged. He recommends to be Dutch Consul to influence his neighbours to give over all traffic in Opium.

We ought to have mentioned before that in consequence of a letter from Mr. King, the Commissioner sent him a gracious answer which was ordered to be stuck on Mr. King's door, in which it is said that though H. E. is aware of M. King's having obtained from the Opium trade, yet he cannot allow his servants yet to return, as such concession would interfere with his plans; he however recommends Mr. King to disseminate his maxims among his neighbours.

Communication with outside natives is jealously watched against, and for some time nothing has been heard either from Macao or Whampoa. H. E. says that the trade will be reopened the moment the Opium has all been delivered over to him.

Howqua, Mowqua and the other Hong merchants have given notice to the foreigners, warning them not to induce any of their servants to enter their Hong—there being a likelyhood of the Mandarins coming to search them—and any native found there in would infallibly be put to death—the Hong merchants therefore consider that the blood of any native thus found and put to death will be on the head of such foreigners as may have induced him to be in the factory. In the evening some Mandarins came to the square to superintend the bricking up the streets leading to the square, with the exception of old China street which is the only one through which communication is allowed, but to those on duty only; every other Chinese must get a passport to be permitted to go—no European under whatever pretext is allowed to enter China street. It is not known what the reason of this excess of precaution may be—except it be that some apprehensions are entertained of the populace.

Tuesday, 2d April.—Hong merchants as usual frequently calling on the Superintendent. A new Chop from the Yuen chae was stuck up this day, being his commands the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, and which is as follows, viz:

PROCLAMATION

To Wetmore, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce.

Choo, Kwangchow Foo &c. Proclaims to Wetmore, Chairman of the general chamber of commerce, for his full information.

The following has jute been received from H. E. Lin, imperial commissioner, &c.

On the 18 month, of the 19th year of Taouking,

Wetmore, Chairman &c. petitioned as follows.

General Chamber of Commerce.

March 30th 1839.

To His Excellency Lin, The High Imperial Commissioner &c. &c.

A respectful address.

The chairman of this Chamber has received the Edict your Excellency was pleased to address to him under this day's date.

In reply he begs to state, that the Cousuls of the United States of America and of the King of Holland, have faithfully answered the Edict of your Excellency to them directed.

I have the honor to be, &c.

W. S. WETMORE.

Chairman.

"This coming before me the commissioner, &c., I, as is proper, reply.—I find on examination that the American nation ought to deliver up some opium, yet, up to this time, they have not handed up any account of the quantity they are to deliver up. I have already strongly commanded their consul, Snow, in my reply to his petition on the subject, to be urgent: this is on record. Now I have looked into the petition of the said chairman and find it a mere tissue of senseless prattle. It is of the greatest importance that the opium be delivered up and received at the present time; how, then, can I allow myself to be trifled with in this way? Let the said consul, Snow, forthwith hand up in a responsive petition, a clear and detailed account of the quantity &c., to be delivered up, so that it may be examined and received at the same time with the smoking 'flish' which the English have given up; do not let him attempt the least concealment, lest he involve himself in unpleasant consequences.

Uniting the circumstances, I send this edict to the Kwangchowfoo, who must instantly hand it over to the hong merchants with instruction to deliver it to the said chairman, Wetmore, for his information and obedience; do not oppose, &c. &c." Upon receipt of the above, and uniting the circumstances, I at once issue an edict, upon receipt of which, the said Chairman, Wetmore, must accord his instant obedience thereto, and forthwith make out a true and detailed account of the quantity &c., of opium (American property) which the said consul, Snow, must hand up in a responsive edict, and forthwith deliver up the opium.

Should there be any further delay, or glossing over, you may become involved in the consequences of the high commissioner's displeasure.

Do not then, oh chairman! any longer oppose and evade this heavy matter.

Tremble, haste, haste, a special edict.

(True Translation) S. FEARON.

April 1st, 1839. Chinese Interpreter, G. C. C.

In the evening it became known that Capt. Elliot had received a Chop, direct from the Commissioner, (those hitherto received came through the Kwangchow foo) by which he agrees to Mr. Johnston's proceeding to Lintin to deliver over to the Chinese Government all the Opium now there. We hear that the Commissioner says that after the delivery of the first 5000 chests, our servants shall return, after the next 5000, the boats to be removed; the following 5000 will open our intercourse with Whampoa; and the delivery of the remainder will establish every thing on the former footing. If on the other hand the deliveries should not be truly made, water is first to be denied us; if after three days foreigners do not repent, we are to be kept without food and if after 10 days all the Opium shall not have been delivered, then the law must take its course, i. e. the foreigners must be executed.

The guard of coolies in front seems to be somewhat relaxing: there is not on this, the continual patrolling of other nights.

Wednesday 3rd April.—This morning Capt Elliot issued the following proclamations.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

The undersigned has now to announce that arrangements have been made for the delivery of the Opium lately surrendered to him for Her Majesty's Service, by which His Excellency, the High Commissioner, has stipulated that the servants shall be restored after one fourth of the whole be delivered, the passage boats be permitted to run after one half be delivered, the trade opened after three fourths be delivered: and every thing to proceed as usual after the whole be delivered (the signification of which last expression the undersigned does not understand.)

Breach of faith (and His Excellency, not unnaturally, is pleased to suppose, that breach of faith may be possible) is to be visited after three days of loose performance of engagements with the cutting off of supplies of fresh water, after three days more, with the stoppage of food, and after three days more, with the last degree of severity on the undersigned himself.

He passes by these grave forms of speech without comment.

But with the papers actually before him, and all the circumstances in hand, he is satisfied that the effectual liberation of the Queen's Subjects, and all the other Foreigners in Canton, depends upon the promptitude with which this arrangement is completed.

The maintenance of the national character, and the validity of the claim for indemnity depend upon that scrupulousness of fidelity with which he is well assured his countrymen will enable him to fulfil his public obligations to this government.

As soon as the whole opium surrendered to him be delivered over to the Chinese officers, it will be the duty of the undersigned to communicate with his countrymen again.

But it is a present relief to him to express to the whole foreign community his admiration for the patience and kindly feeling which has uniformly distinguished this community throughout these trying circumstances.

And he offers his own countrymen his grateful thanks for their confidence in his sincerest efforts to lead them safely out of their actual straights.

The ultimate satisfactory solution of the remaining difficulties need give no man an anxious thought.

The permanent stability of the British trade with this empire, with honor and advantage to all parties, rests upon a firm foundation; upon the wisdom, justice, and power of Her Majesty's Government.

CHARLES ELLIOT.

Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China.

3rd April. 1839.

and Mr. Johnston, accompanied by Mr. Thom, left for Macao in a Chop-boat at about 6 o'clock in the evening. A Weiyuen (deputed officer) two Hong merchants and two Linguists have also been sent down. The first account of a partial delivery will not, probably, reach us before six or seven days are over, and there will we presume, pass over quietly enough in our prison. Servants continue to be denied to all, and if our readers find this paper badly printed, they have to blame the Chinese for it who obliged us to borrow press-man in person, assisted by a few friends who, from want of trade, are for the present without employment.

The Youthchae has published an admonitory address to the people in the shape of a pamphlet, expatiating on the evils produced by the smoking of Opium, and the criminality of indulging this pas-

He informs the natives that they are required to give over smoking altogether within the next two months; if after three months any smoker shall be discovered, he is to be put to death; and he also requires that every five inhabitants be bound by each other for the non-transgression of his law.

Thursday 4th April.—Every thing remains in statu quo—the coolies remain watching the factories, and the back-streets continue to be guarded both against foreigners and natives. This morning it is reported that the Yumchae has resigned: the Governor of Macao to give up the form; this however requires, however, confirmation. A meeting of the foreign community at the Chamber of Commerce was requested by the Hong merchants to be held tomorrow at noon—it is supposed that the merchants will there propose the signing of some bond against the trading in Opium.

Friday, 5th April.—The general meeting of the foreign residents at the Chamber of Commerce did not take place, but the Committee met to receive a communication from the Hong merchants, which as anticipated was a proposal to H. M. Superintendent and to other consuls to sign a long document which is to the effect that the Foreign merchants, thankful for the unbounded favors showered on them by the Emperor, have, knowing the trade Opium to be an illegal one, reverently delivered over to the Government all the opium they had in the outside waters (their promise beforehand to abide from all traffic in Opium and promise that should object arise such). In the next six months with Opium on board, this must be delivered up, when the ships will be allowed to load and unload—should after the expiration of six months (or after autumn) vessels still continue to arrive with Opium, they are to be confiscated, ship and cargo, and the head is to be cut off: that the crews of such ships are to be put to death, and that foreigners willingly submit to the justice of the doom.—That such a document could be signed by any one is evident. This day a number of large Cargo boats was despatched from here to the Bogue to lade the Opium that is to be delivered. It is also said that the Yumchae and Governor will themselves proceed to the Bogue in a day or two.

Saturday, 6th April.—The following Edict addressed by H. E. to the Dutch Consul has been received this morning. Another to the Consul of the United States has also been issued of which we know not yet fully the particulars.

"An edict from the imperial commissioner addressed to the Dutch Consul van Basel.

An official communication has been received from his excellency Lin, high imperial commissioner &c. governor of Hookwang: it is as follows:

"Another address has been presented from the Dutch consul van Basel, in which he says, (Mr. van Basel had only reiterated his demand for passports for himself and Dutch subjects, there being no reason to detain them and a ship at Whampoa, awaits as H. E. expresses himself that neither the Consul nor his countrymen possess any Opium.)

"This coming before me, the high commissioner, I immediately reply. On a former occasion the said foreigner presented an address, requesting a passport to go to Macao. At that time the reply was given, that as the opium of the several nations was not all given up, it was inconvenient, for the sake of his country's ship, to break up the preventive measures. This is on record.

Now the English Superintendent, Elliot, has sent Johnston to proceed to the Nine Islands and Macao roads, and there assemble the receiving ships, and deliver up all the opium. This done — and to examine and receive it will not require much time — then the soldiers and guards shall be taken away, and the trade return to its usual channels. The said foreigner, ought to remain quiet, and not repeat so often his communications.

Wherefore I dispatch this edict to the prefect of Canton, that he may immediately convey the same to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmitted to the said consul, van Basel, for his implicit obedience."

Having received the above, I immediately convey the same to the Hong merchants, to be by them transmitted to the said consul van Basel, for his implicit obedience. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year 2nd moon, 22nd day.
[April 5th 1839.]

It was this day reported that a ship's boat had attempted to come up to Canton from Whampoa. She proceeded as far as Howqua's fort, when the Chinese fired upon her with black cartridge (they say) and the boat returned to Whampoa without accomplishing her object. It is understood that Capt Elliot received this evening a chop under the seal of the Commissioner proposing to him to sign the bond, which we mentioned had yesterday been submitted to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce.

Sunday, 7th April.—The Coolies remain watching the square as before, and the rows of boats also remain in front of the houses altho' that composed of cargo-boats has been some what thinned, eight having been sent down to receive the Opium. We heard this day from a linguist that Mr. Johnston and Mr. Thom had arrived at Heangshan (about half way between this and Macao) on Friday last in the afternoon. They what therefore have had a very long passage. The Hong-merchants have proposed to the Committee of the Chamber and to the American and Dutch Consuls to meet them in the Consoo House to-morrow—it is supposed with the view again to endeavour about the Opium-pledge to be signed; it is said that this document now to be produced is very much modified.

* See, for the translation, the foregoing.

Monday, 9th April.—We have this morning of the arrival below of the Hoogly from Bombay and the Hardy from Manilla, whom the Harlequin from this had arrived. A 3rd such ship La Favorite from Manilla is also reported in. The following are the minutes of a meeting of the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, from which it will be seen that the functions of that body are for the present suspended.

General Chamber of Commerce.

Canton, 8th April, 1839.

Minutes of a Meeting of the committee adjourned from the 6th inst. on bond proposed by the Consoo Present Messrs Wetmore, chairman, F S, deputy chairman, Braine, Thomson, Gladstone Fearon for, Adam, Heaghertoy, Rustomjee Bell, Delano.

It was moved by Mr. Delano, seconded by H Rustomjee, and carried unanimously:

That as the chamber was instituted for purposes of a commercial nature exclusively, it is expedient that the committee do not become involved in any further correspondence of a political or personal nature, with the local Chinese authorities; nor committed by any promises or engagements to them, which it may become impossible to fulfil.

That in as much as we are prisoners in our Factories surrounded by a armed force our trade stopped, and all communication with Whampoa, Macao, and the fleet outside denied to us it becomes necessary that the functions of this committee should cease until the restoration of our trade, the liberty of egress from Canton, and of communication with the outer waters, enables the chamber to serve the community in a legitimate manner.

It was then moved by Mr Bell, seconded by Mr. Braine, and carried unanimously:—That a copy of the foregoing resolution be communicated to the long merchants by the chairman

Thanks were voted to the chairman by acclamation and the meeting was adjourned sine die.

This evening the Kwang chow foo came to the Consoo house there to meet the U S, and the Dutch Consuls, and the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, which latter office had become extinct since the morning. It being so desired that all British merchants had left the arrangement of affairs to their superintendent, none of them were asked to attend.

The parties that attended the meeting were Mr. Snow, the United States, and Mr van Basel the Dutch Consul, Mr Wetmore, Mr. Delano and Mr. King, and Mr. Fearon as interpreter. These gentlemen were met by some of the Hong merchants and one by one introduced to the Kwang chow foo. Nothing, we believe, deserving particular notice took place at the meeting—the whole of the conversation on the part of Kwang-chow-foo being nearly confined to insisting on the necessity there was that the bond should be signed and on the part of foreigners to insist on the impossibility of doing this. The Kwang-chow-foo also put a number of questions to the interpreter regarding the opium. After and noted down his answers. The meeting lasted upwards of two hours and they were at last allowed to depart at about 11 o'clock, the Kwan-chow-foo declaring that by to morrow at noon he must have the bond duly signed, and that he would not admit any excuse."

The bond is the same as the one before offered in the Chamber and Commerce, and afterwards to Captain Elliot and the following is a translation.

"A BOND PREPARED MORE TO be voluntarily given by the English superintendent Elliot, and deputy Superintendent Johnston, at the head of the English merchants, A &c., the Indian merchants, B &c, the Moorish merchants, C &c. the ( ) merchants, D and the ( ) merchants, E and the ( ) merchant, F &c,—respecting the eternal doing away with the opium traffic.

WE NO MEANLY pledge ourselves (with and for) the merchants of the English nation, and of the several countries her dependencies, residing and trading in the city of Canton, and who, cherished and saturated with the tender benevolence of the celestial court, have reaped no delightful gain to a countless extent, THAT WHEREAS certain persons, avaricious only bent on making profit, have of late years brought the smoking filth called opium, into the Chinese waters, and there carried it on to receiving ships for the purpose of selling it; all which is in direct contravention of the prohibitory laws of the celestial kingdom.

The great emperor has now appointed a high officer of state to come to Canton to enquire into and manage the business and we now begin to learn that the prohibitory laws are really severe in the extreme. Utterly unable to overcome the alarm and trepidation into which we have been thrown, we reverently deliver up to government every particle of opium on board the receiving ships, earnestly entreating that a memorial may be sent to the great emperor, praying him in his great mercy, to overlook our past offences.

The empire receiving ships shall be all sent back to their countries. Elliot and Johnston shall forthwith petition the King of their country, sternly to command all the merchants tremblingly to obey the prohibitory laws of the celestial empire, which forbid the importation of opium into China; and to leave off manufacturing the drug. Should opium be discovered on board any merchant vessel arriving in Canton after the autumn of this year, the said vessel and all her cargo shall be confiscated to government and she shall not be allowed to trade; and all the parties concerned shall, in compliance, with the laws of the celestial empire; BE PUT TO DEATH, willingly submitting to their doom! All vessels which, having sailed from their countries before the present rigorous prohibitions were known, shall arrive in China during the spring or summer months, shall immediately they arrive, deliver up all the opium they may have on board, without daring to secrete the least particle

WE DO CONSISTENTLY declare that this our bond is just and true."

(True Translation.) S. PEARON.
Chinese Interpreter, G. C. C.

* In our last week's paper we erroneously stated that a threat had been made to retain the Consuls if they, them and there, did not sign the bond—no such threat, we have been assured on good authority, has been uttered.

Tuesday 9th April.—This morning intelligence was received by the Hong merchants that Mr. Johnston had arrived in Macao on Sunday morning the 7th April, and that on the following day he would proceed to Lankeet whether we are told two of the Opium ships are gone. We hear that Mr. Johnston was not suffered to land at Macao but that Mr. Thom went on shore accompanied and closely watched by the Hong merchants. Of course the bond required by the Kwang chow foo to be read signed at noon this day has not been forthcoming and an invitation from that officer that the Consuls should again meet him at the Consoo house was not attended to. A written refusal to sign the bond was however sent to the Consoo house by Mr. Snow and Mr. van Basel, with their reasons for such refusal—this was after copies had been taken of it returned to the Consuls as inadmissible, the Kwang chow foo declaring that he could not receive any communication except the bond duly signed.

"By my soul I swear,
"There is no power in the tongue of man
"To alter me; I stay here on my bond."

Wednesday, 10th April— expect now soon to hear of the delivery of the first instalment of Opium and it will then be seen whether this bond is meant to oppose new obstacles to our liberation from prison—that it cannot be signed by any one except upon the extremest degree of compulsion is evident under such a bond not only the lives of such as signed it would be exposed to imminent danger every hour from any denunciations, false or true, that might be made against them, but the signers must necessarily appear to the Chinese as if they had power over the lives of their countrymen, and if any of these latter suffer in consequence of their acquiescence, their respective governments would no doubt hold them responsible for such misfortunes. If this argument applies to private individuals, how much more to the officers of the western nations, and they of course cannot but persist in their resistance to this demand of the Chinese.

This evening the Yum chae, accompanied by the Governor, and Hoppo has left Canton for the Bogue. He is fortunate in having a fine northerly breeze, which has succeeded a very fresh southerly wind that blew all day yesterday followed by a heavy fall of rain.

Thursday 11th April.—We hear nothing from Macao to rely on with certainty. Two Opium ships it is said, are already at Lankeet, but nothing known whether deliveries have commenced The Anchasse or criminal judge came to the square this evening at about 10 o'clock, to see that all was right.

Friday 12th April.—This morning news from Macao, to be relied on were received. From these it appears that Mr. Johnston arrived at Macao on Sunday the 7th in the evening, but that the Mandarins at first opposed his landing, he had several interviews with the Mandarins concerning the manner of the delivery of the Opium, which was agreed on, we believe after some warm dispute. On Monday night Mr. Johnston after having gone into the Suse interpreter's cutter, the Lotos went on shore in Macao, and was ready to set sail in her for Lankeet, accompanied by Mr. Thom, early in the morning on Tuesday, though it is probable that that day's bad weather may have detained him in port. The Yumchae joined the fleet at Whampoa in the morning yesterday, accompanied by a great many boats. We hear that the Chinese have thrown a raft across the river just below Howqua's fort, to prevent any boats coming from Whampoa—they did the same thing in Lord Napier's time. This day the four great officers, the judge, treasurer, salt comptroller and grain inspector came to the square in front of the Factories but it being a rainy day without alighting from their chairs. The absence of the Yumchae probably makes them thus solicitous for our safety. The Kwangheen walk through the square almost every night, and in fact the guard is kept up nearly the same as to the first days. This evening Capt. Elliot published the following public notice:

PUBLIC NOTICE.

To H. B. M. subjects.

Canton 12th April 1839

The undersigned is desirous that Her Majesty's subjects being owners of, or having the command over ships or vessels in the Opium trade on the coasts of China who recently transmitted a solemn pledge to the high commissioner not to attempt to introduce Opium into the Empire, must be most anxious to fulfil their obligations with all speed and fidelity; and therefore he need do no more than request them to seize the earliest safe opportunity for the recal of those vessels from their actual pursuits.

But it is his duty to remind others Her Majesty's subjects not bound by such engagements, and every man of common humanity, be he of what nation he may, that the liberties and possibly the lives of the whole foreign community now shut up at Canton hang upon their present forbearance A seizure of Opium would immediately afford a pretext for their continued imprisonment and, it may well be, for worse treatment, and would be used with no inconsiderable effect to justification of the past and actual violences of this government.

CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

Saturday, 13th April.—Hear that letters have been received from Lankeet, advising the delivery from on board the two ships there, the Hercules and Austen, of about 50 chests on Thursday last—the rough weather was the cause of no more having been delivered to the Chinese. If the weather has been more favorable yesterday 5 large guns fully, perhaps the first instalment of 5000 chests, may have passed into the possession of the Yumchae, and it is said this morning that the Coup is preparing for the servants to be ordered back to the Factories. We also learn that Capt. Elliot has received letters from the Yumchae and the Governor desiring him to order all the Opium-ships to go at once to Lankeet, no doubt with the view of hastening the delivery. Know remains to be seen whether all difficulties as to the reopening of communication will have been removed by Capt Elliot's engagement being so punctually performed; the promise to that effect has been given under the commissioner's Imperial seal, and it is to be hoped that the non-signing of the Opium-bond will not oppose fresh obstacles to the removal of the present grievances. Nothing more has for some days, we believe, been heard of this bond—whether the Chinese will relinquish their pretensions on that head altogether it is difficult to foresee, though it is probable as they must now be convinced how utterly impossible it is for either Consuls or merchants of any nation to sign away the lives of themselves or countrymen.

The Yumchae's absence from Canton has of course produced a cessation of chops, and nothing new passes in our prison. None of the servants are yet returned, except that here and there a coolie makes his appearance for an hour or two each day. People are still obliged to prepare their dinners themselves, and we fancy that three weeks practice must have afforded them some insight into culinary secrets. The efforts of our neighbours to cook their own dinners are however considerably assisted by dishes sent from the kitchens of our Parsee friends, who, having servants of their own nation, are enabled to assist those that have none, and they have done and continue doing so in the most liberal manner to whoever will avail himself of their kindness.

Sunday 14th April.—This evening Capt. Elliot's published the following circular:

INTELLIGENCE.

Canton, 14th April, 1839.

CAPTAIN ELLIOT, has received letters from Mr. Johnston, dated at Chumpe on the 12th at 8 P M.

Up to that time owing to a want of Chinese boats, the ships there "Hercules" and "Austen") had only delivered 650 Chests; but it was expected that they would deliver more than double that amount in the course of yesterday; and instructions had been sent at noon of the 12th to the following vessels

"Jupiter" "Mithras," "Ariel," "Mermaid," "Rupert," and "Lady Grant," to proceed forthwith to join the other ships at Chumpe, and commence delivering. Capt Elliot has also reason to believe, from a communication from the Commissioner and the governor, that an increased number of boats will be procured immediately, so that the deliveries may be expected to proceed rapidly.

The mandarins do not seem to impede the operations by troublesome investigation

The High Commissioner has desired that the servants should be restored at once.

EDWARD ELMSLIE
Secretary & Treasurer to the Superintendent.

We hear that the Yumchae, Governor, and Hoppo are at Chumpe. The delivering ships are, we are told, provided with the necessary ballast and with water, and provisions which were first offered gratis and refused, are now sold to them.

Monday.—This day Capt. Elliot issued the following notice:

NOTICE.

Sealed tenders will be received at this office until noon of the 16th instant, and then to be opened; setting forth the terms on which a first class British Chopper vessel (The Chief Superintendent reserving to himself the right of determining the vessels fitting within such classification) being perfectly seaworthy, fully manned, armed, and in all respects ready for sea, after one week's notice shall have been given, will be offered for charter on Her Majesty's Service for a certain period of seven months; and for a further indicated rate for every month or part of a month that such vessel shall be employed in the before mentioned service, beyond the said period of seven months.

The projected service not to involve a passage round the Cape of Good Hope

The particulars of sea worthiness, equipment &c. &c. are yet to proof by survey to be held by the direction of the Chief Superintendent.

EDWARD ELMSLIE.
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

Canton 15th April, 1839.

N. B. It is requested that the words "sealed tender for a vessel to be employed on Her Britannic Majesty's Service" may be written on the respective envelopes.

It was reported that the Opium delivered at Chumpe had been brought up to Canton in chop-boats, without, however, we believe any good foundation.

Tuesday 16th April.—We hear this day that about 470 chests were delivered up to last night. The servants mostly still keep out of the way, owing it is said, to a bond required of them, to declare themselves answerable with their lives for the actions of their masters, and which they, naturally enough, are averse to signing.

Wednesday 17th April.—This day Capt. Elliot published the following:

Capt Elliot has received letters from Mr. Johnston to the 13th instant at 8 P M, and from these accounts it may be computed that there will have been delivered about 7000 Chests to last evening (the 16th). The ships at Chumpee, when Mr. Johnston wrote, were the Hercules, Austen, Jane, and Ariel.

The Mathos, Mermaid, Rupert and Lady Grant were however expected immediately, and Capt. Elliot hopes that, weather permitting, the moiety will be delivered by to morrow evening. No other intelligence of interest.

EDWARD ELMSLIE.
Secretary & Treasurer to the Superintendents.
Canton, 17th April 1839.

Thursday 18th April.—This day many of the servants and coolies returned, though many are yet absent, owing partly, probably, to fear, and partly to their being the season for Chinese to offer their devotions on the graves of their ancestor, for the performance of which many have gone to Macao and not yet returned. We hear that in pursuance to the notice published by Capt. Elliot on Monday last, the tender of the clipper Ariel, Capt. Warden, has been accepted by the Superintendent. We presume she will carry despatches for the Indian and home governments as soon as the communication with the outside shipping shall have reopened. Nothing certain we understand, is this day known about the deliveries at Chumpee.

Friday 19th April.—This morning it is known that up to the evening of the 17th about 8000 chests were delivered, and a fresh supply of chop-boats having reached Whampoa, it is supposed that the deliveries will have gone on briskly yesterday, and if the weather, which is very boisterous and rainy this day, does not prevent it, the first moiety of the 20,000 chests may now be in the hands of the Yum chae.

We hear that, as to the receipt of the Opium by the Chinese, an extensive system of checks and counter checks has been established; very chest is weighed and the weight written thereon—it is then carefully packed in a wrapper, and the weight again marked on it, and sealed so as to provide against any possible fraud. The Opium it is said is all destined for Peking—none has yet, we believe, reached Canton, though reports to the contrary have reached us. It is thought, that after the deliveries are concluded the Yum-chae will proceed to Canbrance near Macao, where people wait his arrival with some anxiety. Families there are now restricted to the daily purchase of a certain quantity of food only, so as to prevent their laying in a stock for many days.

Here, with the exception of the return of the servants, every thing remains as before—the guard of boats and coolies is the same as on the day after Capt. Elliot's arrival, and no natives such as outside dealers, are yet allowed to enter the Factories. We are informed that some business has been done within the last few days in Bombay Cotton at an advance on former quotations of 5 to 6 mace. Much will of course depend on the sort of payment sellers may obtain under present circumstances, whether the advance be more than nominal.

Saturday morning, 20th April.—It is a month this day since the Hoppo's order against foreigners leaving Canton was published, and there is no saying how many more weeks we may be detained. No communication of a later date than the 17th has been received from Mr. Johnston, and we accordingly know of no more than about 6500 Chests delivered. The deliveries proceed much slower than was anticipated. Four more vessels than those named above have reached Chumpe—their names not ascertained.—Owing, as will be seen by the following Chop to cooperadores, to servants being required to obtain a Chop form the Magistrate at Macao, we are informed this morning that they will all-at least from such houses where no chop has been obtained from Macao, leave again to morrow. These vexations shew the spirit in which the engagements entered into by the Chinese authorities are likely to be kept.

Translation of a license or Chop granted jointly, by the Kwang-chow-foo, Nan-hae and Pwan-yu hsien to foreign compradores, under the new regulations caused by the stoppage of the Opium trade.

Dated Canton 19th year, 3d moon, 4th day of the reign of Taoukwang 18th April 1839.

Choo, the Kwang chow-foo, Lew, the Nun-hae hsien, and Chang, the Pwang yu-hsien, proclaim this officially to Comprador (here the name to whom it is addressed, is given.

It appears proper that foreigners who come to Canton to trade should employ compradores who obtain their licenses from the Magistrate at Macao, whose especial business it is to superintend that affair.

Now, when the Imperial commands were received to annihilate the traffic in Opium, the foreigners not being willing to surrender the Opium held by them, the Imperial Commissioner, conjointly with the Vice-roy ordered that the compradore, and others in their employ should for the present scatter and go away from their service. But now, as the foreigners have all in succession surrendered many chests of Opium, though not one fourth of the whole quantity has been received, yet the barbarians having all become obedient and submissive, of which evidence is possessed, orders have been received to return their compradores and servants to their service. It is relied upon that the Hong-merchants select these people, and cause them to be produced at the public offices for strict investigation, besides which passports are granted to them, and annexed to this is a list of those articles which they are permitted to buy for the foreigners. No contraband goods are to be bought, neither is knavery or deceit to be practised in the management of all the business—not a hair's breadth of incorrectness must there be, or of opposition to the laws. Finally, you must be governed by the old regulations laid down clearly by the Macao Magistrate. Do not oppose—a special effect.

List of articles allowed to be bought by the foreigners. Fresh—pigs and sheep—fowls, ducks and eggs—fresh fruits—grain and vegetables—pastry.

Seal of the Kwang chow-foo.
Nan-hae hsien.
Pwan yu hsien.

Tseang, the acting military commandant of Macao, in the district of Canton, Keun-min-foo, Magistrate of Shun tih, and Heang shan, superintendent of the water and rivulets and inspector of the customs at Macao.

Whereas it falls within his duties to grant and exchange seals, which is recorded, and it having been communicated that each Hoen had caused the orders of the board of war to be promulgated, which contains new laws and rules as follows: Hereafter compradores who are to serve foreigners, must be men chosen by the Tung che of Macao, who are natives, and known as honest and responsible men, and as security for them, their kindred must enter into bonds—they must be immediately furnished with passports or licences properly sealed after due investigation, which are to state explicitly that if they dare purchase contraband goods or any thing but provisions, or if they engage in any smuggling or irregular conduct, they must suffer the penalty of such offence as the laws direct, being examined by the local magistrates.

Now ——— who was last year Comprador to the resident merchant ——— having caused to be delivered up and cancelled his old license. This is now given him for his Government. If this barbarian should be at Macao, or Canton he must furnish him with such provisions as are contained in the annexed list. (List same as above) no prohibited goods may be bought for him, neither may his comprador serve any other barbarian, or his punishment will be great. During the 1st month of each year, this license must be renewed, the old one destroyed and the new one go into full operation All must be minutely comprehended, that no oppositions may ensue.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 3rd moon, 9th day. This license granted to ———

THE CANTON PRESS.

VOL. 4. No. 34. Canton, Saturday, 27th April, 1839. No. 190.

Hyderabad.

The appearance of Hyderabad, on the approach from Golconda, is very striking; the palace, and numerous mosques rising above the surrounding buildings, giving it an air of grandeur, which is much strengthened by the very superb pile of building erected as the British residency. Hyderabad being now one of the most important native states under the Company's control, the establishment of the minister appointed to superintend its affairs in this court is formed upon a style of appropriate magnificence. In no place, perhaps, throughout India are the Oriental and European notions of splendour more intimately blended. The residency is built in the noblest style of English architecture, and furnished throughout in accordance to the English taste, while the attendants, and many of the observances regarding the insignia of rank, are strictly Asiatic. At least it was thought necessary to maintain the native ideas regarding state at the period of the visit which forms the principal subject of the present paper. In every corner of the spacious halls and galleries leading to the more private apartments, attendants were stationed, richly clad and bearing silver sticks of various kinds, each denoting some peculiar office. These persons, ever ready at a call, preserved a solemn, respectful, and ceremonious demeanour, suited to the dignity of the place. Whenever the Resident passed from his own apartment to the centre public body of the building, he was followed and preceded by a superior class of mace-bearers, who, on his sitting down to table, and on his rising pronounced a few impressive words, apparently as a sort of benediction. The carriage, which conveys the great man in his drives, comes up to the portico attended by an escort of cavalry, with drawn swords; his ascent is proclaimed by the silver-sticks in waiting, who salaam to the ground as he moves away; and as the carriage rolls under the gateway, the guard, drawn out in line, present arms, and the drums beat, while a native band of music, stationed in a lodge over the gate, unite the clang of their brazen trumpets and kettle-drums to the martial peal. In short, no monarch, perhaps, ever preserved a greater degree of state than that which it was considered essential to the interests of the British Government that their minister should support at Hyderabad.

The mansion appropriate to the abode of the Resident was erected by the Nizam for his especial use, the architect being a young European officer of engineers in the Company's service. Though not free from faults, the edifice is commodious and imposing. It consists of a basement story of arches, and two others above it, with wings connected by a continuation of the basement story of arches finished with a balustrade. The principal front is distinguished by an enormous portico of the Corinthian order, decidedly too large for the building. On the three points of the pediment are three statues, and in the centre the Company's arms, in alto-relievo. The Corinthian columns are formed of white chunam, beautifully polished and extend from the base, which is on the summit of a noble flight of twenty-two steps, to the top of the upper story. On each side of this flight of steps stands a colossal sphynx. The interior of the portico, the cornices, &c. are ornamented in the richest style of Grecian architecture, executed in white chunam, and forming most appropriate and elegant decorations; the pavement beneath being of black and white marble. There is a large court in front, with a circular basin of water in the centre, stocked with aquatic birds and planted round with various fruit and other trees, the whole being enclosed by a wall, with two gateways one consisting of a very large and noble piece of Doric architecture, with the Nugur Khana, or music-gallery, above the archway. Three lofty folding doors lead into a very stately hall, spacious and justly proportioned, supported by thirty-two columns, surmounted by a corresponding architrave and cornice. Three splendid chandeliers are suspended from the ceiling; the floor is covered with a handsome English carpet; and the furniture mahogany, manufactured at Calcutta, is of a solid description, suited to the dimensions of this noble apartment. A smaller saloon is entered at either end, ornamented and furnished in the same manner, and employed upon common occasions for tiffin and dinner. The staircase is one of the most beautiful things of the kind to be seen in India, each step being formed of a single block of the finest granite; the walls, which are circular, are richly ornamented with stucco work, the niches containing marble statues of Grecian deities. The staircase leads to a long gallery, having a large finger-organ at one end, and a very splendid upright pianoforte at the other; the whole lighted by seven chandeliers. The upper story is divided like the one below, and forms the state apartments; the whole of the decorations of this splendid suite being superb beyond description, impressing the mind with an idea that enormous sums of money must have been lavished upon them. There is certainly a greater degree of magnificence than of taste displayed in the arrangement, but the coup-d'œil is characterized by a pomp of splendour well calculated to delight and dazzle an Asiatic eye. The roof is carved, and the ornaments of the ceiling and cornices are finished in a style which it seems scarcely possible to excel; they are all of the Corinthian order, corresponding with the pillars and pilasters along the walls. It is lighted by three chandeliers, superior in splendour to those below, and in each of the six side rooms are gilt branches, which project from between the columns, holding smaller lustres, while other lights blaze from candelabras of gold and bronze. The walls are covered with fine scarlet broad cloth, bordered with gold, the doors and windows being hung with draperies of the same, lined with blue, and fringed and tasseled with gold, while the intervals between the windows are filled with pier-glasses descending from the ceiling to the ground. The furniture corresponds with the splendour of the decorations, but a catalogue of upholstery never being very interesting, the rest of the fittings-up may be left to the imagination; perhaps, the whole being more calculated to strike the eye of a native, than to please the fastidious taste of Europeans. The gaudy and glaring hues which Asiatics take delight in, and which are so effective in their groups, and in all out-of-door spectacles, are not so well suited to interiors; and however elegant and chaste the decorations of buildings purely native may be, any admixture of foreign fashions is certain to be accomplished in a very barbarous manner. These state apartments are only opened upon grand occasions, when they are lighted up to receive some native of rank.

The entertainments given at the residency are almost wholly in the Asiatic style, the Europeans belonging to the court being too few to introduce their own fashions, and they consequently differ in this respect considerably from the fetes at Lucknow, which are more after the English taste. At the visit of the minister of the Nizam, the suwarree, or cavalcade entered by the southern gateway, the area between the colonnades being thronged with elephants, richly caparisoned horsemen, armed and mounted in various ways, prancing about, palanquins, foot-soldiers, banner-bearers, enobdars, or mace-bearers, and all the numerous and motley host which form the appendages of India state. Their entree was very imposing; making a circuit of the house, they drew up in front of the portico, filling all the inclosure, and, according to their own fashion, thronging up the steps in so tumultuous a manner to gain admittance, that the guard stationed for the purpose were obliged to lay about them most furiously, to prevent the rush of persons who had no right to intrude. Swords were drawn, and blood flowed in the cause—circumstances by no means unusual, and which, like the breaking of panels, the tearing of ladies' dresses, and the destruction of feathers and furbelows at a drawing-room, are supposed to add to the glories of the scene. It was nearly half an hour before the state elephant and palanquin could reach the steps and the minister and his suite could alight. They were received by the Resident, arrayed for the occasion in a splendid court dress; and after the usual ceremonies of salutation and embracing, he conducted his guests through the rooms prepared for their reception. A second engagement took place at the foot of the staircase, between the people of the residency, and the attendants of the visitants who had the charge of their masters' slippers (which, according to native etiquette, were left below,) and who were desirous to attend with the company—a piece of presumption tolerated in some places, but which it was not thought proper to permit. The entrance was made by day light; but some time before the departure of the guests, evening drawing on, the whole of the residency was brilliantly illuminated, and the party, with their European entertainers, being seated upon thrones on one side of the state room, the usual festivities commenced. These consisted of a series of dances performed by the most celebrated artistes of Hyderabad; an untiring source of amusement to Asiatics. The nautch girls were the only females present, a lady of the resident's family entertaining the wives of the visitors in a native palace attached to the establishment. The absence of the sex is less injurious to an Indian spectacle than to any other; the gay and splendid dress worn by the men, and the costly jewels with which they are adorned, making up for the want of the brilliant and tasteful feminine drapery which is so distinguished a feature in European assemblies. Upon this occasion, however, though the group was more striking and more magnificent than had ever been contemplated by many of the party at any former period of their lives, the eye alone was gratified: the want of intellectuality characterising the meeting made itself sensibly felt by those who possessed minds, and the moment of departure was not one of regret.

The exit of the guests, which took place about nine o'clock in the evening, was rendered even more brilliant and more picturesque than their entrance, in consequence of the multitudes of flambeaux which lighted up the scene. The effect of such a cavalcade by torch-light defies all power of description; a very faint idea can alone be conveyed to the mind by any attempt of the pen, where even the pencil must fail. The wild grandeur of the uncouth animals, elephants and camels, caparisoned in glittering trappings, towering amid a promiscuous multitude of men and horses, gives an air of romance to the whole; while the architectural splendours—the pillars, towers, and gateways—the placid mirror-like water, the flowering shrubs, dark cedars and cypresses, all combine to render the processions at Hyderabad so interesting and effective, as to render any chance of a faithful portraituse perfectly hopeless. The visit was returned at a favourite retreat belonging to the minister of the Nizam, the Nizam himself being seldom visible. A very extensive enclosure within the walls of the town, and commanding a view of the river, contains several gardenhouses, and other buildings, for the most part open pavilions, entirely after the Asiatic taste. Many of these are superbly ornamented with painting and gilding, the floor being spread with Persian carpets, rich cushions inviting repose, and splendid chandeliers shedding light upon the scene. Two in particular are entirely lined with mirrors, and the whole are surrounded with fountains and flowers, forming, in fact, just such a scene as that in which Nourodin Ali and the fair Persian received themselves when surprised by Haroun Alraschid. These gardens, being chiefly intended for the resort of the ladies of the minister's family, were guarded by a company of female sepoys, of which the Nizam has a battalion—a rather uncommon circumstance of the present day; the Maharaja Runjeet Singh being, perhaps, the only native prince boasting a similar establishment. The women composing this corps wore uniforms and accoutrements closely resembling those of the sepoys, and shouldered their muskets, and went through the manual and platoon exercise, with infinite credit to themselves, firing several volleys with great precision. They also marched and counter-marched to the martial notes of a drum and fife, the performer on the first-named instrument being the prettiest girl amongst the whole battalion. Her warlike occupation did not appear to render her at all insensible to the claims afforded by her beauty, of which she seemed quite as sensible as the more frivolous portion of the sex could possibly be, showing in, too, by the same coquetries. These Amazons have distinguished themselves very brilliantly in action, an old officer in the Nizam's service declaring that he had seen them return to the charge when the European force had been driven back; fortunately for British credit, the troops thus stigmatised were not our countrymen, and the nation suffering this disgrace shall be nameless. No longer called upon to engage in the field, the duties of the female battalion are now confined to home service, where they are employed in guarding the zenanas of the great officers of Government. With the exception of the drummer or drummeress, before named, the ladies composing the corps were a hard featured, weather-beaten set, well calculated for the task of repulsion, and only interesting on account of the singular nature of their profession. The cavalcade which attended the resident upon this occasion, though neither so extensive nor so tumultuous as a native suwarree, was equally effective, forming a steady, compact body, and altogether making a very good appearance. A squadron of cavalry formed the van; these were followed by a party belonging to the escort of the residency, silver sticks, banner-bearers, and the Resident himself on a state elephant, caparisoned with crimson velvet, embroidered with gold; a distinguished guest in an open palkee, forming a sort of chair, surrounded by silver sticks with chowries, beating the air on either side. The staff, and other less exalted personages, followed, some on horseback and some in palanquins; and the rear was brought up by another detachment of foot, and a squadron of cavalry, with the principal servants attached to the residency mounted.

A few days subsequently, the party again went in similar procession to see the principal mosque, which is built upon the model of the celebrated structure at Mecca. It is a large stone edifice, destitute of beauty of ornament, and not remarkable for any thing worthy of admiration; and the visitors who, possessing a taste for architecture, derived gratification from the buildings of Hyderabad, were much more struck with the venerable Cher Minar, or four minarets—a curious piece of antiquity raised upon the spot where the four principal streets of the city concentrate. It is built upon four grand arches, through which the thoroughfares run; above are several stories of apartments, formerly employed as a kind of college, each being a seminary for the study of different arts and sciences. No longer, however, a seat of learning, these chambers are now turned into watchhouses. Above, and towering on high, rise the four lofty minarets, whence the building derives its name, the effect of the whole from either of the four streets being very grand and striking. The city of Hyderabad is extensive, and said to be exceedingly populous; the streets are, however, in general, narrow and dirty and although there are many large and good houses belonging to Mohamedans of rank and property, they present nothing in the exterior except high dead walls. The number of mosques and public buildings is not very great, and it is inferior in that respect to places of much less celebrity. The gardens and garden-houses in the neighbourhood of Hyderabad make up in great measure for the deficiency, being very splendid; the Rung Mahl, the native palace before mentioned, where the ladies of the minister's family were entertained, and which is attached to the residency, was built by Colonel Kirkpatrick for a princess whom he espoused, and forms a beautiful spot affording a perfect model of an eastern seraglio, which, when illuminated upon a festal occasion, presented a more lively idea of the enchanted palaces of the Arabian tales than any thing that the party had previously witnessed. It is enclosed after the Asiatic manner by high walls, the centre containing a large marble basin filled with water, and fed by numerous fountains, their silvery columns being mingled with stately cypress trees. The pavilions, galleries and terraces around, are built and ornamented in the richest style of oriental architecture, that beautiful carved trellis work, which always produces so exquisite an effect, frequently intervening, while the painting and gilding are equally profuse and striking. The floors are covered with Persian carpets, furnished with cushions richly embroidered in gold; English lustres and mirrors lending their aid at the reception of company, to complete the brilliancy of the scene. The prodigious number of lights and their tasteful arrangement produced an illumination of the most perfect kind, shedding a soft and chastened lustre upon the flowers and waving foliage around. All no entertainment can in India be complete without a nautch, the party, on the evening which they spent at the Rung Mubl, were called upon to admire the graces of not fewer than fifty dancing girls, who, with their attendant musicians, performed for the amusement of the company. After the inferior stars had appeared and disappeared, the grand constellation of Hyderabad enlightened the scene. Talent, as we before have had occasion to state, when once established in India, runs no risk of being eclipsed by the competition of younger aspirants; in fact, the longer a person has appeared before an audience, the more highly do they seem to rise in public estimation. The prima donna assoluta of Hyderabad was said to be nearly sixty years old, and to have shone the reigning beauty for the last half century. Her countenance, though not destitute of the traces of age, retained the marks of that loveliness for which she had been famous, and the fourth of her voice and air with which she sang and danced, were perfectly surprising. During her public career, this favourite of nature and of fortune had amassed very considerable wealth, contriving also to possess herself of great influence in the place of her abode. Her dress on the present occasion was of the richest and most costly description, and she wore jewels which were valued at three lacs of rupees, or £30,000. Elegance and taste are very frequently sacrificed in the female Asiatic costume to a grand display of precious stones, which are heaped together in every possible way, without the slightest regard being paid to the style of the arrangement. The European portion of the company, after having sufficiently admired the lady and her ornaments, gladly adjourned to an adjoining piece of ground appropriated to another oriental feature, a display of fire-works, for which the natives are famous, and which went off with great éclat.

The splendid remains of the tombs of the kings of Golconda are within an easy distance from Hyderabad; and other agreeable excursions may be made to places which, if not equally attractive, afford a pleasant variety to the scene. In a north-easterly direction from the suburbs, we arrive at the extensive ruins of a city and a palace, now the abode of antelopes, which are preserved by the Nizam, and protected by game laws of great severity, the penalty of loss of sight being attached to the slaughter of one of these animals. They are, in consequence, very numerous, and, being destitute of fear, exceedingly familiar. They are constantly disturbed by the leopards inhabiting the neighbouring wilds; and it was in consequence of a foray of on these spotted poachers, that the expedition, joined by the party on the residency, went out. The scene was wild and singular, and productive of ideas allied to melancholy, ruined by the completion of the habitation of civilized man, even in its most simple enjoyments, now waste, and abandoned to beasts of the chase. In the same direction, and nearer to the city, are gardens, laid out under the superintendence of the French officers, formerly in the Nizam's service who occupied them at the time; there is a tomb erected to the memory of one of these gentlemen, M. Raymond, presenting a memorial strange attended by melancholy reminiscences to the exile. The neighbourhood of Hyderabad is embraced for these extensive tracts reserved of nature—which are so necessary in Asiatic countries to ensure the supply of one of the greatest blessings of existence, at the failure of rain. The road to the encampments of the portion of the subsidiary force stationed in the vicinity of the capital, runs for upwards of a mile over one of the gigantic dams, constructed across a valley, for the purpose of embanking the stream. This part of the journey is very agreeable, the country on one side being richly cultivated, while a broad sheet of water stretches on the other, spreading itself many miles in circumference; there is a small English boat upon it, furnished with oars and sails, belonging to the minister, who, however, seldom ventures on so completely out of his element. The party very gladly availed themselves of the opportunity of a sail on this artificial lake, breakfasting merrily in tents pitched upon the bank, and rejoicing over the sight of a wide expanse of water, rare amid their wastes in the interior.—Journal of the Asiatic Society.

Calcutta.

COMPARATIVE MORTALITY OF THE INHABITANTS.

In the Journal of the Asiatic Society for October, is a paper on the population of Calcutta, and the comparative mortality of the different classes of its inhabitants. From these tables it appears, that the Mussulmaun population is the healthiest, the deaths being 1 in 30 annually. The Europeans and Eurasians come next, showing a mortality of 1 in 28, the Hindoos 1 in 14, while the Portuguese and French exhibit the frightful proportion of 1 in 8. The natural decline of Indian inhabitants have not increased for the last twenty years, though their numbers must at least have doubled. This shews a remarkable improvement in the healthiness of Calcutta, for the diseases fatal to Europeans, are chiefly those incident to the climate. The Portuguese are amongst the poorest, and suffer great privations and hardships, but still the mortality amongst them is stated as high. When we should expect to find it in the poorest of the population, and that it will be found much longer than stated, as the deaths and burials are more likely to be accurately given than the number of the inhabitants. The great mortality amongst the Hindoos may be partly accounted for, from the number of strangers who resort to the place, whose deaths are all reported, though not those of the natives, they do not increase the population. The anonymous compiler says, that it may be partly accounted for by the Hindoo population of Calcutta consisting more of families than the Mahomedan, and therefore including a much larger proportion of infant life. And he thinks the same remark will hold good of Portuguese as compared to Europeans. We doubt this, for the proportion of families amongst Europeans and Indians is very large, and infant mortality considerable. The Europeans arrive in India in a marriageable age, and they generally quit the country before the decline of life, which is one reason why the mortality amongst them is lower in proportion to other classes than it ought to be, the termination of European life, taking place in so many cases in another country. We have no tables yet sufficiently extensive to enable us to form even an approximate estimate of the value of Hindoo life, but there is every reason to believe, that it is very low as compared to European or Europe, and even in the most unhealthy countries. This is not so much owing to climate, as to the extreme indigence of the mass of the population and the want of any public provision for their support in time of distress. The diseases, too, which attack them are not treated with any skill, and their mortality probably rather increased than checked by the interference of native practitioners. It would be well if tables similar to those now published could be compiled in every town in the British territories, for although imperfect, they would form a basis on which more scientific and accurate reports could afterwards be placed. We do not know whether the population returns made by order of Government have yet completed, but if they are, we hope they will soon be published, and not suffered to remain locked up in the office to which they have been addressed.—Englishman, December 20.

AFFAIRS OF QUEDAH.

The latest accounts from Quedah inform us that the Malayan forces in the interior consisting of seven thousand men each, and which had been sent to the conquest of Medelong and Sangora, had been entirely successful. —Madelong in the district of Lompang had fallen into their hands after a slight resistance; the Siamese having fled and taken refuge at Sangora supposing it a place of greater strength and security. Here a considerable concourse of people had assembled previous to the arrival of the Malayan chief TUANKO MAHAMED TAHER, who, after some hostile preparations which occupied his attention for two or three days, commenced the attack upon Sangora.—Hostilities would appear to have commenced in the evening, and been continued partially throughout the night and renewed the following morning with the utmost determination, until about eight o'clock when the place was finally carried and a terrible slaughter ensued.—Those who escaped sought refuge in the jungles, and, agreeably to usual practice among these people, no quarter was asked or given, with the exception of the women and children, who, to the number of upwards of one thousand five hundred, were transmitted to Quedah with immense booty.—Quedah is said to be full of Siamese prisoners of all descriptions distributed amongst the villages.—Sangora, the renowned Sangora, is now but a heap of ashes having been burned to the ground by the Malays. It is stated also that great quantities of grain and other articles of provision were found in this place that would be of use to the conquerors. The victorious army thus flushed with victory were making forced marches upon Ligore, the strong and last frontier town formerly under the dominion of the Malayan Rajahs. The Malays express their determination to conquer Ligore, and from the contempt they have learned to feel for the Siamese are confident of its fall very shortly.—Penang Gazette, January 26.

Report

of the Provincial authorities on the Opium-trade to the Imperial Government, in 1836.

The following is part of a report from the Governor and Lieut. Governor of Canton to the Imperial Government, on Heu naetsze's memorial. This document is dated 7th September 1836, and comparing the opinions therein expressed with the maxims now pursued, the change brought about in two years and a half only will appear sufficiently great. We have taken this extract from a collection of documents relating to the opium-question, republished from the Chinese Repository.

"4. The traffic in opium must be conducted on the same principle as the traffic in foreign commodities; it is unnecessary to place it under a separate department. The first principle of commerce is, to adopt those measures which will yield the greatest possible amount of gain. Each one has his own method of doing this, what one rejects another may seek for; nor is it possible to bring all to one opinion. Now if the importation of opium be permitted, as formerly, and it becomes an article of commerce, as a medicinal drug, the traffic in it will in no wise differ from the traffic in other articles of commerce; and if a special department be erected for it, there is reason to fear that monopolizing and underhand practices will gradually result therefrom. It is right therefore to let the foreign merchants make their own election, and engage what Hong merchants they will to pass their cargoes at the custom house and pay their duties for them. To establish one general department for the purpose is unnecessary. By this arrangement crafty individuals may be prevented from taking advantage and extorting exorbitant profits, and benefit may accrue to both the foreign and the hong merchants.

"5. This amount of duties should be continued the same as formerly; no increase is called for; and all extortionate demands, and illegal fees should be interdicted. In the tariff of maritime customs for Canton, opium is rated at a duty of three tsels per hundred catties; to which we must add ten per cent. or three mace, for loss in melting; and as peculage fee, and fee per package, according to the report formerly made of public and legal fees, eight candareens and six cash. Although there are three kinds of opium, the 'black, earth,' the 'white skinned,' and the 'red skinned,' differing in value, yet the duty per catty may be the same on all. These arrangements are made on the principle that if the duty be heavy it will be evaded, and smuggling will ensue; whereas if it be light, all will prefer security to smuggling; and that if a fixed charge be imposed, the officers of the customs will be unable to intermeddle. The same clear views were entertained by our predecessors, when they established these regulations; and it will be well to conform to the amount of duty fixed by them, without any addition. But there is reason to fear that when the prohibitions are first taken off, the servants of the custom-house, hunting for petty gains, may under various pretexts by on illegal fees, making heavy by their exactions what as a legal duty is light, and thereby losing sight of the principle that they are to show kindness to men from afar. If this take place, the natural result too will be, that the means of legal importation will be avoided, and contrivances to import clandestinely will be resorted to. Perspicuous and strict proclamations should therefore be issued, making it generally known, that, beyond the real duty, not the smallest fraction is to be exacted; and that offenders shall be answerable to the law against extortionate underlings receiving money under false pretexts.

"6. No price should be fixed on the drug. It is a settled principle of commerce, that when prices are very low, there is a tendency to rise; and when high, a tendency to fall. Prices then depend on the supply that is procurable of any article, and the demand that exists for it in the market; they cannot be limited by enactments to any fixed rate. Now, though the prohibition of opium be repealed, it will not be a possible thing to force men who buy at a high price, to sell at a cheap one. Besides, it is common to men to prize things of high value, and to underrate those of less worth. When therefore opium was severely interdicted, and classed among rarities, every one had an opportunity to indulge in over-reaching desires of gain; but when once the interdicts are withdrawn, and opium universally admitted, it will become a common medicinal drug, easily to be obtained.

'The gem, when in the casket, prized,
When common, is despised!'

So the price of opium, if left to itself, will fall from day to day; whereas if rated at a fixed value, great difficulty will be found in procuring it at the price at which it is rated. It is reasonable and right, therefore, to leave the price to fluctuate, according to the circumstances of the times, and not to fix any rate.

"7. All coasting vessels of every province, when carrying opium, should be required to have sealed manifests from the custom-house of Canton. By the existing regulations of commerce, all commanders of coasting vessels, without exception are required, whenever they have purchased any foreign goods, to apply at the chief custom-house at Canton and obtain a sealed manifest, stating the amount of each kind of goods, so as to prevent any clandestine purchases. There are also to be provided from thence with a communication addressed to the authorities in every province and at all sea-ports, calling on them to search closely; and if they find any foreign goods not having the stamp of the Canton custom-house on them, to regard such goods as smuggled, to try the offenders according to law, and to confiscate both vessels and cargo. The law on this point is most precise. Now when the interdict on opium is revealed, it will become an article of ordinary traffic, like any other foreign commodity, and subject therefore to the same regulations. All commanders of coasting vessels wishing to purchase opium, should therefore be required to report their wishes to the Hong merchants, bringing goods to barter for it, and should then apply at the custom-house for a manifest and for a communication from the superintendent of customs to the authorities in all the provinces aforesaid. Thus there being documents for reference, both in this and the sea-board provinces, the native coasting vessels may be prevented from having any clandestine dealings with the foreign ships at sea, and from smuggling away silver.

"8. The strict prohibitions existing against the cultivation of the popy, among the people, may be in some measure relaxed. Opium possesses soothing properties, but is powerful in its effects. Its soothing properties render it a luxury, greatly esteemed; but its powerful effects are such as readily to induce disease. The accounts given of the manner in which it is prepared among the foreigners are various: but in all probability it is not unmixed with things of poisonous quality. It is said that of late years, it has been clandestinely prepared by natives, by boiling down the juicy matter from the poppy; and that thus prepared, it possesses milder properties, and is less injurious without losing its soothing influence. To shut out the importation of it by foreigners, there is no better plan than to sanction the cultivation and preparation of it in the empire. It would seem right therefore to relax, in some means, the existing severe prohibitions, and to dispense with the close scrutiny now called for to hinder its cultivation. If it be apprehended, that the simple people may leave the stem and stay of life to amuse themselves with the twigs and branches, thereby injuring the interests of agriculture, it is only necessary to issue perspicuous orders, requiring them to confine the cultivation of the poppy to the tops of hills and mounds, and other unoccupied spots of ground, and on no account to introduce it into their grain-fields, to the injury of that on which their subsistence depends.

"9. All officers, scholars, and soldiers should be strictly prohibited and disallowed the smoking of opium. We find in the original memorial of Heu Naetse, the vice-president of the sacrificial court, the following observations: "It will be found on examination that the smokers of opium are idle, lazy vagrants, having no useful purpose before them. And though some smokers are to be found who have overstepped the threshold of age, yet they do not attain to the long life of other men. But new births daily increase the population of the empire, and there is no cause to apprehend a diminution therein. With regard to officers, civil and military, and to the scholars and common soldiers, the first are called on to fulfil the duties of their rank and attend to the public good; the others, to cultivate their talents and become fit for public usefulness. None of them, therefore, should be permitted to contract a practice so bad, or to walk in a path which will only lead to the utter waste of their time and destruction of their property." If the laws be rendered over strict, then offenders, in order to escape the penalty, will be tempted to screen one another. This, assuredly, is not the good plan as to relax the prohibitions, and act upon men's feelings of shame and self-condemnation. In the latter case, gradual reformation may be expected as the result of conviction. Hence the original memorial also alludes to a reformation noiselessly effected. The suggestions therein contained, are worthy of regard and of adoption. Hereafter no attention should be paid to the purchase and use of opium among the people. But if officers, civil or military, scholars, or common soldiers, secretly purchase and smoke the drug, they should be immediately degraded and dismissed, as standing warnings to all who will not arouse and renovate themselves. Orders to this effect should be promulgated in all the provinces, and strictly enjoined in every civil and military office, by the superiors on their subordinates, to be faithfully obeyed by every one. And all who, paying apparent obedience, secretly transgress this interdict, should be delivered over by the high provincial authorities to the Civil or Military Board, to be subjected to severe investigation.

The following has been kindly handed to us by a friend, and from it will be seen that Chinese tradesmen who have succeeded in establishing a name are subject to the same impositions as their brethren in Europe.

"Translation of a Bar Gold and Jewel Manufacturer's Card in which a Bar of Gold was enveloped.

"This shop was opened during the 5th Year of the Reign of Yungching, A. D. 1730, and has established for itself a never dying celebrity. The gauze it sells are genuine, and the prices true and fixed. It has followed an upright, faithful course, without ever resorting to deception. By reason of this, like a fleet horse, its renown has flown through every province. Already since its commencement has generation followed generation. But who would have supposed that now it has been discovered, shameless wretches, overstepping the bounds of propriety, have rashly assumed our sign, their sole aim being to obtain gain by deceit. Newly merchants have also ingeniously intriguing vagabonds, who select characters and phrases from our advertisements, or imitate our expressions, and fabricate goods resembling ours, of a cheap sort, which they dispose of to merchants, who are thereby deceived and swindled. Again, the better to carry out their false pretensions, they implicate, by borrowing the sound of our name. By such fraudulent knavery an hundred schemes are planned and executed. To annihilate these, the extreme of resentment and earnestness should be manifested. Heretofore an examination of such has been neglected, and for years they have been overlooked in the dark and muddy pool of passing events. But it having become too apparent and barefaced, information has been laid before the Government officers, that they may investigate and punish where it is deserved. Now, during the 23rd year of the reign (A. D. 1821) of Kea king and in the 4th moon, we adopted the Bamboo Scroll Card, which may be distinguished from all counterfeits. Hereafter goods not accompanied by this card, are base imitations. Therefore it is necessary, that all merchants who patronise our goods, should become acquainted with our card, and never forget our private names—Yih-me, Hoping, and Tih lung Wang ke, and the small seal at the side. Not any, are there, with this, but which put deception out of the question. It is real and sincere.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 22th April.

Saturday, 30th April.—This day Capt. Elliot and the Dutch and American Consuls had a communication from the Yumchae again requiring of them to sign the Opium-bond of which the following is a translation.

Edict

Lin, high imperial commissioner and governor of Hookwang. Tang, a president of the board of war and governor of the two provinces Kwang tung and Kwangse, and E, vice president of the board of war and Lieutenant governor of Kwang tung, issue this Edict to the English Superintendent Elliot and the deputy Superintendent Johnston, the American Consul Snow, the Dutch Consul van Basel, and the foreigners of every country, let them make themselves fully acquainted herewith.

Whereas we, the high Imperial commissioner, the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor, did receive the great august emperor's mandatory will, to interdict Opium, and to cut off the sources whence it comes, accordingly we gave commands to the said Superintendents and Consuls, by them to be enjoined on all the foreigners, to take the opium accumulated in the store ships and make an entire surrender of it; now it appears that, in obedience to those commands, the surrender is being made, evincing respectfully submission, worthy of praise.

Hereafter, for ever, foreigners will never more be allowed to bring Opium into this country. The decree is already passed, and if they do so, they shall be capitally punished, and their cargoes confiscated.

You, the English superintendent Elliot, have desired that warning may be given before executions, and now again declare that you will act in obedience to the law, the period being indulgently extended. This your statement seems reasonable; but as to the request that a period of five months be allowed for the Indian ships, and ten months for those direct from England, these periods are indeed too long.

Further it appears that the American Consul Snow also has declared that while residing here he always feels obligated to conform to the laws of the Empire, and that hereafter the merchants of his country, acting in obedience to the new regulations will not presume to traffic in Opium. This likewise seems perfectly proper. But he adds, if they bring any Opium to Canton, I will communicate to them the prohibitory regulations, requiring them to return to their country, which does not at all agree with what is said about acting in conformity to the law, for, if he announces to them the prohibitory regulations, how can he stop with merely ordering them to return to their own country?

The Dutch Consul van Basel, also, states that he has received the commands to give the bond, in terms like these:—After the autumn of this year, if any ships come to Canton, and on examination are found to have Opium on board, both ship and cargo shall be confiscated, and the parties left to suffer death, by the law of the country."* On this occasion he is ready to obligate himself that hereafter he will never trade in opium, and that according to the tenor of the edict he will report to the great officers of his government, that they may submit the case to their sovereign, this is nearly in accordance with what is required in the bond, but, then, in his address he speaks about the lives of his countrymen being involved, which is still inconsistent with what is reasonable. It should be known that this severity of the Celestial Empire's laws, extending even to capital punishment, is only in reference to the traffic in Opium. If therefore all the foreigners, in compliance with this, never bring any more Opium, then there can be no more violations of the law, and how, in that case, can there be any involving of life?

With reference to Elliot's request, the period ought to be changed and fixed at four months for the Indian ships, and at eight for the direct ships, at the expiration of which periods they must conform to the new regulations. If within these periods, they presume to bring Opium, they shall according to the existing laws, surrender it all to the Government, but the parties shall be freed from punishment and their other cargo from confiscation, this will be equitable and just.

Again, special and earnest commands are given in general to all foreigners, that, in accordance with the prescribed form, they all present bonds duly signed and attested, thereby evincing on the part of every one a mind respectfully submissive. The an honorable commerce will be lastingly continued. Let there be no obstinacy cherished, to their re injury. A special Edict.

Tsoukwang, 19th year, 9th moon, 6th day,
April 19th, 1839.

The Superintendent and Consuls have, we believe sent an answer stating that they can by no means sign the bond required of them.

Sunday, 31st April.—It is clear this day that up to the 18th 8500 chests have been delivered.

Monday, 32nd April.—This morning the linguists went round to the several houses to note down the inmates, in order to ascertain what number of servants is to be allotted to each individual, as in future only one Chinese servant will be allowed to each foreigner. It was also said this morning that the passage boats in front of the factories had been released, and were now allowed to proceed down the river—this it not, however, the case. Chinese will have information this evening of 10,000 Chests having been delivered.

Tuesday 23rd April.—We hear that up to the evening of the 19th 11,800 Chests were delivered and that deliveries for the present had been suspended by Mr. Johnston, waiting for directions from Capt. Elliot, the despatches of the latter not having reached the former (having probably been detained in time to avoid any more delay. Though the better half of the Opium placed at the Yumchae's disposal has now been delivered, the passage boats are not allowed to run, nor can any one yet leave Canton, and the old, and all but obsolete regulations about servants are again so strictly enforced, that great many of them are still absent, probably through fear of punishment from Mandarins; thus the fulfilment of the Commissioners promises as to the return of servants as soon as 5000 chests should have been delivered has been rendered partially nugatory, so that of the passage-boats to run after delivery of 10,000 chests altogether evaded. There is a rumour which is said to have taken its origin from the Hong merchants that it was the intention of the governors to keep as hostages eleven individuals until the whole of the Opium shall have been delivered—how far there may be any foundation for it is difficult to conjecture. Three lascars said to be taken at or near Choo chow foo, a city in this province but near the border of Fuh keen, were taken to the Consoo-house yesterday, and there examined. We have not heard what the result of the examination may have been, nor what ship they belong to.

Wednesday 24th April.—This morning despatches from Mr. Johnston, but of no later date than the 19th, were received; The Yumchae, hearing that H. M. S. Larne had returned to her anchorage at Chumpee, ordered her to go away, but Capt. Blake did not comply with these orders. It is also said that the commissioner requires that the Opium to be delivered up shall be discharged from 22 vessels in the bays to save information, contained it, instead of the fear that have hitherto come to Chumpee. We believe, to simplify deliveries, many vessels which had but small quantities preferred transshipping them outside on board vessels bound for Chumpee to going there themselves. These misunderstandings we hear have suspended the deliveries for a day or two, but intelligence has this day been received of their having been again resumed. The passage boats are however not yet allowed to run, and servants do not stay over-night in houses where the comprador is not furnished with chops from Macao and from the Kwang chow foo each as we published in last week's paper. This evening the Leun taou (Commissioner of grain), one of the great officers of the province, came to the front of the factories. He traversed the square in his chair followed by three officers on horseback, and a number of officials and servants on foot. He went up to the creek bounding the factories on the east, where he alighted from his chair, and returned on foot by the Dutch and British factories, opposite the gate of the latter of which the Hong merchants have, within the garden, constructed their guard room. They, having had early notice of the intended visit, mustered strong on the occasion, with robes of office, mandarin-caps etc. and assumed a most humble demeanour, with their hands folded on their breast when the great man passed.

Thursday, 25th April.—Nothing authentic heard from the coast.

Friday, 26th April.—No despatches have yet been received from Chumpee, and it is therefore not known with any degree of certainty what deliveries are proceeding. The latest letters from Superintendent has from Mr. Johnston are dated the 19th, and at that time the deliveries amounted as before stated to about 11,800 Chests. The Chinese will have information of more having been delivered, and this is probable, if the report be true that six other vessels have lately arrived at Chumpee to surrender their Opium. The tardiness with which advices from below reach Canton seems to justify the belief that delay is the Commissioner's present object; he is probably waiting for despatches from Peking, in answer to his informing his Government of Capt. Elliot's surrender of 11,000 Chests. A first express takes 15 days to go to Peking, and as many to return; the Opium having been given up on the 17th of last month, it follows that making allowance for some delay to prepare answers at Peking, these may be received by the Yumchae in three or four days. The three hongs whose detention at the Consoo-house is mentioned above, have been examined, and it appears that they belonged to one of the small vessels engaged on the coast, and they probably run away. They are we understand, to be delivered over to the care of the principal Parsee-house here.

Saturday morning 27th April.—Every thing remains as before—the boats are not allowed to run, and the factories are as strictly guarded as ever. The unseasonable weather we have experienced since Thursday night last, deserves notice. The day had been very fine, with the thermometer at about 84°, when at about 8 o'clock at night it began suddenly to blow hard from the northward; the gale continued all night, but moderated towards morning, producing a great change in the temperature, the glass falling to below 80°—the northerly wind prevailed all yesterday, and blew fresh again last night, and this morning whilst we are writing, at 8 A. M. the thermometer is as low as 56°.

Our journal of this week will be found void of important occurrences, but whilst our imprisonment lasts, we shall continue noting down the events of each day, considering it the manner the most likely to give a true picture of our situation.

* We are informed that H. E. the Yumchae in recording this answer from the Dutch Consul, has quoted merely part of a sentence, the whole tenor of the Consul's despatch to the Commissioner being a decided refusal to sign the bond in question.

CAUTION.—Two valuable eight day Chronometers, one by French, and the other by Wyldenham, the first No. 4476, and the latter No 1262; and two small gold Watches, (one by McCabe, maker of the other unknown) having been intrusted by me to ROBERT EDWARDS who lately left China, to be sent to London for repair; and he not having accounted to me for one or either of them; the Public are hereby cautioned against purchasing said Chronometers and Watches as they are my property. JAS. P. STURGIS.

Canton, 24th January, 1839.

NOTICE—With reference to an advertisement in the Canton Press headed "Caution" and dated 24th January, we feel it our duty to notify publicity, as we have already represented to Mr. J. P. Sturgis personally, in November last; that we have been instructed by Mr. Robert Edwards, late of Canton, to dispose of the two Chronometers alluded to in that advertisement, in the event of the said Mr. Sturgis still retaining possession of a box of Dollars, the property of the said Mr. Edwards; the proceeds of the Chronometers to meet the value of the said box of Dollars, and the surplus, if any, to be handed over to the said Mr. Sturgis.

As the constituted attorneys of Mr. R Edwards, we have to state that the box of Dollars referred to herein is retained by the aforenamed Mr. Sturgis for an unacknowledged claim in 1833, which he has on Mr. Edwards; and further we know, that the watches mentioned in the said advertisement are not yet returned from England.

N. B. The cubit is 14⅓ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4320; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Comprador Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Taels or $ 2225. Linguists fees $ 1734 and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939.80., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 250 paid to the Linguists—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

ART. II. Ophthalmic Hospital at Canton: the ninth report, being for the quarterly term ending December 31st, 1838. By the Rev. P. PARKER, M. D. From the Chinese Repository for March.

To the friends and supporters of the Medical Missionary Society in China, the following report will afford new pleasure. It evinces the steadily advancing influence and importance of the Society's operations. The growing confidence reposed by the people in the skill of the foreign surgeon has been strongly displayed in the degree of the loss of limbs—although this is so greatly opposed to their prejudices, as well as to their principles, that the body, received perfect in form from one's parents, should be committed to no less perfection of form to its lost resting place in the womb of earth. A Chinese female (the first, so far as we know, at least in modern times) has submitted to the amputation of her right arm; and four others have undergone extirpation of their breasts, on account of cancerous disease to an advanced stage.—Their increasing reliance on the western physician's knowledge of disease and its cures has been shown, in the reception of an unusually large number of official persons, some of them men of high station.

Among these may be mentioned Wang, acting judicial commissioner of this province, who was first upon the commercial house of one of the hong merchants. The chief object of this gentleman was to be enabled to re-appear, and report of himself to his superiors, that want of health might not stand in the way of his promotion. He was immensely corpulent, and his chair was carried by four bearers (the number allotted to his rank), with an equal number of supporters. His complaint was hemiplegia. His desires were very moderate: it would entirely satisfy him if he could but walk twenty rods, and be enabled to go through the requisite ceremonies of kneeling and bowing in the presence of superiors. As he is still under treatment, the particulars of his case will be given hereafter. Another visitor of rank was Lew, the chief magistrate of the district in which the factories are placed, and the officer, consequently, who appeared as acceptably to foreigners—to disperse the mob collected before the factories—on the memorable 12th of December, when a little longer delay might have placed the lives and property of foreigners in imminent jeopardy. The application of this officer is especially interesting, as, from his situation, he is the proper authority to take cognizance of the hospital, had it fallen, as an innovation, under the displeasure of the local government. But by personally received aid from it, and by speaking of it in terms of commendation to his friends, he is virtually sanctioning it, and giving it influence among the people, by whom it is extensively known that through it he has been essentially benefitted. His nephew and several of his friends have also been received as patients, and some are still under medical treatment. In case of Lew, I will be likewise introduced Hingna, a footsoog or colonel, who had recently been in command of the forces stationed in defence of the capital of Kwangse, and was then on his way to Peking. This officer was suffering from rheumatism: as he did not return a second time, he was probably compelled to continue his journey to Peking sooner than he had at first anticipated. One other officer may here be named—Low, sungsze (a civilian, whose function is nearly that a European aid-de-camp) to the governor of these provinces. Unlike the others just mentioned—who have preferred their requests for medical attendance through Howqua, or some other of the Hong merchants, and have arranged to be seen at the commercial houses of those gentlemen, in preference to coming with the multitude to the hospital—this officer came to the institution, and on one occasion remained to witness the operations that were being performed. He was much interested to see the depression of a cataract, to hear the patient, who had been blind for several years, exclaim, immediately on the removal of the needle, 'I see light,' and to observe her count, in a minute after, the fingers held up before her. He was particular in his inquiries, wishing to know how long she had been blind, if much harm would not follow the operation, &c. On his return, a w. h after, he found the patient had already been discharged, not the slightest inflammation having followed, and her sleep of night not having been in the least degree disturbed.

These encouraging circumstances are not interesting, it ought not to be supposed that all prejudice is yet overcome. Instances to the contrary occasionally occur. At the particular desire of a friend, a brother of one of the Hong merchants, who was considered dangerously ill, requested to be attended, at his own house. He was found very sick, but apparently not beyond the power of European medicine to recover. A favorable prognostic was given, which had the undesirable effect of encouraging him to try native remedies still longer. The danger of a day's delay was pointed out: it might involve fatal consequences: it would be the height of folly to defer calling a fire-engine to a burning house until after all other means of extinguishing the flames should be first tried—an argument likely to be well understood by a Chinese: but remonstrances were in vain. "The foreigner's prescription," said the sufferer, "I cannot read, and how can I know what he is giving me." It is in accordance with Chinese habits to see the prescriptions of their own physicians, many of men acquainted with books, many have studied the different medical theories that are upheld among them, and pretend to some knowledge of the pulse, the distance of which affords diagnosis, and the appropriate remedies. Yielding to his prejudices, the patient, after trying a little longer his own physicians, died a victim to his folly. Just before his death, he desired the foreign physician to be again called in, but it was then too late.

The first instance of death, supervening upon an operation, the circumstances of which will be hereafter given, has occurred during the past term, and the result also illustrates the degree of confidence that generally exists. The husband was asleep by the patient's side when she died. On being informed of her decease, he pointed upward, saying, "heaven has determined it," and so far from regretting the operation, he justly remarked, "she would not have lived so long as she has done, but for the medicine and care she has received at the hospital." A similar event in any European hospital could not have been attended with less unpleasantness, or have been better understood. The same operation, too, has since been submitted to with all the confidence and cheerfulness manifested at previous ones.

The expenses for the term have been as follows:—

Rent of hospital	$125
Board, fuel, &c.	109
Native assistants	78
Medicines, &c.	14.50
	326.50

During the months of July, August, and September, the hospital was closed and under repair, and that at Macao was meanwhile opened, as shown by the Report of that hospital already published.

The patients that have been admitted during the term are 505; the aggregate since the opening of the institution is 4309.

Latest Europe News.

From the Englishman Extraordinary 24th Feb.

The Overland Mail has at length arrived, bringing intelligence to the 26th December. We extract the notice of its arrival from the Bombay papers, and reprint such parts of our London Extras as time will permit.

Aden fell to our arms on the 19th ultimo after a sharp conflict and some loss of life. We shall give the whole particulars in our morning's paper.

Sir James Carnac had been sworn in as Governor of this Presidency, and was to leave England in January. Mr. Martin T. Smith succeeds him in the Directorship; and Sir Erskine Deakin had announced himself as a candidate for Bombay.

The East India Company have given notice that they have determined to suspend their payments to China after the next season, 1839-40, reserving to themselves the option of resuming it, should circumstances render it expedient to do so. They have also determined to limit the remittances through China in the season 300,000£.

OVERLAND DISPATCHES.—On Thursday afternoon a messenger arrived at the East India House with the Company's dispatches only, down to the 1st Nov. from Bombay, bringing confirmation of the anticipated movements of the army, which were in actual progress

This dispatch was brought by the Hugh Lindsay steamer, which left Bombay on the 1st Nov., and arrived at Suez on the 24th; it afterwards reached Alexandria on the 29th, and was taken on the 4th Dec. by H. M. steamer Phœnix in Malta, from whence it has been brought by an express messenger.

The public letters, therefore, cannot be expected until the 21st instant, except those transmitted via Marseilles, which must be received on the 17th or 20th instant.—Atlas, Dec. 22.

(From the Bombay Gazette Extra, Feb. 15.)

The intelligence by the English steamer is up to 26th Dec., and three days later via France. The day the Atalanta left, a French mail 13 days later was due at Suez, but from some cause, as yet unknown to us, it did not reach in time, and as the vessel had waited for several days longer than the appointed time, Captain Lowe did not think himself justified in delaying her any longer. Mr. Waghorn had relays of camels posted on the desert, which would have conveyed his portion of the mail to Suez in 54 hours after its arrival at Alexandria: and it is much to be regretted that the gentleman's efforts were not attended with success. To show the zeal of Mr. Waghorn's agent in Egypt, we subjoin the following note on the subject to the address of an officer of the Atalanta.

"I write you in haste, by express Courier, which starts now at 11 o'clock to ride hard and be with you at dawn of day to morrow morning, to inform you, that by a letter from Alexandria to Colonel Campbell from Mr. Thurburn, the French Steamer, due on 21st had not arrived up to master' but was of course hourly expected.—I regret this contretemps, but as our courier between this and Alexandria, and our relays on the desert are placed, I shall run the Mail (come when it will) so fast as I can to Suez, even if I knew you were off—I hope that Captain Lowe will wait a few hours, and the moment it comes, there will be no delay in Egypt. The French Steamer should have come in yesterday, and the Mail is due here to night. It shall go on instanter, so for heaven's sake wait a few hours.

The weather at Alexandria was bad. It blew a gale by the last accounts, and the probable cause of the non appearance of the French Steamer on the 24th is that on a lee shore he did not like to run at the close of the day, but would keep a good offing all night, and run in at daylight on the 25th.

Depend on my sending the mail if I get it, and if I hear of delay you shall be informed if I send you 50 couriers.

MONEY MARKET AND CITY INTELLIGENCE.

Monday Evening, Dec. 23.—Some notice has been drawn in the city to the circumstance that the French Minister of Commerce has addressed to the commercial chambers of all the French ports, a circular, stating that a letter, dated Bombay, informed him 'that most English houses there addressed urgent demands to England for an early supply of provisions; but that he gave to the French houses this early intimation, that they might send them out before the supplies from England can arrive there.

This circular letter of the French Minister was written the day that the mail from Bombay, by way of Alexandria and Marseilles, arrived at Paris, and it has been remarked upon it as very unlikely that such a letter should have been written from a French house at Bombay to a mercantile house in France, because it is improbable that a French house should know that most English houses have sent such orders home for corn a named articles; and, if it were so, a mercantile house in France is not likely to have gone to the Minister of Commerce with the letter, that he might issue a circular to encourage speculations which the house would naturally wish to make itself, with as little competition as possible.

Hence the conclusion arrived at is, that the French Minister must have read the contents of the English letters from Bombay passing through Paris to England, and also that the letters from England to the East Indies are made the same use of. This view of the case is strengthened by the fact, that the French Government, as part of the arrangements under discussion for the communication with India, refuse to allow sealed bags under special messengers to pass through their country. Hence the merchants express their fears, that if the English Government will not indeed freely on this condition and not enter into any arrangement without it, they will deliver the interests of the English traders into the hands of their French rivals.

It is to be hoped that the suspicion so expressed may prove to be without foundation, but, having once arisen, it cannot be too publicly stated, and the French, who are never deficient in susceptibility on the score of character, may at once set the matter at rest by pointing out the source of the information conveyed to the Minister of Commerce.

A slight improvement upon the last quotations may be noticed in the funds to day, and Consols closed at 93⅞ ⅞. The same days post they have merely oscillated between 93⅝ and ⅞. Bank Stock was 202½ to ⅔; India Stock, 261½ to 2½. Exchequer-bills, 68s. to 67s. premium.

The speech of the Queen of Portugal had the effect of causing a small advance in Portuguese securities. The 5 per cents, were 20, buyers at one time, but receded to 20¼ to ⅜; the 3 per cents, 12¾ to ⅞; Spanish Active, with the May coupons, 16¼ to ⅜; Dutch stocks were rather better, the 2½ per cents, being 54¼ to 5⅝; the 5 per cents, 100⅝ to ¾; Belgian improved to 99½ to ¾; Brazilian was 76¾ ¾; Mexican, 29 to ⅜; Columbian, 23¼ to ⅜.

On the 5th instant, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Sir James Rivett Carnac, Bart., was appointed Governor of the Presidency of Bombay.—On the 19th, another Court was held, when Sir James was sworn in to his new office. He afterwards dined with the Court at the London Tavern, when the Directors, were honoured with the company of her Majesty's Ministers and several other distinguished personages.

On the 12th instant a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of a Director in the room of Sir J. R. Carnac, Bart, who has disqualified. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported the election had fallen on Mr. M. T. Smith.

The Indian Steam Ship Company have announced that their first vessel, the India, will be launched on the 3rd of January next, and is ready to be taken in to the Thames by the middle of April. The vessel is building by Messrs. Scott and Sons, and the engines by Messrs. Scott and Sinclair, of Greenock. She is of 1200 tons burden, with accommodation for eighty cabin passengers, and 400 tons of goods. She is provided with a safety apparatus, and built with two strong bulk-heads of plate-iron across the engine-room, in order to confine accidental fire, and prevent a leak sprung in one division from spreading to another. It is also announced, that another vessel of 1500 tons burden is on the stocks and that a third will be ready within 10 months, and that three more are about to be commenced. With this number of vessels, it is expected that twelve voyages home will be performed in each year; allowing fifty-five days to accomplish the distance from Plymouth to Calcutta by the Cape of Good Hope.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

France.

Dec. 8.—Mr. Somers, M. P., was condemned in the Chamber of Correctional Police at Paris, on the 4th instant, to two years' imprisonment, and a fine of 100 francs, for an alleged outrage upon Mr. Beaumont, in the garden of the Tuileries, a next time since. Mr. Somers, in a letter addressed to the editor of the Times, on Saturday, alleges that he had a right to defend himself to the allegations of Mr. Beaumont's counsel, but that he was not allowed to bring it forward. He promises to appeal to the British public, from whom he anticipates a verdict of approval.

We learn by the Paris papers of Thursday that the command of the National Guard of Paris, and the rest of the Department of the Seine, is conferred on Marshal Gerard.

The Opposition journals continue to talk angrily against the prospective performances of Guizot, Thiers, and Odillon Barrot in the Chambers. There are, as usual, reports that Dupin will not be allowed to take the Presidential chair in the Chamber of Deputies without opposition; and Guizot himself has been mentioned as a candidate, in order to lead him aside to the Burtmainton by the Ministry, and rejected.

Dec. 14.—There has not been much of interest in the late French papers; the tone of the Paris press has, however, assumed a hostile character towards England. The Courrier Francais says openly, that 'France is no longer on the same terms with England that she was six months ago' The ostensible cause for this change is the refusal of the British Government to unite with France in refusing to settle the Belgian question on the new basis,—namely, that Limburg and Luxemburg shall be united to Holland, and a large deduction made from the share of the Hollando-Belgic debt formerly allotted to Belgium. But Leopold and his people wish to retain the territory and be excused from the payment of the money also; and Louis Phillipe sounds the demand of his son-in-law. The reason why, on this occasion, England if not willing to co-operate with France, may be twofold. Belgium, though now ruled by a monarch friendly to England, must always be much under French influence; and its actual incorporation with France is known to be a favorite object of French ambition. To strengthen Belgium, therefore, might be to aggrandize France; whereas there is nothing to apprehend from Holland, which might be again, as it was formerly, a useful ally against France. Another reason for the apparent estrangement between the French and English Governments is the suspicion, not unfounded, that Louis Phillipe has been negotiating with the Emperor of Russia, and urging him to annoy England in the East.

Such is the gossip of the political salons; but that there is ill-will between the people of the two countries, says the Spectator, we do not believe, or that a serious quarrel is likely to arise. There may be much diplomatic snarling, but nothing worse.

Dec. 18.—The principal matter referred to in the French journals and correspondence is 'the growing indiscretion of the clergy,' and some of its probable consequences. It will be seen that in two remarkable instances, in parts of France greatly distant from each other—that is, in Champagne and in Auvergne, the clergy had incurred popular displeasure: in the one case by their intolerance and uncharitableness; in the other, by presuming to make an invidious comparison between Napoleon and Pope Pius VII. In the former the doors of the church were closed against the remains of a person of some note—Count Montlosier—a man notorious for the profound 'Catholicity' of his opinions, but who some how or other had incurred the displeasure of the more rigid professors of that faith. The interference of the authorities and of the highly respectable friends of the deceased, prevented any unpleasant incident, but the affair appears to have created a great sensation.

The Paris papers of Sunday bring, we regret to say, intelligence that the state of health of the Duchess Alexander of Wurtemberg, late Princess Marie of Orleans, had become so alarming that the Duke de Remours proceeded on Monday to Pisa, whither she had been removed from Genoa, the air of which place had had a bad effect upon her complaint—consumption.

Dec. 20.—The King of the French opened the session of the Chambers on the 17th inst. The papers, as might be expected, are occupied almost exclusively with the Speech, which the opposition papers pronounce to be insignificant, unmeaning, and untrue—it is at all events very dry—unless perhaps and more than ordinarily ambiguous on various points of foreign policy. There is not a single material allusion to Oriental affairs throughout. The Address on the address to it, is not expected, for they must be prepared before the Speech. Private letters state that the speech produced little or no impression in the Chamber or among the public.

Spain.

Dec. 8.—Another Spanish Ministry is announced in the last accounts from Madrid. It consists of the following persons:—The Duke of Gor, as by Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Arrazandeta, Minister of the Interior; M. Gorostiza, Minister of Justice; General Alaiz, Minister of War; M. Primo de Rivera, Minister of Marine.

The Finance department, the most arduous and important of all, is not filled up. The Ministry is called 'Moderado,' and will receive the support of Martinez de la Rosa. The Queen Regent, where she decided on making the appointments definitively, secured the acquiescence of a majority of the Cortes.

The intelligence from the east of war continues chiefly of accounts of massacres. Cabrera and Van Halen continued to slaughter their prisoners, but avoided a decisive encounter.

The Madrid papers state that the insurrection of Seville was at an end, that the supreme junta had been dissolved, and order restored, owing to the firmness displayed by General Chacon, who was preparing to march against them the day it left 5,000 men. Brigadier San-juanena entered Seville on the 23rd, and took the command of the province in the name of the Queen. A message from the President of the Council, announcing that her Majesty had directed an inquiry to be instituted into the conduct of Generals Narvaez and Cordova, was communicated to the Chamber of Deputies on the 26th. The Chamber was to appoint a committee to examine into the nature of the charges brought against them, and decide whether the Government should be authorized to prosecute them.

Dec. 10.—The news from Spain is not important. Mendizabal had delivered a speech in the Cortes in favor of an union of the Liberal of all shades. A Ministry supported by such a combination would, he said, be supported by European capitalists, and have abundance of money. He entered into a long statement to prove that the resources of the country were fully equal to discharge the demands upon it, and to furnish security for fresh loans.

Matters do in Rome is very unpopular in Madrid. A few nights ago, a party sang 'Die Protestant' under his window, as a hint to prepare himself for another world.

Russia and Turkey.

The Augsburg Gazette points attention to the progress of the English towards the Red Sea. According to that journal, the English 'were daily extending their sway along the coast of Arabia,' and had made two settlements on the Abyssinian coast; the ultimate object being the conquest of Egypt. England, however, has too much on hand in America and India, just at present, to undertake new conquests in Africa.

Dec. 17.—In a Trebizonde correspondence, quoted by the Commerce, we find an account of a letter of the 21st ultimo, from Constantinople, which states positively that Russia had disembarked Abaska of the corps of 16,000 men, who had previously covered the coast of that province, and who had been conveyed with the utmost expedition to Odessa on board six ships of the line and another vessels, the number of which was daily increasing in the Black Sea, through the unexampled activity which prevailed in the docks of Sebastopol.

A letter of the 21st ultimo from Constantinople states that the Queen Dowager of England was expected there, and that apartments were preparing for Majesty's residence at the British embassy. The Turkish fleet had re-entered the Dardanelles and proceeded to Constantinople.

French and English journalists or correspondents concur in representing the style in which the Turkish fleet came to make off Topkhane on the 20th ultimo, as infinitely more remarkable and orderly than was ever before accomplished by Mussulman sailors. This improvement in skill and discipline is of course due to the presumed exertions of British officers. The correspondent of the Morning Herald says that Commodore Parker, Capt. Mansell, and Captain Walker came up with the Capudan Pasha, and received marked attentions to Constantinople.

'It is even rumoured,' he adds, that the latter may stay here for the present, and become the virtual commander of the fleet; but nothing on that head has, I believe yet been determined on. With proper instructors the Turks will soon become admirable sailors. They are very quick at imitating, and learn almost faster than they can be taught. Hitherto they have had no officers worthy the name. It was but lately that a captain of a splendid 74, was observed, with all his lieutenants, holystoning the quarter deck barefoot and toutless.' The Turkish squadron has already been taken into the arsenal, and is being dismantled, apparently for the winter.

Canada.

Dec. 10.—The Great Western arrived in Kings-road, Bristol, on Friday evening the 7th instant, at twenty minutes past eight o'clock, having left New York, at half past 4 P. M., of the 23rd ultimo. She had a very rough passage out at home, and sustained considerable damage on her outward voyage. She brought 87 passengers, including Mr. A. Mail'and, the bearer of Government despatches, and Mr. James Christie and Mr. Hannae, attaches of Lord Durham. There is no political news relative to the United States, but some important intelligence from Canada. The rebels are beaten at all points. Mr. Ellice has been released and is coming home in the Roscius. They write from New York on the 22nd November.—'The Patriot force who were in the Windmill at Prescott have either been taken or killed. The Governor of Upper Canada has ordered the prisoners (122) to be tried by court-martial, and their sentence to executed immediately, and, as most of them are citizens of the United States, we are in daily expectation of hearing that they have all been hung. Whilst we must all regret the shedding of so much blood, nothing but summary proceedings on the part of the British authorities will put a stop to similar attacks from the lawless population on our side. The notorious Bill Johnston has been arrested for these atrocities, at Oghdensburgh. It is with pleasure I inform you that the utmost harmony exists between the British and American officers on the frontier, and the acts of our misguided citizens who have invaded Canada are universally reprobated by all those who have the least claim to any respectability.'

Dec. 12.—The last Gazette supplies us authentic accounts of the affair at Prescott, from the despatches of Sir John Colborne, Colonel Young, and Colonel Dundas. Colonel Young (in Sir John Colborne's despatches this officer is called 'Major,' but he designates himself 'Colonel,') states the amount of the entire band who attempted to land on the Canadian shore at 800, but says that only 400 took possession of the windmill and adjacent buildings. These men had chosen their position well, and their 'rifle fire' was 'particularly true and steady.' The British killed and wounded were forty-five, including among the former two Lieutenants, and among the latter two Lieutenants and an Ensign. Officers most expect to be 'picked off' by the American riflemen. No service will make such room for promotion as that in which the British troops have been lately engaged on the frontier of Upper Canada. Thirty-two sympathizing prisoners were taken and two of their 'Generals,' Phillips and Brown, were killed. These particulars refer to the affair of the 13th, which ended in Colonel Young's retreat after a very gallant attempt to dislodge the invaders. The Colonel himself acknowledges his failure in these words—'Finding, after a constant firing for hours from the armed steam boats and musketry, that no impression could be made on the building, I considered it more prudent to draw off the troops at three P. M., leaving strong pickets to prevent the escape of those in the buildings until the assistance of the heavy guns could be procured.' The operations made in these accounts of Colonel Young's own wound.

On the 14th November, Colonel Dundas reached Prescott from Kingston, with 'four companies of the Eighty third Regiment, two 18 pounders, and a howitzer.' He took up his position about 400 yards from the windmill, and with his field pieces 'opened with good effect' upon the stone building near the mill, whilst Captain Sandon, with two 18 pounders in two gun-boats fired upon it from the water. After this operation had lasted about an hour, a white flag was hung out from the building, and its occupants, surrendered themselves unconditionally to Colonel Dundas. There were 109 altogether, of whom 16 were wounded. The Militia scoured the country around, and made several prisoners; of whom the principal was a Polish officer calling himself General Van Sault, whom Colonel Dundas believes to have been their leader. The windmill was then occupied by the British troops, and the other buildings were destroyed. An American newspaper says that 'if the Patriots are saved alive, they owe it to the British Regulars.' The animosity of the Canadian Loyalists against the 'Patriots' and their abettors, is fierce; and Sir John Colborne states distinctly, that if, the disgraceful proceedings on the American frontier cannot be guarded against by the American Government it will soon become impossible to prevent acts of retaliation on the part of the population of Upper Canada.' If such acts of reraliation be commenced, the power of the American Government to restrain the marauders will be much lessened; and perhaps the inclination, supposing it to exist at present, will not be increased. In the mean while, however, President Van Buren has issued a proclamation condemning in very strong language the attacks upon Upper Canada, and warning American citizens that they cannot be protected by their own Government against the punishment of their nefarious proceedings. The complete failure of the attempted invasion, the hostility of the great majority of the Canadians in the Upper Province, and the utter inability of the disaffected to second them, will probably have more effect in preventing future expeditions than the lectures and warning of President Van Buren.

The Polish officer, whom Sir John Colborne calls Van Sault, is believed to be the same as Van Shoultz; and if so, he was a Russian, commissioned by the Czar to go to New York, and, under the disguise of a Pole, engage Polish refugees in this country to join the Canadian insurgents. Money to defray the cost of passage and equipment in the United States was freely offered; but the man acted his part badly, and the Poles were informed of his real character by one of their brethren in New York.

This was not the only way in which the Russian Emperor's desire to aid the Canadian insurgents was exhibited. The Commerce Paris paper states, on the authority of a letter from St. Petersburgh, that,

'At the late celebration of the Emperor's birthday at New Archangel (the capital of the Russian colonies in North America,) Admiral Count Kuprenman, the Commander-in-chief of the Russian naval forces of that station, gave a splendid banquet, at the close of which a collection was made for the 'unfortunate Patriots of Canada.' This collection, which was to some sort official, and to which everybody present, without exception, eagerly contributed, produced nearly 2,000 francs, (1121. sterling, and was forwarded to its destination by Admiral Kupreswoman himself.'

Dec. 17.—By the packet-ship Roscius, which arrived at Liverpool on Saturday in 18 days from New York, we have received the papers of that city to the 27th ultimo, and those of Canada to later dates. The latter, however, add very little to the information received a week ago.

Dec. 21.—New York papers of the 1st instant, brought by the packet ship 'Cambridge' have reached town from Liverpool. They do not contain much additional information from Canada. The steamer 'Liverpool,' which left on the 6th instant, has also arrived. M. Papineau had publicly declared his disapprobation of the recent rebellious movements in Canada.

Dec. 7.—Sir William Molesworth has addressed a letter to his constituents, in which he says, 'the opinions that I have formed after much and careful reflection, and the information that I have received within the last few months with regard to Canada, make me believe, that when Lord Durham shall lay his plan before the two Houses of Parliament, I, for one, shall be able to give them my most cordial support; and that all real Liberals will be equally able to rally round the Noble Lord and with justice acknowledge him to be their leader.'

Fifty-six of the principal banking firms in London have addressed a memorial to Mr. Spring Rice against the proposed delivery of letters on Sunday at the General Post-office. They state that 'the quiet and domestic comfort which they, their clerks and dependents have hitherto derived from the rest of Sunday, has been mainly secured to them by the total cessation of business at the London Post-office on that day.' 'They feel assured that if the practice of delivering any letters on Sunday is commenced, the Post office will soon be open as much on that day as others.

Dec. 8.—The Times of this morning says, 'We learned in the afternoon of yesterday, that Lord Durham had arrived in the town. Whether or not, there are rumours abroad that he will have (in some quarters it was said that he will by suffered to have) no communication with her Majesty's Ministers before the meeting of Parliament, when his Lordship is to make good his case against Ministers, and the Ministers are to make good their case against Lord Durham, and so they are to devour each other like the pair of Irish cats. Impeachments are said to be talked of, and cross impeachments, in the course of which there will, no doubt, be plenty of of recrimination on both sides; but whether any really useful light is to be thrown upon the subject by either party, is a point beyond our prescience.'

Dec. 12.—A claim made upon the Texan Government by some English merchants is creating considerable interest amongst the commercial community. In the latter part of last year some British merchant ships were captured in the Gulf of Mexico by Texan cruisers acting against the Mexicans, and the vessels, after a detention of some time, were ultimately released. In one of these cases, it seems, that of the Eliza Russell, this detention produced most injurious consequences, for the loss of time incurred having brought on the stormy season, the vessel was nearly wrecked, and was so much damaged that she could not proceed on the voyage to Laguna, for which she was engaged for a cargo of logwood. The injury sustained in the gale was estimated 1,000*l.*, and the charterers had besides brought an action against the owners for non-fulfilment of contract, and stated the damage at 500*l.* A claim for compensation has been made against the Texan Government, who have admitted the claim and promise satisfaction, but declare themselves unable from want of funds to make payment. The parties have since laid the case before Government with a request for interference, so as to compel the Texans to indemnify them for the losses sustained, and it has been referred to the Judge-Advocate for an opinion.

Dec. 13.—Her Majesty held a Privy Council yesterday afternoon at Windsor Castle. At the Council the appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir John Colborn, G. C. B., in the room of the Earl of Durham, was confirmed.

The consolidation of the General and Treasury Post receiving-houses has taken place. This is a vast improvement on the old system, and a saving to the public both of time and expense. Formerly, persons wishing to post a letter for the General Post-office had often to walk a quarter of a mile, or put it into the Twopenny Post-office, increasing the charge twopence, or pay the postman one penny for each letter after five o'clock. At present all the receiving houses are placed on the same footing except three, one in Oxford Street, another in Cornhill, and a third at Charing Cross' where postpaid letters cannot be received'

Dec. 18.—The Westminster Reform Association proposed a complimentary address to Lord Durham a few days ago, which after some not very complimentary discussion about his Lordship, was ultimately agreed upon at the meeting, and a deputation appointed to wait upon him with it. The papers of this morning publish Lord Durham's reply to the Secretary of the Association refusing to receive the deputation, or accept the address:—'I should have been proud,' writes the Lordship,' to receive the address itself, expressive as it is of principles in which I entirely concur, if I had had no cognizance of the proceedings of the meeting at which it was adopted; but these having been reported to the public, I feel it my duty to state, that they entirely preclude me from receiving the deputation to which you refer—The chairman was chosen unanimously, and the meeting voted him their thanks. He called upon them to forget strong opinions on the subject of Canada, in order to consider whether they could 'make use of' me for the furtherance of their own objects. Other speakers were even more candid in the avowal of their insincerity. Dr. Wade said, that 'as an advocate of universal suffrage' he was perplexed; for he did not see how he could support an address to one who advocated household suffrage. Yet he did support that address; and on the ground, as he declared, that I could be made use of as a steppingstone for the advantage of the Radical party. These sentiments, and the purposes implied by them, when viewed in conjunction with the address, appear to have been cordially approved.—I have cited the above passage in order that there may be no sort of misapprehension as to my reasons for declining to receive the address. I lay aside, as of no importance, all that passed at the meeting, which might be considered personally injurious to me, and confine myself to the manifest contradiction between the purport of the address and the objects of the meeting. The address says one thing, the meeting intended another; and the whole of the proceedings, taken as one act, abounds in evidence of gross insincerity.'

Dec. 19.—In last night's Gazette is published in full the Convention of Commerce and Navigation now finally concluded between Great Britain and Turkey.

Liverpool papers announce the arrival on Monday evening of the Captain Ross,' which left Quebec on the 22nd November. She landed 34 prisoners implicated in the first rebellion in Canada. Eleven were in irons, among whom was Parker of whom so much was heard in former outbreaks. They were conveyed in the prison van to the borough gaol, accompanied by well armed officers. On the passage they had made an attempt to overpower the crew and escort, and to seize the ship, but were soon disarmed and locked with heavy irons.

It is said that the above prisoners, or the majority of them, are to be transported for life to New South Wales, where, we make no doubt, they will be subjected to hard labour at least, or whatever degree of corporal restraint and punishment, is assigned to the worst class of criminals. On looking over the names of these rebellies, we cannot find among them all that of a single French Canadian, and therefore, as it is pretty well understood that the British inhabitants of both provinces were almost to a man staunch and loyal subjects, we must, in the absence of more detailed information, conclude that the bulk of this cargo of prisoners are nothing more nor less than republican pirates, who invaded Canada for the sake of robbery, and employed for its accomplishment the machinery of murder, and who by all laws, human and divine, have forfeited their lives to the executioner.

Java.

From the following statement, taken from the Javasche Courant, of tonnage employed annually by the Dutch Handels Maatschappy, it will be seen how immensely the trade of that society has encreased within the last 14 years, the whole shipping now employed by them being about 80,000 tons in year, a Dutch last being nearly equal to two English tons.

Siamese Policy.—A report has been for some time current in the place, that the export of cattle from the Siam states has been prohibited. We know not what degree of credit may be attached to this report. If true, we cannot but look on it as a consequence of the policy hitherto adopted towards the Burmese. The tameness with which we have put up with all the insults heaped on us by the present Burmese court is very likely to have given rise to the idea in Siam, that we dare not engage in hostilities to support our honor or even to retain the provinces we have conquered. Under such circumstances, cattle imported from countries under Siam, would fall a prey to the Burmese, and perhaps, afford them the means of extending their conquests. There is nothing "contre" in this supposition. The Siamese are just as ignorant as their neighbours of our real power and resources. Their good will towards us has been hitherto sustained by the idea of our power and their detestation of the Burmese. If by our pacific policy we weaken the former, it is natural they should think it time to look out for themselves, and be prepared to receive their old enemies. Dr. Richardson's mission will, we hope, have the effect of putting matters to rights, should it prove to be the case that our ability to support our just rights doubted. As he quitted this on the 18th he may except to reach Bankok on the 10th prox. if his progress is unimpeded by the frontier Siamese officers. On a former occasion, when Lieutenant Leslie was deputed to Siam by Major General Sir A. Campbell, that officer was not allowed to go beyond the frontier town of Kamhoori, where he was kept in a state approaching to confinement, till a reply to the General's letter was received from Court. This, however, was almost immediately after the close of the Burmese war, when Siam must naturally have been extremely jealous of our intention and could hardly be expected to give us the credit of fixing ourselves quietly in these provinces, without desiring to extend our bounds—she must surely however be convinced by this time, that we are a very quiet and harmless people, so long as we are left alone, but she may have stared not a little to find that even when stirred up with no very delicate hand, we have remained passive and immovable. Who knows but that she may be dreaming herself of giving a helping hand towards stirring the inert mass that takes it so quietly, and so far from resenting it, sends a special envoy with handsome presents to beg it may not be so annoyed, and when that envoy and his presents are slighted rejected, and are treated with the utmost contempt, still desires him to wait cap in hand, and weary the ears of its bully with solicitations to desist; We certainly do cut a most contemptible figure in those parts just now, and every account from Amarapoora serves to add to our disgrace. There is one comfort, however, that the scene of what we are to submit to, must now be very soon reached, and so far the intelligence from the Burmese Capital is of interest.—Moulmein Chronicle, December 26.

New York.

The arrival of the Great Western is looked for with unusual interest. If she sailed on the 27th ultimo, she has been out seventeen days. The steamer Liverpool, it is understood, was detained. No operations to any extent will be made in cotton until the advices by these steamers are received. But little is done is Foreign Exchanges, calculating on remitting by these steamers.

Stocks, it will be seen, have recovered a little today. Good stocks are firm and high, while the fancies have been on the decline.

The subscription to the Guardian Fire Insurance Company is filling up rapidly. We understand that Mr. George Johnston, the former president, declines, and Mr. Henry Rankin, the former president of the Globe Insurance Company, will be placed at the head of the institution.

Letters from the South state that the prospect of the sugar crop is good,—all now depends on the frost. Unless the cane should be injured by an early frost, there is no question the planter will reap a rich reward for his labors. In Cuba the grinding will be unusually late, and the planters apprehend a short crop.

The report of the suspension of the Montreal Banks has advanced the rate of discount to 10 per cent. There are, however, but few bills in circulation in this city.

But little doing in Foreign Exchanges. The Bank of the United States is the great drawer, quoting rates at steady at 109½ on London, and 5.20 on Paris. It is believed that as soon as Southern bills begin to make their appearance freely, that Exchange on Europe will decline. There is no alteration whatever in Domestic Exchanges, they stand just as they did a week ago.

The report that the Brandon Bank has reduced its circulation to a million and a half would be very acceptable news if it came in an authentic shape. There is a large amount of these securities in this city, which are selling at all prices, from 40 to 50 per cent. discount.

We learn that there has been very severe weather at the West. The canal will close, beyond all question, very shortly. The millers, we understand, have ceased to make any further shipments from Rochester, and they are withholding their purchases of wheat in consequence of the high rate demanded.

We learn that John Delafield, and a number of other gentlemen, intend establishing a bank under the General Banking Law, with a capital of one million dollars. The bank is to be called the "New York Banking Company."

Land Sales.—The sales of public lands in Wisconsin have been postponed till the 18th of February, 1839.

The New York American speaking of Mr. Swartwout:—"It is understood, that under a comprehensive power of attorney left behind him, the whole property, of every sort, of Mr. Swartwout has been conveyed to the Government. Process, it is also said, is, or is about to be, issued against his sureties, whose bonds amount to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. All these together will not, we fear, fall far short of the amount said to be missing."

The Star says:—"It is known that every dollar received by the Collector, and every bond in his possession is charged to his account and when the bond is paid and the money drawn for, he is credited the amount. An immense number of bonds in possession of the late Collector yet unpaid is charged to him and we have understood, what is a common occurrence, that he retains in his possession a sum to meet the result of certain U. S. suits now pending against him. We are aware of the fact that Mr. Swartwout entered into large speculations of real estate, coal and copper mines, &c &c which, by the derangement of the currency and exchanges, have not realized the anticipated profits. This property he has on hand, and is now employed in England in efforts to sell, besides other pecuniary operations. On the final settlement of his accounts we do not believe he will fall short 200,000, and he has property to a half a million to meet it. He is expected back in a few days, and we are satisfied that the Government, and his sureties will experience no loss in the sequel,

"We believe that large amounts, on account of the Government of Texas, were accepted and paid by Mr. Swartwout, every dollar of which is safe, and we also know the fact that so far from considering himself a defaulter or attempting to quit the country he actually considered himself worth a million and a half of dollars when he sailed for England."

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 4th May.

Saturday 27th April.—The delays in the deliveries continue owing to the Yam-chae's insisting on all the ships coming to Chumpee at once, he says that the Opium ought to be delivered from on board of 72 different ships, and there having been so few hitherto is glazing over matters; he therefore has stopped the deliveries for the present. We hear this day of the arrival of the Cowasjee Family from Calcutta, middle of March and Singapore 5th April, (she left the Pilot on the 15th March, and arrived at Macao on the 24th instant) The Ardaseer and Francis Smith, from this had arrived at the latter port. The second Calcutta sale had averaged 750 Rupees. The war in Afghanistan was at an end, the protege of the Company, Shah Soojia, being quietly seated on the throne of Cabul. A civil war had broken out in Burmah, and a war with that country was therefore not so immediately looked for. The Sparke with the December overland mail had left Calcutta a few days before the Cowasjee, and may therefore be daily expected. The American Ships of war Columbia and John Adams had left Singapore for China five days before the Cowasjee came away.

A Wei-yuen (deputed officer) has been sent by the Yam-chae to obtain from Capt. Elliot through the Hong merchants, answers to a string of questions he has brought, and this evening Howqua was until a late hour with the Superintendent.

Sunday, 28th April.—The cold weather which we noticed in our last paper continues, and fires have again become necessary. The Hong merchants were with Capt. Elliot several times this morning, and it is said that near 14,000 chests have now been delivered. Most servants have, except to a few houses, returned, though, where there are no regular coopradores, they still sleep outside. According to new regulations, or to old ones revived, they all dress like Coolies, that is in dark blue Cotton—they are not allowed to dress in silk.

Monday, 29th April.—Some papers giving English news brought by the Cowasjee Family, up to the 26th Dec. have been received. A paper has been kindly lent us from which we have made copious extracts. From them it will be seen that disturbances have again broken out in Canada but have been quelled. Lord Durham was in England, but apparently not successful in mustering a strong party. Affairs look very warlike in Europe, and it seems the general opinion that Constantinople is now the immediate aim of the Russians. Austria has a strong army of observation near the Russian frontier, and the Turkish ships are commanded by British naval officers.

The American frigate Columbia, Commodore Reid, has arrived at Macao where the John Adams is also expected in a few days. Deliveries have again gone on, and up to the 26th we hear that 13,700 chests were surrendered, and the quantity would have been larger but for the tardiness with which the Opium-ships arrive at Chumpee.

Tuesday, 30th April.—The quantity delivered, officially known is 13,800 chests, and there is a pause at present, owing we believe to no Opium-ships having lately arrived at Chumpee. Two more are however, we hear, daily expected when we suppose the deliveries will go on again. The state of the weather, which is very rainy and boisterous, may also retard operations. The Commissioner and Viceroy are living on shore in Anson's bay where a shed or tent has been erected for their accommodation. The Hoppo has returned to Canton some days since.

Wednesday 1st May.—No more vessels have been heard of as having arrived at Chumpee.

Thursday 2nd May.—It is said this morning that accounts have been received from Macao, according to which the Governor there had received a communication from the Yum-chae requiring of him to deliver a certain quantity of Opium (it is said 3000 chests) to the Mandarin at Casa brancs, promising the continuance of the Imperial favor if this demand is complied with, but threatening with the cutting off all supplies in case of refusal. On the 30th of last month the senate were to take this communication into consideration. We are informed that there is no Opium whatever now at Macao. The American frigate had exchanged the customary salute with the forts at Macao, and the Commodore is said to have paid a visit to the Governor. Five or six Opium-ships from the coast have arrived and deliveries will probably be going on again, as soon as they get to Chumpee. The John Barton from Liverpool 18th December is reported in. The last accounts from England mention the arrival there on December 3rd, of the Anna Maria, 21st, Red Rover, 22nd, Earl Balcarras. The John Dugdale for Manila sailed from Liverpool on the 6th.

Friday 3d May.—We have been favored with the loan of some slips from late American papers, and recopy the report of the New-york money market. From the same source we see the cargoes of the Chandler Price, the Liberty and the Southerner advertised for public sale on the 20th, 22d and 16th November.

Saturday Morning, 4th May.—It was known yesterday that the Mahomed's had arrived at Chumpee, and that deliveries were going on again, and the total quantity in the hands of the Chinese up to the 2d May is about 15,200 Chests. According to the Yumchae's promise the trade was to open after the delivery of this quantity, and it now remains to be seen whether this promise will be forgotten like that concerning the passage-boats. There is no change whatever in the guard stationed near the Factories, and the communication with the backstreets is still cut off, as well as that with Macao and the outside shipping, the only opportunity of sending letters since the stoppage of the trade, which has now lasted upwards of 6 weeks, having been when Mr. Johnston left this for Macao. If, as expected, some other vessels have arrived at Chumpee by this time, the quantity promised to the Chinese will be completed within a few thousand chests. The arrival of the John Adams, Amer. Sloop of war, at Macao, is reported.

Our journal of occurrences for the past week is very scanty—but we hope in the next to be able to report some progress in the prospect at least of our early liberation from imprisonment.

THE CANTON PRESS

EXTRAORDINARY.

CANTON, SUNDAY, 5TH MAY, 1839.

Thursday, 18th April.—This day Capt. Elliot and the Select Committee Consuls had a communication from the Tsunchae again requiring of them to sign the Opium-bond of which the following is a translation.

Edict

Lin, high imperial commissioner and governor of Hookwang, Tang, a president of the board of war and governor of the two provinces Kwang tung and Kwangse, and K. vice president of the board of war and Lieutenant governor of Kwang tung, issue this Edict to the English Superintendent Elliot and the deputy Superintendent Johnston, the American Consul Snow, the Dutch Consul van Basel, and the foreigners of every country, let them make themselves fully acquainted herewith.

Whereas we, the high Imperial commissioner, the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor, did receive the great august emperor's mandatory will, to interdict Opium, and to cut off the sources whence it comes, accordingly we gave commands to the said Superintendents and Consuls, by them to be enjoined on all the foreigners, to take the opium accumulated in the store ships and make an entire surrender of it; now it appears that, in obedience to these commands, the surrender is being made, evincing respectfully submission, worthy of praise.

Hereafter, for ever, foreigners will never more be allowed to bring Opium into this country. The decree is already passed, and if they do so, they shall be capitally punished, and their cargoes confiscated.

You, the English superintendent Elliot, have desired that warning may be given before executions, and now again declare that you will act in obedience to the law, the period being indulgently extended. This your statement seems reasonable; but as to the request that a period of five months be allowed for the Indian ships, and ten months for those direct from England, these periods are indeed too long.

Further it appears that the American Consul Snow also has declared that while residing here he always feels obligated to conform to the laws of the Empire, and that hereafter the merchants of his country, acting in obedience to the new regulations will not presume to traffic in Opium. This likewise seems perfectly proper. But he adds, if they bring any Opium to Canton, I will communicate to them the prohibitory regulations, requiring them to return to their country, which does not at all agree with what is said about acting in conformity to the law, for, if he announces to them the prohibitory regulations, how can he stop with merely ordering them to return to their own country?

The Dutch Consul van Basel, also, states that he has received the commands to give the bond, in terms like these:—After the autumn of this year, if any ships come to Canton, and on examination are found to have Opium on board, both ship and cargo shall be confiscated, and the parties left to suffer death, by law of the country."* On this occasion he is ready to obligate himself that hereafter he will never trade in opium, and that according to the tenor of the edict he will report to the great officers of his government, that they may submit the case to their sovereign, this is nearly in accordance with what is required in the bond, but, then, in his address he speaks about the lives of his countrymen being involved, which is still inconsistent with what is reasonable. It should be known that this severity of the Celestial Empire's laws, extending even to capital punishment, is only in reference to the traffic in Opium. If therefore all the foreigners, in compliance with this, never bring any more Opium, then there can be no more violations of the law, and how, in that case, can there be any involving of life?

With reference to Elliot's request, the period ought to be changed and fixed at four months for the Indian ships, and at eight for the direct ships, at the expiration of which periods they must conform to the new regulations. If within these periods, they presume to bring Opium, they shall according to the existing laws, surrender it all to the Government, but the parties shall be freed from punishment and their other cargo from confiscation, this will be equitable and just.

Again, special and earnest commands are given in general to all foreigners, that, in accordance with the prescribed form, they all present bonds duly signed and attested, thereby evincing on the part of every one a mind respectfully submissive. Then an honorable commerce will be lastingly continued. Let there be no obstinacy cherished, to their own injury. A special Edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 3th noon, 6th day,

April 19th, 1839.

The Superintendent and Consuls have, we believe, sent an answer stating that they can by no means sign the bond required of them.

Sunday, 21st April.—We hear this day that up to the 18th 8500 chests have been delivered.

Monday, 22nd April.—This morning the linguists went round to the several houses to note down their inmates, in order to ascertain what number of servants is to be allotted to each it being said that in future only one Chinese servant is to be allowed to each foreigner. It was also said this morning that the passage boats in front of the factories had been released, and were now allowed to proceed down the river—this it not, however, the case. Chinese will have information this evening of 10,400 Chests having been delivered.

* We are informed that H. E. the Yumchae in recording this answer from the Dutch Consul, has quoted merely part of a sentence, the whole tenor of the Consul's despatch to the Commissioner being a decided refusal to sign the bond in question.

Tuesday 23rd April.—We hear that up to the evening of the 19th 11,800 Chests were delivered, and that deliveries for the present had been suspended by Mr. Johnston, waiting for directions from Capt. Elliot, the despatches of the latter not having reached the former (having probably been detained) in time to avoid any more delay. Though the latter half of the Opium placed at the Yumchae's disposal has now been delivered, the passage boats are not allowed to run, nor can any one pass down Canton, and the old, and all but obsolete regulations about servants are again so strictly enforced, that a great many of them are still absent, probably through fear of punishment from Mandarins; thus the fulfilment of the Commissioners promises as to the return of servants so soon as 5000 chests should have been delivered has been rendered partially nugatory, and that of the passage-boats to run after delivery of 10,000 chests altogether evaded. There is a rumour, which is said to have taken its origin from the Hong merchants, that it was the intention of the government to keep as hostages eleven individuals until the whole of the Opium shall have been delivered—how far there may be any foundation for it is difficult to conjecture. Three lascars said to be taken at or near Chuenchow foo, a city in this province but very near the border of Fohkien, were taken to the Canton-house yesterday, and there examined. We have not heard what the result of the examination may have been, nor what ship they belong to.

Wednesday 24th April.—This morning despatches from Mr. Johnston, but of no later date than the 19th, were received; The Yumchae, hearing that H. M. S. Larne had returned to her anchorage at Chumpee, ordered her to go away, but Capt. Blake did not comply with these orders. It is also said that the commissioner requires that the Opium to be delivered up shall be discharged from 22 vessels that he says to have information, contained it, instead of the few that have hitherto come to Chumpee. We believe, to simplify deliveries, many vessels which had but small quantities preferred transshipping them outside on board vessels bound for Chumpee to going there themselves. These misunderstandings we hear have suspended the deliveries for a day or two, but intelligence has this day been received of their having been again resumed. The passage boats are however not yet allowed to run, and servants do not stay over-night in houses where the comprador is not furnished with chops from Macao and from the Kwang chow foo such as we published in last week's paper. This evening the Lean taou (Commissioner of grain), one of the great officers of the province, came to the front of the factories. He traversed the square in his chair followed by three officers on horseback, and a number of officials and servants on foot. He went up to the creek bounding the factories on the east, where he alighted from his chair, and returned on foot by the Dutch and British factories, opposite the gate of the latter of which the Hong merchants have, within the garden, constructed their guard-room. They, having had early notice of the intended visit, mustered strong on the occasion, with robes of office, mandarin-caps etc, and assumed a most humble demeanour, with their hands folded on their breasts when the great man passed.

Thursday, 25th April.—Nothing authentic heard from the coast.

Friday, 26th April.—No despatches have yet been received from Chumpee, and it is therefore not known with any degree of certainty how deliveries are proceeding. The latest letters the Superintendent has from Mr. Johnston are dated the 19th, and at that time the deliveries amounted as before stated to about 11,800 Chests. The Chinese will have information of more having been delivered, and this is probable, if the report be true that six other vessels have lately arrived at Chumpee to surrender their Opium. The tardiness with which advices from below reach Canton seems to justify the belief that delay is the Commissioner's present object; he is probably waiting for despatches from Peking, in answer to his informing his Government of Capt. Elliot's surrender of 20,283 Chests. A fire express takes 15 days to go to Peking, and as many to return; the Opium having been given up on the 27th of last month, it follows, that making allowance for some delay to prepare answers at Peking, these may be received by the Yumchae in three or four days. The three lascars whose detention at the Consoohouse is mentioned above, have been examined, and it appears that they belonged to one of the small vessels engaged on the coast, and they probably run away. They are, we understand, to be delivered over to the care of the principal Parsee-house here.

Saturday morning 27th April.—Every thing remains as before—the boats are not allowed to run, and the factories are as strictly guarded as ever. The unseasonable weather we have experienced since Thursday night last, deserves notice. The day had been very fine, with the thermometer at about 82°, when at about 9 o'clock at night it began suddenly to blow hard from the northward; the gale continued all night, but moderated towards morning, producing a great change in the temperature, the glass falling to below 60°—the northerly wind prevailed all yesterday, and blew fresh again last night, and this morning whilst we are writing, at 8 A. M. the thermometer is as low as 58°

Our journal of this week will be found void of important occurrences, but whilst our imprisonment lasts, we shall continue noting down the events of each day, considering it the manner the most likely to give a true picture of our situation.

Saturday 27th April.—The delays in the deliveries continue owing to the Yum-chae's insisting on all the ships coming to Chumpee at once; he says that the Opium ought to be delivered from on board of 20 different ships, and these having been so few hitherto is glossing over matters; he therefore has stopped the deliveries for the present. We hear this day of the arrival of the Cowasjee Family from Calcutta, middle of March and Singapore 5th April, (she left the Pilot on the 15th March, and arrived at Macao on the 26th instant) The Ardasser and Francis Smith, from this had arrived at the latter port. The second Calcutta mail had averaged the Ranees. The war in Afghanistan was at an end, the protege of the Company, Shah Soojs, being quietly seated on the throne of Cabul. A civil war had broken out in Burmah, and a war with that country was therefore not so immediately looked for. The Argo with the December overland mail had left Calcutta a few days before the Cowasjee, and may therefore be daily expected. The American ships of war Columbia and John Adams had left Singapore for China five days before the Cowasjee came away.

A Wei-yuen (deputed officer) has been sent by the Yum-chae to obtain from Capt. Elliot through the Hong merchants, answers to a string of questions he has brought, and this evening Howqua was until a late hour with the Superintendent.

Sunday, 28th April.—The cold weather which we noticed in our last paper continues, and firm have again become customary. The Hong merchants were with Capt. Elliot several times this morning, and it is said that some 14,000 chests have now been delivered. Most servants have, except to a few houses, returned, though, where there are no regular compradores, they still sleep outside. According to new regulations, or to old ones revived, they all dress like Coolies, that is in dark blue Cotton—they are not allowed to dress in silk.

Monday, 29th April.—Some papers giving English news brought by the Cowasjee Family, up to the 26th Dec. have been received. A paper has been kindly lent us from which we have made copious extracts. From them it will be seen that disturbances have again broken out in Canada but have been quelled. Lord Durham was in England, but apparently not successful in mustering a strong party. Affairs look very warlike in Europe, and it seems the general opinion that Constantinople is now the immediate aim of the Russians. Austria has a strong army of observation near the Russian frontier, and the Turkish ships are commanded by British naval officers.

The American frigate Columbia, Commodore Reid, has arrived at Macao where the John Adams is also expected in a few days. Deliveries have again gone on, and up to the 26th we hear that 13,700 chests were surrendered, and the quantity would have been larger but for the tardiness with which the Opium-ships arrive at Chumpee.

Tuesday, 30th April.—The quantity delivered, officially known is 13,800 chests, and there is a pause at present, owing we believe to no Opium-ships having lately arrived at Chumpee. Two more are, however, we hear, daily expected when we suppose the deliveries will go on again. The state of the weather, which is very rainy and boisterous, may also retard operations. The Commissioner and Viceroy are living on shore in Anson's bay where a shed or tent has been erected for their accommodation. The Hoppo has returned to Canton some days since.

Wednesday 1st May.—No more vessels have been heard of as having arrived at Chumpee.

Thursday 2nd May.—It is said this morning that accounts have been received from Macao, according to which the Governor there had received a communication from the Yum-chae requiring of him to deliver a certain quantity of Opium (it is said 2000 chests) to the Mandarin at Cass brances, promising the continuance of the Imperial favor if this demand is complied with, but threatening with the cutting off all supplies in case of refusal. On the 30th of last month the senate were to take this communication into consideration. We are informed that there is no Opium whatever now at Macao. The American frigate had exchanged the customary salute with the forts at Macao, and the Commodore is said to have paid a visit to the Governor. Five or six Opium-ships from the coast have arrived and deliveries will probably be going on again, as soon as they get to Chumpee. The John Horton from Liverpool 18th December is reported in. The last accounts from England mention the arrival there on December 3rd, of the Anna Maria, 21st, Red Rover, 22nd, Earl Balcarras. The John Dugdale for Manila sailed from Liverpool on the 6th.

Friday 3d May.—We have been favored with the loan of some slips from late American papers, and recopy the report of the New-york money market. From the same source we see the cargoes of the Chandler Price, the Liberty and the Southerner advertised for public sale on the 20th, 22nd and 16th November.

Saturday Morning, 4th May.—It was known yesterday that the Mahomoodie had arrived at Chumpee, and that deliveries were going on again, and the total quantity in the hands of the Chinese up to the 3d May is about 15,500 Chests. According to the Yumchae's promise the trade was to open after the delivery of this quantity, and it now remains to be seen whether this promise will be forgotten like that concerning the passage-boats. There is no change whatever in the guard stationed near the Factories, and the communication with the backstreets is still cut off, as well as that with Macao and the outside shipping, the only opportunity of sending letters since the stoppage of the trade, which has now lasted upwards of 6 weeks, having been when Mr. Johnston left this for Macao. If, as expected, some other vessels have arrived at Chumpee by this time, the quantity promised to the Chinese will be completed within a few thousand chests. The arrival of the John Adams, Amer. Ship of war, at Macao, is reported.

Our journal of occurrences for the past week is very scanty—but we hope in the next to be able to report some progress in the prospect at least of our early liberation from imprisonment.

Saturday, 4th May, 1839.—After the above was in press, Howqua, we understand, called on H. M. Superintendent to inform him that the trade would forthwith be partially reopened, and that any one who liked might leave Canton, with the exception of 16 individuals, whose names will be found below in one of the communications from the Hong merchants to Mr. Wetmore, these names being addressed to that gentleman, probably as having been Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, whose functions for the present are suspended. In the evening Capt. Elliot received an official communication from the Kwang-chow-foo, and of which an abstract was circulated for general information; the edict, as well as Capt. Elliot's circular referring to it will be found below, confirming what Howqua had reported before, and requiring the formal sign of the 16 individuals, through some then 14,000 Chests have been delivered, and though in the Yumchae's former promises nothing is to be found of such reservations.

Sunday 5th May.—The deliveries we understand are going on at Chumpee, and it is expected that about 17,000 chests* will now be in possession of the Chinese. In the meanwhile the guard of soldiers in front of the factories has been withdrawn, and the boats outside have a less regular and more cordon. though some order of distribution among them may still be observed, no doubt to watch appinet any foreigners clandestinely leaving. Seventy Coolies are also retained in the square to watch the 16 foreigners, of whom none, if their names are correctly translated, are out in Canton. It is said that Chinese to take Cargo will be given tomorrow, and that such ships as have accomplished their lading will obtain passports without delay. Meanwhile the ships-boats that have been despatched hence with their crews ever since the stoppage of the trade are not allowed to leave, and the permission for some ships to sail will thereby in a manner be rendered nugatory. The Passage-boats are however, we are told, positively to sail with letters and passengers in the morning to morrow. The boat bulge of whose impended demurrage we published about six weeks ago the correspondence that passed between the Chamber of Commerce and the authorities, was broken up this day in the presence of the Kwang-hoop and Namhoy-yuen. We may also mention that about mid day this day several high Mandarins appeared in the square to give orders for the Coolie-guard to be withdrawn, which was accordingly done as already related. We hear this day of the arrival below of the Fury, Cambrian, Pilgrim, Sabine, and Perdrix. The Edmonstone from Calcutta is also reported in at Macao 3rd May. No Passage boats from below have yet arrived, and no letter bags by the numerous arrivals have consequently been received.

OPENING OF THE TRADE.

From the Kwang chow Foo, communicating the Commands of the Commissioner and Governor, for reopening the Trade.

"It is on record that when the English Superintendent Elliot represented that he would deliver 20,283 Chests of Opium, I, the High Commissioner determined on certain terms: one being, that when one half should be delivered, a measured permission should be given for the passage boats to apply for passes and run to and fro. To this effect commands were given to the said Superintendent that he might act accordingly.

"Recently, when the amount received approached a half, we, the Commissioner and the Governor, had prepared instructions for allowing the communication by passage boats. But Johnston suddenly desired to stop the deliveries, with the design of coercing us. We for this reason withheld the before-prepared instructions, and did not issue them.

"It now appears again that he has hastened up several vessels, which have consecutively made delivery. It behoved us, in accordance with the previous declarations, to give a measured permission to the passage boats, upon examination, to run to and fro, also to remove the guards from the foreign factories, and at the same time to permit the opening of the holds for trade.

"The said Superintendent Elliot, although he himself represented that he should wait the completion of this matter before he should go down to Macao, yet now that the boats can run, he may be allowed to pass to and fro as usual, to enable him to call together with more celerity, and to give such orders and make such arrangements as from time to time may be called for.

Those of the foreigners who have been long in the habit of dealing in opium, sixteen in number, as by the annexed list, must still be temporarily detained in the foreign factories, waiting until the whole matter is entirely completed, when they will have permission to leave. This is in accordance with the force of the terms "measured permission" in the former declaration.

"But at the time when the Boats leave Canton, if officers be not appointed to proceed to the front of the foreign factories, and there, with the Hong merchants under their direction, take cognizance of each by name, it is to be apprehended that these sixteen persons may get on board the Boats, and unknown take themselves away from Canton. We therefore instruct the expectant Sub-Prefect Le Sieh, together with the Kwangchow Hoo or Brigadier, to give previous orders to the Hong merchants, that they enjoin it on the foreigners, to give them prior notice of the time of any boat leaving Canton, that they may report to the officers aforesaid. These are then to proceed in person to the place where the boats are anchored, and to ascertain what number of persons are on board, and what are their names and surnames; and are to direct the Hong merchants to take cognisance of them severally. If there be not among them any of the sixteen named, they shall then give to the boat a sealed passport, to be shown for examination at the various custom-houses that it shall pass.

* The quantity actually delivered is, to hour, 16702 chests.

"This sealed passport shall be printed according to the form herewith transmitted, and sealed with the seal of the Kwang chow foo, the blanks being filled up at the time. The officers aforesaid must by all means faithfully examine, and must permit no confusion or escape, whereby they will render themselves heavily culpable. The Kwang chow hee too must give directions to all the forts and other places of defence to pay obedience.

"We further proceed to issue these commands, requiring the Kwang chow foo immediately to take with him the magistrates of Nanhae and Pwanyu, and to require the original merchants, Howqua Senior, &c., to act in accordance herewith, and immediately to remove all the vessels surrounding the foreign factories.

"The boats registered under the designation obedient, are to have a measured permission to run to and fro, still being subjected to examination at the custom-house stations.

"The ship Esperance at Whampoa, which has already applied for a Port Clearance to return home, and the Captain of which, Linstedt, is now in the foreign factories at Canton, may at once make application to the Hoppo, to give permission for him to leave Canton and take his departure.

"All the cargo ships at Whampoa are permitted to open their holds for trade. Those that being already fully laden, have made application through the security merchants for their Port clearances, are permitted to obtain the same on representation to the Hoppo, that they may be enabled to set sail and return home.

"As to all the foreign merchant ships arrived in the outer waters, they must wait till this matter is brought to a conclusion, when on examination they will be directed to enter their names, and proceed to Whampoa.

"The registered boats—proceeding from Whampoa to Canton must still be subjected to careful examination by the military guard at the two posts Eeshanee, and Tawang haou, on the way up. And if they have contraband articles, or weapons, or gunpowder or board; must be immediately driven back, and instant report made, in order that examination may be made and measures taken.

"Let the tenor of these commands be also declared to Elliot, that he knowing may act accordingly. Be urgent and speedy." (Promulgated 4th May, 1839.)

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Canton, 4th May, 1839.

In the present state of circumstances the Chief Superintendent is not in a situation to do more than refer Her Majesty's Subjects for general guidance to His Public Notice dated at Macao on the 23rd March last.

He need hardly observe, however, that it is His purpose to remain in Canton till His public obligations to this government are fulfilled, and He will afford the best information in His power of the probable period of His departure from time to time.

Parties will therefore be pleased carefully to regulate their proceedings accordingly.

There is a part of the public paper promulgated this evening (not desirable to advert to particularly) which need give no uneasiness.

He hopes it will be felt that the circumstances shall be suitably arranged at the proper moment.

(Signed) EDWARD ELMSLIE,
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

From the Hong Merchants
To Mr. Wetmore.

We beg to inform you that we have received permission from Government for the licensed passage boats to run to and from Canton as usual. The names and number of passengers and crew of each boat must be entered in her license ere she will be permitted to start.

The small unlicensed boats of Canton and Whampoa cannot for the present be allowed to come and go; but when the Opium deliveries are completed we will apply to Government for the requisite commands and inform all the foreign merchants thereof for their obedience.

It is for this we write and trusting you enjoy good health, we remain,

The HONG MERCHANTS.

May 4th, 1839.

From the Hong Merchants
To Mr. Wetmore.

We beg to inform you that we have received orders from Government to allow the licensed passage boats to come and go (as usual.)

The following new regulations must be observed by all foreigners leaving Canton in these boats; viz —An officer will be deputed to examine these ere they will be permitted to start; and on arrival at the several Forts and Custom House stations they must also report themselves to be examined. A Wei-yuen will come out every day to ascertain the number of boats about to leave, and the hour of their dispatch, so that when he shall come to superintend their examination, there may be no delay. The names and number of the passengers and crew of each boat must be inserted in the license, and a list thereof must be previously handed in, that the requisite entries may be made. Hereafter no boat will be allowed to carry guns or ammunition, or lead-ballast, as stones will fully answer the purpose.

It is for this we write and with compliments remain.

ART. V. Injunction from the governor, and lieut.-governor, to the territorial commissioner and others, in reference to the anticipated arrival of the imperial commissioner. From the Chinese Repository for March.

On the 23rd of January 1839, a dispatch was received from the Board of War, giving conveyance to the subjoined imperial edict, delivered to the Inner Council on the 31st of December, 1838.

"Let Lin Tsihsun, governor of Hookwang, and ex-officio director of the Board of War, be invested with the powers and privileges of an imperial commissioner; and let him, with all speed, proceed to Kwangtung, to make inquiry, and to act in regard to the affairs of the sea-ports. Let also the whole naval force of the province be placed under his control. Respect this."

On the same day (23rd January), arrived also a communication from the General Council, of the following address and tenor.

"To the governor of the two Kwang, Tung, and the lieut.-governor of Kwangtung, E. On the 3rd of January, we received the annexed imperial edict:

"'The daily increasing prevalence of the use of opium, and the constantly augmenting lure arising from the vast profits, have infected beyond the seas, hosts of lustful people, who greedily pursue Us in numbers, to the destruction and ruin of our people and treasure. Thus it appears with true purport of heart, under inquiry and due to each matter. But an evil practice, so long and deeply rooted, is not, it must be feared, to be at once wholly eradicated. If this source of the evil be not closely ascertained, how can we hope that the stream of pernicious consequences shall be stayed?

"'We recently expressed it to be our pleasure, that Lin Tsihsun, the governor of Hookwang, should repair with speed to the provinces of Kwangtung, to make inquiry and to act in regard to the affairs of the sea-ports, and that he should be invested with the powers and privileges of an imperial commissioner, and should have the whole naval force of the province placed under his control. Lin Tsihsun, on his arrival at Canton, will of course exert his utmost strength in inquiring and acting, in obedience to our supposed pleasure, with the view of thoroughly removing the source of this evil.

"'But the buildings in which the opium undergoes preparation, the smuggling vessels in which it passeth, and the shops opened for its sale, or for habituation to the use of it, with the hongs and other such establishments, will still be thoroughly uprooted as they shall, from time to time, and in one place after another, be brought to light. Let Tang Tingchang and Elemg arouse, then, all their servants, and persevere in the work of investigating and putting measures in operation, to annihilate and, Let them not in any degree become remiss, neither let them entertain any vain anticipations of ease, nor stiff less harbor any desire to evade or to transfer their duties.

"'Tang Tingchang holding, however, the entire sway over two provinces, a multitude of affairs must press upon him. Should the special responsibility of making inquiry and adopting measures to arrest the importation of opium and the exportation of pure silver, be also laid on him, it may be feared, that, in giving attention to one duty, he may be distracted from others, and that he will thus be prevented from applying his whole mind and strength to the extirpation of this evil. It is for this reason We have commissioned Lin Tsihsun to go and take on him the special management of the matter. It will be the duty of all to apply their efforts with increasing diligence and ardor to cast down every wall of separation, fulfilling with earnestness each his own particular duties, and uniting together in whatever requires combination of counsel and action, reporting conjointly to Us. Let them henceforth embrace every practicable measure, vigorously to redeem their foregone negligence. It is our full hope, that the long-indulged habit will be forever laid aside, and every root and germ of it entirely eradicated. We could fain think that our ministers will be enabled to ascertain each and all of the remora from China the dire calamity. Let these our commands be made known to those concerned. Respect this."

"In obedience to these imperial desires, we, the ministers of the council, address to you this communication."

The above documents having been received by us, the governor and lieut.-governor,—while, on the one hand, we forward copies of them to the several commanders of divisions of the naval forces, to be made known by them to the commanders of squadrons, and of vessels, subordinate to them,—while also we direct the hong merchants, Woo Shaouyung and his fellows, to pay respectful obedience,—and while further we instruct the colonel in command of the central regiments of our own respective battalions, to consult together immediately, and within three days, without fail, to present to us lists of the number of military troops (or aids-de-cap) and bushiho (or orderlies), who shall be appointed to attend (on the imperial commissioner), together with their names,—while effecting these several objects, we, at the same time, forward a copy to the territorial and financial commissioner, that he may act in accordance with the sovereign's commands, and they, in concert with the judicial commissioner, the treasurer of the gabel, and the commissary, make the arrangements generally known, for the obedience of all. And in reference to the approaching visit of the high imperial commissioner to Canton, to make inquiry and act in regard to the affairs of the sea-ports, let these officers give their immediate attention to the following questions, viz.—What chief of the ships of war of the naval force on the coast of Canton? In case he should require to go in person in view the three divisions—central, eastern, and western—of the naval force on the coast, What portions are of most importance? And in what naval vessels will it be fitting for him to embark? What number of attendant officers, civil servants and clerks, should be appointed to form his suite; and from what offices should they be chosen? Let them answer these questions jointly, and attribute their deep penance, for our revisal, lists, comprising the names of such officers as should be so appointed.

Miscellaneous.

It is some time since we were able to mention our graphic contemporary, H. B.; but we must to-day notice the four sketches he has published this week.

The first of them, Impatience to a Post, is a facsimile of Lord Brougham's proposed celebration of the Coronation of Queen Victoria—but not the trial positively postponed to another day the pleasurable excitement of the noble Ex-Chancellor. It represents Lord Brougham, with Mr. Charles Phillips, the Barrister, to a post, fishing at some place to which his Lordship is supposed to have betaken himself, after Lord Russell refused him leave at Cuddesdon. The first of his Lordship's line is perpendicular; the fish don't bite; and the learned Lord observes,—"Though I have been trying all kinds of bait lately, gudgeons are not as they used to be, and I can scarcely get a nibble." His companion replies—"All parties, I suppose, to the spread of Useful Knowledge." The portraits, especially Lord Brougham's, are excellent; and the sketch, though slight, is good.

Another sketch.—A New Picture of La Belle Assemblée presents to our view the Duke of Wellington conducting Marshal Soult to Lord Hill. The French Marshal and the English Commander of the forces are shaking hands. Soult says—"Je vous remercie enfin, mon, qui si cours si long temps aprés vous." A good deal of "observer surprise" is expressed in Lord Hill's countenance; Wellington himself looks, as usual, as a Frenchman can look when nothing requires; and in the Duke of Wellington's face are manifest astonishment, admiration, and amusement. This sketch is very nicely drawn.

The third sketch—Jonah—is also a faithful record of a recent historical event. Her Majesty's ship, The College, is caught in a hurricane; "the enemy winds" (Lords Brougham, Lyndhurst, &c.) "do blow;" furiously; breakers are dashing over the ship's sides; poor little Lord John Russell is letting himself in the most for safety; Lords Melbourne and Lansdowne, to lighten the ship, or to appease the winds and waves, are throwing overboard Jonah, the unfortunate First Lord of the Admiralty Lord Minto; for whom Lord Duncannon and dear Uncle are making a show of compassion, by casting hold of his feet, but rather with the intended effect of letting him down gently, than preventing his going. The Duke of Wellington, as the great levitation, is swimming in the sea ready to pounce, pounce, and rescue, the devoted Jonah, from the watery grave to which his colleagues have consigned him. Lord Glenelg is very properly up to the "Admiralty" business, and would be for taking hold of the naval people in particular this choice of a favorite.

The last, but not the least, in growth as it is by far the best of the four, is entitled Dog Nerves. Its applicability is so striking that we need not say, nay, need not hint who the Nurses, or who the Children are. The maternity, the motherly care, tahen of Queen Victoria's Ministry, by the two chiefs of the Conservative Opposition, has been so great and so frequent, that "all who run may read" (without reading) it, who they are that form the dramatis personæ of this sketch.

It is replete with meaning; it is full of marrow; it is "fat with facts"—as dear Uncle said, when he pushed into the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Session, the paragraph containing the announcement of his late treaties with Sultans and Pera!—It is, in fact, an epitome of the Misery of Punishment and Bonnard's Dundee, during the whole Session.

An unhappy-looking little mannikin, wanted emergency size, but still to a bit, and cap, and bow, and feathers, and short clothes, and with a rattle in his hand, and shoes to suit any further, is in the arms of a powerful stout-built nurse, who says to Johnny—"Really, my little gentleman, small as persons for your years, it is not a little burdensome as them to be supporting you this hot weather."

What is this groups, but a graphic paraphrastic Parliamentary report of what occurred every day? And of what occurred no longer since than Thursday last—when Lord John Russell attempted to palliate the ungovernable of himself and the ministry, in omitting the Appropriated Clause, by acknowledging that they were forced they could not carry it; and leaving it behind him, jumped plump into the arms of Sir Robert Peel for support?

A little behind this groups is another, composed of a rather older, or at any rate rather larger, and Lamb-like, or Sheepish-looking boy, carrying a hoop in his hand, and catching hold of the gown of a very respectable elderly nurse, for protection; to whom he says—"These naughty boys are throwing stones at me again," and who replies to him—"Take hold of me, my dear, and don't mind them."

What, too, is this but an honest transcript of an every day original? Who does not remember Lord Melbourne's remarkable exclamation, when Lord Brougham and Lord Lansdowne were pitching and hobbling him about the Peerage, and he dubbed the united Whig-cabinet pair of quarrelsome—"Oh, how I wish the Dons were here; then you wouldn't serve me so!"

Behind their second grotipe is a tiff. Two boys, of about the same age, are running after the sheepish boy, who has caught hold o his nurse's gown. One of these boys is pelting after him, and says—"Oh, see how he runs to his mammy, for protection." The other boy is stooping down to pick up a stone, and says—"I must have another fling at him."

Now again, what is this but an almost verbatim report of Lord Brougham's observation, in the celebrated Berkeley debate, which procured for poor Lord Mahon the immortal sobriquet of Jonah—that "whenever Lord Melbourne was in need, he found a friend indeed" in the Duke of Wellington; and of Lord Lyndhurst's statement on another occasion that "he would return to the stands"

Except Lord Lyndhurst's—to whose there is a very general opinion that H. B. never does justice—and Sir Robert Peel's, all the portraits in this sketch are very good. Even Lord Melbourne's, to which some persons have taken reasonable objection; for his Lordship's face is varied from the spectator, and towards his Lordship's opponent, or "saviour," as Lord Brougham hails his Grace, and the likeness, in that position, is good. In general, as well corporeal peculiarities, the admirable design of Lord John Russell would not have disgraced Lawrence.

This appeals requisite, excellent, and go on full chords, of Dog Nerves, will do H. B.'s reputation service; and, unless we much mistake, the term "dry-nursing" will become a most appropriate political jeu.—John Bull.

Lincolnshire Poulterers.

Many a housekeeper raises at the present day to the united humanities, who, whether his household be small or numerous, and no matter what his religious and political persuasion, is constantly with inexpressible anxiety, and a most overwhelming sense of responsibility, upon the look out for the Christmas goose or Michaelmas duck. Our friend is seen with unbecoming zeal and unbecoming eagerness, his eyes rolling together with unspeakable power, his cheek inflamed by the protuberance of powerful digestion, his form seen rising horizontally. But upon the table, and his housekeeping pursuits appear at length satisfied. The chicken, he pronounces and says I can see that from bottom, while the goose is under inspection; turning decisively round into the direction of the cook, he gives the most positive instructions touch their chins, with a view to the preservation of the breast-bone; touch them with the thumb nearest his shoulder, and the paralizing impression (I speak by him the fiend) while in serious debate the wife and children sit patiently watching his countenance and listening to the utterance of the bright lights, and the brisk carving-knife and fork of the aforesaid implement; and finally, though the fat of the goose and bacon on the table, as if it were alive, as if it were growing out of the dish, and into the human like a stream of lava [illegible] and [illegible] I say again, so relieve to the juicy manner in his bosom, upon this dismal tragedy that I will here present the reader.

At all of which the said housekeeper, when I pictured on the premises, two hundred and fifty years ago, in the county of Lincoln, Lincolnshire, and of the hundred, also another, on that day devoted to fun. The said three were all plucked, trussed, and laid in order ready roasting on an oaken dresser, which, the first and entire apartment by an entire door through the back part of the house, presented by a series of wicker gates, to the place of general [illegible] already referred to, and also by partitions with two other chambers, in one of which the goose were hissing, and in the other stripped of their feathers. In the first of the two latter chambers, three boys were employed. The first boy, by virtue of his office, drew the geese from the [illegible] from the guard geese into a low pound of his own owner of the goose, and into the [illegible] hatch, were usually dismayed on such days as he went to go to the depot and return. The second boy, though in point of fact he acted the part of a bluggeon, did anything more than, taking both [illegible] and [illegible] afterward pen, prepare it for operation. To this end, by a dexterous twist, he unscrewed together the pinions of the bird behind its back, and I stood the legs to one of which he [illegible] of the [illegible] from the ground destined the [illegible] a low bench adjacent on the front to catch the blood. The third boy's business was simple and sanguinary,—merely that of cutting throats. Of this rather unlucky, though necessary business, the unfortunate birds had not only [illegible] across the windmill of the goose [illegible] gave way the ghost, but on the one had passed his fingers through the feathers of the whole devoted and [illegible] and on the other had [illegible] and [illegible] line was occasionally dotted with the flying [illegible] frequently observers and in despite of his best efforts, he captured a flapping from a gory nose, or a tingling stream of blood spirted in his eye; whereat his countenance would glean with a [illegible] expression of alarm and surprise; he would then compose the limbs of his victims with a [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] as they showed by distortion, or their eyes by glazing, a disinclination to believe decently. Afterwards, he allowed every person to go out of the world in the best manner it could.

So soon as a goose appeared thoroughly dead, its legs were disengaged from the strap to which they were tied together, when the distant bird was seized out of the chamber of death, through a small square window or aperture, that communicated with the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] one [illegible], upon low seats, [illegible] in a cloud of dust and down, and up to their hips in feathers; where with alacrities they were covered with such profusion, that among the eight individuals, it was difficult at first sight to point out which was the woman. These people were paid for their labour, as I was told, at the rate of a shilling a score, whence each is able to earn twenty and upwards a day. Their wages to date at the present period, are reported they have power to pluck, to earn into no longer shillings a day. An adept as I could judge, a goose was plucked naked as a cradle in about a minute, whereupon a plump fat bird at all events every forty or fifty seconds from either one or other of the operators, was pushed heavily on the dresser. Then the artists, as most [illegible] are daily, vigorously pursued their work, while the naked [illegible] of cells immediately ripped from their [illegible] [illegible] like the crackling of a faggot in a baker's oven, or twigs snapped in twain by a rusty donkey, as he bursts through a thicket.

Each goose as soon as plucked was plunged by the plucker, as I have before observed, upon the dresser. Hence it was removed by the next performer into the first outer apartment already mentioned, and from the [illegible] it incidentally treated and disposed on the shelves.

After witnessing the various operations now described, I paid a short visit to the premises in the rear of these apartments, where a small steam-engine is continually kept at work in the double operation of grinding meal for the geese's food, and stirring and pounding the same into a compost together with potatoes. Three men, moreover, in the yard adjoining, cap green as high as their waistbands, were hard at work loading carts with shovels from a large heap containing at least a dozen waggon loads of pure good manure.

The result we saw will, I trust, have formed an idea of a London goose-farm of considerable extent, although, on the one hand, there are others I believe considerably more extensive. From hence the geese are dispatched regularly to the London market, packed in baskets containing twenty-five birds each, of which baskets twenty-five also make a waggon load,—in weight, supposing each goose on an average to weigh eleven pounds, upwards of three tons. The waggons are forty-eight hours on the road, and the passengers, on their arrival, consigned to salesmen, are disposed of to the poulterers. Memoranda by Sir George Head.

Scenes in Spain.

A PASSAGE IN THE LIFE OF THE RENOWNED DON JOSE.

"It was not a very long while before the hand of Don José was broken up, that one night, on the road between Seville and Cordova, we fell in with a caballero, well mounted, riding with extraordinary speed, and attended by three persons, mounted and armed as well as himself. Drawn up to the number of eight or ten across the high road, each of us with his carbine to his shoulder, to pass us, or to encounter us, were equally out of the question.

"'Buenos dias, senor, with a good grace,' said the lieutenant, 'and it will be late for them; we want, but thy money; after spending a night with us thou shalt pursue thy journey.'

"'For the love of God, in the name of the most blessed Virgin, and of all the saints,' said the caballero, 'do not detain me. I am rich; my money I will willingly give; but what can it serve thee to detain me on my journey? Do I speak with the lieutenant? Is it not so?' and the lieutenant immediately conducted the stranger to Don José, who with myself and the rest of the band, had remained at a little distance.

"'Senor,' said the caballero, 'although I address a bandit chief, I address one who has at least the reputation of gentleman; doing just as you do, I am told.'

"'And you probably think, senor,' said Don José, 'that it is neither just nor kind to make free with his purse, which is none of the lightest.'

"'The question of justice we shall not debate,' said the caballero; 'I do not complain of the loss of my purse, but of the loss of my time,—in making free with which, no advantage can accrue to Don José,—for I take it for granted, it is him whom I address.'

"'Sir, me,' said our lieutenant, 'that time is of value to you, and I promise not to encroach upon it.'

"'I have a sister,' said the caballero, 'young and beautiful, who is beloved by a noble of Andalusia, to whom she was once betrothed. My father disapproved of the marriage, because he wished her to marry the Captain-General of Andalusia.'

"'Don Mendizabal de Zaliva,' interrupted Don José.

"'The same,' said the caballero.

"'Better marry the Devil at once,' said Don José; 'she shall not marry the Captain-General.'

"'Well, my sister chose the veil in preference; and was sent by my father to the convent of Santa Clara, at ——. This day her noviciate expires; and to-morrow she will be lost to us all. Yesterday, it was the will of God that my father should die. I am now my sister's legal guardian; and if I am able to reach —— by sunrise to-morrow, I can assert my right, and with her own consent, claim her.'

"'She shall marry the caballero yet,' said Don José, 'if he be worthy of her.'

"'He is worthy of her,' said the stranger.

"'Does she love him?' again demanded our chief.

"'She did love him, as he deserved to be loved,' said the caballero; 'and though, being destined for the veil, she could not avow her affection, I am sure she loves him still.'

"'Senor,' said Don José, 'I will not only permit thee to pursue thy journey, but will even assist thee in thy object.'

"'I am grateful for the offer,' said the caballero; 'but it is unnecessary that I should accept it. All I ask is, leave to pursue my journey.'

"'Thou art mistaken, friend,' said Don José, 'in imagining the object is now so easy of accomplishment. True it is, indeed, that as the brother of the novice, her father being dead, the right to claim her is yours; but the right extends but to the term of the noviciate. If once the vow be pronounced, it is irrevocable. Think ye, that upon your assertion that her father is dead, they will give her up? they will say, 'prove thy right first:' from her, all will be concealed; and long before it be possible for thee to prove thy right;—nay, my belief is, that then with hardly half an hour to the convent gate, before thy sister will be compelled to pronounce her vow. I am resolved,' said Don José, in his own impetuous way, 'that she shall never take the veil; but come,—'tis already past midnight; mount, young gentleman, and do not spare the horses; ours will keep pace with them,' and before another five minutes had elapsed, the caballero and his attendants, followed by Don José and all his troops, were on the road to ——, the ground ringing beneath the hoofs of our horses.

"The sun had some time risen, when we clattered through the village of ——, and came to a halt before the gate of the Convento de Santa Clara.

"'Now,' said Don José, addressing the caballero, 'try if they will give thee up thy sister.'

"Having knocked at the gate, the caballero was admitted alone. I have no means of knowing what followed; but a short time only had elapsed, when he returned to us.

"'Well, senor,' said Don Jose, 'what success?'

"'As you predicted,' said he; 'they refuse to give me my sister, or even so much as to allow me to see her. 'We have no proof,' say they; and besides it is with her own consent that she takes the veil; and without her consent, no one can claim her.'

"'There's no time for anything but acting,' said Don José; 'I'll lay a duro or two, the ceremony's already begun; and unless we make speed, we'll have to restore thy sister shorn of her locks? come,' added our chief, addressing me, 'step from thy saddle on the wall, and open the gate for us!' and before the words were well out of his mouth, I had stepped on the wall,—dropped on the other side, and was stoutly engaged with two or three friars, who interposed themselves betwixt me and the gate; but in a trice, I was joined by several of our band, who had followed my example; and in another minute, the whole troop was drawn up within the court.

"The Abbess, a dignified old woman, now appeared on the steps that led to the inner door; and walking across the court, was beginning to address our band, when Don José interrupting her, said 'Madam, I am Don José, there are my people: you have heard of me before; lead us into the convent, and conduct hither the sister of this caballero;' but without waiting for her answer, Don José, motioning to me to follow him, walked past the abbess, and straight into the convent; and there, sure enough, found everything as Don José had predicted. The ceremony had already begun; the novice, not yet indeed divested of her locks, and still wearing her noviciate habit, stood, ready to pronounce the oath that would have separated her from the world. The priest stood ready to administer it. If not really be believed, that our entrance changed the face of affairs.

"'What is thy sister's name?' whispered Don José to the caballero.

"'Inez,' replied he; and Don José, then walking straight up to the novice, and putting aside the numerous arms that would have intercepted him, 'Inez,' said he, at the same time beckoning to the caballero to advance, 'dost thou know this caballero?'

"'Monstrous profanation!' exclaimed the abbess.

"'Back!' roared the priest; 'it is with her own consent that the novice, Inez, assumes the veil; who dares—?'

"'Inez,' said the caballero, 'is it with thy consent that thou takest the veil?' and at the same moment that he put the question, he laid forward one of those individuals who accompanied him in the capacity of attendants; and he, throwing back his cloak, displayed the rich dress of a noble.

"Never before was there seen so deep a blush on the cheek of a novice, as that which overspread the cheeks of Inez, and she would have fallen to the ground, had not her brother encircled her with his arm.

"'Lead the way to the chapel,' said Don José, pushing the priest before him.

"'O Dios!' said the priest, holding up both his hands.

"Inez, too modestly and timidly hung back, when her brother, addressing her, said 'Inez, my sister, thy noviciate is ended; God has given to me the guardianship of my sister; I restore thee to the world with thine own consent; and with thine own consent entrust thy happiness to one who knows the value of that which is confided to him;' and he, leading the now pale, trembling, and beautiful novice, while Don José followed the priest, all stood before the altar.

"It is not necessary that I should relate what followed; you can imagine the sequel; the novice became a bride; and thus the object of our interference was accomplished. This, you will allow, was a good deed; but it is only one, of hundred instances I could give, of such actions performed by the unfortunate Don José. Inglis's recent rambles in La Mancha.

Filial piety of the Chinese. Min Tsze Keen was a disciple of Confucius, and remarkable for his filial piety. His own mother being dead, his father married another wife, who bore him a son, still an infant.* His father was a coachman by profession, and Min Keen used to accompany him to learn the noble science of the whip, or as others say, he used to push his father about in a sort of burley or wheelbarrow. One day his father seeing the poor boy shivering with cold, said to him, "why child, "you have got on a nicely cotton-wadded gown, how "comes it that you look as cold as an icicle?"—but looking more narrowly he saw that his dress was merely stuffed with straw and leaves, his stepmother having deprived him of the cotton to give it to her own child. His father got into a great rage and wished to put his wife outside of the house for her partiality and injustice, but Min Tsze Keen with tears in his eyes implored his father saying, "while "mother is still here, it is "only one son who suffers "cold; but were you to send mother away, both boys "would be destitute and forlorn!" His father at these words paused and reflected, and stopped the current of his wrath. His stepmother felt grateful to the boy for his goodness, and ever afterwards treated them both with equal kindness. Speaking of him, Confucius said to his praise, "who is "the dutiful son? —why it is" Min Tsze keen!" Notes to "The lasting resentment of Min Keen to Kwan Wang."

Sesou ho was the prime minister of the first sovereign of the Han dinasty called after his death Kaou tsoo. When establishing himself on his throne, he drew up three books of laws, but he was not able to finish the work, leaving still undone that part of the code which distinguished between more and less severe punishments. This the Emperor deputed Sesou ho to do, and he did it in a style which called forth the warmest approbation of his Imperial master. But when the unfortunate law-concoctor was copying his work clean out, and preparing it for the press, his mother called him several times to come and take his rice, as the dinner was getting cold. He however was too intent on transcribing his work and wished to finish it, so he "answered negligently he knew not what." After a little time, the whole being completed, his wife called him to dinner, when he went immediately. His mother asked him, "what have you been about, or that you did not "come when I called you?" to which he replied. "I "have been dividing or distinguishing between right "and severe punishments." "And pray what punishment," added the old lady "do your laws "award to a son, who heartens to his wife, and disobeys his mother?" "Decapitation" innocently answered Sesou ho. His mother (having no idea that the joke was to end so tragically) reported this circumstance to the Emperor. He felt exceedingly grieved thereat, and wished much to pardon Sesou ho, but feared that if he pardoned the first law-breaker at the outset, his laws would not be respected, so he had the ill starred Sesou ho's head severed from his body at the market place! This bloody and cruel example was quite as well calculated to teach people to beware of practical jokes, as to beware of breaking the laws; and may remind the European reader of the brazen bull which the ancient Perillus presented to the tyrant Phalaris Ibid.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 11th May.

Since publishing the Extra Press of 5th May, the restrictions from the trade having been partially removed and things being, though spoken of one day, perhaps not ripe till three or four days after, we have given over the publishing a regular Journal and shall this week content ourselves with a more general resume of public affairs.

We recorded in our last that an Edict had been received by which ships were allowed to lade, and in fact according to which the trade was to be opened, and passage boats were allowed to leave Canton, carrying passengers. The latter part of this edict was in so far complied with that several boats left on Monday morning for Macao with passengers and letters, but to guard against any of the 18 individuals at that time ordered not to leave, escaping, the Kwang-heep and a posse of other officers, followed by the Hong merchants were assembled at the embarking place bearing the euphonious appellation of Jackass-point, and every passenger, about to embark, was called upon by name, and had to identify his claim to it by shewing his face. This ceremony, including the searching of trunks &c. &c. occupied a great number of mandarines about four hours, when the boats were at last allowed to depart. The boats crews detained here during our imprisonment left in them, they not being allowed to float their ships boats, high and dry in the square during the last 6 weeks. A good many people, particularly such as were not permanent residents here, embraced this opportunity to leave Canton, and we believe that, sailors included, the boats took away from here between forty and fifty individuals. As to the opening of the trade however, and shipping off of goods, matters still remain subject to a good deal of just complaint, and it is impossible to consider it otherwise than still nearly stopped; no foreigner is allawed to go either to the back streets or even to China Street where most of the shopkeepers and outside dealers live: this may perhaps not be considered so much a matter of just complaint, the Chinese Mandarins affecting to consider most of the dealings of these sort of people as allowed illegal—but noone is to go into the Hongs or packhouses of the Hong merchants to look at the quality of the teas he has contracted for, and which are about to be shipped off for him; the Hong merchants affirm that one may send one's servants to receive the teas, but the fact is that every catty of tea now shipped, the exporter has no control over whatever, and he must trust, for what he sends away, the respectability of the Hong merchants, which we from our own experience, as not having dealt with them, have had no opportunity of measuring, but which, some of our commercial friends assure us is far from being undoubted.

It was on Tuesday last that the total of deliveries below, then known here, was stated at 17,500 chests, and since then nothing has been officially received.

Last Wednesday was chiefly remarkable by an alarm of fire in the wylom Company's kitchen chimney, caused by the burning of old Company's papers. The fire was soon extinguished without doing any injury, but among the crowd whom this accident had assembled we heard some one, no doubt deeply versed in the mysteries of exchanges, exclaim; "Confound it! the Company's paper has often thrown Canton, into a ferment, and now it nearly put it in a blaze"!

On the day before yesterday (Thursday evening) it was known that an important edict from the Yumchae had been received, and various were the rumours concerning it in our community; but this morning the following translation became known.

From the Kwangchow Foo to the Hong merchants, communicating the order of the Commissioner, Governor and Lieut. Governor, regarding the punishment of Foreigners for dealing in opium.

Choo, by special appointment Prefect of Kwang chow Foo, issues commands to the original Hong merchants, and to the several Senior and other Hong merchants, for their full information:

He has now received from Lin, the high Imperial Commissioner, &c., Tang, the Governor of the two Kwang, and E, the Lieutenant Governor of Kwang tung, the following orders:

"It appears that the English Superintendent Elliot, the American Superintending officer Snow, and the Dutch Superintending officer Van Basel, have presented addresses, requesting that they all should return home at the head of the people and the Vessels of their several nations.

"These addresses coming before us, the Commissioner and the Governor, and being duly authenticated, we reply:

"China has indeed no need of commercial intercourse with outer Barbarians. But because you have come from far over the seas, it cannot bear to push you utterly away; you have enjoyed the overflowing, the comprehensive, and deep benevolence of the Great Emperor, who has given sanction to the trade with Kwangtung, you who have come to the territory of the Celestial Empire, have not only eat of the heritage and trod the soil equally with the people of the land, but have also by your buying and selling acquired very rich advantages. It is naturally your duty to rest in your stations, observing the laws. But for tens of years past, you have on the contrary employed a thing hurtful to men, as a means of gaining and possessing yourselves of people's wealth.

"The great Emperor anxiously regardful of the general well being, has therefore declared his pleasure that this should be severely prohibited. And if the laws be not plainly declared, how shall the future ingress be put a stop to? While now, all you Superintendents and Consuls aforesaid are aware that the prohibitory enactments of the celestial court may not be opposed, you are yet anxious in regard to points of difficulty as relates to your own countries, and request that, at the head of the people and vessels of your several countries, you may all together take your departure to return home.

"Those of the foreigners whose names are prominent as having been habitual sellers of Opium, have already ere this been ordered away. But besides Jardine and others who have gone away back to their countries, there yet remain many lingering behind. If indeed all leave China for ever, there will of course no Opium gain entrance into the Inner land, and this evil may be removed.

"After then the full completion of the present deliveries, let it be even as requested. It shall be left to you entirely to return to your countries. You will not be allowed to make pretexts for procrastinating and delaying. And after you have then returned, you will not be allowed to come again. Let there be no turning backwards and forwards, no inconstancy, whereby investigation and proceedings thereon will be involved.

"Having reference to the great numbers of the foreigners, of the various nations, and the openness of communication by sea in every part, the laws and enactments of the celestial court being extremely strict, it is still requisite that the punishment attaching to the prohibition against the importation of Opium should be plainly proclaimed. All you foreigners of every nation should you not come hither, there the matter rests; but should you come to the territory of the celestial court, be you foreigners of any country whatsoever, so often as Opium is brought, in all cases in accordance with the new law, the parties shall be capitally executed, and the property entirely confiscated. Say not that it was not told beforehand!

We proceed to issue these orders, commanding the prefect immediately to enjoin the orders on the original Hong merchants, and on the several Senior and other Hong merchants, that they may publish and enjoin the same on the several Superintendents aforesaid, that they having knowledge thereof, may offer no opposition.

This having been received by the Prefect, he proceeds to issue these commands; when these reach the said Hong merchants, let them immediately enjoin the same plainly on each of the said Superintending officers, that they may have knowledge thereof, and offer no opposition. A special command.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 3rd month, 23th day, (8th May, 1839.)

We believe that owing to its importance, and the consequent irregularity of its being transmitted to Capt. Elliot through the Hong-merchants, that officer refused to receive this document, which was at same time transmitted to the American Consul, and to the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce that was. From it, it will be seen that any foreigners may leave Canton after the delivery of the 20,283 chests shall have been completed, but that, any one, applying now for leave to go, will not be allowed to return; those that under present circumstances remain in Canton will be subject to the laws lately promulgated against the smugglers of Opium, that is, to capital punishment. Under such conditions, and the facility of accusation, where, for condemnation, rigid proofs may not be required, most foreigners are now preparing to leave, and their doing so will probably disabuse the Chinese of their so often avowed belief that "without Tea or Rhuberb the barbarians cannot live."

The purport of this Edict is, of course, of paramount importance, but besides it, a good many annoyances of a minor kind are being inflicted on the residents here. We mentioned before that they were not allowed to go into the back-streets or the Hongs to transact their business, which, to be done, must be entrusted altogether to the honor of the Chinese; since this morning it appears, previous orders are to be executed, and workmen have been all day busy preparing the foundation of a wall and railing to be run up close to, and in a parallel line with the factories, leaving their inhabitants for recreation the small space of 4 paces only. Besides, no more than one inlet into the suburbs of Canton is in future to be allawed to—all the others are to be blocked up. The Kwang chow foo, Nom-hoy prune, and Kwang heep came in the person this morning to inspect these new arrangements. They went to the Superintendents hall; where they remained short while, and afterwards seemed to give some orders or explanations when seated under the Verandah in the garden. Howqua attended them.

The guard of about 70 Coolies in front of the Factories, which we mentioned as having taken the place of of about three time the number in our last still remains, and the boats, though not so symmetrically arranged to the eye continue to guard the few landing places. Communication with Whampoa has however become unrestricted, and boats are daily coming and going.

Up to last night, when the arrival here of the boat Peradox from Macao was known, no communication has been had with the coast, and even now, the boat being by some cause or other detained somewhere near the French Fort, but few of the letters she brings, have reached Canton. From advices received by her from Macao it would appear that the assurances of the local Government there to the Yum-chae that they have no Opium have not met with the desired belief, and that all Chinese servants and shopmen have been ordered to leave. This vexation, we have heard, does not extend to English and American families, or in fact to any not Portuguese.

We have gathered but little of intelligence of much importance from such sources of information as have been available—but the latest accounts from Peru of December mention that the Peruvian fleets under Santa Cruz had again possessed themselves of Lima, and that the Chilian forces were ravaging along the Sea-coast, within sight of their squadron, on board of which they could not attack owing to its want of the necessary guns. The very bubble results in the total annihilation of the Chilian expedition.

From Mexico the accounts brought by way of the west-coast are that the French at Vera Cruz have for the present discontinued the blockade of the ports, but that they hold San Juan de Ulua until their claims be paid. General Santa Anna was not killed in the defence of Vera Cruz, but nearly the having survived with the loss of a leg and an arm, which have, like other limbs of modern heroes, been entombed, and we hear of a row made by the Mexicans that no Frenchman shall ever, with impunity, pass the spot where those precious parts are deposited.

We have moreover been favored with the last of late Calcutta papers, and much as we wish to give extracts of them, our limited mechanical means, at the late hour we received them, prevent our giving more than our extracts of this week to which the cessation of intercourse has obliged us to have recourse.

The Chinese are by no means consistent in the edicts promulgated of late. In that published on the 5th, 16 foreigners are ordered to be retained, now a general edict gives liberty to all to leave, and special edicts have moreover been sent to some of these 16 ordering them, within a very short period, to leave the country.

Among the occurrences of the week we regret to have to record, on Monday last, the death of the Hong-merchant Mowqua, aged near 60 years. He was very generally liked and esteemed among foreigners, whose sincere friend he was supposed to be. The immediate cause of his death is said to have been inflammation, but it is more than probable that the fatigue he underwent, both bodily and mental, since the Yumchae's arrival, had a great share in producing this fatal termination.

The letters by the Peradox were received late last evening, but they were only a very few from Macao and Bombay—the other letters now expected to be on their way by a subsequent boat, happening to be in the hands of another boat owner. If there were not very many reasons to suppose that we shall soon leave Canton, we would ask for some suggestions to prevent similar irregularities in future.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

During the stoppage of the trade there were some sales of Cottons at an advance of upwards of a Tael a Picul on the rates prior to the stoppage: but the demand, which was principally speculation with reference to the peculiar position of affairs has not been very active since the trade was partially opened.

WOOLLENS.—were also enquired after at an advance, but they are again dull; owing to the difficulty of arranging so as to export, Bullion do not appear to sell extensively. Matters are in so very unsettled a state, that it is in fact difficult to quote any thing like a real price for any description of goods.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—This latter remark applies to these also, for have we heard of any transac tions in them.

RICE.—is again very cheap—the advance of 20 a 30 cents per Picul previous to the stoppage not having been maintained, and Java Rice is not now quoted higher than 1.30 a 1.40. The appearance of the next crop is also reported good.

EXPORTS

SILK.—held at pretty nearly the rates quoted before the stoppage

TEAS.—Permission being granted the Ships in Port to proceed with their loading, business has been again resumed, but it is carried on under considerable disadvantages as access to the Hongs is denied us and no opportunity is afforded for examination and not the slightest check exists therefore against any frauds the Hongs may be disposed to practise. The anxiety of parties however to close accounts with the Hong Merchants and so obtain some security for Goods deposited in their hands has occasioned larger transactions than might have been expected: Common Congous are selling @ 20 @ 22 and Twankays @ 24 @ 26 and fine kinds of Tea are quite neglected.

LINGUISTS REPORTS.

New South Wales.

The following conversation between two gentlemen, took place in the Military Barrack-square on Tuesday, just after the execution of the seven murderers of the native Blacks, and while General O'Connell was reviewing the troops of the Garrison:

Country Gentleman—So, I find they have hanged these men?

Town Gentleman—They have.

Country Gentleman—Ah—hem—we are going on a safer game now.

Town Gentleman—Safer game? how do you mean?

Country Gentleman—Why, we are poisoning the Blacks; which is much safer; and serve them right too!

We vouch for the truth of this conversation, and for the very words; and will prove our statement, if public justice should, in our opinion, require it.

From the atrocious and infidel sentiments lately promulgated on the subject of the native Blacks, by a contemporary Editor, the public have been led to believe, that many of the owners of live stock at the Hunter and in Sydney, have approved of the divers killings and massacres of the natives; which commenced a long time ago in the remote districts of the north-west of the colony, and were continued up to the assassination of the twenty-eight persons, men, women, and sucking infants, for the murder of one or more of whom, unknown, the seven men on Tuesday suffered death. But we must say, we were not prepared to hear the damnable sentiments and facts related by the above country gentleman. Bad as we know many of the people of this colony to be; savagely ignorant as are the irreligious, profane and drunken portion of our convict orders, both emancipists and immigrants, jurors and non-jurors; and cruel and illiterate as is a portion of our mushroom aristocracy; we must say we were not prepared to believe that any man, whether a convicted felon in a jail gang, or a proprietor of 20,000 sheep, would feel as a principle, much less dare to utter as matter of common "how-d'ye-do" chit chat in the street the infernal sentences above quoted; we were certainly not prepared to hear. But being the feeling of a portion of our aristocracy, (for the poisoning assassin spoke in the plural number, and is the representative of a portyve or society) we thank God that it has come to our knowledge, because we can make it known to the Sydney Government, to the Home Government, to Europe, to America, and the world.

I comes to our knowledge, that certain gentlemen in Sydney among whom was an officer of government, used to write to their overseers, in Attorney-General Saxe Bannister's time, in flash language, encouraging them to shoot all the blacks on their estates and in the neighbourhood; and great numbers were accordingly shot. The flash words were not those of the Newgate calendar; they were invented for the occasion. They were not the signs of plunder, as the Newgate flash language is, but those of blood and assassination. The Attorney General of that time was like our present one, a humane man. But he had two drawbacks on his efforts; he was the intimate friend of some of the murderers, although he was not aware of the extent of their murderous propensities and principles; and he had not the firmness and nerve of our present Attorney-General. Like Mr. Saxe Bannister, he was the conductor of a fevered journal. But the ferocity of the Australian newspaper of that day, was discharged by a learned and talented barrister, the late Mr. Wardell; a man brave to audacity, acute and inventive, though not profound; of great legal knowledge, tact, and finesse; fond of money, and not over-burdened with humanity and generosity. Such an editor in that day, almost exclusively in possession of the public press, was a great obstacle to Mr. Bannister's exertions, and a thorn in his side in many senses. The Herald equals the Doctor in audacity and inhumanity, but it has not the weight of a barrister to support it; and as to the power of the press, it divides it with others. Mr. Plunkett therefore, fights in a more advantageous position than Mr. Bannister.

The seven men who suffered on Tuesday deserved to die. We did what we could to cause the sentence of the law to be carried into execution. But as murder like all other crimes, is capable of extenuation, we offer the following to show, that the moral guilt of these men may not equal the actual illegality and bloodiness of their conduct; and we do this the more readily, because, by their death, they have satisfied public justice, and, before men have expiated their offence.

The narrative of the murder is this:—Ten men, on horseback and armed, by previous consultation and agreement, proceeded without noise or tumult to a certain hut near the Big River, beyond Liverpool Plains. They quietly secured certain natives who had long made this hut their dwelling-place, or place of rendezvous or principal domicile or locality, when not roving in the bush. This company of natives consisted of about 23 persons, men, women, youths, and infants. These they were, calmly and quickly, but with stern purpose, tied by the elbows in a long line with thick rope called a cabel rope. This done, the ten re-mounted their horses, and without any tumult, not even breaking silence, by conversation that we hear of, they ordered the captives to proceed along with them. For this purpose, one of them fastened the fore-end of the rope round his body and led his horse on a walk. Thus impelled, and seeing resistance useless, the bound natives obeyed the impetus of the rope, and proceeded. As they proceeded they uttered aloud, crying for mercy. Their cries were met by no threats nor imprecations. An awful taciturnity was preserved by the eleven horsemen,* five of whom arranged themselves one after the other on one side of the rope, and five on the other, to prevent escape. Arrived at the place of execution, nothing more is known of their proceedings, so far as the evidence on the trial goes. But from the human skulls separated from the bodies, and portions of human bones which were found burnt with fire lying on the embers of an immense hearth, where a mighty furnace had been made and was now burnt out, and from one shot being heard at the hut by the man whom they left in charge, soon after their departure with the victims, we infer, that they killed one of the twenty-eight with a pistol, and put the rest to the sword, some of the horsemen being armed with swords. All this, we say, was done in cold blood and without conflict. The malice implied by the law is not always the malice of the heart. The malice of anger, revenge, love of lucre, or lustful desire, does not seem to have had any place in the breasts of these eleven men. What they did, the painful and revolting service they performed, they seem to have performed in the more quiet but determined spirit in which any public executioner, in any country, puts to the torture, or to a speedy death, the culprits delivered over to him by the law to execute his office upon.

But although malice, revenge, lust, or lucre, seem not to have been the motive which induced these men to act the part of executioners, they had a motive; for no man in his right mind and awake, does anything without a motive. The question then arises,—what was that motive?

The public belief is, that this murder was only the last of a series; that it was the continuation of a system of extirpation, which had been long acted upon. But this system had been planned either on the suggestion of others, or, if suggested by them-selves and then offered to be put in force, these suggestions and offers were approved by others. In short, that in their murderous project they were, to use the expressive language of the law, "aided, abetted, and comforted" by their superiors. It is also believed by the public, that an example of massacre had been set them by a military officer some time before, in his pursuit of the native Blacks.

Now, if we have arrived at the true motive which induced these men to murder the Blacks, then we are compelled to the conclusion, that all such aiders, abettors, and comforters are, in the eye of God, accessaries before the fact, to all the murders these men committed, and are, in law, equally guilty with themselves. Before God they are more guilty, because these abettors are better taught. And whereas their advice to do the bloody deed might strike the minds of these uneducated and vulgar men, as carrying expediency and necessity with it, no such extenuation can be pleaded by the advisers; because their motive must have been the result of cruelty and avarice. And that this was and still is the true motive of these advisers, we consider palpable; for wherever the destruction of the Natives by shooting or stabbing with the sword has proved to be a laborious and bloody mode of extirpation, and leaves marks behind it to tell tales, they now propose to despatch the remnant of the aboriginal tribes by means of poison!

Arsenic is used in great quantities by the shepherds of our interior, in curing scab in sheep. It is kept in every hut at every sheep station in the country. We know of one black native who was poisoned by some convicts belonging to the Port Stephens Establishment. This poison is readily used. The hut-masters make wholesale raids. They have only to mingle a portion of arsenic in a particular cake and mark it, and give it to the Blacks as a present, and it will despatch them rapidly or lingeringly, according to the quantity infused. The natives die, or they languish a few weeks and then die. There is no Surveon, no Protector, to report their death; nor to examine into the disease which caused it.

If aforetime we have had doubts as to the necessity of paying Protectors of the Black Natives, now we have none. This new scheme of assassinating the Blacks by giving them poisoned flour, or cake, renders the expense of Protectors, an act of common justice and humanity.

If it should ever transpire, that the Governor or the Attorney General was made acquainted with the names of the murderers of these seven men, and did not do all in his power to bring them to justice, be their rank or wealth, or respectability what it may, he will be chargeable before God as the murderer of the seven culprits whom by their just conduct as the Queen's Officers of justice, they caused to suffer death on Tuesday last. For, much as these ignorant and vulgar men deserved to die, their advisers deserve death much more.—Sydney Monitor, 24th December.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—MR. STEVENSON AND MR. O'CONNEL.

(From the Washington Globe, of December 4.)

Mr. ADAMS gave notice that, on to-morrow, he should call up the bill for the prevention of duelling in the district of Columbia.

Mr ADAMS then submitted the following resolutions:—Resolved, That a committee of—members be appointed, with leave to send for persons and papers, to inquire and report to this house—1. Whether Andrew Stevenson, envoy extraordinary, and minister plenipotentiary from the United States at London, is or has recently been engaged in a public newspaper controversy involving his personal integrity, and the honour of his country, whose representative he is, with Daniel O'Connell, a member of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.—2 Whether the said Andrew Stevenson, holding the privileged character of an ambassador, has, in concert with three other persons, citizens of the United States, one of whom is an officer in their navy, engaged in a conspiracy with intent to stop that said officer, in the discharge of the laws of God and of man, to murder the said Daniel O'Connell in a duel, or by a premeditated provocation to a brawl.—3. Whether the said Andrew Stevenson, after a written demand of explanation, in the form usual among duellists as preliminary to a challenge, and with the intent to follow it up by a challenge, preconcerted with the said three other citizens of the United States, did accept of an answer from the said Daniel O'Connell equally unsatisfactory to the codes of genuine and spurious honour, and thereby tacitly admit that the truth of the imputation upon his honour at which he had professed to take offence.—4. Whether the said Andrew Stevenson, in these transactions, has violated the duties of his office as an ambassador of peace, the laws of nations, the laws of the land to the government of which he was accredited, the privileges of the British House of Commons in the person of one of its members, and the honour and interest of his own country.—5. Whether the said Andrew Stevenson has in these transactions so conducted himself as to require the constitutional interposition of this house, by impeachment or otherwise.

Mr. HOWARD remarked that the resolutions covered a great deal of ground, and in the hope too that the gentlemen from Massachusetts would consent to the motion, he moved that their consideration be postponed till Monday next.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. THOMAS hoped the mover of the last motion would withdraw it, and suffer it to lie over.

Mr. HOPKINS, believing no good could result from a discussion upon such a subject, could not consent to withdraw it.

The motion to lay on the table prevailed—yeas 140, nays 37.—Bengal Harkaru.

Canada.

From the Quebec Gazette.

Our neighbors in the United States are turning the tables on us in regard to Lynch law, riotin, &c. The late riot at Halifax, in which some soldiers and sailors were concerned, and the trial by a jury of the Queen's Peace minister, and the secretary through whom her instructions are legally and constitutionally transmitted to the colonies, furnish fertile themes for declamation, and we find that these proceedings are chiefly blazoned by the papers which were the boldest in censuring their own people for their interference in Canada affairs. Some of them say, we are "learning" from us. We believe we have made great progress in the practice to which they allude. The insults offered to Lord Gosford and Sir John Colborne, on the River Chambly, last autumn; the destruction of Madame St. Jacque's house, at St. Denis; the violence offered to Madame Perrault; charivaries and threats employed by armed men against public officers; the injury done to property in several counties; the destruction and seizure of property; the training, without lawful authority; the violence at the Vindicator printing office, on the 6th of November last; the murder of prisoners, and the late burnings in effigy, with the knowledge, and under the eye of the magistracy and a British garrison, are all part and parcel of the celebrated code of Judge Lynch; so much law; and we question if, in the same time, and in proportion to the population, the practice has been more extensive in the United States. With us, it is more disgraceful, as we have greater means of repression, and live under a Government where the execution of the laws is vested in no authority not forced to have recourse, for its existence, to frequent popular elections.—Amer. Paper.

OPIUM IMPORTED FROM CHINA.—Neither we think affords more satisfactory evidence of the present vigilance and extreme severity made use of by the Chinese government in preventing and punishing the importation of Opium, than the fate of one of the Junks that have come in from China in the course of the week, having brought back with her part of the Opium which she purchased here last season, amounting to 30 chests, in consequence of the danger attending any attempt to land it. The Nakhoda says that purchasers could have been found for the Opium at Dollars 800 a chest; but that the discovery by the officers of government of any endeavour to import it would have involved as well the owners of the vessel, as those directly concerned in the transaction, in the most fatal consequences. In that part of the coast where the Junk was, the resolution exercised their authority in prohibiting the introduction of Opium, and in punishing those found dealing in or selling it, without a shadow of opposition from the populace, who were terrorstruck by the severity of the new law, and were endeavouring to alienate themselves entirely from the habit of using the fatal drug. It would be well if speculators were to attend to facts of this kind, instead of suffering themselves to be deluded by the representations which are so often put forth of the inability of the Chinese government to prevent the Opium trade, and the necessity there exists for its continuance in order to replenish the Imperial Treasury, and because penal Mandarins exist sufficient to let as freely fall with bribes as of late has been their wont.—Singapore Free Press.

India.

Our Bengal Papers received by the Conveyor Family, extend to the 9th March, and we proceed to give a brief epitome of the most important Indian news contained both in them and those received in the early part of the week by the Governor Pelham, not having at present room for lengthy selections.

The last intelligence from Scinde, through which territory the army of the Indus was on its march, was highly favourable; and instead of having to attack Hyderabad, as was expected would be necessary to reduce the Ameer to compliance with the overtures of the government, he has yielded a passage to the troops, agreed to grant us the free navigation of the Indus, to pay down 27 lahs of rupees towards the expenses of the Scinde campaign, and to remit a subsidy of 2,000 British troops. This only act of hostility attending the progress of our army through these territories was at Kurrachee, the principal sea port of Scinde over one of the mouths of the Indus, which was battered down by the Wellesley.—Nothing further is said of the rumoured coalition of the North Western countries, including Herat against us.—Lieut Forrester's mission was still in Herat, but is reported to be on bad terms with the Minister of Shah Kamran. There still, however, continue reports of combinations against our power in the East, fostered by the intrigues of Russia. The part of Asia now engrossed after a sharp resistance on the side of the Arabs, whose loss in killed and wounded amounted to 130, the casualties on our side being very trifling—four brass guns, of very large calibre, fell into the hands of the captors, who intend to present them to the Queen. Aden being the first acquisition of territory made under her reign.

An unexpected night attack had been made on the 26th January last, on the station of Jubbulpore, Upper Assam, by a body of Kamptees more than 600 strong, in which Lieut.-Col. White was killed, and the line burned down—the assailants were however speedily repulsed, but not before they had caused considerable loss and were the following day attacked in their own haunts. News had reached Calcutta, accompanied with some particulars, of a rebellion or counter-revolution in Burmah, which does not however appear to be a very serious affair to the reigning sovereign. There was an appearance of an early war with Ava, and no intimation had reached of Col. Burney. The Bengal Papers had remarkable accounts of some extensive fires in the Isle of France attended with considerable loss of property. There are meetings and discussions about steam of which we have not room to give an account now, but will supply particulars in our next number.

We have private advices of the 9th March which state that in consequence of the dissensions accounts from China brought by the Sir Edward Ryan, no prices could be quoted for Opium, and that shipments were being made to China to get the drug out of the Calcutta market. There was little change in Straits Produce, but from recent importations Tin was expected to decline—Pepper continued in fair request.

The Spy was to leave Bengal early for the Straits and China, and the Rover for this port: the Sir Edward Ryan was expected to sail about the 25th, and the Water Witch would probably remain till the 3rd Opium sale.—Eng. Free Press, 4th April.

States, England, and France, from the following facts:—The number of letters forwarded through the New York Post-office by the packets for Liverpool, London, and Havre, from the 18th of April last to the 10th July, was 61,307—for other ports, 4,360; total, 65,667. The number received at the upper Post office, from 1st January, to June 30th was 240,548—for City delivery, 101,849. There can be no doubt that, but for the embarrassment of the times, the number of letters would have been much greater.—New York Evening Post.

THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE.—From a census which has been made in July, by order of the Minister of the Interior, it would appear that there are the following number of British subjects residing in France;—In Paris, Versailles, St. Cloud, and Germain, 20,000; in Dieppe, Rouen, Havre, Caen, Orleans, Marseilles, and Bourdeaux, 10,000; in Dunkirk, Bergues, Lille, Douai, Cambrai, and St. Quentin, 1,500; in St. Omer, Mount Cassel, St. Pol, Arras and Bethune, 1,500; in Calais, St. Pierre, Cologne, and Guines, 4,500; in Boulogne-sur-Mer, Marquise, Montreuil, Amiens, and Beauvais, 10,000—total, 47,500. We should say that this return is very imperfect, there being more than twice that number in France—to wit, Lyons, Blois, Montpellier, and last, though not least, Tours, and other towns we could name.—Boulogne Journal.

Straits of Macassar.

The following letter, originally addressed to the Register we have been requested to republish, to give as wide a circulation as possible to the information it contains.

Sir,—As many ships adopt the route through Macassar Straits at this season of the year, I think it may be useful to publish in your paper the following remarks, which are not in the old editions of Horsburgh.

St. Johns and Haringe Islands were formerly placed in a N. N. W. direction from Point Kancoongan.—On June 7th 1829, wind at Eastward, made St. Johns Island early in the morning and passed along the edge of apparent shoal water which appears to connect the Haringe Islands with St. Johns. Just weathered the Haringe Islands. The Easterly part of St. Johns bears from Port Kancoongan N. by E. ½ E; and this island or group of Islands, is connected with Haringe Islands, by a well defined line of green water, having some dry patches upon it.

The Haringe Islands are in Lat. 1°. 50'. N. and bear North a little Easterly from Point Kancoongan distant about 43 miles.—They are two low islands, separated 1½ to 2 miles from each other, but having green water between them, and are in a transit line bearing E. by S. and W. by N.

Canton, May 17th. 1839.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Bankok, Siam, March 2nd, 1839.

My dear Sir,

You may have learned that the Governor General of Bengal commissioned Dr. Richardson to visit the Siamese Court. He arrived in this city by an overland route on the 9th ultimo being about fifty days from Maulmein. The course seems to have been designedly circuitous for the purpose of seeing the country. The journey was performed with elephants as far as Kaw-Sai-Si where these were exchanged for boats. The latter place is two days distant from Bankok. The ostensible design of the mission is to acknowledge the favor of the Siamese in allowing the English to traffic in their northern provinces and to keep up the friendly feeling existing between the two governments. The Siamese are fitting up a number of war boats, and pressing the small junks of the river into their employ for the Cambodian service, or rather for defending their possessions against the encroachments of the Malays as the case may require. The Siamese begin to think that a few hundred men are not able to cope with their more warlike neighbours, and perhaps some advantage might have been gained of this had it been thought of a little sooner.

We are just losing the few cool days with which we are annually favored in this city and begin to feel again the effects of the hot weather. To mitigate the inconvenience of a residence here during the hot season we are allowed to remove to the sea-coast where the temperature of the air differs materially from that of Bankok. Two American gentlemen with their families have recently taken their residence at Ang-Hin, a small town situated on the eastern shore of the bay about twenty miles distant from Pak Nam, or the mouth of the Menam river. This promises to be a salubrious residence.

Very Sincerely
Yours,
W.

P. S. March 10th Dr. Richardson is about to leave Bankok for the north and it is doubtful whether he returns to Bankok before visiting Maulmain.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 18th May.

Since last week the intercourse by Passage boats between this and Macao has been regular, and we have received our files of the Malacca Register to the end of March, of Pinang Gazettes to the 9th March; of the Singapore Free Press to the 4th April, and of the Sydney Monitor to the middle of January. From many of these papers we give extracts; the Europe intelligence they contain we have had some weeks. Our contemporary of Singapore remarks copiously on occurrences in China, but we do not see that a rejoinder from us, under present circumstances, particularly when affairs have, since the occurrences commented upon by the Free Press, taken a turn so widely different from what was expected, can now be of any service. We still have our reasons for confining ourselves to little more than the relation of facts such as they occur, leaving to our readers themselves to form a judgment from them.

This last week has past in expectation of hearing of the completion of the delivery of the 20,283 chests, and in preparations on the part of the majority of the foreign community of Canton to leave. The deliveries at Chumpee have gone on much more slowly than was expected and up to this day we hear of the surrender only of about 18,600 chests. The remainder however we are told is likely to be forthcoming in a few days, and every obstacle to whoever likes leaving Canton will then probably be removed. We mentioned last week that several of the 16 individuals that were to be detained as hostages, had been ordered to leave the country forthwith; this order has since been rescinded and they are not to leave until the whole of the deliveries shall have been completed. The measures of the Yumchae threaten, for a time at least, to annihilate the trade of Canton altogether, and the distress among the labouring classes will in consequence be very great. We mentioned before that New China Street was to be closed for ever and all its shops shut; this is to be carried into execution nor, perhaps is the injustice of doing so very great, that street having previously been inhabited by Opium brokers chiefly; but now we hear that Old China Street with it's numerous shops is also to be closed unless the Hong merchants will secure the shopkeepers. This indiscriminate mode of applying the law, by confounding the innocent with the guilty cannot but be productive of much distress, and probably discontent; the property of these shops in Old China Street is for the most part very valuable, the shop-keepers paying for their occupancy, though the houses themselves belong to the Hong merchants, considerable sums for good will. If the trade continues to be carried on at all in Canton, every part of it, it now seems, will have to be conducted through the Hong merchants, no outside men being any longer allowed to deal with foreigners.

We mentioned last week that a wall was being run up parallel to our factories, so as to limit us to a very small space for taking exercise;—it now appears that the whole square is to be enclosed by a substantial railing, and that the enclosure is intended for the use of foreigners, and to keep out the populace. Such an enclosure existed before the great fire in 1822, and foreigners have since at different times petitioned to have it restored, but were refused, the Chinese alledging that they could not shut out from that space the natives dwelling near it; but it seems that at present tout cela est changé! However we have no reason to complain of this act of care for our comforts on the part of the Chinese.

It was said some days ago that the Governor (he returned to Canton on the 6th) was again preparing to leave town to meet the Yunchae at or near Macao to prosecute their measures for the delivery by the Portuguese of a certain quantity of Opium. Several times has the commissioner now made his demand, and the Portuguese have as often refused on the plea that they do not possess any Opium. The last demand of the Yumchae (delivered to the Portuguese on the 13th, we believe) is accompanied by the threat that if they still refuse, their Chinese servants are to be taken away, and their supplies cut off; assurances from the Chinese have at same time been given to English and American families living there that they need be under no apprehensions, that these measures would not affect them. A great number of war boats is stationed near Macao, and it is also said that a good many troops have been drawn together in the neighbourhood, and Opium dealer was about to be executed in the Campo. We still hope that the difference between the Chinese and Portuguese will be quietly arranged—up to the last accounts from Macao (the 14th) every thing was quiet there, and the market was supplied by the Chinese as usual.

In our last we published a translation of the last Edict from the Yumchae, concerning the law against Opium-smokers to be infuture carried into effect against foreigners also. On Saturday evening last Capt. Elliot circulated it for general information, adding to it a Public Notice to British subjects, which we subjoin, and which as will be seen is a commentary upon that edict; this latter we also republish under it's present official form.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

The Chief Superintendent yesterday received an Edict, of which the annexed is a copy, to the joint address of the Consul of the king of Holland, the Consul of the United States, and Himself.

By this Law the ships and crews of all nations, henceforward arriving in China, are liable to the penalties, the first, of confiscation, and the last, of death, upon the determination of this government that they have introduced opium.

The danger of confiding to this Government the administration of any judicial process concerning Foreigners, can scarcely be more strikingly manifested than in the list of names lately proscribed by the High Commissioner. Evidence that has been good to satisfy His Excellency that these sixteen persons are principal parties concerned in introducing opium, and therefore to justify their detention as hostages, would of course be equally good for other conviction of the like nature.

It may be taken to be certain, however, that the list contains the names of persons who have never been engaged in such pursuits, or, let it be added, in any other contraband practice.

In investigation upon such subjects, the Chinese Authorities would probably be guiltless of any deliberate intention to commit acts of juridical spoliation and murder. But it is plain, that in the present state of the intercourse there would be excessive risk of such consequences, and therefore the present Law is incompatible with safe or honorable continuance at Canton, if nothing else had happened to establish the same conclusion.

It places, in point of fact, the lives, liberty, and property of the whole Foreign Communitythere at the mercy of any reckless foreigners outside, and more immediately at the disposal of the Hong merchants, Linguists, Compradores, and their retainers.

The Chief Superintendent by no means ascribes general wickedness to those parties, but their situation and liabilities make them very unsafe reporters, and yet it is mainly upon their reports that the judgment of the Government will be taken.

It will be particularly observed that persons remaining are understood by the Government to assent to the reasonableness of the law.

CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China.

Canton, 11th May, 1839.

From the Kwangchow Foo communicating the orders of the Commissioner, Governor, and Lieut.-Governor, regarding the punishment of Foreigners for dealing in opium.

Choo, by special, appointment, Prefect of Kwangchow Foo, issues commands to the English Superintendent, Elliot, the American Superintending Officer, Snow, and the Dutch Superintending Officer, Van Basel, for their full information:

He has now received from Lin, the high Imperial Commissioner, &c., Tang, Governor of the two Kwang, and E, the Lieutnant Governor of Kwangtung, the following orders:

"It appears that the English Superintendent Elliot, the American Superintending officer Snow, and the Dutch Superintending officer Van Basel, have presented addresses, requesting that they all should return home at the head of the people and the vessels of their several nations.

"These addresses coming before us, the Commissioner and the Governor, and being duly authenticated, we reply:

"China has indeed no need of commercial intercourse with outer Barbarians. But because you have come from far over the seas, it cannot bear to push you utterly away; you have enjoyed the overshadowing, the comprehensive, and deep benevolence of the Great Emperor, who has given sanction to the trade with Kwangtung. You who have come to the territory of the Celestial Empire, have not only eat of the herbage and trod the soil equally with the people of the land, but have also by your buying and selling acquired very rich advantages. It is naturally your duty to rest in your stations, observing the laws. But for tens of years past, you have on the contrary employed a thing hurtful to men, as a means of gaining and possessing yourselves of the people's wealth.

"The great Emperor, anxiously regardful of the general well-being, has declared his pleasure that this should be severely prohibited. And if the laws be not plainly declared, how shall the future ingress be put a stop to? While now, all you Superintendents and Consuls aforesaid are aware that the prohibitory enactments of the celestial court may not be opposed, you are yet anxious in regard to points of difficulty as relates to your own countries, and request that, at the head of the people and vessels of your several countries, you may all together take your departure to return home.

"Those of the foreigners whose names are prominent as having been habitual sellers of opium, have already ere this been ordered away. But besides Jardine and others who have gone away back to their countries, there yet remain many lingering behind. If indeed all leave China for ever, there will of course no opium gain entrance into the inner land, and this evil may be removed.

"After then the full completion of the present deliveries, let it be even as requested. It shall be left to you entirely to return to your countries. Only you will not be allowed to make pretexts for procrastinating and delaying. And after you have thus returned, you will not be allowed to come again. Let there be no turning backwards and forwards, no inconstancy, whereby investigation, and proceedings thereon will be involved.

"Having reference to the great numbers of the foreigners of various nations, and the openness of communication by sea in every part, and considering that the laws and ensanments of the celestial court are extremely strict, it is still requisite that the punishment attaching to the prohibition against the importation of opium should be plainly proclaimed. All you foreigners of every nation,—should you not come hither, there the matter rests; but should you come to the territory of the celestial court, be you people of any country whatsoever, so often as opium is brought, in all cases, in accordance with the true law the parties shall be capitally executed, and the property entirely confiscated. Say not that it was not told beforehand!

"We proceed to issue these orders, commanding the Prefect immediately to enjoin the orders on the original Hong-merchants, and on the several security and other Hong merchants, that they may plainly enjoin the same on the several superintending officers aforesaid, that they having knowledge thereof, may offer no opposition."

This having been received by the Prefect, he proceeds to issue these commands; when these reach the said Superintending officers, let them, having knowledge thereof, offer no opposition. A special command.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 3rd month, 25th day,
L. S. (8th May, 1839.)

(True Translation) J. ROBT. MORRISON.
Chinese Secretary and Interpreter.

PROCLAMATION FROM THE WEIYUEN AND KWANGCHOW HEE.

He, the deputed officer of the Imperial Commissioner, and Hae, military commandant of the Foo district of Kwangchow proclaim for the information of all.

I, the deputed officer, have received orders respecting the examination of the Foreign passage boats and the passengers when going and coming.

Entering and leaving the river it is absolutely requisite that they report their names to the hong merchants, who will announce them to me that I may affix my seal; when they are to wait to be examined.

Whenever the passage boats move, whether they are going to Macao or Whampoa, in all cases the hong merchants and linguists must open their papers, and report them.

I have already ordered the hong-merchants to be very careful in examining whether any prohibited goods are smuggled; as to traveller's necessaries, they may be allowed to pass.

With reference to Mr. Dent and the others detained in the factories in Canton, immediately they petition and make up their minds to leave, the customhouse stations &c. will allow them to pass without examination; but those of them who dare attempt to escape without having my seal, when they are detained and brought back, I shall most certainly subject the said Foreigners with the hong merchants and linguists to a heavy punishment.

If any of boat people secrete the said Foreigners and assist them to escape, I shall order them to be seized and sentenced to wear the collar by the river side.

Oppose not. A special proclamation. 3rd moon 29th day—(12th March, 1839.—Canton Register, 14th May.

It is not often that the spring in China is as wet as it has been this year. We have, ever since our imprisonment (20th March) had very few days without rain, and the sky was generally so completely clouded as to allow but few and momentary glimpses of the sun. But generally, in the earlier months of the year, though the sky be overcast and rain be continually falling, that rain is more a scotch mist and would not, were it to continue for days, shew deep on the pluviometer. This year, on the contrary, during the last fortnight, one heavy shower has followed the other, and sometimes it rains heavily, without interval, for days or nights together, and had we had the means of ascertaining we should certainly have to state a good many inches of rain to have fallen since the beginning of the month. The season is altogether more than usually wet, and the high tides of the river are a proof that the rains are not local. Hitherto we do not hear that the weather has had much effect on the prices of rice, of which, owing to several years abundant crop, there must be still a large stock, but we hear that the heavy rains, and the cold weather preceding them are likely much to damage the summer crop in the neighbourhood of Canton.

Before going to Press we learn by the arrival of a Passage boat from Macao that the Spy from Calcutta and Singapore, and the John Horton, from Liverpool 15th December had arrived. The Spy, having left Calcutta at nearly the same time as the Cowasjee Family, we have no news by her from that quarter; the Singapore Free Press of 19th April brought by her contains no news of general interest, and people there were of course still ignorant of the Yumchae's proceedings. From the Bogue the satisfactory news has been received, that, though the actual deliveries do not exceed 18,500 Chests, yet there is every chance that within a very few days the whole of the quantity promised to be delivered will be in hands of the Chinese, as several vessels were either on their way to Chumpee or preparing to go there to deliver. The next week will therefore shew in how far the faithful discharge of Capt. Elliot's engagements will influence the conduct of the Chinese authorities. Though shipments have been made here during the week on a large scale, business is conducted by trusting assuredly all to the good faith of the Hong merchants, no foreigner being yet allowed to visit their hongs or to look at the goods he has bought. From Macao no news of importance have been received, though we hear of a rumor that more Chinese troops had been sent down.

* We had already put the lines our Correspondent refers to in type, thinking them to be original, but finding that under another signature they appeared in the Sing. Free Press we refer the curious to that paper.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The undersigned has been appointed Agent in Singapore for the sale of the numerous publications by the "SOCIETY FOR THE DIFFUSION OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE" as also Agent for the sale of Chamber's Edinburgh Journal, and the other publications of Messrs W. and R. Chambers, Edinburgh. He has lately received copies of most of the above works, including Penny Magazine, Penny Cyclopædia, Chambers' Journal etc. which are for sale at the London publishing prices, embracing at 6d. per number, or 2 cents per penny. He will also be happy to receive orders for and undertakes to procure at the London publishing prices at the above exchange, without any charges added, any of the publications of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge and of Messrs W. and R. Chambers,—as any other works parties may wish to order, provided the price be paid at the time of ordering, or guarantee be given that the work or works will be received and paid for on delivery. On the arrival at Singapore of the works ordered, they will be handed over to such agents as the parties may appoint to receive them—or be forwarded direct by earliest opportunity, at the request of the parties.

Orders in China may be left with Rev. E. C. Bridgman, or J. R. Morrison Esq. Canton—and S. W. Williams Esq. Macao—with whom Catalogues of the U. U. K. Society's publications may be seen. Catalogues may also be seen at the Morrison Education Society's Library, Canton—and at Macao.

N. B. OF IMPORTS ALL DUTIES ARE PAID BY THE PURCHASER, AND OF EXPORTS BY THE SELLER BOATHIRE IS PAID BY THE SELLER.

NOTE. Opium can only be delivered at Lintin &c. where also higher prices are obtainable for Camlets, Saltpetre, Ginseng and other Goods, on which the duties at Whampoa are high.—Ships with Rice, Cotton, &c. sometimes discharge at Macao or transship their Cargoes, at Lintin &c. to other Vessels, bound to Whampoa, and thereby avoid Port Charges. The ship rents outside, and Rice Freights, are various and high.—Small invoices of Wine, Beer, Pickles &c. Confectionary Stationary, Cutlery, Crockery ware, &c., for foreigners consumption, are sold at Auction duty paid.

Note. Alum, and Cassia are procurable cheaper at Lintin, Macao, &c.; and Raw Silk, Silk piece goods &c., are sometimes shipped there the latter Port to avoid double duties, chargeable on those goods, if more than 100 Piculs are required for the ship when at Whampoa.

N. B. The cubit is 14½ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from @ 4300 to @ 4330; 2d class from @ 3700 to @ 3780; 3rd class from @ 3240 and under. The Captain or Present Pee is paid by all vessels 1600 Tuels or @ 2223. Linguists fees @ 173½ and Compradore's fees @ 50. Also Pilotage @ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from @5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to @ 939.80., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of @ 252—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, @1189.80—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

During the past week some extensive business has been done in the principal staples at rather higher prices, the Chinese apparently being inclined to speculate in the belief that foreigners are wishful to quit Canton at an early date; but the general scarcity of bullion to sell and the heavy stock of most kinds of goods have contributed to check any material improvement in rates. For details we refer to the quotations.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—there having been no arrivals we have no alterations to report.

RICE.—We have not been able to learn whether the present heavy rains and floods have as yet affected the prices, but if they continue much longer, they must seriously injure the crop which is generally cut within a month of this time.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—We hear that about 2 to 300 bales have been sold of 600 for good to 430 for the finest. The stock in the market is not estimated at above 2200 bales, and the quality is generally inferior.

TEAS.—Purchases of Congou and Twankay during the early part of the week were very extensive, and shipments unusually large, but the market has been quiet the last day or two, owing to the scarcity of tonnage.

Not having been able to obtain the returns of the exports of the Tigris in time, we do not alter the statement on the other side, but the following is the Cargo of the Orders: Congou, 9273; Souchong, 3; Pekoe, 97; Hyson, 49; Hyson-skin, 96, Twankay, 1366; Gunpowder, 34; Total, 3021 Piculs.

FREIGHT.—No tonnage—the last rates paid were, we believe, 9 £.

Notice to Mariners.

ERECTION OF A SMALL REVOLVING LIGHT NEAR THE FIXED LIGHT SIGNALIZING CAPE GRINEZ.—DEPARTEMENT DU PAS DE CALAIS.

Some disasters that have happened near the fixed light which signalises, since 1st November 1837, the Cape Grinez on the S. W. entrance of the Straits of Dover (in 50° 52' 10" of Latitude and 0° 45' 13" Longitude of Paris) have been attributed to this light having been mistaken for that of Dungeness on the coast of England 8 leagues N. 85° W. from Cape Grinez.

Such a mistake almost appears impossible when the atmosphere is not hazy, for the light both of Grinez and Dungeness being visible at 7 to 8 leagues distance, they are both seen on passing through between them.

Under a less favorable sky it appears still easy to avoid mistakes. It is evident that such can never happen to vessels coming from the N. E. As to those that may come from the S. W., it will be seen, on looking at the charts of the strait, that they cannot, with the same wind, see both the lights in question, except they keep very close in with one of the opposite coasts. Under such circumstances the possibility of error ought to be obviated by the fixed light on the Point of Alprech. (in 50° 14' 51" lat, and 0° 46' 28" long. W. of Paris) on the approach to Grinez, and by the lights of the ports of Hastings and Rye on the approach to Dungeness.

The administration, desirous to prevent the possibility of confusion however improbable, has decided that from the 1st of October next a small additional light is to be placed on Cape Grinez.

The new light will be placed at 50 mètres to the W. N. W. of the present light, and less high by about 8 mètres.

The new light will be varied by bright blazes to succeed each other every three minutes and preceded and followed by short eclipses. It will not be visible except about half the distance of the present light, that is to say, that in ordinary weather the new light will first be visible at the distance of from 3 to 4 leagues.

Notice to Mariners

LIGHT ON THE JETTY OF THE COMMERCIAL PORT OF CHERBURG.

Mariners are informed that from July last next a small fixed red light will be shewn every night on the eastern extremity of the jetty of the Commercial port of Cherbourg.

The height of the light is 10 mètres above high water.

In fine weather this new light can be seen from one mile outside of the two passes of the roads.

It is to be observed that the buoy which marks the approach to the western extremity of the dyke is in a line with the turret on the jetty of the Commercial port and the cuneloppe of the Fort Homet, and the red light will consequently be masked by the fort to such vessels as may be to the westward. Translated from the Government Notification, dated March 1838.

Shoal in the China Sea.

Capt. Hopkins of the Emily Jane, has favored us with the following particulars of a shoal seen by him on his last passage from Bombay to China:

"April 21st, at 2 P. M. standing to the Southeastward with a light North-easterly breeze and the water very smooth, observed a strong rippling on weather-quarter and astern. Capt. Hopkins, on looking over the side, saw coral rocks under the ship's bottom. Immediately stretched the lead-line along, but by this time the ship had gone over the shoal part. Got soundings in 33 fms coral bottom, and lost the lead with 30 fathoms line. The centre of Pulo Sapata N. W. by W. by compass, distance 6 miles; the great Catwick just open with the S. W. end of Pulo Sapata. Sent a boat to examine it and found it to extend North and South about two, and East and West about one ship's length. The soundings on it were, 17, 16, 13, 11, 9, and least water 6 fathoms. It is Capt. Hopkins' opinion that this must be the same shoal that was seen by the Swedish ship Gothenburg, and by the Amer. ship Caledonia, in November 1802."

Public Notice.

Canton, 19th May, 1839.

The Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China gives notice and enjoins all Her Majesty's Subjects, either actually in China, or hereafter arriving, Merchants, Supra-Cargoes, Commanders, Commanding Officers of Ships, Seamen, or others, having control over, or serving on board of, British Ships or vessels, bound to the Port of Canton, not to be requiring, aiding, or assisting in any way in the bringing in to the said Port of Canton any such British Ship or Vessel, to the great danger of British life, liberty, and property, and the prejudice of the interests and just claims of the Crown, till a declaration shall be published under his Hand and Seal of Office to the effect that such bringing in of British Shipping, or of British property in foreign Shipping, is safe in the premises.

And the Chief Superintendent making these solemn injunctions for the safety of British life, liberty, and property, and in the protection of the interests and just claims of the British Crown, reserves to Her Majesty's Government in the most complete manner the power to cancel and discard all future claims whatever, on the part of Her Majesty's Subjects or others, preferring such claims on account of British property, either left behind, or to be brought in, if any such British Subjects or others preferring such claims shall disregard these injunctions now put forward, respecting the keeping out of British Shipping and Property, till the declaration aforesaid shall be duly published.

Canton, 20th March, 1839.

Having reference to the draft of His Public Notice submitted to the perusal of the merchants for their guidance fourteen days since, the Chief Superintendent has now to acquaint H. M's Subjects that he has reason to hope for the speedy delivery of the opium in the course of the next twenty-four hours: and his own departure will be regulated by that of H. M's. Subjects and any other Foreigners, who may claim his protection, presently detained in Canton by the Commissioner's commands.

Upon that subject he will make another communication at the proper moment.

Public Notice.

TO HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S SUBJECTS.

The disregard of formal offers upon the part of Her Majesty's Officer to adjust all difficulties by the fulfilment of the Imperial Will, the unjustifiable imprisonment of the whole foreign Community in Canton, the still more wanton protraction of that captivity, and the forced surrender of property, of which the incidents have been the utmost public encouragement direct and indirect upon the one hand, and violent public spoliation on the other: such are the chief facts which have sustained the declaration put forward in the Notice of the Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects, dated at Macao on the 23rd day of March last, that He was without confidence in the justice and moderation of the Provincial Government.

Correction remaining to be made for the circumstances that these later deeds have been perpetrated mainly under the Authority of the Imperial Commissioner, He is also to declare that He is without confidence in the justice and moderation of the said Imperial Commissioner.

Acting on the behalf of Her Majesty's Government in a momentous emergency, He has in the first place to signify, that the demand He recently made to Her Majesty's Subjects for the surrender of British-owned Opium under their control had no special reference to the circumstances of that property: But (beyond the actual pressure of necessity) that demand was founded on the principle, that these violent compulsory measures being utterly unjust per se, and of general application for the forced surrender of any other property, or of human life, or for the constraint of any unsuitable terms or concessions, it became highly necessary to vest and leave the right of exacting effectual security, and full indemnity for every loss directly in the Queen. These outrages have already temporarily cast upon the British Crown immense public liabilities; And it is incumbent upon Him at this moment of release to fix the earliest period for removal from a situation of total insecurity, and for the termination of all risk of similar responsibility on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

He is sensible too, that He could not swerve from the purposes now to be declared, without extreme danger to vast public claims lready pending, and to general and permanent interests of highest moment.

Thus situated then, and once more referring to his Public Notice dated at Macao on the 23rd day of March last, He has again to give Notice to, and enjoin, all Her Majesty's Subjects, to make preparation for quitting Canton before, or at the same time with, Her Majesty's Establishment; which departure will take place as soon as the Chief Superintendent has completed His public obligations to this Government. For the general convenience He will afford the best information in His power from time to time, concerning the probable period of that event.

And He has further to give Notice that British Subjects or others thinking fit to make Shipments of property on British Account, on board of British, or any other foreign, shipping actually in this river, will be pleased to regulate their proceedings in these respects, upon the understanding that such shipments must be made at their personal risk and responsibility after the date of this Notice.

And He again enjoins all Her Majesty's Subjects in Canton to prepare sealed declarations and lists of all claims whatever against Chinese Subjects, to be adjusted as nearly as may be, to the period of their respective retirements from Canton before Him, or at the same time with Him.

And whilst it is specially to be understood that the proof of British property, and value of all such claims handed in to Him before His departure, will be determined upon principles and in a manner hereafter to be defined by Her Majesty's Government, He has to recommend, with a view to uniformity and general clearness, that claims for British property left behind, should be drawn up as far as may be practicable on Invoice Cost.

And He has now to give Notice to, and enjoin all Her Majesty's Subjects, either actually in China, or hereafter arriving, Merchants, Supra-Cargoes, Commanders, Commanding Officers of Ships, Seamen, or others, having control over, or serving on board of, British Ships or vessels, bound to the Port of Canton, not to be requiring, aiding, or assisting in any way in the bringing in to the said Port of Canton any such British Ship or Vessel, to the great danger of British life, liberty, and property, and the prejudice of the interests and just claims of the Crown, till a declaration shall be published under his Hand and Seal of Office to the effect that such bringing in of British Shipping, or of British property in foreign Shipping, is safe in the premises.

And the Chief Superintendent making these solemn injunctions for the safety of British life, liberty, and property, and in the protection of the interests and just claims of the British Crown, reserves to Her Majesty's Government in the most complete manner the power to cancel and discard all future claims whatever, on the part of Her Majesty's Subjects or others, preferring such claims on account of British property, either left behind, or to be brought in, if any such British Subjects or others preferring such claims shall disregard these injunctions now put forward, respecting the keeping out of British Shipping and Property, till the declaration aforesaid shall be duly published.

And He has once more to warn Her Majesty's Subjects in anxious terms, that such sudden and strong measures as it may be found necessary to adopt on the part of competent authorities, for the honor and interests of the British Crown, cannot be prejudiced by their continued residence in Canton, beyond the period of His own stay, upon their own responsibilities, and in spite of the solemn injunctions of Her Majesty's Officer.

Given under my hand and seal of Office at Canton in China this 22 day of May 1839.

The following edict was received last evening and is circulated for the information of American Residents.

(Signed) W. P. SNOW.

Edict.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner and Governor of the two Kwang, and Tung, a Director of the Board of War, and Governor of the two Kwang, issue this edict to the original Senior and all the other Hong merchants for their full instruction.

On the 17th inst. Tsang Lichugung, sub-prefect of Macao, and Hwuy-Chowq-yaou, Commodore of the Squadron of Heungshan, presented to us a joint report in which they state:

"Having received your excellencies orders to "proceed to the Nine Islands and the Macao ships "to examine the ships recently arrived with cargo, "to ascertain their draft of water, and to present a "report of the same in detail; we in obedience "thereto went in person, taking with us pilots and "measurers. Each of the several ships was duly "measured, before, behind, right and left, sounding in the prescribed form; and on the 14th the "measuring of thirteen ships having cargo was com"pleted. But there was one American ship Pelt-"le-lade laden with Cotton, seeing the ships were "being measured, got under weigh on the 14th, "and sailed away to the eastward, evidently unwilling to be measured. As soon as we can ascertain "where she has gone and anchored, we will make "another report. Moreover, the masters of the ves"sels declared that on the 20th of this month lit"tle there have been gales of wind, and that the "anchorage off the Nine Islands being open and "exposed, they were afraid they could not remain "there with safety, and wished to remove their an"chorage to Jounshatouy (Honq Kong) so as to "avoid the winds and waves. Respectfully we pre"sent this report.

The above has come before us, the High Commissioner and Governor, duly authenticated. We find that the delivery of the Opium from the foreign ships is nearly completed, that the ships at Whampoa have been already allowed to reopen their trade; the newly arrived Teo-lo and other ships, thirteen in number, have been duly measured by the sub-prefect of Macao, in obedience to our orders, but the cargo of the several ships has not been ascertained in detail. The masters of these ships, having come from afar to trade, how can they be without particular account of their cargoes? Certainly it cannot be difficult to specify clearly each particular kind of the goods. Yet, now they only speak in general terms, in their usual delusive manner. But as they have consented to be measured, and as they have moreover declared that hitherto there have been gales of wind on the 20th of this month, and that the anchorage off the Nine Islands is open and exposed, they were afraid they could not remain there with safety; it behoves us to show them compassion, and early instruct them to enter the port to escape the storm.

Besides, when they all arrive at Whampoa, according to the regulations, let them wait for the instructions of the commissioner of customs. We issue our commands to the sub-prefect of Macao, and the commodore of Heungshan and they must immediately transmit the orders to the ships Teo-lo and others, declaring that if to any vessel they refuse to remove their anchorage to Hong-kong, they dare not to receive pass-ports for pilots allowing them to sail—that if Master to come speedily to Whampoa, there to await the Hoppo's examination for their unloading of their cargo.

The ship Pelt-le-le, which refused to be measured, and proceeded to sail away eastward, has evidently done so for evil. We have sent a communication to the Hoppo, that he transmit a circular to the Hong-merchants not to trade with her, but to hasten her departure back to her country. The sub-prefect &c. will give direct commands to the cruizers to take with them linguists and pilots, and examine plainly where Pelt-le-le has gone; and, finding her track, convey to her the commands: that, having been unwilling to be measured, it is evident she has brought contraband goods, and has dared to show opposition; that, while orders have been given for the others to enter the port of Whampoa, she is not allowed to trade, but must sail back to her country and not loiter about. If she dares to sail to other places on the high seas, where is he to obtain provisions to go, in three successive years, to the Inland Sea merchants, and trade in Opium, the cruizers will all unite in attacking her, when repentance will be too late. As soon as any real trace of the said vessel are found, let the same be clearly reported to us by express.

Moreover, we now issue this edict; whom it reaches the Hong merchants, let them act obedience to it. When the ships Teo-lo and others all arrive at Whampoa according to the regulations, let them await instructions from the Hoppo. But the ship Pelt-le-le, which was unwilling to be measured, and dared to sail away to the eastward, has done an evidently foul evil. Let the said Hong merchants communicate this edict, forbidding them to trade with her, and requiring her immediate return to her country. Let them search out faithfully the traces of the vessel, and report thereon. Let there be no opposition.—Haste, quickly! A special edict.

May 19th, 1839.

Lin, high Imperial Commissioner, and Tung, Governor of the two Kwang, have their seals affixed to the original, the same and other Hong-merchants for their full information.

"Opium, prevailing with its poisonous influence the longer hind, has been a source of very great injury. Those two gentlemen, Lin, Imperial Envoy, Extraordinary, Minister Plenipotentiary, Governor, and Liang, Governor of Kiangsi and other provinces, have all been habitually memorialized on that account. They have severally searched out gains, and among the clandestine advantages. As the fruits of the long course of investigations being so remarkable, they framed the regulations of government so suitably ordained, that would have been right to put the laws in force for their punish ment. But, taking into tenderness of consideration the subject of the said foreigners, who they had received commands to deliver up their Opium, in speedily joining with Illiat to deliver it up, and thereby showing that they are yet amenable to four of the laws we, the Commissioner and the Governor, have reverently embodied the benevolence of the Great Emperor, and remitted the punishment of their offences.

Now, that the naval ships have given up the entire amount of the Opium, it is meet, indeed, that they should be allowed to trade, and to delay their stay in Heung-tung, lest their gain speedily should had forth more.

We passed thanking to give our urgent commands. When these reach the said original commanders &c., let them immediately explain our commands on each of the said foreigners, Bentley and the rest, individually, that they speedily return to their countries, and that they give duly prepared voluntary bonds, that they will never again return to come. These being placed on record, let them wait until passports are given them to go to sea. Should they presume, under cover of allowed permission to come here again, as soon as the fact shall be discovered, their offences shall surely be punished with severity. There shall certainly be no reward leniency to indulgence.

The said original merchants are imperatively required to proclaim the Decree and the Majesty (of the Emperor), and with earnestness to enjoin these commands. Let them immediately take down the bonds, and report in answer. Let there not be any connivance shown, nor any delay allowed, lest they bring investigation on themselves also. Be earnest and speedy! Be earnest and speedy!—A special order.

Proclamation.

Chau the Chu fou of Canton, Lan the Chu hsien of the Nan hai district, and Chang the Chu hsien of the Pwan yu district, conjointly issue this order and peremptory proclamation, hereby for the information of communication between the officers and foreigners. We have just received a letter addressed to the following effect, from their Excellencies the High Commissioner Lin, the Viceroy Tung, and the Foo yuen E.

"Whereas the delivery of Opium at the Bocca Tigris having now nearly completed, we ought to act on good faith, relaxing our restrictions, that so the foreign factories adjoin our streets and lanes, and are nearly surrounded with the shops of vagabond natives. it becomes us especially at this moment "when the school-master is abroad" to enact laws upon broad principles for eradicating utterly (the evils of Opium dealing), to cut off all communication between natives and foreigners, and make the old preventive regulations stand forth clearly in all their pristine beauty. Therefore it is that uniting all these circumstances we now issue this edict, and by these presents we command the said Che foo and Che heen magistrates to consult with the Kwang chow hee and the Chung hee, and in company with the Senior Hong merchants Woo tun yuen (old Howqua) Loo wan wei (Mowqua) and all the rest of the principal and junior security merchants, to repair to the spot in person, and duly estimate and measure the ground on every side. In reference to the back doors of the foreign factories, let every one of them be stopped up, henceforward we will not permit the foreigners under any pretext to go walking about irregularly, disturbing and annoying us. Let a railing or palisade be erected before the front doors as was the case of old, and prohibit any street or lane to approach near to the foreign factories as was formerly done, those streets which have just now been blocked up in course, may not again be opened. And moreover let the walls which block up those streets be built both high and thick, and of solid materials too, and do you consult on leaving a pathway to serve as a means of communication (for the licensed natives to go in and out.) And as to the form &c. in which the said palisade is to be erected, and where the little military huts are to be set up, in which mandarins and soldiers shall be placed to examine scrupulously all who go out and in; as respects all these circumstances, let the said Che foo and the others consult together and hand us in their report, when according to the real facts of the case we shall give the requisite orders. In reference to those among the common people, who open shops and carry on their trade therein, there is nothing originally in the laws which forbids this; only in Lun hing kai. Tung mun kai (new china street) and other streets, the greater part of the shop-keepers have intercourse with the foreigners, so much so, that they even hang out devil's sign boards (i. e. sign boards written in the foreign character) and absolutely bend the laws to suit their own purposes: such people never can be spoken of, as good people who carry on a lawful business! we must put a strong prohibition on such procedure in order to cut off the evil. And therefore it is that we now lay our injunctions upon the said Che heen magistrates that they first issue a clear and perspicuous edict, limiting a certain term, within which they must compel the said people to move to another place, they must not permit them to open their shops here. All the shops and houses there must be bolted and chained, and if the proprietors of these houses and shops are so daring as to offer resistance, or to assemble together and go to the temples to consult about it, (a very wicked practice) then this will be a greater degree of guilt than ever! let the said Foo and Heen Magistrates straightway consult with the Chung hee and the Kwang hee, and taking a posse of soldiers and police officers, let them seize the ringleaders of the disturbance by name, and utterly destroy their houses from top to bottom! Any people who dwell in these different streets, let them forthwith appoint one of their number who shall be security for the rest, that we may be able to separate the wheat from the tares; we will not permit any native vagabonds clandestinely to enter among them, thus giving their old craftiness to bud and blossom again. The said Foo and Heen magistrates must with their whole heart consult upon this matter, and with united strength put these commands in force, so that to all eternity we may be able to stop up the holes thro' which the wickedness flows, and take away for ever the roots of the evil, &c. &c. &c."

Now this coming before us the said Che foo and Che heen magistrates, we have consulted with the Chung hee and Kwang hee, and taking the security merchants with us, we have repaired in person to the spot, and have with extra care duly deliberated on the subject. Besides stopping up the back doors of the foreign factories, Sunfowlan Kai (Hoglane) Tung man kai (New China street) and Lunhing kai, and leaving open Tsing yune kai (Old China street) as a means of communication, and erecting a palisade and building a wall, so as to cut off all intercourse between foreigners and natives, besides all this, we find that in old and new china streets, the shops opened both on the east and west side of these streets are all joined to the foreign factories, and it is there exceedingly easy to carry on traitorous communication: We must therefore respectfully give obedience to the edict of the High Officers of Government, and compel them to remove elsewhere, and taking their shops and houses, lock them and chain them permanently up, so as to cut off all evil practices. And for as much we now issue this our joint proclamation, and by these presents we clearly make known to the shop keepers and people who live in these said two streets, that in ten days from the date of this our proclamation, every one must take his goods and chattels and remove to some other street where he may scheme after some lawful business! We will not permit them to remain here, bending the laws to their own crooked views, and getting accustomed to every sort of clandestine transaction! If the term now limited expire without their removing, we shall most certainly seize those who are so bold as to offer opposition and drive them out by force! and we shall shut up (and confiscate) their houses and shops as well as the goods and wares that may be found therein. Moreover towards the north end of Lun hing kai and on the east side, all the shops are either built against the walls of the factories, or under their very windows: the Chinese may with ease enter clandestinely among the foreigners: this is exceedingly improper, and we therefore in like manner limit them ten days from this date, within which they must all remove elsewhere, in order that we may take the said houses and shops and shut them up. But towards the south end and on the west side of Lunhing kai, the shops and houses are a little further removed from the place where foreigners dwell, if we find that they are carrying on a lawful business, we may permit them to open their shops and warehouses as before, obliging the Hong-merchants however from time to time to look into matters narrowly, and if they find that these people store up or vend prohibited goods, then they must instantly inform us the mandarins of the same that we may seize them and punish them according to law. Moreover in reference to Sun tow lan kai (alias Hoglane) there are a great many Chinese there who live by making foreigner's caps and clothes, and all the sundry utensils that foreigners use. If we were to lay our prohibition on all of these, it would not be displaying our tenderness to the men from afar, therefore we command the Hong-merchants to go from door to door, and enquire into the real nature of their business and become security for them, which being done, we shall permit them as of old to carry on their trade, but if the Hong-merchants cannot become security for them, we shall drive them out. If in that street there are any shops which are built against the foreign factories, the same regulation that is applicable to old and new china streets must apply to that street likewise, i.e. within the limited term of ten days from this date, they must move somewhere else. In reference to the hanging out of sign boards written in the foreign character, this is what the laws have for a long time prohibited, tho' from these laws having been for some years in aberance, ye have been vying one with another as to the extent ye might go in infringing them! But it is now of the utmost importance that ye submit to the ancient regulations which prohibit this for ever! Henceforth, no matter whether it be in the public street, or in a byelane, if there is any person so hardy as dare to follow in this forbidden track, we will most certainly award him the utmost severity of the law—we will indeed show him no mercy! It is most proper that all tremble and obey! Do not be repenting when repentance will be too late! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang 19th year, 4th moon, 2d day.

Canton, 14th May, 1839.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE LORD VISCOUNT PALMERSTON,

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

&c. &c. &c.

We the undersigned British Merchants, trading at Canton, consider it our duty to address Your Lordship regarding the recent acts of aggression on the part of the Chinese Government.

These acts of violence, which will be officially communicated to Your Lordship by Her Majesty's Superintendent, consist;—

1. In the stoppage of the whole legal Trade of the Port, even of Vessels fully laden, and waiting only their port Clearances, and against which no ground of complaint is alleged.

2. In the forcible detention in Canton of all Foreigners, including Her Majesty's Superintendent, in order to compel the supposed holders of Opium to the surrender of Property belonging to themselves, and others in India and Europe, to the value of from two to three Millions Sterling.

3. In the open and undisguised threat to hold foreigners responsible with their lives for this surrender, and for any future infraction of the Chinese Custom Laws.

4. In the attempt to force foreigners to sign Bonds, rendering not only themselves, but all others coming to China, over whom they have no control, liable to the same penalty; And on the refusal on the part of foreigners to sign such Bonds, in the promulgation of an Edict by the High Commissioner, declaratory of the determination of the Government to enforce such penalty.

We may be permitted to state that all foreigners reside in Canton on sufferance; that they have no means of ascertaining the laws except from the acts of the Provincial Government; and that the Opium Trade has steadily increased from an Import of 4,100 Chests in 1796, to upwards of 30,000 Chests in 1837, with the open and undisguised connivance of the local authorities.

The importation of Opium into China was at one time allowed on payment of a Duty, but discontinued in 1796: Its admission was again strongly recommended to the Imperial Government in 1836. No penalties have ever been enforced against foreigners bringing it to China, and the prohibitory Laws have never been a rule to the functionaries of the Chinese Empire, who should have administered them, nor to the Chinese people on whom they were intended to operate, which facts are openly admitted in the recent Edicts of the Imperial Commissioner, under date the 18th March last, in which he states: "that the prohibitions formerly enacted by the "Celestial Court against Opium were comparatively "lax," and that "the foreignersare men from distant lands and have not before been aware that the "prohibition of Opium is so severe."

We may further state that the peculiar character of the Opium Trade was distinctly recognized in the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1830, and that in the subsequent Report in 1832, the Committee express their opinion: "that it does not seem advisable to abandon so important a source of Revenue as the East India "Company's monopoly of Opium in Bengal."

We conceive it will therefore be admitted that British Subjects have carried on this Trade with the sanction, implied, if not openly expressed, of their own Government; and at the same time with an advantage to the Revenue of British India, varying of late years from one to one and a half Millions Sterling.

We do not attempt to deny the unquestionable right of the Chinese Government to put a stop to the importation of Opium, and have readily signed an agreement to obtain from that Trade at Canton on the first requisition of the Government to that effect; but we think Your Lordship will perceive that long prescription had hitherto given foreigners ample reason to question the sincerity of the Chinese Government with regard to the discontinuance of the importation, and that under any circumstances, that Government cannot be justified, by the last observance of prohibitions, and open connivance of its Officers, in at one time fostering a Trade involving several millions Sterling, and at another rendering its pursuit a pretext for spoliation.

There seems no reason to doubt, from the late proceedings of the Local Government, that they have always had the power most materially to check if not totally to put a stop to the importation of Opium when disposed so to do; but that power has seldom hitherto been excercised, except for the purpose of exacting higher fees for its introduction.

The proceedings of the High Commissioner since his arrival in Canton, will be fully reported to Your Lordship by Her Majesty's Superintendent; but we may observe that his demand for the unconditional surrender of the whole of the Opium in the Depot Ships, was one with which foreigners could not comply, the great bulk of that Opium being the Property of others in India, and elsewhere; and they were equally unable to give the Bonds required.

The High Commissioner finding at the expiration of three days, the time within which he had ordered the whole of the Opium to be delivered up, and the Bonds to be given, that his orders had not been obeyed, sent the Hong Merchants in chains to the foreign Factories, threatening to put them to death before our doors, and at the same time commenced other menacing preparations against the foreigners themselves.

At this stage of the Business Her Majesty's Chief Superintendent arrived in Canton.

We feel it our duty to express to Your Lordship our deep sense of the public spirit which induced this Officer, at no inconsiderable risk, to endeavor to rescue British life and property from a position of fearful jeopardy; and we may assure Your Lordship that but one feeling existed of the extreme peril of the whole community at the period when he succeeded in forcing his way to Canton, and took charge of all responsibility in the negotiations with the Chinese Government.

Although the measures of Her Majesty's Representative have relieved us from all responsibility in surrendering so large an amount of Property, we may still be allowed respectfully but earnestly to entreat Your Lordship's mediation to obtain the earliest possible fulfilment of the guarantee given on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and thus be the means of saving many of the owners of the property from inevitable ruin, and all of them from heavy loss.

We deem it also an imperative duty to assure Your Lordship most solemnly of our firm conviction, that the public approval, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, of his prompt interposition of Her Majesty's Representative, and the early adoption of such measures as the wisdom of Her Majesty's Advisers may determine on with regard to our future relations with the Chinese Empire, can alone avert the occurrence of similar, or even more violent outrages.

We beg further to state to Your Lordship that, independently of the Opium now violently seized, there was at the same period British Property of other kinds in Canton to the value of upwards of One Million Sterling, besides a large and valuable fleet of shipping lying at Whampoa, consigned to our care, but totally beyond our control; and although this Property was not alleged to have incurred any penalty, the High Commissioner never attempted to distinguish the participators in the one Trade, from those in the other, but placed both under one common suspension, and the whole body of foreigners in arbitrary confinement.

After the completion of the delivery of the Opium surrendered, the High Commissioner has expressed an intention of opening the legal Trade, under new regulations, but circumstances do not justify us in entertaining the expectation that these regulations will afford any security for our life or property.

We therefore think Your Lordship will be convinced that some serious alterations in our relations with this Empire are indispensably necessary; and that British Commerce can never safely be carried on, and certainly can never flourish in a Country where our persons and property are alike at the mercy of a capricious and corrupt Government.

In conclusion it only remains for us again to urge upon Your Lordship and Her Majesty's Government the great importance of an early recognition of our claims on account of the Opium surrendered for Her Majesty's Service; and the pressing and paramount necessity of placing the General Trade of British Subjects upon a secureand permanent Basis.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 25th May.

We give a number of public documents in this day's paper, partly issued by the Chinese authorities, partly by Capt. Elliot preparatory to his leaving Canton, and a memorial also signed by almost all British merchants resident in Canton, addressed to Lord Palmerston, on the late extraordinary occurrences here. These documents by themselves nearly contain the history of the week just passed. It will be seen from the commissioner's edict that ships are now allowed again to enter the river, and that on arriving at Whampoa the conditions, under which they may carry on trade is to be made known to them—we do not hear that upon these terms any vessels are yet ready to venture into the river. The ordering off the Amer. ship the Robert Fulton as will be seen from another edict, is a new feature in Chinese legislation with regard to foreign trade, no vessels outside having hitherto been exposed to measurement. It is a very hard case on the owners, supposing that their case allows of no redress. From the Edict of the local magistrates it will be seen that some show is made to render the intercourse with the natives more difficult than before, and that threats are held out to the Chinese shopkeepers of closing such shops as are either too close to the Factories or not secured by Hong merchants; we do not believe that these measures will be very strictly enacted.

From Capt. Elliot's public notices it will be seen that the whole of the 20,283 chests of Opium has been delivered and that Capt. Elliot warns any British subjects from entering the port either in person or with property. On Thursday last this officer issued a notice saying that on the following day at eleven o'clock he would leave Canton, for Whampoa and invited the sixteen individuals that were more especially retained as hostages by the Chinese for the delivery of the Opium to meet him at that time to embark with him—Capt. Elliot at same time requested that no assembling of foreigners should take place at the time of his embarking. Some delay occurred in the proposed time for starting, and Captain Elliot did not finally leave Canton until about five o'clock in the afternoon yesterday, accompanied by all the British subjects then in Canton comprised in the list of the sixteen. Capt. Elliot went to Whampoa in a boat belonging to the Reliance, and several of the others had taken up the passage boats. The embarkation was, as Capt. Elliot intended, effected without any concourse of people; the Hong merchants of course were present and some other officers to identify the individuals of the list, who we hope all safely reached the British shipping last night. We cannot allow ourselves to take leave of Capt. Elliot without expressing our opinion, which we believe is shared unanimously by every individual of the foreign community here, that his stay has been of infinite service in carrying us safely through the trying times of the last two months, and that the preservation of order and peace during all that time is in a great measure due to his presence and conduct; and we sincerely regret that, besides having to contend with the very difficult questions in which he found himself involved, he had also for several weeks past to bear up against the attacks of illness. A more quiet residence at Macao, will, we heartily hope, soon restore his health. All British subjects have already left or are preparing to leave Canton in a few days.

Immediately after Capt. Elliot and his party had left, the guard of Coolies in front of the Factories and at the entrance of China Street was withdrawn, and any foreigner who liked might walk into the back-streets. The influx of curious Chinese, so long shut out from the square, was of course considerable, and much surprize was expressed at the different appearance it now presents, the enclosure we have spoken of in our last, and alluded to in the magistrate's proclamation, being all but finished.

On Monday last a third dividend of five percent, making in all 10 per Cent. or the instalment of one year, now due on Hing-tae's debt, was paid. The whole year's instalment paid up amounts to $ 982. 639. 9 acts.

Three weeks ago we had to announce with regret the death of Mow qua the managing partner of the Mow qua hong, though not the Hong merchant inscribed on the Hoppo's books. During the last stoppage of the trade this hong purchased considerable quantities of Cotton, at very short credit we believe; not many days ago the creditors were informed that the Hong was unable to meet its engagements, and the now usual way of liquidating in ten years by instalments was proposed. We now hear that after a good deal of trouble the Creditors have agreed to receive one half of their claims in cash to be paid this day, and the remainder in equal annual instalments, the last to be paid six years after date, paying annual interest on the balance at the rate of six per cent. The new liabilities of the Hong settled in this manner are about half a million of dollars, besides old debts amounting to more than half as much more, for the payment of which a longer time has been allowed.

We have received a communication from Amoy, which however contains nothing of sufficient public interest to warrant its insertion.

The Mermaid from Liverpool 21st January brings London papers to the 17th. A press of local matters of importance allows us neither time nor space to make extracts, but on the whole the papers seem to contain little of importance. No progress seems as yet to have been made in the great political questions, and the chief powers of Europe seem to be arming. A terrific hurricane was experienced on the western coast of England and in Ireland on the 6th January. A great many ships, among which several American packets, were totally lost, and the loss of life and property is represented to have been very great. The great January sale-sale of about 13 millions of pounds was proceeding at very low prices. We notice the arrival from this of the Thetis off Dover.

N. B. OF IMPORTS ALL DUTIES ARE PAID BY THE PURCHASER, AND OF EXPORTS BY THE SELLER BOATHIRE IS PAID BY THE SELLER.

NOTE. Higher prices are obtainable at Lintin for Camfoire, Saltpetre, Ginseng and other Goods, on which the duties at Whampoa are high.—Ships with Hides, Cotton, &c. sometimes discharge at Macao or transship their Cargoes at Lintin &c. to other Vessels, bound to Whampoa, and thereby avoid Port Charges. The ship rests outside, and River Freights, are various and high.—Small invoices of Wine, Beer, Pickles &c. Confectionery Stationery, Cutlery, Crockery ware, &c. for foreigners consumption, are sold at Auction duty paid.

Note. Alum, and Cassia are procurable cheaper at Lintin, Macao, &c; and Raw Silk, Silk piece goods &c, are sometimes shipped thro' the latter Port to avoid double duties, chargeable on those goods, if more than 100 Peculs are required for the ship when at Whampoa.

N. B. The cubit is 14⅓ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4320; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Consul's or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Tuns or $ 2223. Linguists fees $ 173½ and Compradore's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $ 5 to $ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939 80., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 250—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.80—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Extensive sales of British Goods have been made during the past week at about the rates quoted in our last, the prices having been maintained, notwithstanding the large quantities thrown on the market by an increasing belief on the part of the Chinese that foreigners are really preparing to quit Canton after completion of the loading of the few ships now remaining in the port.

RICE.—The recent heavy rains are said to have severely injured the Rice-crops—but prices have not yet advanced.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—A few further purchases have been made at rather lower prices for cargo; but the stock of fine Silk being very small the rates remain without alteration.

TEA.—The ships in port having nearly completed their cargoes, there is but little business doing, and holders are beginning to give way.

FREIGHT.—There is now no tonnage available, and the Public Notice of H. M. Chief Superintendent just issued will prevent any British ships entering the port at present.

Embassies to China.

The following remarks on Embassies to China, taken from the Chinese Repository for March 1837, and written by one whom diligent study had well qualified for the task, will no doubt be read with interest at the present moment, when the time for interference by the British Government is probably near at hand. Those who are familiar with the late events here will at once however perceive that they have been produced by causes far different from those contemplated by the writer, nor do we see that any earlier and more effectual interference of the British Government could or would have averted the occurrences of the last six months.

"Whoever has been, for the last few years, but moderately attentive to foreign relations with this country, cannot but have noticed the rapid and general spread of the opinion that some appeal to the court of Peking cannot very long be dispensed with. Recent converts from an opposite opinion are many and frequent; and those who advocate, and those who deprecate, violence or threats, seem alike anxious to see the point fairly tried. The unsound and critical state of the great foreign trade with Canton seems to render this unavoidable; and we have little doubt but that the spirit which has wrenched asunder the shackles of the E. I. Company will not rest till a sound fair, and just understanding is made to replace the wretched and ricketty system of disgrace and chicane, with which their predecessors, for reasons best known to themselves, were content to put up. We do not shut our eyes to the fact that, up to the present moment, the subject has been one of singular unpalatabi. ss to the British government. Justice to Ireland, abolition of sinecures, of real reformation of ecclesiastical establishments, harsh and unwelcome as each of these may sound, in the ears of a troubled and tottering ministry, could not be more uninviting than would be the demand that an attempt, at least, to effect a commercial treaty with China should be made: the pressure is however felt; the cry for it is began, and, though it may be put off for a time by subterfuge and equivocation, yet is must come at last. When the footing, on which England stands, in China, is fairly appreciated—when the unprotected and uncertain state of the trade is, as it must soon be, generally known, it will not, we trust, be in the power of any government to treat with scorn the demand that will be made, and the semblance of a consulship in China, absurd and useless as it now is, will be laughed at, till, in very shame, it is withdrawn, and the expense of it devoted to the attempt to ameliorate the condition of the trade, instead of keeping up the mere hollow pretence of authority.

"Impotent, useless, aimless—powerless to protect—notoriously inadequate to aid, even the least useful purpose, for which it could be pretended that it is maintained, this unreal mockery exhibits a fair specimen of the sense, knowledge, and judgment, with which the first commercial nation of the globe has protected and advanced the interests of a trade even now yielding a revenue, wanting which the energies of the national executive must be most seriously affected, if not totally paralized. This last reason, cogent and intelligible as it is, must erelong, have its due effect, and may work out the end which claims, of greater moral strength, though not of such immediate expediency, might call for in vain. The direct amount paid into the British treasury, by the trade with China, may be estimated at not less than four and a half millions sterling per annum. The employment of shipping, and other less direct benefits to the country, we do not stop to consider. It may be worth an early and attentive consideration by the British ministry, or better still by the thinking men of the people, how a continuance of this enormous sum may be guaranteed to the nation. Its sudden stop might, within a few months, be productive of the most serious embarrassment; and, in a political view, might have consequence of which the mere overthrow of a ministry would be but a trifling item. It should be borde in mind, that, during the time of the E. I. Company, this danger was, in some degree, guarded against, by the compulsory enactment for the constant keeping of a two years' supply of tea in the country. This does not now exist; and partly, in consequence of the effect which this very stock has been allowed to work on the speculations, under the new system —we wish we could, conscientiously, call it the free trade one—it is more than doubtful if, in future, a quantity of tea, much greater than required for the current year's consumption, will be henceforth kept in the country. The check to the consumption, caused by the grievous, impolitic, and enormous duties, originally established, and the no less admirable absurdity of an equalized rate of duty, on an article, varying in value from seven pence to seven shillings, will tend to this. It seems now generally understood, that no profitable trade, to the importers of tea, can be hoped for, till the country is under-supplied with this, an article of general or nearly universal use; so that, through the wise arrangements of the English administrative, the interests of the merchant and consumer, which should run together, are now rendered antagonistic. The result of this will be felt, by the recoil of the evil, on the heads of its authors, in the shape of the immediate cutting off of this great source of revenue on the first quarrel or out-break of the traders with the local or general government of this province and empire. It will then be for the chancellor of the exchequer of the day to discover, if the can, some source whence so large an amount may, at once, be obtained,—a task, we suspect, in the present state of Great Britain, of no easy nature; and bitter then will be the regret that pusillanimity, ignorance, and procrastination, should have had so much the mastery as to prevent the possibility of such a catastrophe; or, at least, greatly to diminish the chances of it, by a well-defined and understood arrangement with the court of Peking.

"It may be foolish to look at British relations with this country as connected with national honor, or, more properly speaking, national pride;—if glanced at, the retrospect would not be an agreeable one; but it may be as well, at once, to envisager this question, and to imagine the different attitude which England would, in such a case as we have supposed, have to assume, with that which she might now fairly claim, notwithstanding the absurdities and degradation which have marked her diplomatic connection with China, up to the present hour. Ignorant, as we yet hold the rulers of the nation, on the points which should be known, we cannot imagine the recurrence of the follies displayed in Macartney's embassy; though, whether the unpalatable humiliations of the country, in the person of Lord Amherst, might not be repeated or surpassed, we should not choose to assert. The fine clothes and gewgaws of the first might be more easily dispensed with than the tacitly acknowledged tributary character of the other; and cunning as the Chinese are, and well informed, as we believe them to be, of the direct importance of this trade to Great Britain, the position, in which an envoy, sent to China after the occurrence of a rupture between the countries, would be placed, must be as difficult as distressing. If instructed to support, in any way, the honor and dignity of his country, his mission would be futile. It is true, it is possible, that this might not be a sine qua non with his directors; and that trade, on any terms, so as to obtain the revenue, might be the object; in which case he probably might succeed, at the cost of national honor, in purchasing a temporary license for the trade; but this, though we fear by no means unlikely, is a contingency which we do not wish to imagine. We will, therefore, suppose an embassy, after the twelfth hour. Is it not manifest that the Chinese, feeling their advantage, would seize the opportunity to force terms, as suited themselves, on "the haughty and fierce barbarians?" That supplication, on the one side, would lead to insolence on the other, and the return of the defeated envoy necessarily force on war, or aggression on our part, the real cause for which, though gilded over with a fine show of dignity, &c., would be the cutting off of an important branch of the national trade—the very principle so much railed at by sir George Staunton, and other advocates for passive obedience and non-resistance to the caprices of his celestial majesty, and all his functionaries, high and low? In thus arguing, on the possibility of a rupture, we are not imagining difficulties and dangers that may not occur—so far from this being the case, we may appeal to all, acquainted with the subject, if it is not so much within the bounds of probability as to be often dwelt on by all interested in the trade. One flagrant breach of the laws or customs, as laid down by the local officers—a pretence of it—a single act of violence—a mere accident—a chance-scuffle or blow—any of these, or of many more possibilities obvious at the first reflection, would be enough to bring on the dilemma which we have contemplated. That such has not occurred, during three seasons of an extended trade, is, as Dr. Johnson might say, an unprecedented and extraordinary combination of fortunate coincidences, to be retrospectively regarded not more with satisfaction than surprise; but which all analogy and experience of human nature alike forbid the rational expectation of, for an equal duration of futurity—it is chance which the sanguine may desiderate, but which the prudent will refuse to calculate on.

"That our argument is, in reality, a selfish one we admit; and we have only followed out the above line to show that the British government cannot, as it would seem fondly to hope, leave its merchants without due protection, while securing so great a profit, from their labors; that here, as elsewhere, the real interests of governors and the governed are the same; and that wrong cannot be inflicted or permitted on the one, without bringing down at least equal suffering on the other. The prayer of the great bulk of British subjects in China, interested in the trade, sent home more than two years since, has been unheeded—the representation from some of the manufacturing and commercial cities of England, most deeply engaged in this trade, in furtherance of these views, have produced no effect; the defeat of the mission to this country since the expiring of the Company's charter, nerveless and inane as it was, has been allowed to pass by, in the hope that it might be forgotten, and the ignorance which engendered it overlooked; the memory of the unfortunate nobleman, who fell a victim to their folly, has been permitted by the ministry of England to remain under a cloud, lest the real causes of his failure, and the disgrace of the country in his person, should become apparent, and, as it ought, cry for vengeance: experience, argument, supplication, sense, prudence, and justice, have combined to persuade the English executive to shake off the dreamy indifference with which China and Chinese politics are regarded, and they have tried in vain. We know but of one more forcible argument that yet remains—it is hinted at above. We may be fortunate enough to escape the danger, for a time; but it is not in the nature of things that so anomalous a state can much longer subsist; it is barely possible that another season or two should pass over, without witnessing some such check as we have imagined, bringing with it, as it must, dishonor to the nation, embarrassment to its finances, and ruin to many of its subjects, from the want of that protection which was their right, which they humbly appealed for, and which, with the wanton insolence of office, was, in contemptuous silence, refused them."

Trade with China.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—Our present Ministers, and especially the noble Lord of the Foreign Office, by their gross ignorance and mismanagement, have placed in imminent danger many millions of British property in China, and brought discredit on the British name. The next arrival from Canton will probably inform us of the stoppage of the trade by order of the Chinese government, and of an embargo upon all British merchandize delivered on credit, at one or two months, agreeably to the custom in that country, and in the possession of the Chinese merchants.

Since the East India Company ceased trading, the Canton government have offered repeated insults to the authorities appointed by the Crown of England, particularly lord Napier, whom they treated as a prisoner, and literally gorged to death while suffering from fever, and Captain Elliot, R. N. the present "superintendent of British trade in China," with whom they refuse to hold any official intercourse. They have likewise placed additional arbitrary taxes and restrictions on British commerce.

After repeated applications to the Foreign office for an imposing force (sufficiently powerful to obtain redress without the necessity of hostilities, and to hasten the proverbially slow negotiations of the Chinese) to arrive in China early in the year, immediately after the close of the trading season there, so as not to interfere with our valuable commerce, what does the noble lord contrive? Why, in August last, just as the present trading season commenced, Admiral Sir Frederick Maitland arrives there in the Wellesley, a half-manned 74, accompanied by a gun-brig!

Of course the Chinese were not frightened by this redoubtable force, as they quickly proved by insultingly returning unopened a letter from Capt. Elliot, and firing from all the batteries of the Bocca Tigris, (the mouth of the Canton river) upon a British passage vessel, which, as they expressly stated, they supposed to contain some of the officers of Her Majesty's squadron.

It is said that the commandant of the Bocca Tigris sent a letter (in the Chinese language of course) which the admiral construed into an apology for this last outrage: but a long catalogue of wrongs remains, for which he means to demand redress.

Should he not succeed, which even with the reinforcements of two or three ships of war on the East India station, is very improbable, disaster will fall on him and the British flag, while disgrace will be the just portion of the Home government; but a cessation of commercial intercourse for some months seems inevitable in any case.

By the ill-timed arrival of the expedition, severe injury will be felt by numerous parties in this country. The manufactures for the Chinese markets will find it difficult to make sales to the merchants, whose capital is thus endangered—their workmen will be discharged—the shipowners lose their freight, and suffer a ruinous demurrage by the interruption in China. Although Chinese commodities will rise in price in this country, the revenue will not be benefitted as it was formely when the ad valorem duty was in force, a fixed duty per pound being now substituted. Between 3,000,000*l* and 4,000,000*l* annually arises to our home government from this trade, in addition to a large amount which the Indian Treasury derives from the country ships trading to China.

The British houses of agency at Canton have taken the alarm, and have shipped and sent home every atom of tea and bale of silk, literally sweeping the market; but they are still heavy creditors of the Chinese hong-merchants, and are preparing for the commencements of hostilities.

It is very doubtful whether any direct accounts will arrive before the meeting of Parliament, unless despatches should be sent to India, and thence overland; but it is to be hoped that the early attention of the legislature will be called to this most serious subject, involving an enormous amount of British property, and the honour of Great Britain in the East endangered by the ignorant and imbecile measures of our present rulers.

Sandwich Islands.

Sandwich Islands.—Earthquakes at Hilo. The following is an extract from a letter dated Hilo, November 14, 1838. "Will you credit it when I tell you, that during the space of eight days we had repeated shocks of earthquake, by day and by night, amounting in all to forty or fifty, and perhaps more. I counted twenty distinct shocks one night. Two days and two nights the earth was so much agitated, that I could not but sure that it was entirely quiet any of the time. Indeed, so great was the internal commotion, that the earth was almost constantly trembling between the shocks. The shocks commenced on the 5th, and continued till the thirteenth, inst. One native counted to me that she had felt a good deal of seasons, on account of the motion of the earth. I seemed to me a little like being on board ship; and there was about as much noise and motion attending some of the shocks, as is produced by a heavy wave striking against the side of a ship; then again there was an easy, gentle motion, like the swing of a carriage, and unaccompanied with noise. The last one that I happened to feel was three days ago, and I hoped that heavy effects were very visible to the eye, for the earth would was in motion. Even the little plants and flowers trembled like a stricken deer. During the whole week it was under a constant excitement; and never expected so fully before that there is but a step between us and death. I feared that it might result in some dreadful event, but the Lord reigns for us, and we live alive to speak of his great power; for "He looketh on the earth and it trembleth," and of his goodness and mercy; for when in the midst of sudden dangers, he sends his angels to encamp round about us, preserves us from all harm. I feel that we live on dangerous ground, and that it becomes us to live in a constant state of preparation, for we know not the day nor the hour when we shall be called away."—Hawaiian Spectator for April.

NORTH WEST COAST OF AMERICA.

The following communication from one of the officers of the Lama, to E. Grimes, Esq., owner of the vessel, gives a minute account of the late shocking disaster on board the brig, has politely been furnished us for publication.

We would here add, that the natives, on leaving the vessel, plundered her of nearly every thing that was valuable, having barely a sufficient quantity of provisions for the passage to this port.

"Brig Lama, Juneau, Islet,

Mr. Grimes, Sir—

I hereby give you an account of the distressful affair which happened on board the Lama, at the island of Santa Rosa, on the 22nd November, 1838.

We sailed from Point Concretion on the 15th, and on the 16th sent the canoes away to hunt on the island of St. Miguel. 18th, two canoes came off bringing only three skins.

They had had very fine weather, and were expected to bring more. Captain Bancroft questioned them, and found out that they had not been hunting at all on the 17th. He had a few words with them and sent them away again. One of the men was Yelamow, the second head man; he was very much off from this time and the principal cause of all that happened afterwards. On the 20th, two more canoes came off from Santa Rosa, bringing eight skins, and afterwards Mr. Robinson with four more. Mr. Robinson said they had been quarrelling among themselves about the skins, and did not seem to hunt well. Captain Bancroft ordered a gun to be fired, and a signal made for them all to come off, but they took no notice of it. Mr. Robinson then went ashore again with orders not to go to Santa Cruz till Santa Rosa was well hunted.

On the 22nd, we ran down and anchored at Santa Rosa, and on the 23rd, saw some canoes coming over from Santa Cruz; Captain Bancroft thought they were strangers and ordered the guns to be loaded; in about an hour we made them out to be all our own canoes coming aboard. At 11 A. M. they were all on board, and Captain Bancroft began to find fault with them, and they came to very high words, all in the N. W. language, so that we could not understand what was said. At last it appeared to be all settled, and the Captain went down to dinner, all the Indians remaining on the poop castle talking together. When he came up the row began again, and by what we could understand, very bad language passed between them.

On a sudden the Indians began to pass their muskets up out of their canoes, and had got them nearly all up before any notice was taken of it. When Captain G. saw, it, he told Mr. Robinson not to let any more come up, and he stopped them. Captain Bancroft then went on the forecastle and ordered them, but Yelamow shoved him away, and he ran aft and jumped down into the cuddy, saying some thing which we supposed to be, "Fire if you dare," for they immediately fired, and he fell down in the water.

The people and myself were all down at dinner till the report of the muskets was heard, when all hands rushed on deck; the Indians were then all on the gangway of the forecastle, each with his loaded musket in his hand. All our Sandwich Island natives stopped on the other side; the two white men ran aft, and one of them (Graydon) received a charge in his head, and was killed on the spot. The mate secured and ran on deck and threw his arms round the Captain, and they fell together. They took no notice of her, but cutlassed him, and she received the contents of three muskets in her two shoulders, and one of them cut three yards off. They then commenced all the arms and the boys of the arm-chest, telling us we must get water and then we should each to Kiguray, where they would all leave us to their canoes.

They would let none of us go near the body for some time, at last we persuaded them to let us, and to go to some new canvass, and Graydon in his blankets.

We went to Point Conception and returned, burying the two bodies at sea on the 25th, and sailed for Sigurey on the 26th. We arrived at Kigurey on the 26th December, and they all left us in their canoes taking with them all the things mentioned in the inclosed list, and leaving five skins and twenty-one tails, as a present for Mr. Robinson.

I am,
Sir,
Your obedient humble Servant,
J. MOLTENO.

Population of the Sandwich Islands.—What is the amount of the population at this time? Is it known with any degree of exactness? We suppose not. According to the census of 1826 it amounted 106,749. The census of 1839 gave 130, 313; as follows, viz:

	1832.	1836.	Decrease in 6 years.
Hawaii,	45,792	39,296	6,496
Maui,	35,082	24,199	10,883
Molokai,	6,000	6,000
Lanai,	1,600	1,200	400
Kahoolawe,	50	50
Oahu,	29,755	27,809	1,946
Kauai,	10,977	1,936	2,043
Niihau,	1,047	993	54
	130,313	108,579	21,734

If these data were correct, they exhibit a decrease of 21,734, in the short space of four years. Is it true that the population are passing off at this rate? It well becomes the government of this nation to investigate the facts of the case. If they are as deplorably true as the above data would represent them, it should be known, and the causes of this rapid depopulation be traced out, and a remedy be applied, to stay, if possible, this work of death. A state of things, which, should it continue, would in a few years, leave the rulers without a people to serve them, or to hold an inch of the soil which they call their own to their use and benefit. It is, therefore, a matter which the rulers of this nation ought, in justice to themselves and to their subjects, to take up, and which we would strenuously urge upon their consideration, to take a full and complete census of the population. Let there be a full list of all the people, their names, sex, age, (as nearly as this could be ascertained,) and occupations, and noting whether married or unmarried. And the object of taking this census should be explained clearly to the people, so that there should be no inducement to secrete themselves and families, as is, probably, the case when a list of taxable subjects is to be made out. Let the census be taken again, in the same exact manner, after the lapse of two or three years: or, perhaps a better suggestion would be, to have it taken annually—a work of no difficult accomplishment in a country of so limited population as this. The facts would then be known.—Hawaiian Spectator.

Singapore.

A most singular notion has it appears taken possession of the minds of a portion of the Chinese community in this settlement—which is no less than that the blood of nine and thirty men of the race of Han is required for the effectual manifestation of the New Church, and that Government has actually set on foot a system of Thuggee for the secret apprehension and final sacrifice of the required number of victims!!! Incredible as it may appear, it was even rumoured among them that nine had already been secured, and we were ourselves asked by a respectable and intelligent Chinaman, in the presence of half a dozen of his countrymen every one of whom appeared to place full credit in the report, whether or not it was true that they had been so disposed of! The manner in which the question was asked, it may be remarked, did not seem to imply that a confirmation of the rumour would have been received as anything very extraordinary, or that it would have been regarded as anything particularly atrocious—and from the way in which they conversed among themselves, when such a reply was given as might be expected, it was evident the subject was familiar to them all. Strange enough that the people should get down Settizen in Bengal, should in Singapore get the credit of consecrating their temples by such a lavish effusion of human blood! We dare say that this persuasion, so complimentary to our creed, originated in some story that had been manufactured to deter people from crossing through the Churchyard, which was formerly open all round and has only lately been enclosed by a Bamboo hedge. The neighbourhood of the Church indeed has it seems an extremely bad character among the lower class of natives at large, and all manner of stories are in circulation about people being carried off on the road by the side of the Bras Basse, so that many deem it unsafe to venture on it after nine o'clock at night!—Sing. Free Press, 18th April.

On Thursday last one of those tumultuous affrays which bespeak the clannish feelings existing among the Chinese, and have more than once occurred here, took place in the town between the crews of two Junks now in the roads, the one belonging to Pekien the other to Canton province. The vessels of the former are distinguished from the other by having the stem always painted red, while those of the latter are green; and are generally classed as red-head Junks and green-head Junks. It appears the dispute commenced about the selection of some cargo, purchased on shore, in which both the red-heads and green-heads were interested, and after the usual preliminary warfare of words, in which the male and female kindred of the disputants, alive or dead, far and near, are invariably spoken of in the most complimentary strain, recourse was had to blows, and mutiny broken were given and received on both sides without much injury to either. At this stage the battle was interrupted by the interference of their superiors, and the Nakhodas, or heads of the crews, appointed by their wounded men, repaired to the police to prefer their complaints, and prove in usual by the most indisputable evidence that the other side was the aggressor. The engagement happened to be absent at the time; and after waiting a little, both parties left the office; and, instead of trusting to an amicable adjustment of their differences, and so providing a salve for the honour which is generally found in persons more ordinary than any which the clothes and dresses of the combatants can furnish. By this time however the news of the fisticuffmongs had reached the comrades of both the red-heads and green-heads, who had assembled in considerable numbers; and instead of a pacific termination, ensued the alternative of a regular pitched battle was confirmed, the former, the former proceeded to a rendezvous of Brahminee cows, a considerable distance of numbers on both sides, and subsequently to behaviour each other one at all diminished by the loss of the first encounter. Fifty four hundred men it seems were engaged—most of them armed with their carrying poles, some with sword, shield and spear, while those who were unprovided with either discharged missiles of every description they could pick up. The clamour was prodigious—and the fight swayed to and fro, as either party gave way or renewed the charge, while the police Jemadars and native peons, few in number, were glad to take shelter from the shower of missiles that rained down on every side. Meantime the heads of the green ones were becoming red, and the heads of the red men in a condition which gave them a more indisputable claim to that cognomens than perhaps they ever before possessed—a prostrate hero was occasionally to be seen dragged by the heels out of the tumult, and there is no saying what amount of cracked skulls, fractured limbs, and punctured bodies, might have graced the field, had not at last the police force, aided by the efforts of several European gentlemen, effectually interposed and separated the combatants. The contest then was who was to get fastest away and escape the clutches of the peons, in which the green men, whose numbers had given them rather the advantage in the fray, fared worst, as a good many of them were secured, while their more fortunate or more agile antagonists escaped without a single capture—excepting the wounded, who could not run, and whom it became in the retreat very inconvenient to carry away. There were fortunately none killed outright—but among the wounded who have been conveyed to the hospital, amounting in all to about a dozen, there is one fractured skull, not likely to prove fatal however, and a tendon-achilles severed in two. Besides these there are about thirty committed to gaol, to take their trial at the next Sessions,—the Nakhodas of the two Junks, and their consignees on shore, against whom some inculpatory facts appear to have been given in evidence before the magistrates, are admitted to bail.—Ibid.

Siam.

THE SIAMESE PRINCE CHOO-FA-NOOI, The number of the Edinburgh Review for October last, contains an article on Ruschenberger's Voyage round the World, where an account is given of the American Mission to Siam in 1836, which the author accompanied as Surgeon on board of the U. S. Frigate Peacock, the vessel that conveyed the Envoy, Mr Roberts—and we have published in a foregoing column a portion of the reviewal in which, in connexion with the mission, there is honorable mention made of the Siamese Prince Choo Fa. of whom we often hear mention made at this place by our countrymen who visit Bangkok.—As we do not know whether the Doctor's book has travelled or will travel to Siam, nor whether the Edinburgh is wont to at Bangkok, we think it right to give his highness an opportunity of seeing, through the medium of our humble journal which is no stranger to him we believe, what means are taken to spread his fame throughout Europe, and how much is thought and how much expected of him. The Prince, we are however informed, is not addicted to politics, preferring the enjoyment to be derived from the calmer pursuits of science, and the pleasure of imparting to his countrymen a knowledge of arts with which they are unacquainted.—If not therefore of the material that produces revolutions in the East, his character seems calculated to prepare his countrymen for change, and a desire to profit by the knowledge of European arts and institutions—which is perhaps the best guarantee for their future improvement.—Sing. Free Press 11th April.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The following communication was received by us during the time of our imprisonment here, and it's not having appeared in print before was owing to some misgivings we had as to its merits. A friend of ours however in whose discernment we have the greatest confidence, and to whom we shewed our correspondent's effusion, recommended us by all means to give it publicity, it being, he said, in these hard times more than ever our duty to contribute to the amusement of our readers, and, that these funny (!) rhymes would do so, he was sure. Under such a guarantee then we venture to bring our correspondent R before the public, promising that we have, in printing, scrupulously adhered to the original, and that we are not accountable for the spelling, the abreviations the rhymes, nor the punctuation. In answer, however, to our correspondent's remark that the two pieces are of "very unequal merit," we beg to say that we can see no difference; they are worthy to appear "side by side."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,

The enclosed I chanced to find while the Canton "Idlers" were playing at a Scotch game call'd "Carrick, which probably fell from some of their pockets: the two pieces appear to be written by different hands, and I think of very unequal merit, and being anonymous, probably were intended for the public Press; they were much effaced, and many parts entirely obliterated. I have endeavour'd with some pains to restore them to what I conceiv'd to have been the sense; that I presume them now to be my bonafide property. In the dearth of News, and you may think them deserving a place in your columns; you are at liberty to do what "Sonneth thee best."

Your most Ob't. Servant.

An Ode by the Emperor of China.

Oh Opium! the cause of my grief wearing tear,
With deep execration, I call on thy name,
Most hated of poisons! my children give ear,
'Tis my Empires nemesis, tis your branded shame.

Thou Monster deformed, controul'd by no law,
Whom th' wealthy and poor, affects to despise,
No Wretch 'shamen'd, will plead for thy cause,
Tho thou capture their senses, in ev'ry disguise.

Their pleasure thro Life, e'en dying thy crave,
For thy loathed debauch, all hardships they'll bear,
The greatest of Hero's, and meanest born slave,
So enticing to all, is thy magical snare.

With Avarice thy handmaid, and lust for a pimp,
Thou Harlot of Hell, who'll pamper thee still,
Now death is the doom, thou hellish born imp,
To all that can't conquer, their pois'nous will.

My children are marked, with the brand of thy fame,
Which shall be ers'd, by shedding of tears,
By terror of racks, and dungeons dark gloom,
And your crimes b'assuag'd by penitent years.

No more be it said, I'ave private enjoy'd,
And for thy sake, I'll my edicts forego.
My most vattant men, thou hast destroy'd,
Now fire an 'sword, no distinction shall know.

Thou western barbarians, to you I unfold,
Tho clement my edicts, my laws are severe,
In one common cause, you are now enroll'd,
As Pity couldn't check, I'll curb thee with fear.

A Reply to the Foregoing, or

"Heu Naetse," versus "Lin."

Why do you plot, your old friend to abuse,
And spurn at the gifts, unto you that are given?
Doth your ingratitude furnish, a theme for thy Muse,
Thou unfilial son, misnamed of heaven?

Exterminate not, thy Promethean Jees,
Which thy shatter'd frame, its strength doth restore,
'Tis thy panacea, for aged disease,
And madness made drunk, to drive from thy shore.

Younger heads now preside, at thy council board,
Where the wisdom of age, enlighten'd once shone,
"Lin" with his faction, a most desperate hoard,
Hath turn'd thee to folly, and heart into stone.

As a River when stone'd, will inundate the ground,
But kept in its course, can floods then withdraw,
Thy people will break, the bonds that once bound,
And devastate thy Empire, by Rapine and War.

Is't the leak in the Cup, that swelleth thy Rage,
Why not to the scourge, adopt my wise plan,
Legalize that, which fear can't assuage,
Then lead by the nose, by a drop'rate Man!

Now over th' Empire, a Tempest doth lower,
By th' Thunder of Heaven, I say then arouse,
"Lin" hath made promise, far more than his power,
"As a Mountain in labour, brought forth a Mouse."

Q.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 1st June.

Several promotions are said lately to have taken place among the high officers of the Provinces. Lin, the Imperial Commissioner, and hitherto Governor of the Province of Hoo kwang, has been appointed to the Government of the three Keang, which in dignity is considered the second in the Empire; being inferior only to that of the Province of Pechele. Tang-tingching, hitherto Governor of the two Kwang, is said to have been appointed to the Government of Hookwang, which in point of rank is superior to to the one he now holds; Chow-tamtsoo, Chief Superintendent of the Grain department, of whose report to the Emperor on the Opium trade we published a translation on the 9th February, and who recommends the execution in order to stop the introduction of opium, of several tens of foreigners, is to succeed Tang tingching in the Government of the two Kwang; Choo-ta-laou-yo, the Kwang-chow-foo, is removed to some other office to make room for Yu-paou-shun, the Commissioner's right hand man, and his active assistant lately at the Bogue; the Kwang-heep, or military commandant is to be employed in an office somewhat inferior to the one he holds at present.

What will the Chinese do with the 20,283 chests surrendered to them by Capt. Elliot, has been frequently asked, and the answer to this question seems to have puzzled every one, and even the commissioner, in no small degree. At first it was said that he intended to burn it, but that project was abandoned from fear of infecting the air; the next project was, to dig troughs or reservoirs contiguous to the sea, and there by means of water, salt, and oil to melt the Opium and allow it to be washed away by the tide; this mode of disposing of it was, we believe, determined upon, and we hear that the Commissioner offered sacrifice to Hai lung-wan, the God of the Sea, acquainting him with the wishes of the Son of Heaven that the Opium should be destroyed, and requesting the God to aid the pious intentions of the Emperor, by ordering, for a time, the fishes out of the way, to prevent their being poisoned. We do not know whether the Chinese Neptune was inclined to attend to the Yum-chor's request, but it is now understood that orders have been received from Peking that the whole of the Opium is to be sent up there by sea, and it is said that twelve junks have already been chartered for that purpose. Moreover we learn that Imperial orders have been received, by which, as a reward for the obedience foreigners have shewn in the voluntary surrender of their Opium, a present of five catties of Congou-tea is to be given for every chest of Opium. The tea has already been purchased for this purpose, and is, it is said, on its way to Macao, to be there offered to Capt. Elliot. Two Hong merchants are, we learn, deputed to present this munificent gift. The Commissioner meanwhile remains at the Bogue, nor has anything been heard of him lately.

All British subjects, with the exception of a very few, and those will go in a few days being still retained by urgent business, either have left already or are about leaving Canton in the course of this day or to morrow, and the foreign community of Canton is now reduced to a small number of American merchants.

It is said, the unfortunate wight Heu-Naetse, will be sent to the cold country, for the liberty he has taken with the Son of Heaven.

We recorded last week that Mowqua's bankrupt made an arrangement with its creditors, being unable to meet it's engagements. We learn since that Mowqua, also has declared himself unable to pay, and that he has made an arrangement with some of his creditors of which the terms are, we believe, that 25 per cent are to be paid cash, and the remainder in four equal annual instalments. His debts amount to above 160,000 $, we are told.

We recopy from the Register of the 23th a letter regarding the Assam-tea lately sold in London by order of the East India Company. The whole quantity brought forward at the sale was we believe, 13 chests, and the novelty caused a good deal of competition among the "trade," so much so that the first lot was sold at 21s. per pound, and prices gradually rose, until for the last lot as much as 34s. was given, whilst the real market-value, as compared with China-teas, was not more than about 2s. per pound. We do not suppose that immediately yet the Assam-tea is likely to become a formidable competitor of that from this country, but as the Indian Government will do all it can to encourage the growth and manufacture of this article in their own territories, it is not unlikely that many Chinese from the province of Yunnan will settle there, and bring with them industry and the knowledge of cultivating and preparing of tea, so that the production is likely to encrease fast, and that after some years already Assam will be able to furnish considerable quantities.

G. G. de H. Larpent, Esq.

London, 11 Mincing Lane, December 10, 1838.

Sir.—In accordance with the wish expressed by you, at the time you favored us with a sample of the Assam Souchong grown in the Honble Company's territory, we now beg leave to report our opinion of the quality of the same; the precise character which we attach to it, is:

"Middling, strong, high burnt, of large, bold, black Pekoe leaf, with some flower in small, rather heated."

We consider the specimen of tea now under review, to have been materially injured by being over fired, which, as well as giving it a heated smell, and burnt flavour, has most probably destroyed its fragrant properties; the entire absence of this latter quality, we regard as its chief and great defect, as on the other hand, we view as its leading recommendations the great strength which it possesses, and the perfect color of and bloom on, the leaf.

As a whole, its properties we consider to be much more those of Pekoe, than of Souchong tea; regarded as Pekoe, its leaf, though slightly coarse or rough in appearance, is very handsome, not alone from its face but from its boldness and size; the color of the leaf too after infusion, is of that rich bright brown which characterizes Pekoe tea, but it is more closely folded and less broken than the leaf of that spoken generally runs.

(Signed) T. & R. MOFFATT.

Probable value from fine appearance of leaf and great strength 2s. 2d. per lb.; but if the quality had been uninjured in curing we should raise the quotation to 2s. 6d. a 2s. 6d even considering the present low prices of fine Souchong and Pekoe.

In publishing last week an edict from the Chinese authorities, circulated by the U. S. Consul, in in which it was stated, that, because the American Ship Peth-ta-le had sailed away to the eastward, to escape being measured, she was not to be allowed to come into port, nor to trade, we were led to state that this prohibition referred to the Robert Fulton, this being at the time commonly reported here. We have now been informed by the Supercargo of that vessel that there is no foundation for the report that the Robert Fulton was meant in that edict; she having been measured, and the Captain holding the pilot's certificate to that effect. We take the earliest opportunity of thus correcting an error into which we have unwittingly been led.

We read in "O Commercial" of 28th May that a rumor was prevalent at Macao of serious disturbances having broken out in Fo-shin, in which one manderin was killed; and that of the risen a great many had taken refuge on board of Junks to escape the soldiery: the report, O Commercial states, has not been yet confirmed.

The following communication was in the afternoon yesterday received from the Hong-merchants, but to us it appears that it contains nothing but what was known before from the Commissioner's edicts, nor do we see that ships about to enter the port can therefrom derive any security.

"A respectful communication.

"We have now received an edict from the Hopo, handing us an edict from the Viceroy, which we are to communicate to the superintendent of all Countries that they respectfully conform thereto.

After this, when any foreign ships come to Canton to trade, they must be compelled to submit respectfully to the regulations hitherto existing, and they must enter the port and anchor at Whampoa. Whampoa, on the river's surface, where they must wait and be examined, when they will be permitted to open their hatches and discharge their cargo. They will not be permitted to cast anchor for the time at Yu chu co yung and other places on the river's surface; if they dare to oppose they will certainly be driven out! Beware! do not bring upon yourself the consequences of your error! &c., &c.,

We, the Hong merchants, therefore take the particulars of this edict, and communicate the same to you, begging that you will make every gentleman acquainted with the same, and with compliments remain,

The HONG MERCHANTS.

N. B. The cubit is 14½ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4800; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Custom; or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Tuns or $ 2223. Linguists fee $ 173½ and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. A sum of from $ 5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 299.50., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 256—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

During the past week there have been few transactions, most foreign residents having retired to Macao and the few now remaining have been occupied in closing their accounts with the Chinese.

Since the partial opening of the trade large sales of RAW COTTON, LONGELLS, COTTON CLOTHS, and YARN have been made at our quotations, and of considerable quantities of other goods, and the stock of Imports generally, in first hands, must be very small.

RICE,—the price continues low, and the weather for the last ten or twelve days has been very favorable for the approaching crop.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Further purchases of a few hundred bales of Silk have been made, at about 425 @ 450 for Cargo, and 490 @ 500 for the finer kinds. The stock on hand is estimated at about 1400 bales, and the precarious state of affairs is likely to prevent any increase for some time.

TEA.—The port being almost clear of vessels, transactions are quite unimportant, and must soon be altogether at an end.

EXCHANGE.—We have heard of a sale of American bills at 5s. 1d, but there are few or none left now in the market. Any advance or decline in the rate must depend on the determination of foreigners regarding the vessels now outside.

TONNAGE.—The few remaining vessels are rapidly completing their loading, and there seems to be a general impression that the new regulations about to be published by the Chinese Government will prevent the entrance others for the present.

Latest English News.

From the London Observer of 25th, and London Englishman of 16th March. Taken from Sing. Free Press Extra. of 14th June.

In the House of Commons, Mr. T. Duncombe, moved. "That it is the opinion of this House that during Lent no greater restriction should be placed upon theatrical entertainments in the city of Westminster than are placed upon the like amusements at the same period in every other part of the metropolis." The motion was carried by a majority of 21, the numbers being 93 and 72.

A long discussion took place in the Committee, on a resolution moved for by Lord Morpeth, authorising the Lords of the Treasury to issue 2 500,000l of Exchequer Bills, "for the construction of a railway or railways in Ireland."

Mr. Hume strongly objected to the principle of interference with private enterprise, and warned the House, that they could not with justice resist applications for railways in other parts of Ireland, if they granted this. They were at the commencement of an incalculable expenditure. The resolution was, however, carried by a majority of 44.

Lord Fitzwilliam moved, pursuant to notice, the following resolution:—"That the act 9 George IV. c. 60, has failed of securing that steadiness in the price of grain which is essential to the best interests of the country." After considerable discussion the motion was negatived by the majority of 224 to 24.

Lord Brougham gave notice that he intended to move to-morrow evening that the House go into committee for the purpose of considering what it is expedient to do with respect to the Corn-laws.

THE FUNDS.—CITY, SATURDAY, MARCH 23.

In confirmation of the view taken in our general summary of this day week, that very alarming circumstances indeed must arise to influence unfavourably the value of the Public Securities, we may advert to the fact that notwithstanding the important events which have arisen since Monday, a reaction of not more than five-eighths per cent has taken place. The more timid speculators in the Funds have taken alarm at the dispatch of bodies of troops towards the manufacturing districts, and also at the certainly very doubtful state of affairs on the American and British North American frontiers. As a set off to the apprehensions of the parties referred to, however, there is no longer any ground for the supposition of hostile movements between Holland and Belgium, the Chambers of the latter Government having, though very tardily, sanctioned the modifications which have been made in the Twenty-four Articles by the London Conference. But there are other topics which have demanded attention among the speculations. The position in which the Government of this country stands after the debates in Parliament upon the blockade of Mexico by the French fleet, and the injury done to British commerce, may it is thought, lead to an unfriendly negociation between the Courts of St James and the Tuileries. The Foreign Exchanges, which remain in a very depressed condition, with a continuous flow of the precious metals from the country, is also a circumstance which ordinarily would have induced the Bears to extend their operations, especially as very large additional supplies of foreign wheat are arriving, which must call for further exports of specie. Under all these adverse circumstances, however, the Funds have not receded in value beyond what we have previously stated. The most heavy state of the market was on Tuesday, produced by a sale of upwards of £100,000 Consols. The Commissioners have been but small buyers of Stock this week, either on account of the Savings' Banks or against Annuities granted. A demand for money has produced some considerable sales of Exchequer Bills and India Bonds, which have declined rather rapidly.

At the public sales of TEA on the 26th ultimo, when 5,600 Packages were offered, about two thirds were realised, without any material variation from the closing prices in January, excepting for Fokien Bohea and common Congou, in which a decline was established of ld. a 1½d. per lb. The demand by private contract has been very limited during the last weeks, and at present is almost suspended by the announcement of sales to be brought forward on the 2nd April, comprising 114,300 Packages, in weight about 7,700,000 lbs., of this quantity the proportion of green TEAS is large, as compared with former sales, and although in the absence of any recent transactions of importance these descriptions cannot yet be quoted lower, buyers at present are not inclined to offer the previous currency.

The deliveries of Bengal Silk during the last months have been 350 Bales larger than in the corresponding period of 1838, whilst in those of China there is a falling off of about 550, the aggregate quantity of the two kinds taken from the warehouses being thus nearly alike in each season; the arrivals in the present year have been much more extensive than in the preceding, but the joint stocks at 1st instant, it will be observed, were, about 1700 Bales less than at the same date in 1838. The deficiency, however, is chiefly in China, and further arrivals of Bengal having come forward since the monthly accounts were made up, the market is pretty fairly supplied with the latter kind, whilst of the former comparatively little is offering for sale, a considerable portion of the stock being in second hands. The demand for both descriptions had been rather dull since the date of our previous report, until within the last few days, when accounts from Canton to 5th December of the high prices still demanded there, and the limited purchases consequently made for export, gave rise to rather more inquiry for China Silk, and for the lower qualities of Tsatlee an advance of 6d has been obtained. From Calcutta late advices mention that prices of Bengal Silk were rising, and that the November bund had partially failed in some districts, but no improvement can yet be quoted in this kind.

FRANCE.

The conduct of the Prince De Joinville in the affair of the pilot taken from the British vessel in the Gulf of Mexico, is the subject of severe comments in the Liberal papers. He is said to have disobeyed Admiral Baudin's orders on that and other occasions; yet, because he is the King's son, he will be promoted, instead of tried by a Court-martial. The National says, that even the elder Bourbons knew better than to send to their Admiral boys for Captains, when work was to be done.

Independently of the complaint against the young Prince for his conduct in the affair just alluded to, the Opposition journalists found in his subsequent proceedings additional cause for condemning the premature elevation of the Prince de Joinville to the rank of Capt. of Corvette (a grade corresponding, we believe, with that of commander in the British Navy.) The Siecle, which may be taken as a fair specimen of the whole, dwells upon "the enormity of the double offence committed by his royal Highness in respect of the Mexican pilot taken by force from a British packet. First, there was the chance of involving France in a war with a friendly state, and next was the heinous crime of compelling a man to serve against his own country. The reprehensible conduct of the young captain did not end here, however, for (only to flatter his vanity) he was represented to have, in the assault on Vera Cruz, attempted to carry with a howitzer a fortified barrack which his commanding officer, Admiral Baudin declared could not be taken but by a regular siege."

The Colonial interest is assailing the Minister of Commerce with memorials, describing the ruin of their trade; which they impute to his ignorance and mismanagement of the Sugar question.

Papineau, the Canadian rebel, reached the capital on Saturday night, and was at the soiree of Mr. Ladrue on Sunday night, where he was introduced to all the leading "Liberals" there present. His distinguished colleague in fomenting the disturbances to Canada, General Lallemand, was buried on Monday with much pomp in the cemetery of Montmartre.

SPAIN.

March 2. Marotto, a General under Don Carlos arrested fourteen superior officers of the Carlist army; and on the 18th ultimo, ordered six of them to be shot without trial, at Estella. He published a proclamation, promising to prove that all his prisoners had been guilty of high treason. Don Carlos has put forth another proclamation, imputing treason to Marotto, and disavowing all participation in his proceedings at Estella. It is rumoured that Marotto had been bribed by Espartero, and had made away with the officers like by to prevent the execution of a plan to go over with his troops to Espartero.

March. 9—Don Carlos revoked his proclamation, denouncing Marotto as a traitor, and announced in another proclamation, his entire approval of the slaughter of his Generals at Estella. Marotto, it seems, only executed a decree of Carlos himself, which, he was induced to pass by that "tigress," a she is called, the Princess of Beira. The Carlos papers in Paris express horror at the massacre of Estella; and it is believed that the Pretender will no longer be supported by the Northern Powers. A marriage between an Austrian Archduke and the young Queen of Spain is talked of.

The Correo Nacional states that Prince George of Cambridge had arrived in Granada. His Royal Highness visited the Arabian Palace, the splendid Cathedral, and the tombs of the Catholic Kings. In the evening he went to the theatre, and the moment he entered the hall the orchestra played "God save the Queen."

PORTUGAL.

The Portuguese Government have refused to ratify the treatry negotiated by Lord Howard de Walden for the suppression of the Slave-trade; Mr. Buxton's book of the week teaches us to regard all such treaties as good for nothing; and we observe that Lord Palmerston has assured the House of Commons, that he will introduce a measure authorising British cruisers to search Portuguese slave-ships North of the Line without a treaty.

UNITED STATES.

March 14.—By the arrival of the Great Western from New York, intelligence has been received of serious proceedings between Sir John Harvey, Lieut. Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, and the Hon. John Fairfield, the American Governor of the State of Maine, with respect to the disputed boundary. The Washington papers of the 2nd ult. say, that great excitement exists there, at the prospect of the war. On the receipt of the special message, by the President from the Governor of the province of New Brunswick, disavowing any authority from his Government for the seizure of the land-agent; that an order had been issued to Major General Isaac Hodgson to detach 1,000 men to the place occupied by the land-agent's party at Aroostook River, to enable the land-agent to carry into effect the resolution of the 24th of June; and that if those proceedings met the approbation of the Legislature, the Governor would feel it his duty to order a draught from the militia of at least 30,000 men, to hold themselves in readiness to march to the frontier should circumstances require it. A further communication was received from Sir John Harvey by Governor Fairfield in which the former states that his orders are peremptory to defend the territory over which the British Government has heretofore exercised jurisdiction, and asserting that the lands on the Aroostook river, on which trespasses are alleged to have been committed, are within the limits above referred to; & therefore, Sir John Harvey urges the withdrawal of the American forces, otherwise he will be compelled to attack them. On the other hand Governor Fairfield denies the correctness of this assumption, asserting that these lands are within the clearly defined boundaries of the state of Maine, and that he is determined to expel the intruders and hold possession. It is expected that Governor Fairfield, sustained as he is by the representatives of the people (the Legislature being now in session,) will not suspend his operations, even if bloodshed should be the inevitable consequence of the communication from Governor Fairfield to the President, there has been a Cabinet Council of some hour's continuance, and the result of their deliberations is, that the President shall send a special message to Congress on Monday (the 25th,) recommending an appropriation of the necessary sum of money to protect and defend the frontier, and the raisings of the requisite number of volunteers forthwith. These means of assault or defence, as the case may be, will be placed at the discretion of the President, to be used, if in his opinion necessary, and not otherwise. All parties will unite in this measure if it be proposed to sustain the honour of the national flag. On a such a question there will be no division. A foreign party has no existence in this country.

The New York packet ship England arrived at Liverpool, on Tuesday evening, with New York papers to the 2d instant, containing the American President's Message to Congress on the late incursion on a portion of the territory in dispute between the United States and Great Britain, commonly called the Boundary Question. The England made the English coast in fourteen days.

The following extract from the President's Message, which is certainly pacific, places in a clear point of view his opinions and intentions respecting the late collision:—

"Between an effort on the part of Maine to preserve the property in dispute from destruction by intruders, and a military occupation by that State of territory with a view to hold it by force, while the settlement is a subject of negociation between the two Governments, there is an essential difference, as well in respect to the position of the State as to the duties of the General Government. In a letter addressedby the Secretary of State to the Governor of Maine, on the 1st of March last, giving a detailed statement of the steps which had been taken by the Federal Government to bring the controversy to a termination, and designed to apprise the Governor of that State of the views of the Federal Executive in respect to the future, it was stated, that while the obligations of the Federal Government to do all in its power to effect the settlement of the Boundary Question were fully recognised, it had, in the event of being unable to do so specifically, by mutual consent, no other means to accomplish that object amicably than by another arbitration, or by a commission with an umpire on the nature of an arbitration; and that in the event of all other measures failing, the President would feel it his duty to submit another proposition to the Government of Great Britain to refer the decision of the question to a third Power. These are still my views upon the subject, and until this step shall have been taken, I cannot think it proper to invoke the attention of Congress to other than amicable means for the settlement of the controversy, or to cause the military power of the Federal Government to be brought to the aid of the State of Maine, in any attempt to effect that object by a resort to force.

"On the other hand, if the Authorities of New Brunswick should attempt to enforce the claim of exclusive jurisdiction set up by them by means of a military occupation on their part of the disputed territory, I shall feel myself bound to consider the contingency provided by the Constitution as having occurred, on the happening of which a State has the right to call for the aid of the Federal Government to repel invasion.

"I have expressed to the British Minister near this Government a confident expectation that the agents of the State of Maine, who have been arrested under an misapprehension of the object of their mission, will be promptly released; and to the Governor of Maine, that a similar course will be pursued in regard to the agents of the Province of New Brunswick. I have also recommended that any militia that may have been brought together by the State of Maine from an apprehension of a collision with the Government or people of the British Province will be voluntarily and peaceably disbanded.—I cannot allow myself to doubt that the results anticipated from these representations will be reasonably realised.

The New York Express says, "A memorandum has been signed by the Secretary of the United States, Mr. Forsyth, and her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary, Mr. H. S. Fox, engaging on the one part not to attempt to expel by force the armed party with which the State of Maine has taken possession of the disputed territory, and on the other part that such armed force shall be voluntary withdrawn. This agreement is accompanied with the recommendation that both States, Maine and New Brunswick, shall in future co-operate in dispersing 'notorious trespassers,' and protecting public property, until the final adjustment of the question."

Extract of a letter from Washington.—"The militia of Maine, in possession at the last dates, numbered nearly 1000, and they have thrown up a breastwork at the junction of the Aroostook and St. Croix rivers, mounted by a brass field piece, to be strengthened by several more pieces; 1,000 more men were on the march to join them. 18,000 more of the Maine militia are ordered to be in readiness. Several lodds of Hall's patent rifles and muskets are sent to Bangor. It is rumoured that some of the M'Queddey Indians will join these forces. The Senate has confirmed the grant of 800,000 dollars for defence. A war spirit seems everywhere to pervade the people of Maine, who say they will fight unless Governor Harvey acknowledges the exclusive jurisdiction over the lands to reside in Maine. The only United States forces in Maine are stationed at Houlton—two companies. Posts are stationed all along the road from Bangor to the Aroostook lands, and relays of horses, &c. appointed. A fire company at Augusta has volunteered to join, and has demanded arms. General Hodson had proceeded to the Aroostook with forces. On the other hand Governor Harvey has not reserved in the least from his position, but calmly repeats, as a sine qua non, that the armed forces from Maine, now within the territory in dispute, must be immediately withdrawn, or otherwise he has no alternative but to take military possession of that territory. Detachments of British regulars are on their way to the territory. Several boats are laden with them from Fredericton, with artillery; all the disposable troops, artillery, and the 36th British Regiment, are also under marching orders to the Aroostook, with a strong force from Lower Canada. Mr. M'Intire and the other Maine agents taken by the British are liberated on their parole of honour; but Mr. M'Laughlan, the British land-agent captured by Maine, refuses to be liberated, and is at the Bangor hotel. One of the Maine papers (the Kennebec Journal) thinks that if Governor Fairfield had notified Governor Harvey, things would not have gone so far. Governor Fairfield says he could not do so, as he acted in conformity to the will of the Legislature.

"On the arrival of the first news of the Border troubles at Washington, Mr. Van Buren convened a Cabinet Council, which sat several hours. Meanwhile a desultory debate took place on the subject in Congress between two or three Members of Maine and Massachusetts, who contended that Maine was right. On Wednesday, however, a special message from the President on the subject was read in the Senate, together with a correspondence with Mr. Fox, the British Minister. A debate arose in Congress on the whole subject, on Mr. Howard moving that the 'Message and other documents be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.' Mr. Thompson, of South Carolina, approved the course of Maine, and spoke warmly. Mr. Pearce, of Maryland, sustained Maine, but objected to the warmth of Mr. Thompson. Mr. Cushing spoke in a very warlike manner. Mr. Evans thought, from the warlike character of the Governor's proclamations of New Brunswick and Maine, the worst consequences were to be feared. Mr. Thompson moved the printing of 10,000 copies of the documents, and the whole matter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There is no particular excitement at Washington on the Maine difficulty; and it is there believed that it will be settled without an appeal to arms. Messrs. Clay, Buchanan, and Webster, in the Senate, approved of the pacific policy of the President, and said the Border difference could be adjusted between the two countries without difficulty, and should be without delay; but they would not yield an inch even at the risk of war."—Observer, March, 23.

We give, in another part of our paper, an abstract of the latest intelligence from America respecting the border disturbances. The next accounts will probably arrive in town in a day or two, as the Liverpool steamer was to leave New York on the 9th instant. We shall then learn whether a collision took place before the recommendation of of our Minister, Mr. Fox, and of Mr. Forsyth, reached Sir John Harvey and Governor Fairfield. Upon this point there seems to prevail some uneasiness; and as the recommendation of Mr. Fox was conditional, and required the sanction of the Home Government, it is generally asked whether such sanction will be given to it. We have no authority to speak one way or the other on the subject, but we feel we may safely say that what Mr. Fox did was right, and that our interests in that part of the world could not be in better hands than his. Mr. Fox is confessedly one of the most able diplomatic servants of her Majesty.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT AMARAPOORA.

(From the Maulmain Chronicle, April 10.)

We have been favored with the following graphic account of the effects at Amarapoora of the earthquake that was so severely felt here on the morning of the 23d ultimo, and which appears to have been of a most awful nature, involving considerable loss of life:—

"We have been visited by a terrible earthquake here. About 2 on the morning of the 23d, we were awoke by the house rocking to and fro in the most frightful manner. We had two terrific shocks, with several others throughout the night and the whole of the next day. In the morning, we found every pagoda had been partly thrown down, not one standing whole. Every brick house in the place was more or less delapidated, some 3 or 4 only being left standing, more or less damaged, and the others all down, burying many people in their ruins. In one large brick house, 11 persons were buried, 7 killed, 2 much hurt and 2 escaped unhurt. Under every house some have been killed, 19 of them in the Musulman mosque, the whole of which building came down. The earth opened in many places, many of which continue open and are sufficiently large to stow away a Man-of-War. From all these fissures, a large quantity of water was thrown up. The river rose and flowed upwards three times, and numerous wrecks are strewed along the banks. It appears to have done still more damage at Ava, where the palace is down, and many fissures opened in the town. Not a pagoda is to be seen on the Tsagain side of the river. An Armenian gentleman, Mr Harapeit, was taken from out the ruins of his house, his legs and arms crushed, and his chest broken; he soon expired."

We shall be curious to learn what the court interpreters of omens say to this awful visitation, as we are not aware that earthquakes, (the shocks of which are frequent in Burmah) have ever been so calamitous in their effects as this appears to have been, and the superstition of all parties must have been roused to gather from it an indication of future events.—Singapore Free Press.

OPIUM SEIZURE AT SIAM.—Accounts have reached this during the week, which, taken together with the circumstances noticed in our number of 4th April last, shew, we think, plainly enough that the government of Siam is acting under the influence of that of China with respect to the trade in Opium. It appears that a Sampan pukat which sailed from this, having 19 chests of Opium on board, besides a large amount in Teeals, was seized at the mouth of the Meinam by a government boat, after a contest in which six men on board of the Pukat were killed—they having believed, or chosen to believe, that the Siamese vessel was a pirate, and resisted in consequence. Although the letter of the Siamese law prohibits the importation of Opium, this is the first instance which has come under our notice of an attack having been made by Siamese cruizers on vessels supposed to have Opium on board. In a memorial addressed to the Emperor of China by the Viceroy, Foo-yuen, and Hoppo of Canton in 1832, regarding the Opium trade, it is said, that the "Indian Territories belonging to England are not like Cochin-china, Siam, &c., with whose Kings we might communicate, and desire them to issue commands, prohibiting the Opium to be brought."—We have no doubt that the seizure in question results from the expression of a desire by the China government that Opium should be prohibited in Siam, and we may thus see that the market for the drug is likely to be narrowed, every where but in the Archipelago, by the measures of the Chinese government; to which, unfortunately in this respect, the power and authority of China do not extend.—Ibid.

The Bombay Courier of 13th April quotes from a Madras paper some particulars regarding an alarming mutiny which broke out on board of the Lord Lowther on her passage from London to the latter port. The mutineers were it appears, headed by some of the officers, and it was with great difficulty that Capt. YATES succeeded in quelling the disturbance and restoring order, in which he is said to have evinced great firmness and determination.—The mutineers were in custody at Madras.—Ibid.

A circumstance which has within the last few days been brought to the notice of the mercantile community of this place, affords a further example of the determination of the Chinese Government to prohibit by every means in its power the importation and consumption of Opium. It appears that the junk which the king of Siam sends annually to China, bearing tribute or some token of homage to the great Emperor, used also to carry a considerable quantity of opium for sale on account of his Siamese Majesty, which the Mandarins permitted the sale of without challenge—whereby he generally realized profits that constituted no insignificant item of his privy purse. The Opium, however, which was conveyed in the last tribute bearing Junk from the "magnificent king" was refused admission, and the tribute bearers told that if any attempt were made to land it, seizure and confiscation would ensue. The Junk was accordingly under the necessity of reconveying the Opium to Bankok, accompanied with a recommendation to the Siamese Court to follow the example of his Imperial Majesty in interdicting and punishing the use of Opium within his dominions. The consequence has been that all the opium which the Siam Junks now here had on board as return Cargo, has been landed, sold—and the proceeds invested in British and Indian manufactures. If this fact is typical of the consequences which are to ensue from the prohibition of Opium in China and Siam, the merchants and manufacturers of Manchester and Glasgow have no cause to be down-cast, whoever else may mourn.—Ibid.

OUTRAGE ON THE WEST COAST OF SUMATRA.—Before the departure of the Adelaide from Penang, which vessel arrived here on Monday last, we learn from Captain DUVERGER, that intelligence had been received there of a recent outrage on the French ship Denise, at the port of Soosoe, on the West Coast of Sumatra, attended with the death of Captain THIBAUT who commanded her. The particulars of this unhappy occurrence which Captain DUVERGER had learned before leaving Penang were, that the Denise had already taken on board a considerable quantity of Pepper, with which she intended to load entirely, when one night a large party of Malays came off in boats filled with Pepper, apparently for the sole purpose of delivering it. The Captain was asleep at the time, and the Officer in command would not permit them to come on board unless they first surrendered their weapons. This was done, and they came on board, where they had been about an hour when the Captain awoke, and was informed that there was some Pepper alongside which the Malays wished to have weighed. While engaged in weighing the Pepper, the head-man of the party, apparently an old acquaintance of Captain THIBAUT, complained of the mistrust shewn of him by requiring the surrender of their arms, expressing himself in terms of the greatest amity and good will, by which Captain THIBAUT was induced to return their krises. They had scarcely possessed themselves of them, when the Captain stooping over the scales, was thrust through the back with a kris, and fell, exclaiming that he was stabbled—The Chief Officer was also attacked, but receiving only a slight wound succeeded in getting up the rigging, and the whole crew taken by surprise, and far out numbered, followed his example. Having thus cleared the deck, the Malays began to plunder the vessel, and robbed her of Specie and other property, but to what amount was not known.—Ibid.

OVERLAND JOURNEY FROM SAMBAS TO PONTIANAK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SINGAPORE FREE PRESS.

Mr Editor,

We send you the following observations on a tour from Sambas to Pontianak in Nov. 1836.

The situation of Sambas itself as is known, is low and marshy, being 36 miles from the Coast, on a river of the same name. We left the town in a small boat, and proceeded about 15 miles, down the main river and up a branch stream, when we landed and began our land tour. The whole distance travelled was about 170 miles on foot and 80 by water in an open boat. The region visited embraces 1½ degrees of latitude, and a little less of longitude. The farthest point we were at, in the interior, was 65 or 70 miles.

The inhabitants of this region are chiefly Dyaks and Chinese. The Dyaks are supposed to be the aborigines of the island. They rank among the simplest children of nature, and of course are degraded, ignorant, and rude. They may be said to occupy a middle place between the constantly wandering tribes of America, and those who have so far advanced in the arts of civilised life, as to become permanently settled. The Dyaks are neither, but still are in the habit of frequent removals. Their villages seldom remain more than five or six years in the same place. This is rendered a matter of necessity, from their mode of tilling the ground. Rice and Corn are their chief subsistence. Of these they only reap a single crop, from the same parcel of ground. Thus they are constantly engaged in clearing off the forests, planting, reaping and removing. Vast tracts of country, once cleared and planted, are now lying waste. The richness of the soil immediately produces a luxuriant growth of the useless lalang grass, which gives a beautiful appearance to these hills and dales, but which, henceforth, becomes of no service to the original tillers.

Owing to the half wandering life of the Dyaks, it is a matter of no small difficulty to reach their settlements. Their paths are so obscurely marked, so little trodden, and so devious in their course, that it is impossible to proceed without guides, well acquainted with the way. Not unfrequently the path leads over precipices, over cliffs and dangerous declivities, and along deep ravines, which must be crossed and recrossed by wading through mud and water knee deep. The Dyaks have no bridges. All their streams must be forded.

The language of the Dyaks bears a strong affinity to the Malayan. It is not however the same in all parts of the island. Within the district under review, it is said there are several dialects. The language is not yet reduced to writing.

The habits of this people are most perfectly simple. No individual property seems to exist, except a right to their instruments of war, and agriculture, and also to their wives. Polygamy does not exist among them. All are subject and obedient to the authority of one man, who, by some providential, or fortuitous circumstance has been constituted chief. Their intercourse resembles that of a large family, in which all are equal excepting the rightful head. They appear mild and peaceful in their social relations, and their treatment of strangers is respectful and kind.

The Dyaks do not appear to be enslaved by any deep-rooted superstitions. The only semblance of religion, which appeared among them, was a reverence for their ancestors who had distinguished themselves by daring exploits and signal acts of bravery. When such persons die, they make a wooden image, crude indeed, yet in the form of a man, varying in length from 20 inches to 6 feet. Around this they assemble and hold a sacred feast, after which it is placed among those which have been similarly consecrated. These are patron gods, whose peculiar province it is, to prosper the cultivation of rice. Offerings are made to them monthly, consisting of various articles of food. No other images, no temples, nor other rites of religious worship were discovered among them.

The only feature in the Dyak character which stamps it with barbarous cruelty is the bloody practice of cutting off, and preserving with sacred care the heads of other Dyaks, who were either their avowed enemies, or belonged to a strange and rival district. Human skulls are suspended in all their houses, as so many precious relics, and emblems of bravery. This, with them, is the measure of greatness. The more heads a man has, the richer and more distinguished is he esteemed. New heads are held in higher estimation than old ones. Hence this horrible system is likely to be perpetuated. The hair and scalp are usually removed and the skull bone polished, and ornamented with various carved figures; As these heads are considered as charms to ward off evils, and procure blessings, they will not part with them. It would seem that the character of this people is made up of extremes. As seen at their houses, they are mild, gentle and given to hospitality. But when they exchange their domestic habits for those of the warrior, their greatest delight is to revel in human blood and their greatest honour to ornament their dwellings with human heads, the trophies of their inhuman barbarities. Many also, with exultations, carry about with them tokens of the number of persons they have killed.

The Dyaks are decidedly a more muscular and better built race than the Malays. Their hair, lank and black, is suffered to grow quite long, and to hang loose upon their shoulders, which gives them a wild appearance. The men go nearly naked covering only those parts, which nature dictates. For this purpose they use a narrow piece of cloth, or a strip of bark, bound closely around their loins. The dress of the females consists of a cloth also around their loins, extending to the knees. The breast and arms are entirely naked, except occasionally a loose cloth thrown over their shoulder. While the males wear but few ornaments, the females are usually loaded with trinkets of various kinds and their ears perforated with a bamboo from one half to an inch in diameter.

The villages of the Dyaks are scattered, and comprise from 10 to 60 and 70 families each. Their houses are elevated upon posts six or eight feet high, and are built so as to constitute one or more continuous ranges, being divided into apartments according to the number of the family. In front of the series is a verandah extending the whole length, and about ten feet wide. This is enclosed in front, but has several doors opening upon a rudely constructed platform. The floors are slats, or small poles lashed to cross pieces underneath. The roof is atap, and the sides usually kajang, but sometimes the bark of trees.

The instruments in use among them, are the lumping, or large war-knife; the Pempadang or spear—the jedang answering the purpose of a large pocket knife; and the Parang—a knife larger and heavier than the war knife. This last is the only instrument employed in their agricultural labours. It serves as an axe for clearing off the forest, and is the substitute for the hoe and harrow, in as much as it is their sole resort for digging, planting, weeding &c.

Excepting the annoyance of smoke, noise, and filth, a person may make himself quite comfortable among the Dyaks. His lodging place will always be the great verandah in which are fireplaces for the accommodation of the whole village; while the construction of the houses is such, that their domestic animals, consisting of fowls, dogs, and swine have the benefit of the same roof. The whole space under their range of buildings is a vast pig-sty, and it can easily be imagined that the dormitory above is not the more desirable on this account. No one however, need lie down in dread of danger, tho' his lodging place be always immediately beneath a number of heads, provided it would seem for his protection, but calculated to awaken feelings far different from those of safety and security.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 6th July, 1839.

In another part of our paper is to be found a translation of the "Bond" under which it is said the American ships now at Whampoa have been secured. There seems to have been a good deal of negotiation as to the words of this document, but, although now vaguely expressed, the meaning we presume is intended by the Chinese to be precisely the same as that originally proposed by the Commissioner in his celebrated Edict of March, and that merely a great deal of gilding has been wrapped round the bitter pill, which the foreigners who are content to trade on such terms have been compelled to swallow on this occasion. After the repeated refusal on the part of Capt. Elliot and the foreign Consuls in Canton, a refusal sanctioned by the united voices of all the foreign merchants to sign any bond involving the punishment of DEATH for the infraction of Custom house laws, the commissioner issued his remarkable Edict of the 8th May, (published in the 'Canton Press' of the 18th May) distinctly proclaiming that "so often as Opium is brought, in all cases, in accordance with the new law, the parties shall be capitally executed and the property entirely confiscated."—Still, notwithstanding this strong declaration of the intentions of the Chinese authorities, continued efforts appear to have been made by the commissioner and the local Government to prevail on the foreigners to commit themselves to some expression of acquiescence in the "new regulations," and this perseverance, we grieve to say, has been rewarded at last with success: A BOND has been signed, which, although it does not itself expressly state that the dealing in Opium is recognized as a Capital crime, yet admits that the new regulations have been clearly explained and that the parties to it "dare not disobey."—Those regulations are contained in the edict just referred to, and the "Bond" we dread to think, may at any time be adduced by the Chinese authorities as evidence of the readiness of foreigners to sanction the execution of their own countrymen, of laws of such atrocious severity, that with two solitary exceptions the Government has not dared to carry them into effect on the natives of the land.

We do not ask the Captains and Supercargoes of the American Ships, who are here to day and gone to morrow, by whose authority they signed this bond, but we call on the resident American merchants to state whether their tacit acquiescence in the signing of this paper by the Captains of ships whose business they are transacting in Canton, has been with the sanction of their own Consul?—We pause for a reply.—It was to be expected from the American ships proceeding to Whampoa before anything was positively settled that they were predetermined on signing any bonds that might be required, rather than forego their trade even for a time, but we were reluctant to believe the matter certain until, as the Chinese say, "it was on record."—Let it not be said in excuse for this fatal agreement that foreigners who come to China are bound to obey the same laws as the natives of the country, a principle the abstract justice of which no one will deny. But let it be borne in mind, that foreigners cannot, until our relations with this country are greatly modified, be considered as possessed of any legal rights! We reside here by sufferance, imperfectly acquainted with the language and with the laws, and without access to the tribunals where they are administered, and above all, we are unacquainted with the intricacies of a system which called from the pen of one of the censors at Peking the remarkable confession that "the laws and enactments are the means which extortionate underlings employ to benefit themselves, and the more complex the laws, the more numerous are the bribes exacted."

The following translation has been kindly furnished us by a friend, and we give it insertion as shewing the nature of the "Chops" such as are required on foreigners leaving Canton for Macao by the inside Passage. The enumeration of articles on which, by law, a small duty is payable, will be found to comprise only such as are of Chinese manufacture or origin. On European articles such as are comprised in the second list, no duties are payable by law, but we much fear that the linguists, taking advantage partly of the ignorance of foreigners on this subject, and partly of their eagerness to quit the provincial city, have levied duties upon every thing, though legally free. This has been the case with many, and ourself among the number, to whom a Chop-boat was promised only under condition of our agreeing to pay the duty as demanded by the linguists.

"Translation of papers from the hong merchants and the hoppo, on the occasion of foreigners leaving Canton for Macao. They are the same as are always issued on these occasions.

No. 1. Petition from the Hong Merchants to the Hoppo, applying for the pass for Macao.

The Hong Merchants, Woo-Shaw-Yung, Loo-Ke-Kwang, Pwan-Show-Kwang, and Pwan-Nae-Show, respectfully petition:

"Whereas it is our duty to petition for the favor of obtaining passes for Macao, as usual in such cases, it now appears that the Barbarian merchant A. having clearly set forth that on a former year he came to this port to trade, now wishes to go and reside at Macao, and not daring to resort to illegal or irregular proceedings, has begged us to entreat the favor of an official passport being granted duly made out, which he can submit for inspection at the various custom-house stations on the route;—such being the barbarian's views, we beg the official permission may be granted him to proceed."

"Memorandum. The barbarian merchant A. for the protection of his body carries with him one gun and one sword, together with baggage and cooking utensils.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 4th moon, 13th day."

L. S. Signed: Howqua, Mowqua, Pwankequa, Pwanhoyqua.

No. 2. The Hoppo's reply.

"It is granted that he goes to Macao, and as customary this must be exhibited at the various custom-houses on the route, and surrendered to the custom house at Macao on arrival there."

L. S. of the Hoppo, to be countersigned on passing the West-fort.

" " Chi-nae.

No 3. Pass to be countersigned on the route.

"Yu, by the imperial will, acting collector of customs for the ports of Canton, raised two degrees.

"Whereas it has been established that the safety and regularity in granting passes, proof of the business be obtained, it is evidently consistent that barbarians of all nations, in passing to and from the Capital and Macao, should be furnished with passports to be shewn at the various custom-houses on the route, the time of arriving at which should be noted, and they allowed to proceed; by this no difficulty or delay will occur; neither will foreigners be allowed to loiter or wander about, which delays would give rise to disturbances. When this pass reaches Macao it must be delivered to the custom-house there, to be returned to this office to be cancelled. It is highly necessary that those through whose hands this passes attend to these injunctions.

Memor.: One boat containing:

One barbarian, A.

who in the fourth moon 16th day leaves the Capital.

L. S. On the 16th day at noon arrived at, and left the Revenue Office.

L. S. On the 16th day in the evening arrived at and left the West Fort.

L. S. On the 17th day at daylight arrived at and left Chi-nae.

L. S. On the 17th day at midnight arrived at Hangchau; 18th day at daylight left Hangchau.

L. S. On the 18th day in the evening arrived at Macao.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 4th moon, 16th day, (date of taking out the pass written on it at Canton.)

No. 4. An official pass, registered number 2.

Yu, by imperial appointment acting Collector of Customs for the Ports of Canton, raised two degrees.

Whereas by the will of the Emperor he controls in matters connected with his office the business of the outer Ocean, now grants the merchant A. by means of the boat belonging to Yip Paou-Chang, liberty to proceed with Pine Tea &c. from this port to Macao for sale, the duties having been paid, besides granting this pass, herein also registers the articles on which they have been paid; viz:

63 caties fine Tea in 3 boxes.
612 " sundry woodware, in 8 boxes.
4 large silver spoons.
8 small do.
30 pairs of shoes in one box.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 4th moon, 16th day; issued to be returned.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO HER MAJESTY'S SUBJECTS.

The officer deputed by the Commissioner, and the Keun Min Foo, having caused certain notices to be publicly placarded at Macao, inciting British merchants, Commanders, and Seamen to disregard the lawful injunctions of the Undersigned, he has this day transmitted to those Authorities the accompanying declaration. A copy of the same will be submitted to the Commissioner

Chief Superintendent.

Macao, 21st June, 1839.

Macao 21st June, 1839.

Elliot, &c. &c., learns that Official Notices have been publicly placarded and sent to the ships of his nation, inciting the English merchants, commanders and seamen to disregard his lawful injunctions, issued in the Name of his most gracious sovereign. But wherefore are these notices silent upon the causes which have produced the confusion of trade and intercourse at Canton? The high Commissioner has published his own communications to Elliot, but where are the replies?

These proceedings are highly inconsistent with the principles of peace and dignity: and Elliot must now declare the motives which have compelled him to require the merchants of his nation to leave Canton, and the ships no longer to return within the Bocca Tigris.

On the 24th March last, Elliot repaired to Canton and immediately proposed to put an end to the state of difficulty and anxiety, then existent, by the faithful fulfilment of the emperor's will: and he respectfully asked that he and the rest of the foreign Communite might be set at liberty, in order that he might calmly consider and suggest adequate remedies for the great evils so justly denounced by his Imperial Majesty.

He was answered by a close imprisonment of more than seven weeks, with armed men day and night before his gates, under threats of privation of food, water, and life. Was this becoming treatment to the Officer of a friendly nation, recognised by the emperor, and who had always performed his duty peacefully and irreproachably, striving in all things to afford satisfaction to the Provincial Government?

When it thus became plain that the Commissioner was resolved to cast away all moderation, Elliot knew that it was incumbent upon him to save the Imperial Dignity, and prevent some shocking catastrophe on the persons of an imprisoned foreign Officer, and two hundred defenceless merchants.

For these reasons of prevailing force he demanded from the people of his nation all the English Opium in their hands, in the Name of His Sovereign, and delivered it over to the Commissioner, amounting to 20,283 chests. That matter remains to be settled between the two Courts.

But how will it be possible to answer the emperor for this violation of his gracious will, that these difficult affairs should be managed with thoughtful wisdom, and with tenderness to the men from afar? What will be the feelings of the most just Prince of his illustrious dynasty, when it is made manifest to him by the command of Her Britannic Majesty, that the traffic in Opium has been chiefly encouraged and protected by the highest officers in the empire, and that no portion of the foreign trade to China has paid its fees to the officers with so much regularity as this of Opium!

Terrible indeed will be his Imperial Majesty's indignation when he learns that the obligations into which the high Commissioner entered, under his seal, to the officers of a foreign nation were all violated!

The servants were not faithfully restored when one fourth of the Opium was delivered; be boats were not permitted to run when one half was delivered; the trade was not really opened when three fourths were delivered, and the last pledge that things should go on as usual when the whole was delivered has been falsified by the reduction of the factories to a prison with one outlet, the expulsion of sixteen persons, some of them who never dealt in Opium at all, some clerks, one a lad, and the proposal of novel and intolerable regulations.

Can a great moral and political reformation be effected at the sacrifice of all the principles of truth, moderation, and justice? Or is it believed that these apostatory proceedings will extinguish the traffic in Opium? Such hopes are futile, and the emperor has been deceived.

But it is asked, on the other hand, whether the wise and just purposes of the emperor cannot and should not be fulfilled? Most assuredly they can, and they ought.

It is certain, however, that the late measures of the Commissioner have retarded this accomplishment of the Imperial pleasure, given an immense impulse to the traffic in Opium, which was stagnant for several months before he arrived, and shaken the prosperity of these flourishing provinces.

It is probable that they will disturb the whole coasts of the empire, ruin thousands of families, foreign and native, and interrupt the peace between the Celestial Court and England, which has endured for nearly two hundred years.

The merchants and ships of the English nation do not proceed to Canton and Whampoa, because the gracious commands of the emperor for their protection are set at nought; because the truth is concealed from his Imperial Majesty's knowledge: because there is no safety for a handful of defenceless men in the grasp of the government at Canton; because it would be derogatory from the dignity of their sovereign and nation to forget all the insults and wrongs which have been perpetrated, till full justice be done, and till the whole trade and intercourse be placed upon a footing honorable and secure to this empire, and to England. That time is at hand: The gracious sovereign of the English nation will cause the truth to be made known to the wise and august Prince on the throne of this empire, and all things will be adjusted agreeably to the principles of purest reason.

Elliot and the men of his nation in China submit the expressions of their deepest veneration for the Great Emperor.

Chief Superintendent.

Opium bond—Oral communication from the governor to the hongmerchants.

Respecting the announcement of the American ships Nantasket, Remmonds, and Paris, King, entering the port.

Since orders have now been issued, it is absolutely necessary that the new regulations be submitted to accordingly, and the management of affairs be in agreement with facts—there must not be an error of a hair's breadth.

With reference to what the original hongmerchants formerly reported to the Kwang chow foo for examination, respecting the voluntary opium bond, it is very far from being safely settled. The said original merchants should meet and consult with the security merchants, and arrange all matters connected with the bond, and then make a report on the subject; the ships, will be then permitted to open their holds and receive cargo.

Those ships which carry on an honest and fair trade, and really do not indulge in the disgraceful practice of smuggling opium, I, the governor, must most assuredly confer upon them sincere and substantial compassion, and most decidedly they shall not be annoyed by extortion and petty vexations; but those ships that attempt to smuggle opium, as assuredly shall they be immediately subjected to a strict investigation, and as decidedly their false dealing shall not be in the least degree indulged or excused. Thus the goodness of the good and the vices of the bad in each case is of, or proceeds from, themselves; I, the governor, decidedly will not involve the good in the consequences of the deeds of the bad, and as decidedly I will not, for the sake of the good, show any favour to the bad.—Let the good, then, carry on their trade without fear and with confidence; there is no cause or need of fear or suspicion; and the bad have only to make a speedy reformation of their errors, for certainly their disorderly imaginations will not be borne with. Acquaint the foreign merchants of every nation with the purport of these orders; let them investigate and manage with sincerity, and thus prove themselves to be honorable merchants; those who will still pursue a devious course will thus prove themselves to be dishonorable merchants: thus honor or disgrace is within their own free choice—there is nothing more to be said.

These orders were received orally from the governor on the 3d day of the 5th moon (13th June).

N. B. These orders were delivered, with a letter from the hong merchants, yesterday evening to the American merchants Messrs Wetmore and Co. and Messrs. Russell and Co.

Canton Register, 14th June.

FORM OF BOND.

"A duly prepared bona"

The foreign Captain , belonging to the nation, has now received the commands of the Heavenly Dynasty rigidly prohibiting Opium, and he has had it clearly proclaimed to him that certain new regulations have been established to that effect, and the said foreigner, holding the same in great dread, will not dare to oppose or violate.

Now the said ship just arrived, brings no Opium, and I now give this as a true certificate of the same."

Signed by the Captain only.

MEETING OF BRITISH MERCHANTS.

Macao, 12th June, 1839.

Minutes of a General Meeting held this day at the Office of Messrs Dent & Co. On the motion of Mr. A. Jardine, seconded by Mr. W. Dent, Mr. G. T. Braine was called to the Chair.

Proposed by Mr. W. Dent, seconded by Mr. Constable and

1. Resolved, That this Meeting sees with regret that there are parties preparing to send British ships and property to Canton, in opposition to the strict injunctions of H. M. Chief Superintendent.

That with the view of ascertaining the position of British ships and property, a requisition be made to H. M. Chief Superintendent to state (firstly) whether the several public notices issued by him are to be considered as placing a positive embargo on British ships and property by the Government of Great Britain; and (secondly) whether he considers the present tone of his negociations with the Chinese Government such as to warrant a belief that, at no very distant date, we may expect such an arrangement of existing differences, as to admit of British property being sent within the Bocca Tigris.

Proposed by Mr. Leslie, seconded by Hoorjeebhoy Rustomjee and

2. Resolved, That a Committee be formed, to communicate with Capt. Elliot, such Committee to consist of Mess. G. T. Braine Chair.

Proposed by Mr. Fox, seconded by Mr. Maclean and

3. Resolved, That this Meeting be adjourned, pending the receipt of Capt. Elliots, reply.

Thanks were voted to the Chairman and the Meeting adjourned.

GEORGE T. BRAINE.
Chairman.

The above resolutions were communicated to Capt. Elliot, who returned the following answer:

Macao, 14th June, 1839.

Sir,

"I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of yesterday's date.

"The meeting will permit me respectfully to remark that I understand an Embargo to be an act of the Government of a Country, prohibiting the departure of the ships and goods of another.

Founding my reply to the first question proposed to me on that impression, it will be obvious that the several public notices issued by me cannot place an Embargo on British ships and goods.

Their purpose and effect remain to be noticed.

A crisis of a nature unparalelled in point of importance has recently supervened, in which I have found it my duty, for the general safety of the public interests under my Superintendence to issue certain prohibitory injunctions to Her Majesty's subjects, and careful reflections upon the act of Parliament, the orders in Council, and all previous analogous practice pending our intercourse with China, has carried me to the conclusion that I have not transcended my lawful powers in the notices in question.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the ordering of British ships or goods within the Bocca Tigris, under present circumstances, may, and most probably will, involve persons upon whom such a responsibility can be fixed, in consequences of the most serious description.

The stringency, however, of these instruments, the construction of their language, and the liabilities of every kind to be incurred by a departure from their terms, must be left to the attentive consideration of parties (if such there be) proposing to postpone public authority, and general considerations, to their own views, and particular interests.

At all events it is my duty again to warn H. M's subjects in the most emphatic manner, that the entrance of British ships and goods within the Bocca Tigris in the present state of affairs appears to me to be perilous in the highest degree.

Beyond this consideration of danger, too, such a measure would be intensely humiliating and mischievous, because it establishes the principle that British subjects entertain a confidence in the justice and moderation of this Government, notwithstanding all that has passed; consenting for themselves and their countrymen to trial and condemnation by Chinese officers, and forms of Chinese Judicature for Capital, and, a fortiori, all lesser offences.

I trust I shall never be placed in the painful situation of addressing a special injunction to any subjects of Her Majesty, requiring them to desist from a course so unworthy of their Country, and so dangerous to innocent men, whose lives may fall a sacrifice to their reckless cupidity, before the certain and powerful intervention of the Queen can reach these shores, and disabuse the Chinese Government of the imagination that such will ever be tolerated.

I am conveying the plain sense of the Instructions under the Sign Manual when I declare that it is impossible of admission, at least till our relations with the Empire are more extensively modified. After this exposition it is to be concluded that we shall hear no more of the entrance of British ships within the Bocca Tigris under actual circumstances.

In reply to the second question submitted to me, I beg to say that I see no present reason to believe that H. M's subjects may expect such an arrangement of existing differences as to admit of British Ships and goods being sent within the Bocca Tigris under the sanction of my authority before the pleasure of Her Majesty's Government be known to me.

I have the honor to remain
your most obedient humble servant
CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

G. T. BRAINE Esq.

Macao, 17th June, 1839.

Minutes of an adjourned General Meeting held this day at Messrs Dent & Co's Office, G. T. Braine Esq., in the chair.

1. Proposed by Mr. W. Dent, seconded by Mr. Maclean and

Resolved. That it is the opinion of this Meeting that the Public Notices of H. M. Chief Superintendent, coupled with the explanations contained in his letter of 14th instant, are to be considered as conveying a positive order from him, as the Organ of his Government, prohibitory of British ships and property being sent within the Bocca Tigris in the existing state of our relations with the Chinese Government.

2. Proposed by Mr. C. Kerr, seconded by Mr. G. Smith and

Resolved. That it now becomes necessary for British Subjects to make some proper arrangements for the present disposal of ships and property in the outer anchorages; and that the Committee be authorized to communicate with the Chief Superintendent, with the view of determining what course is most proper to be pursued.

3. Proposed by Mr. W. Dent, seconded by Mr. J. H. Holliday and

Resolved. That Mr A. C. Maclean, Thomas Fox, Gilbert Smith be added to the Committee.

4. Proposed by Mr. W. Leslie, seconded by Mr. G. Smith and

Resolved, That with implicit reliance on the chief superintendent and the most entire dependence on the justice, wisdom, and power of the Government of England to redress the wrongs of British Merchants, this Meeting is of opinion that the interests of all connected with the China Trade will be best promoted by a cordial unanimity, and a strict adherence to the orders of the chief superintendent.

5. Proposed by Mr. Maclean, seconded by Mr. Kerr and

Resolved, That the proceedings of this Meeting be submitted to the chief superintendent at an early date; and that they be printed in the Canton News papers.

Thanks were voted to the Chairman, and the Meeting adjourned.

GEORGE T. BRAINE.
Chairman.

We have to apologise to our Subscribers for not having issued a Canton Press for the last four weeks, but the late occurrences in Canton, rendering the intercourse with the east so much more precarious, the few residents remaining at Canton, and particularly the gentlemen to whom we are generally indebted for translations of Chinese documents having also left that City, rendered it necessary for us to effect arrangements in Macao for the issuing of our paper here. We are happy to say that our views have been met with the greatest liberality by the authorities of this City, and we trust that enabled henceforward to publish our paper in the same manner as if we were in Canton, premising at same time that it being published in a foreign tongue and more generally addressed to the foreign mercantile community, we shall abstain from topics which are exclusively local and which are generally done justice to by the two papers in the Portuguese language already established here.

By the Cornwallis from Bombay and Singapore news from England to the 25th March have been received. From the extracts we make from the Singapore Extra of 14th June it will be seen that the Cornlaws had begun to occupy the attention of the Legislature. The news from Spain continue as unsatisfactory as heretofore, but the boundary question between New Brunswick and the State of Maine had assumed a very threatening aspect. It is to be hoped, that notwithstanding the apparently highly excited feelings of the parties immediately interested in the question, means will be found amicably to settle this dispute—we sincerely hope that two great nations will not allow themselves, for such a cause, to be drawn into a war, for assuredly "le jeu ne vaut pas la chandelle." From India the accounts are truly alarming—our limits do not allow us to give the extracts, but it appears that the English, in consequence of bad treatment received from the Persians have left Bushire, and that on their departure some blood was shed in repelling the Persians that had come to prevent the embarkation. News are at same time said to have been received of the Shah having marched upon Herat with an army of 40,000 men to oppose the English; there is therefore every appearance of a serious war in that region, whilst the more easterly neighbours of the Company seem to be by no means well affected towards that Government.

We intended to have this week laid before our readers our opinion on the late events here, and on the line of conduct adopted by H. M. Chief Superintendent, but want of space obliges us to defer this to our next number. We refer our readers therefore particularly to the proceedings of a meeting of British merchants they will find in a preceding column. A long document containing the new Chinese regulations for the foreign shipping was nearly in time for publication, but we are obliged to postpone its insertion likewise. The trade being for the present interrupted, and but partially carried on at Canton, we have considered it advisable not to publish any Prices Current, but shall continue to give such commercial information as we can obtain. In referring to our remarks in a preceding columns, on the bond signed, we may observe that we have been informed that Howqua was the first to secure one of the ships, he was of course followed by others, and we were told that the American ships now at Whampoa were to begin discharging on the 3d inst. We believe that business to some extent has been done here in the disposal of goods for shipment to Whampoa, and that prices of most imports are now declining in Canton. Several American vessels, besides those now at Whampoa, are preparing to enter the Bogue, and are expected to return to the outside anchorages with Cargoes partially for the British market.

All British Subjects, with one exception, have left Canton, and 82 American residents are at this moment the only tenants of the Factories. Before our leaving Canton (on the 24th ultimo,) the Chinese had begun by order of the authorities to take down all the terraces from the houses, and we are told also such as were formed by the flat roofs of the houses. Besides this, for which it would be difficult, we suppose, to assign a good reason, except the wish to give annoyance, Mandarins, without being previously announced walked freely into the inhabited houses, without apology for their intrusion, and without having apparently any object in their visit. Our poor house was on different occasions invaded in this manner, and no excuse was offered, nor any business pretended. We have on a former occasion stated that the square in front of the Factories had been enclosed. On the 24th ultimo workmen appeared there to block up the only two outlets to the river that then remained, when the inhabitants of several streets immediately adjoining collected in great numbers, and drove the workmen away, as the blocking up of these passages would cut them off from the water of the river. After the workmen were driven off, three people at intervals patroled the square to watch against their not returning, and on the following day the Nam-hoy-yune and Pun-yune held a sort of Court in the Company's garden to enquire into this affair, but we are not aware of the result of this enquiry. The evening before, the incensed populace, ascribing the blocking up of the passages to Howqua, sallied forth in great numbers to seek for him, to have an interview, but the Hong merchant very very wisely kept out of their way.

Some days since the steward of a British ship (himself a Chinese) when ashore at Whampoa was told hold of by some low mandarins, no doubt with the view of extorting money. To get the man back the Captain of the Ship took three Chinese from on board a Warjunk and kept them as hostages, as it were. On learning this, Capt. Elliot went immediately to Hongkong, and the men were sent back to the shore, and we are happy to say that on the following day, the Ship's steward was also sent back to his ship.

Just before going to Press we hear that letters have been received from Canton stating that the ships at Whampoa have not yet been secured, owing to a refusal on the part of the Captains to sign the Chinese copies of the bond also. Many have been hitherto the conflicting accounts regarding the bonds, we give this therefore as we hear it, though it comes from good authority.

DIED.

AT MANILA on the 4th ultimo, of Fever, after a short illness, GEORGE, Son of JOHN WOOLLEY Esq. of London, much and deservedly esteemed, and lamented.

ROYAL EDICT AGAINST OPIUM

Whereas the Governor of the Sacred Treasury and Director in the place of Somuha Phra Kalahom, did receive the sacred royal words placing them on the tuft of the hair of his head. His Majesty did exercise divine compassion, condescending graciously to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, commanded saying —

From the time he ascended peacefully to eat the kingdom, he established his divine mind to protect the divine and holy religion of Sumba, and protect the land, overruling the sacred and kingly race, both great and small; and all the officers who speak at the dust of the soles of the divine feet, and the plebeians and merchants. His Majesty will have all seek their living without crime, and will have them universally obtain contentment of property, and live coolly, being happy henceforward agreeably with his divine mind, being determined to extend onward in his own person the rays of the Gods, be being endowed with very much divine exalted mercy and compassion towards mankind universally, giving himself to exercise the sacred and royal thoughts, perceived, that people smoke, and eat opium, which is a thorn in the bosom of the divine religion of Sumba, giving the lands to bring forth confusion and distress of various kinds; His Majesty perceived that opium is an evil thing and contraband in every respect, and from time immemorial till now. He therefore formerly condescended graciously to the tuft of hair of the head, with grace to the head, and pronounced a divine word—a commandment giving it to be distributed and published thread not allowing any person whatever to buy and sell opium, prepared or raw, be the same whose it might. It required every item of opium to be brought and delivered over into the sacred Treasury, on the left hand of the throne, until it might be conveyed away from time to time, and sold in foreign places. It forbade that opium should be kept in villages, houses, stacks, stalls, boats, floats, and clandestinely sold among the people. In case of disobedience it required, that if the transgressor was taken, his opium should be brought and judgment instituted, fining the owner ten times the value of the opium. The opium thus taken his Majesty graciously granted to have taken away and sold in some foreign place. The price obtained for it, whatever it might be, be granted to be deducted, from the amount of the fine inflicted upon the owner of the opium. He gave the royal servants to form themselves into companies for the clearing away of the opium, concerns, and to inflict punishment by fines agreeably with his divine mind, to punish covetous persons, who secrete opium buying and selling it. He would have them to sacrifice their property by the amount of the fines inflicted upon the owner of the opium, that it might operate as a restraint. Accordingly men who regarded the welfare of the land, who were grateful for the divine favours of the King, the God Boodh who dwells at the head, brought opium and delivered it over following the law, the divine royal commandment; There were those who were wicked, reprobate persons, greedy, in the business of buying and selling opium. These continued clandestinely to buy and sell opium until certain persons caught them, and inflicted fines upon them; of such there were very many in many places. Thus his Majesty has given to establish companies for catching and inflicting fines very many, for a period of 10 years or more, but still smuggling, receiving opium, and bringing it in and selling it, has increased greatly beyond what it was formerly. Persons who smoke and eat opium have become very abundant and increasing. There is no restraint to forsaking it. Therefore the King, the God Boodh living at the head, does with solicitude exercise his divine mind to silence, and cut off opium, that it shall not be allowed to exist in the land. Again—this opium has no seed no fruit no stalk or root within the bounds of this kingdom. This opium all comes from foreign countries. If there were no persons to receive and buy it, and seek to have it come hither, opium would cease to exist here, and those who have become accustomed to smoke and eat it, would have none to purchase, and they would of necessity diminish the quantity they consume, smoking less and less, until some would obtain entirely and those who are not accustomed to smoke opium, would not henceforward become intimate with, and be led together by opium smoking and eating.

Again—Now at this present time there are traders and merchants, in the Angelic City of the Exalted Country, owners of Junks and smaller craft that go to trade in foreign countries and still purchase opium, and come and smuggle it in, buying and selling one with another. Again to instance; Traders in foreign places, understanding that merchants in the Angelic City of the great Exalted Country, do clandestinely purchase and sell opium, will consequently freight with opium and secretly trade in it at the extremities of the kingdom. There are others who receive it and bear it from one to another coming into the country; consequently opium remains in the land as much as before without any cessation. This business of smuggling and clandestinely buying and selling opium, is for money altogether. The silver and gold of the land consequently goes out to foreign countries in great quantities. Is is therefore indispensable to prohibit this and cause it to cease, by taking as prisoners those concerned, causing it to operate as a restraint without fail. For these reasons there is issued a divine royal decree, speaking and commanding the Governor of the sacred Treasury, Dictator in the place of the Para Kalahom, giving him to investigate, search out, meet and catch the traders and owners of opium, and those also who receive it, buying and selling on commission, making sure their persons.

When in the fourth month of the year of the dog the last year of the Cycle of Ten; His Honor the governor of the sacred Treasury, Dictator in the place of the Somuha Kalahom, went out to conduct the fleet to sea, he would have acquainted with a matter saying, that certain Chinese fellows with two or three boats, had entered and made fast their boats and were selling opium at the place Sam-Muk. He carried the matter up, prostrating himself, and addressed the divine royal compassion, informed him at the dust of the soles of the divine feet.

His Majesty graciously condescended to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, granting the Governor of the martial power Koee—the Governor commissary Suk-ds, to muster soldiers armed with guns in the province of Somut Parphan, gave them to go down in war boats, and go forth following up, until they captured a Chinese oar-boat, and obtained twenty three chests of opium.

The Chinese fellows of the boats testified saying that he put into Bon-lam and sold 8 chests of opium to a certain person of that village. His Majesty therefore graciously gave the sacred and exalted Angelic Phra Maha Phop, to go out and clear away the officers; they took the Chinese fellows who received the opium purchasing it. By investigation they were found to be stationed in many places all joined together. His Majesty therefore gave the royal officers to divide themselves asunder and go to clear away the companies of opium traders in the order of all the land countries. on the sea coast. and in the Angelic City of the sacred exalted country and all the land countries at the South and North. Both Siamese and Chinese merchants, and dealers very many, do still bring opium and smuggle it in, lay it up, and clandestinely buy and sell it together. Formerly his Majesty graciously gave the royal servants to establish companies for the clearing away of the matter, to search out and capture the transgressor with the opium, and bring them to desolate and inflict fines upon them. But these officers were only of the lower orders of the royal servants. They did not make a finish of the work of clearing away and prohibiting and, still subject the opium. But his Majesty the divine Boodh dwelling at the head will himself to cleanse away the opium. His compassion, condescending graciously to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, speaks commanding saying; that he now appointed only the sacred most excellent princes, and the ten noble ministers of state, among whom is that royal beloved Somarat, which honor is a free gift, and the Governor Bodin Decha, who bears also the office of Somuha Nayok. The governor of the sacred Treasury, Dictator in the place of the Somuha Phra Kalahom, and the supreme judges, and all the officers who speak at the dust of the soles of the divine feet. these all being duly sensible of the divine power and divine favor, are united harmoniously to aid in protecting the land.

They will aid each other in protecting the land? They will aid each other in searching out and cleansing away the opium business and taking the owners of the opium, and the opium, making a complete finish of it without fail. If in clearing away the oaths they take the persons of those who keep opium, those persons shall be accounted capital criminals and shall be fined and severely punished, giving it to operate as an effectual restraint upon them. and that all other persons may fear and revere the divine royal absolute power and authority that henceforward they may not presume to buy and sell opium any more. Opium being all gone, the thorn in the bosom of the land will have been removed entirely, at least in one particular. Neverthe'ess his Majesty does exercise a tender affectionate regard toward the farmers of the revenue—the masters of the royal business, merchants and traders generally who have taken shelter in the divine beneficence, and have found protection in the land, trading for a livelihood, and have obtained happiness coming to this time, perhaps if they have already got opium in their possession. they will fear to bring it and confess, and from fear of being found guilty, and from fear of suffering shame and disgrace will resolve to conceal it, storing it away with a heart to contemn the law. Such persons cannot escape justice, they must and shall be secured out and brought to justice to suffer the divine royal absolute power, and be rewarded with the wasting of their property, the ruin of their persons and the extinction of their name, with any equivalent.

His Majesty the King, the divine Boodh dwelling at the head, exercising sacred exalted mercy and compassion very much towards the plebeians and all the officers of the land, condescends graciously to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, he desires to give an opportunity of escape to those who have opium in their possession. Get them to bring their opium and confess their sin Their sin shall then be removed away together with the fine which the law inflicts. It is a royal free gift, the same as in the year of the Fowl, the ninth year of the Cycle of Ten (three years ago) when robbers waxing bold, stole elephants, horses, cattle and buffaloes, plundering, poisoning and breaking into houses. and taking away goods and chattels; such things were very prevalent. Had a Company been set apart to take these robbers, they would certainly have been taken, and they would have been obliged to suffer some, the loss of life. some whipping and imprisonment according to the law. His Majesty exercised himself and considered that all these robbers who were indeed worthy to suffer punishment, in this generation, and the generation to come, were the people and the officers of the land. His Majesty did therefore graciously condescend to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, giving a decree to write and publish and sound it abroad to the people saying; whosoever has acted the robber, has been wicked and vile in time past; let him come and confess his sin revealing the truth to the chief of the company of judges. The companies of robbers, all they know themselves, feared the divine royal absolute power, and came in great numbers, confessing their sins. His Majesty graciously gave to act the punishment aside as a free gift, and commanded that all the justices and judges should forgive such. and forbade that they should call them to account. Afterwards his Majesty granted a divine and royal gift, a divine and royal commandment, and instructions giving all to know themselves. that they might forsake the wicked works. which they formerly committed saying: If any one shall turn himself about, and following the ancient proverb saying, the beginning was crooked, the end shall be straight, that man shall certainly obtain happiness in this generation, and the one to come. agreeably with the divine mind endowed with sacred exalted mercy and compassion, which will assist the people giving them to obtain peace and happiness henceforward.

Now the same shall be fulfilled in case of those who have opium, because formerly they practised perversely and cruelly transgressed. If they shall know themselves to be sinful, and their transgression then let them bring their opium, however much or little, let them bring it and confess their sin before the faces of the Governor of custom, the supreme judge, whom his Majesty has graciously given to be the chief of the company set apart to receive the confessions of the guilty. Whosoever shall bring all his opium, and confess all his sins, in sincerity and truth, no matter if he shall have bought more or little, His Majesty will graciously condescend to the tuft of the hair of the head, with grace to the head, granting a divine pardon, a divine free gift pardoner his capital sins, and the fine consequent thereupon. These shall not exist in the case of the person who shall confess his sin.

The King the divine Boodh, who dwells at the head, begs to prohibit only one thing, viz. the buying and selling of opium. Let no one henceforward trade in it. As to Sapan Wood, Pepper, Rhinoceros and Elephants Teeth and Cardamoms, which things were formerly contraband articles of trade, His Majesty now graciously grants to be goods articles of trade in the land, giving to buy and sell of the same as may be desired. They are not at all prohibited, same one and each, either for or against. His Majesty graciously grants to the royal servants, both great and small, to trade with the same as they desire, and to have their fathers and children, relations, friends, and acquaintances, and servants of the people, to trade in the same. Also to opium it is not an article of trade. That it should be made such, buying and selling in case the fine shall be in some degree. His Majesty therefore exercises himself to prohibit it altogether. He therefore graciously condescending to the tuft of the hair of the head with grace to the head, gives the Good the Royal beloved Somarat, and the Governor Bodin Decha filling the station of Somuha Nayok, and the governor of the sacred Treasury, Dictator in the place of Somuha Phra Kalahom, and the supreme judge to be the generals of the band supported by all the royal officers both great and small, constituting a company to clear away the opium in the Angelic City of the great exalted Country. His Majesty graciously grants the Governor Phra Gutep ("ruler of Angelic forces") with the Governor Phra Maha Thep. ("The divine exalted angel") to go out and establish companies to investigate and clear away the opium concerns in the countries of Pet-Cha Buree, Samut the sea-town, Sabbina Buree, and Nakonsaha-see. He gives the exalted Governor Amat yah, Governor Wisut Kosa, Chu Mun Chai yo phon, and Chu Mun Indamonti to go forth and constitute a company for the clearing away of opium in Rumpheni. Chumporne province and Ns khun Ns Tok. His Majesty graciously grants a seal (a sealed communication) to go forth to Governor Yomarat (lord of Hall) and Governor Sra Pepat giving them to clear away the opium in the provinces of Song Kla, Thetong Phang Yuch, Talbion thong and Tahiote pa. His Majesty has already graciously given the Governor of Chol ya to go forth and purify the opium there. If the companies of opium passers in the Angelic city of the great exalted country, in their impudence, assume the Siamese and Chinese find owners of Opium, who are leagued with other proprietors in the provinces, then a sealed letter shall go forth, authorising the Royal Officers to take such persons, and bring them in to try and purify them in the Angelic city of the great exalted country. If the companies of opium purchasers in the land provinces shall or like making enquiries find owners of opium, who are in league with others, whether Siamese or Chinese of the Angelic city of the great country, then let the officers give information by letter sending in, and those who are then in league shall be conveyed out to be punished in their land provinces. His Majesty will have the royal sovereignty the companies of purifiers, purify and search out the opium, until they shall most readily bring to the companies of purifiers in the Angelic City of the exalted country, making a finish of purifying, finishing with the taking of all the opium in the country. If there be any persons who shall not bring in their opium in the Angelic City of the exalted country evading opium however much or little he then being all his opium and confess his sins. Whatever owner of opium will not bring his opium and confess his sin, but conceive the opium desiring to trade with it, secking his living in the business of buying and selling Opium, not fearing nor dreading the divine royal absolute power, he shall be without favour, & shall have the fruits of wickedness. Let him know destruction and annihilation. His Majesty graciously gives the divine royal thought giving to search out and release away, and take the persons of those who have opium and try them in righteousness strictly, he will then give to punish, bringing down upon them the divine royal power and authority with tremendous weight. If he be found guilty of death let his life be taken. Let no person henceforward take his example to buy and sell opium in the land. His Majesty appoints Phya Chodook the royal worship Governor of the port, and Phya Rong Rieng (governor of the Siamese part of the country) and Khun Ns phon Ns khun Rien (first secretary of the divine country) to receive this proclamation, write, apply the seal, and distribute to every magistrate of the Siamese & Chinese, giving them to publish likewise the voice to the people of all classes and merchants and traders, who are established in villages, wooden houses, brick houses, stacks, stalls, boats, and floats, giving all to understand without fail; Get the Main That, (name of a great of public servants) the Kalahom (another great and powerful officer) with writing issuing the royal servants, both great and less persons, on the side of the soldiers, on the side of government of houses, within the divine Royal palace of His Majesty the King, within the sacred royal palace of the late most excellent 2d King, the servants of the Lords and of those that are not lords, the lords without and the lords within, every class and every lord, masters shall charge and inform their servants and people in succession giving them all to understand together, let there be not exception. In obedience to the command-ments of H. M. the King. Persia.

We have just received the following from the Gulf. Assuming the statements to be correct, and we have every reason to believe them so, we are hearing the cause of Britain and disapprove of the proceedings of our countrymen: The only question, is whether endeavors have not been carried too far.

The Commodore arrived at Bushire from Karrack, in week on the Admiral, on Saturday 23 March. On the same day he went with the Admiral to return the Governor's visit; (that morning the supplies for the Admiral and Wellesley had been stopped) they were received with all honors according to Persian Custom, and all went on well until the Admiral addressed the Governor as follows. "This morning my own supplies and provisions for the ships were stopped at the watercourse. If there has been any want of compliance in the case, with the Rules of the Port, I request, and will hold me excused, if I do not enter upon it, but, if it is from any other cause, I can only say I have been master of nations, Europeans and Turks, and never was so treated. Indeed, it is contrary to the usage of all civilized and friendly nations to prevent supplies going off." To this the Governor replied it was customary to send a list, which had not been done on this occasion:—The Admiral appealed to the Governor as master of such like vessels as many, and he did not think it was not, such a list as that of the supplies, and ships stopped, to enable him to enter upon the subject. The Governor then ordered the supplies to be sent off, and the Admiral and Governor parted. The Admiral had with a pleasant and free air told the Governor it was his intention to go off in the morning from the Residency, where he landed; and the land rose or strong breeze. The Governor then intimated that the Admiral must go off from the town, and his troops be landed into. The Admiral objected to this, and stated that as it had ever been customary for troops and governors to go off from the Residency, and he had never landed any of his troops, he should go off from the Residency, and he was not to say whether he should send any of the Governor's baggage. To this the Governor declined giving a reply. The admiral then said, as he was the Governor was about they had attempted to stop going off to the Residency, he should consider it as an insult to him and the Flag, he moved under, and as he had the means of seeing that from hence, he could take care to do so; he then again demanded of the Governor whether he would permit his going off to the Residency, the Governor declined giving a reply. The Admiral then got up to depart, declining to take the Governor's hand under the circumstances; the Governor spoke and the Admiral to sit down and said all should be right; but on the question being twice rep eated, he still declined giving an answer, and the Admiral and his party returned to the Residency. About ten minutes after their return eight or ten Governors came and took up a position in a corner near the Residency, and remained there for about an hour and a half. The Commodore now thinking all this man's orders were sent to other boats of the big ship to land. A boat from the Cove, with two officers came in just after and were allowed to land without question by and baggage. During the night a heavy squall was thrown up and broke in the right of the to stay place. About 1 past 2 next morning, the Wellesley's gig, with Captain Stanhope and the Flag Lieutenant came to the Residency, and the Flag Lieutenant being about to make off the gig of the Wellesley was a hook, but the crew called out, and the man made to stand up so as to show they were charged at reaching the shore. The Admiral, Commodore, some of the Wellesley's Officers and Crew's were on the cliff over the landing place; directly the boat came close a forward officer began to leap off, and Captain Stanhope and Lieutenant Hamilton, and Mr. Thomas, Midshipman, leaped and attempted to land, when the Admiral called out to the officer in charge of the boat, to keep off, and Commodore Lambton, Captain Stanhope, Lieutenant Hamilton, and some officers, disengaged, on this the mob rushed on us with sticks and stones, and one or two muskets, that were fired from the Residency, some stones struck the officers, a heavy fire of musketry was opened from the house and woods, and we quickly retired to the boats, and the Admiral ordered them to pull off to the ship. The Admiral ordered the Wellesley's boats to land and then to cease fire. To the great disappointment of all, a message was sent to the Governor to say if they did not cease firing he must take the consequences, this he did although a strong fire every now and then was kept up on us on the cliff. The Admiral shortly after embarked with Lady Maitland and Miss Hamilton, and some officers and landing having taken place, they were soon in morning the boats were off the Residency, 16 in number, and mounting 12 guns 18 and 12 pdrs, the four small boats landed while the gun boat drew up abreast the the landing place, guns pointed so as to clear the landing place and approaches: In the boat we had about 1250 men and Officers, Europeans; on shore at the Residency, 90 Europeans and Natives; on the top of the Residency was a four pounder which with the musketry, commanded the Town. Notwithstanding all this, the Resident leaving all the horses and I do not know what else behind, and there, they still are, as the Persians say, proofs of having kicked the English out off Bushire. After this flight they went to Karrack, nothing deterred, but a letter from the Prince of Shiraz to the Resident, in which he says, you brought your armed boats, you fortified the Residency contrary to rule and usage, and hope you will be able to give a satisfactory explanation. He gets an account after and writes to say he hopes the good feeling between the great states will not be interrupted, and that he had appointed Mahomed Hussein Khan to go to Bushire and arrange matters, and see him and the Admiral. On this the Resident applied to the Admiral to take him to Bushire to give this man a meeting. Colonel Sherriff and every one said they hoped he would not go as it would be the means of further insult. He however thought differently and went. The meeting took place, the Khan was any thing but friendly; talked in high terms, wishing to know if it was peace or war. The Khan was all but rude, and all that took place was, if the Resident would go back to Bushire things should remain as before, and when he was there, he might Petition (that was the word) the Prince who, if it pleased him, would enquire into his complaints. As to removing the Governor that was not to be spoken of, indeed, it appeared to most present he came to justify the Governor and to hear what the Admiral and the Resident had to say in their defence. Capt Hennell went back to Karrack and the Admiral and Commodore went to Bahrein, and thus all stands fast.

Now for the report sent to the King, the substance is that the English came with 10 ships, 5,000 men, and lots of guns and attacked Bushire, but, Meerza Assad, the Governor, having called in the brave Tangastoonies, the English were driven away, and left their horses &c. &c. behind.

The removal of the Residency from Bushire will be felt much by the Merchants and people, as it was their safety from attack by the Arabs, and Government will feel it by having to expend its revenues on troops for its protection; so much for politics.

N. B. Essabin Tuff, called in the Government Gazetta "Chief of Abothubbee" is no more so than you are The Abothubbee people have declared they have nothing to do with him, in truth, he is a Rebel Chief of Bahrein, and, bona fide, a Pirate.—Bombay Times, 11th May.

Assam Tea Company.

We adverted on this day fortnight to the steps taken by several of the leading mercantile firms in the City, connected with the East India and China trades, to promote the culture and manufacture of tea in Assam, and its importation into this country. The principal facts connected with this important enterprise have since been taken up by many of our contemporaries. In addition to the information which we gave exclusively at the period stated, we may mention, that very interesting despatches have since been received at the East India House, which fully bear out the expectation previously entertained, that the produce of the tea-plant of Assam will very rapidly compete with the growth of China. These despatches state, that with the view of securing to British capitalists the immense advantages which must arise to the commerce between India and Great Britain by the trade in tea grown in Assam, the Indian Government had ordered 300 families to proceed to the province in question, to bring the plant into more rapid cultivation. Two Regiments of troops had been stationed in Assam, to protect the people engaged in the operations there from the wandering tribes which were seen occasionally. The Directors have promised further assistance if necessary. The most important fact recently communicated by the Indian Government to the Court of Directors, is, that the plant of Assam is that from which the finest green teas are made, and not the inferior growth, available only for the manufacture of black tea. This fact has been established by the investigations of a party of Chinese well acquainted with, and heretofore employed in, the culture and manufacture of green teas in China, whom the Indian government had induced to enter into their employment at Assam, and whose report was that the soil and the plant were precisely similar to those in China from which the best green samples are obtained. The information communicated by Capt. Jenkins, Commissioner and Agent to the Governor-General at Assam, is thus fully confirmed. A letter dated the 8th September last, from Assam, received by the Governor General, states, "The manufacturing of tea is now finally over for the season with, in the quantity of tea made last year." It is an interesting fact, connected with the subject, that the great inducement of the India Government in obtaining from the Burmese the cession of the Assam province was to have a certain route into China, in the event of any collision with the Government of Peking on matters connected with the tea trade. This district will now, in all probability, rival the Chinese, thus checking any attempt to restrict the trade by the Celestial Empire. The delay, in obtaining larger supplies of tea from Assam will not be great, as through the exertions of the Governor-General of India, the Commissioners of the Assam Company will find a considerable portion of land in active cultivation. The great difficulty, it is understood, will be the obtaining of labourers insufficient numbers to extend rapidly at first the plantations. The next importations of tea from Assam are looked for with very great interest by the tea trade generally, as well as by all engaged in commerce with India. Observer, June 25.—Sing. Free Press.

Sandwich Islands.

Natural curiosity on Kauay.—A gentleman who made the tour of that island in July last has favoured us with the following description of a cave which he discovered:

The cave is situated about six miles east of Waioli as you go to the celebrated pali, and about three quarters of a mile from the sea. Its entrance is gothic, and, as near as I can remember, from twenty to thirty feet high, and as many wide. There are two apartments, one directly in the rear of the other. The entrance to the second apartment, like that to the first, is gothic, but not more than half as large. The first room I should think is about one hundred and fifty feet long, one hundred wide, and sixty high—the whole forming a beautiful arch.

The whole area of both apartments, excepting about thirty feet at the entrance, is covered with a lake of pure fresh water, which prevents the traveller from exploring the cave without the aid of a small canoe, a convenience I was unable to obtain when I was there. A native was prevailed upon, however, to swim to the entrance of the second apartment and sound the depth of the lake, which was forty-two feet at that place! As I did not explore the cave, I do not know whether the lake is supplied by a running stream, or whether it is supplied by water which filtrates through the sides of the cave, but am of opinion by the former. I learned from the natives that there are two narrow passages extending from the back part of the cave to a considerable distance under the mountain.

Brinsmade's Islands; A new discovery.—Capt. Wood, of the ship L. C. Richmond, informs us of the discovery, by himself, of an Island in the month of May last, situated in lat. 18° 37' S., Long. 178° 23' W. It was a large island, well wooded, and apparently thickly inhabited.—Judging by the lights seen on shore at evening. The land appeared high,—about the height, say, of Lanai, one of this group. Capt. Wood, not having seen this Island on any of the charts, by right of discovery, bestowed upon it the name of Brinsmade's Island.—S. I. Gazette.—Hawaiian Spectator.

CREDULITY OF THE NATIVE POPULATION.—The ridiculous and extravagant reports that were current, some time ago in Singapore, of Government having authorised the abduction of a portion of the native population for the purpose of being sacrificed —as a propitiatory offering, to some imaginary Spirit or Demon, whose ire they had incurred in presuming to invade his domains by erecting the new parochial church on its present site!!—have not only reached this Settlement, but have created such a panic among the natives, that it would be a difficult matter to induce one of them to stir out of their houses after eight o'clock at night, unless well armed and accompanied!

The reports, in travelling hither, have lost none of their original embellishments, but have rather, like all such reports, been magnified tenfold.—It is now confidently believed that the Singapore authorities, being unable from the wariness of the inhabitants to obtain any more subjects for that purpose, have sent a request to the authorities here for a further supply of one hundred victims!!!

It has become the practice, since these reports have been disseminated, for those, whom business or pleasure may require at any distance from their residences, to obtain the protection of their friends; and it is not unusual, after the shades of evening have closed, to meet large bodies of men armed with bludgeons &c. for mutual protection!

We trust some means may be adopted for undeceiving the natives with regard to this matter; who are very easily induced to believe the most exaggerated reports that evil disposed persons, with interested motives, may put forth.—Malacca Weekly Register.

EARTHQUAKE AT MARTINIQUE.

The Pauline which arrived yesterday from St. Pierre (Island of Martinique,) which she left on the 12th ult, brings us the unpleasant intelligence, that on the 11th, a dreadful earthquake took place in that colony. The town of St. Pierre has suffered greatly, but the destruction has been far greater at Port Royal, in which town the number of victims to this dreadful calamity is not less than FOUR HUNDRED,—at the departure of the Pauline, however, the entire extent of devastation produced by the earthquake was by no means accurately ascertained.

Hundreds of plantations on the Island have been utterly destroyed, and intelligence of new disasters was continually pouring into town.†

FOREIGN RELATIONS WITH CHINA. We stated in our last that we intended to review the late occurrences in Canton, and begin now to redeem our pledge, premising at same time that, the subject being one of vast importance, we shall enter at length on its different features in a series of papers on the subject, confining ourselves for the present to a few introductory remarks, the better after to be able to discuss the various views taken here and abroad, and the contending interests, of the different parties. To do this with justice and effect we shall endeavour to preserve ourselves unbiassed by party feeling, nor can, in this discussion, national feeling or prejudice have any influence with us, as not belonging to either of the two nations whose trade with China is the most considerable, and who have thought proper, on this occasion, to pursue such a different line of conduct. Our paper being thus neither English nor American, the interests that we have to guard are those of the whole foreign community in China, and this duty we are anxious to discharge faithfully.

Several are the aspects under which the occurrences, that led to the imprisonment in Canton of the foreign community, to the stoppage of the trade, and to the consequent departure of most of the foreign merchants there, are to be considered. We shall have to inquire into the nature of the provocation given by foreigners to the Chinese Government, that made the latter take the severe measures which at present threaten, for a while at least, to ruin a long existing and hitherto flourishing trade; we shall have to consider in how far the Government of this country was justified in adopting these measures: we shall weigh the proceedings, under these difficult circumstances, of H. M. Superintendent, and whether these are likely to facilitate hereafter a settlement of the now existing differences, and be conducive to placing the foreign trade with China on a more respectable footing. We shall review the conduct of the Chinese authorities since the arrival of the Imperial Commissioner, from which it will, we believe, appear clear that it was not only the suppression of the Opium-trade, but equally the repression within its old limits of the foreign trade, and jealousy of its growing importance, and consequent influence on the subjects of the Empire, that have produced these extraordinary exertions on the part of the Government. We shall likewise have to consider with regret the disadvantages that are likely to follow the want of unanimity in the foreign community, as well as the advantages that possibly have thereby been lost. These different heads will be the subject of so many different articles in our future numbers;—for the present we shall briefly run over the events that produced the crisis, so as to render our remarks on them hereafter more clear.

It is now full twenty years, and even longer, since foreigners have imported Opium into this country, though the taste at that time seems to have been limited to comparatively a few individuals, the whole annual consumption not exceeding 200 chests, the greatest part of which was probably used for medicinal purposes. Soon after, however, we find that the importations increased very rapidly, and the Indian Opium had begun to be produced for the Chinese market in such great quantities that it attracted the attention of the East India Company, who in the year 1773 already took it out of the hands of their servants, monopolizing it for it's own profit. Thus the trade has continued, as far as the sale in India, and its cultivation are concerned, a strict Government monopoly ever since, and fortunately for the finances of the Company the taste for the drug increased prodigiously in China—the quantities imported became annually greater, and the production under the Company's superintendence not keeping pace with the demand, it was produced in equally large quantities in other parts of India for the benefit of its princes. This increase has been particularly conspicuous within the last 20 years, and of these especially since the year 1826-27, since which time the Company have increased the quantity brought into Market in Calcutta from not quite 4000 chests, which it used to be before that time, to upwards of 20,000 chests this year! The production of Malwa Opium has kept pace with that of Bengal, and we consequently find about 40,000 chests this year ready for shipment to China. The Chinese Government has ever since the use of Opium began to spread, issued edicts against its importation, but it has already been shewn with no success whatever. It is probable that at no time until now, was the Government really sincere in its opposition to the importation, as the connivance of it's officers was a source of profit not only to them, but to the Imperial Government itself, which obtained, it is said, very large presents for conferring the higher official situations at Canton. But the mania of Opium-smoking spreading thus quickly over the land, and ruining, as the Chinese describe it in their official reports, the health and wealth of thousands, at last attracted the serious attention of the Government, and though there was a party at Peking favorable to the legal importation of Opium on payment of duty, the party averse to it's use was the stronger, probably not only because they defended the morals and well being of their nation, but also because the Opium trade had begun seriously to affect the currency of the country, by draining it of a vast quantity of silver. To this latter circumstance are we inclined especially to attribute the anxiety since shewn by the Peking Government to suppress the Opium-trade, nor was it a thing of small importance to see annually at least five millions of dollars worth of silver leave the country, which the fears and apprehensions of the Chinese believed to be at least five times as much, they not taking into account that their silk and teas paid for the remainder. It is now just three years since Hen-nan-tze's proposal to the Emperor to legalize the Opium-trade became known to us, and though this at first raised the expectations of the importers very high, and was no doubt the cause of an increased production, we must date from that time, or a few months subsequently, the serious intention of the Government to root up that trade. Very soon severe edicts were issued, and it was known that the Peking Government had required information from most of the Provinces on this subject. Active measures were now and then taken to suppress deliveries from the foreign ships at the outside anchorages, and these became so effective, that to realise their Opium, importers had to send it either to the Coasts or up the Canton river, and so common had this mode of disposal become in the last two years, that no less than about 20 vessels were employed constantly in the Coast-trade, and fully forty sailing boats in that on the river. The edicts which from time to time appeared, had no effect whatever; the government did not interfere and prevent the river smuggling, which they might easily have done by excluding the boats from the Bogue, and it was only apparently when the local authorities became themselves convinced of the real opinions prevailing on this subject at Peking, that in September last a police force was sent to Whampoa, there to search for Opium. From that time may we date the almost total interruption of the trade, though the boats did not quit the river until they were compelled, by a case of smuggling having been detected in Canton in December last, to depart, the general trade being stopped on account of their presence. In the next month the Governor addressed a proclamation to all foreigners, informing them of an Imperial Commissioner being on his way down, and recommending them to send away the Opium ships. This recommendation like all former edicts on the same subject was paid no attention to. The Opium ships remained in hopes of matters mending,—no subsequent very trifling ones were made, and consequently about 20,000 chests of Opium accumulated by the time when in March last the Commissioner arrived at Canton.

The following letter, addressed by the Imperial Commissioner to the Queen of England, but not forwarded, will no doubt be read with interest; it is a curious document, and displays in a great degree the arrogance and pride usually attributed by the Chinese Government towards foreigners. It has, we believe, had rather extensive circulation among the Chinese, who probably suppose that it has been sent to its address, and when the Superintendent was sounded as to his willingness to forward this letter to H. B. M. believe he said, that if the commissioner and Viceroy would use the same term that they do when addressing their own sovereign (i. e. tsow) he would be very happy to forward it for them. The term they make use of however is kwang or the communication from an equal to an equal. Now the Superintendent remarked that tho' this expression might do very well for H. M's. Ministers, yet he could not permit it to be applied to H. M. in person. Empty forms are in many instances but idle things, but in so far as they regard the Chinese, forms and punctilio are the very quintessence of their government, and upon their gaining the advantage of an empty form, they would ground the result of a most important victory. By the mere form of sovereigns having sent presents to the Emperors of China, do they argue that we have been respectful and submissive; by the mere form of certain high flags carried at the mast head of our Embassador's junks, do they now style us a tributary kingdom, and were the commissioner and Viceroy, to be permitted to address the Queen of England as their equal, they would naturally conclude that any British nobleman, even of the highest rank was their inferior, and slight and insult him accordingly.

The Yamchae's letter.

"LIN, Imperial Commissioner.—President of the Board of War and Viceroy of Hoo Kwang,

"TANG, a President of the Board of War, and Viceroy of Quangtung and Quangse, and

"E, a Vice President of the Board of War at Fooyuen of Quangtung—

"conjointly make this communication to the Queen of England that in conformity thereto, as may cause the growth of and traffic in Opium to be prohibited —

"It appears that in the Great Reason of Heaven there is nothing selfish:—it is not permitted to injure others in order to benefit ourselves; nay more the human mind is not differently constructed who is there that does not view death with horror and exert himself to preserve his life? Your honorable country altho' separated by a mighty ocean, a distant upwards of 20,000 (Chinese) miles, is yet subject to the same human feelings: there is indeed no man who cannot distinguish between life and death, between that which is baneful and that which is beneficial. Now our Chinese Empire looking on all within the four seas as of it's family, and the Great Emperor—with a goodness beneficial as that of Heaven itself—overshadows all things, so that even the most remote and barren regions come within the scope of his life giving and nourishing influence!

"Since the time that the restrictions were removed from the port of Canton, and commercial intercourse permitted between us and other countries until now, the common people of our inner land on one part, and those arriving foreign ships on the other, have mutually enjoyed pleasure, and reaped profit by such intercourse to a great many tens of years! And in reference to our Rhubarb, our Tea, our Silk and other articles, all the most valuable productions of the Central land, and without which ye could not subsist, the Chinese Empire looking upon all men with equal benevolence, has permitted these to be sold with exportation beyond seas, without the slightest hint or grudge! our only object being to satisfy the hearts by the extreme of goodness, thus spreading to ourselves as it were those benefits to the peoples by which Heaven and Earth rule all nations!

"But we feel sorry to say that there is a class of depraved foreigners, who cultivate and prepare the Opium Drug; this they convey hither and sell by stealth, and by means of it delude our foolish common people, in order to deprive them of their wealth and obtain possession of their substance. Formerly those who smoked the drug were but few in number, of late however by the influence of bad example the contagion has spread, and day by day, like a poisonous stream flow with increasing depth and violence! In our Chinese Empire the punishments are many and constantly multiplying; in as far as regards this stupid besotted class—who for the gratification of tickling their mouth with an Opium pipe are content to sacrifice their lives—these are to us as rebellious subjects; they bring the evil upon themselves—what necessity is there to feel the slightest tenderness or compassion for them? But throughout the whole Empire of the Great Pure Dynasty it is now incumbent upon us to correct the manners of the age, in order that we may reform men's hearts:—how then can we consent to stand passively by, and see the very life's blood of the Central land, corrupted with a deadly poison! therefore it is that in our own country we now take off the seller and the smoker of Opium and punish their crime with the utmost penalty of the law, in order to cut off for ever the transmission of this curse to succeeding generations! Now that we are aware that in the several parts which are tributary to our noble Country, are a number of contemptible depraved men, who clandestinely grow and manufacture this Opium, yet we cannot suppose for a moment that it is yourself, the sovereign of the honorable Country, who causes them to do this. Again among the various nations of the earth, there are only a few countries which produce this nous drug, it is not indeed produced by every country.

† In the Europe papers we see that the French Government had appropriated the sum of fcs. 2,200,000—to the relief of the sufferers. Ed. C. P.

* The term here translated Queen is Wang, usually used for King, but in a more wide sense it implies the sovereign of a country without reference to sex of the personage on the Throne.

"We have further heard that in your noble country, you do not permit your own subjects to smoke it; he who violates the law is severely punished: this is showing that you are aware how noxious it is to human life, and therefore it is that you thus rigidly prohibit it. But if you prohibit it being smoked, why not prohibit it also being sold? and at the same time prohibit it being grown and manufactured? this would indeed be the true way to get rid of the fountain of evil! And if you yourselves do not smoke it, and yet dare to prepare it and sell it, in order to induce the foolish ignorant people of our central land to smoke it—then this is wishing to secure life to yourselves, while you involve others in the pit of Death! this is seeking your own profit, while you are trying to ruin your neighbour! such conduct rouses the indignation of mankind, while the Reason of High Heaven will assuredly never permit it! By means of the great power of our Empire which rules over Chinese as well as strangers from afar, what difficulty should we find in punishing with death (those foreign venders of Opium)! But looking up to the unbounded goodness of our Holy Emperor, and taking him as our model, we judge it right and proper to give fair warning before hand—for were we not to send you this letter for the information of you the said sovereign of your honorable country, and were we in a moment to issue these rigid prohibitions, then you might still come forward with the excuse, that you were not aware of the facts of the case.

"We therefore now make this covenant with you—to the end that you take the fatal Drug Opium, so hurtful to mankind, and put a stop to it for ever! As we of the Central land prohibit our people from using it, so it seems just that you prohibit the subjects of your honorable country from preparing it. In respect to that which has been already prepared, you will be pleased to cause strict search to be made after it, and have it cast into the bottom of the sea—that within the expanse of Heaven and Earth, no place be further given for such a deadly poison. This done, not only will the common people of our central land no more suffer its evils, but the people of your own honorable country, having already prepared—it, how is it possible to guard against their turning to use it themselves? ‡ on the other hand if you forbid its being prepared, your own said people will escape being injured by it, and thus both countries will not only enjoy mutual peace and happiness, but by so doing will you more strikingly manifest your respect and submission.

"By following out this course of conduct, you will then clearly understand the Celestial Reason, and Heaven will visit you with none of it's judgments:—you will harmoniously accord with the feelings of mankind, and our Holy Emperor must know and approve. On the other hand—the Drug being rigidly prohibited in our inner land, no person is now permitted to smoke it, so that even granting that it should be prepared in your country, there is no place to get rid of it, nor any profit to be reaped thereby. Thus then, how much better will it be to try another profession at once, than to labour in vain, and to lose one's capital in the end! Moreover, the Opium already existing in our central land has been even now taken, mixed up with oil, and destroyed:—and after this, if any foreign ship continue clandestinely to bring Opium, we cannot but seize it and destroy it in the same manner:—and in doing so we cannot guarantee—in reference to the other cargo on board—that the gem may not be confounded with the common stone. Thus, ere you have tasted of the profit, ruin already stalks before you! you, attempting to injure others, will in the first place have sustained injury yourselves! We of the Celestial Dynasty in subjecting to ourselves the ten thousand Kingdoms of the Earth, have a degree of divine majesty which ye cannot fathom! say not that we failed to warn you before hand!

"Let the Queen of the said honorable country, on receipt of this letter, immediately take all the circumstances connected with the stopping the Opium rush from her different sea-ports and communicate the same to us in reply. Do not on any account make use of falsehood† or evasion, seeking to delay or procrastinate!

"We most anxiously stand on tiptoe waiting your reply!

"Taoukwang, 19th year, 2nd moon, day, (probably about 10th April, 1839.) this letter is issued that the Queen of England may know and act accordingly."

REMARKS UPON THE SIAMESE EDICT AGAINST OPIUM. The introduction of the destructive drug into that country has times immemorial been strictly prohibited. But the Chinese junks which trade with Singapore and even some from Canton, that are either partly or entirely owned by Siamese nobles, always managed to import it in small quantities. Foreign ships also ventured to bring this commodity, whenever they were however discovered, the whole was confiscated and openly burnt. There was no connivance on the part of the government, and though some officers may have occasionally received a fee, their connivance was never reduced to a system, as in China. We remember an American vessel which had brought several chests to Bangkok, on account of a Chinese merchant. The second officer sold some of it on his own accr! without the knowledge of the Captain who was absent, and carried it during the night in a ship's boat to the place where he was to receive the payment for the same. Here however he was on a sudden seized, and whilst he saved himself by swimming, one or two of the sailors were caught and sent in chains to a loathsome prison, and one of them died shortly afterwards from the consequences of this cruel treatment. The Captain on hearing of this disaster immediately threw the remaining part overboard. The Siamese however found this out, sent divers to fetch it up, and then burnt it in the court yard of the foreign minister.—No further punishment however was inflicted and the matter rested there. This is now many years ago. The law for a very minute search of many Chinese craft that arrived was then in its full force, and to avoid discovery some ships used to stop outside the bar until they had disposed of the whole.

The principal people who smoke are the Chinese, and during the brisk trading season no restraint was put upon the sailors and merchants. It was even allowed to sell the drug in the bazar as a medicine. At other times however the ire of the King was roused against the smokers, and there are instances that hundreds have been seized and confined, until they either died or had weaned themselves from this habit. Officers who were found using this narcotic were degraded and even a bastard son of the monarch lost his father's favor for being addicted to this vice. On the other hand opium was permitted to be warehoused for exportation to China and other ports, and no penalty was annexed to sending it to other countries. The present instance of severity is on account of the increasing importation and the severe reprimand the Siamese tribute bearer received at Canton last year. As it is a small country and the officers are in earnest, there is every prospect that they will be able to reduce it to the same level as in Cochinchina, where comparatively very little is saleable. The effect however of the measures upon the state of trade is so disastrous, that the most serious difficulties to the Chinese commerce may be apprehended.—From a Correspondent.

We have been favored with the following extract from a letter dated Canton, 2d July, viz:

"The ships are at length" secured; but that is a matter of little moment in Canton to day, compared with the interest felt in the visit of all the coral, blue, crystal, white, and gold buttons and peacock's feathers in the province. This has indeed been a great day for us poor "devils" here. The Yamchae, Vice-roy, Fooyuen, Hoppo, Judges, Magistrates of Nam-hae and Pwanyune, &c. &c. &c. have visited the British hall, and shown themselves to admiring?—barbarians. Many of us had a very good view—almost face to face of the Commissioner and the minor stars, in all some twenty or thirty in number. We find him, the great Hoo—under the middle size, but good looking and quick in his motions. The linguist went to inform one of the American residents that the Yamchae wished to visit his house, and some preparations, such as laying planks (the square being then under water) were made, but the announced visit did not take place. I know not from what reason.

Communicated. On monday the 1st July at noon a meeting of the American merchants, supercargoes, and captains took place at Mr. Delano's rooms: Mr. Wetmore in the chair. It was resolved unanimously that Mr. Wetmore, accompanied by Mr. Lejee and four captains (whose names are not reported to us) should wait upon Howqua and state to him the impossibility of their putting their names to a Chinese document which they did not understand. Howqua replied that such an excuse could not be admitted, that the Chinese must be signed, and that he had been credibly informed that there were parties among them quite willing to do so. At 5 o'clock the same afternoon the parties met again, when Mr. Wetmore reported Howqua's answer, and it was then agreed among the parties that they should dissolve the meeting and that the Captains should go back quietly to their ships at Whampoa, and not think of doing any thing till Saturday. Their object was that Howqua, seeing the parties determined, might be induced to yield the point, and had this arrangement been carried into effect, it is very probable that they might have succeed d. But we regret to add that while most of the Captains left for Whampoa on that understanding, Capt. Benson was prevailed on by Mr. Morss of Messrs Olyphant & Co's house to remain behind, who, contrary to the resolutions and wishes of his countrymen, next morning handed into Howqua's hands, the bond signed in English and Chinese! This having been done by one, was of course done by the rest, though under protest. Thus Messrs Olyphant & Co. have the questionable honor of being the first to give in to a very tyrannical Chinese law, which compels people to put their names to they know not what.

New Port Regulations.

Translated by Mr. Fearon.

Edict From

Yu, by Imperial appointment, Acting Collector of Customs at the Port of Canton, &c., &c., to the Linguists Isaemow (Old Tom) and the others, for their full information:

On the 6th day of the 5th moon of the 19th year of Taoukwang I received the following communication from the Governor:

"On the 2nd day of the 4th moon the Custom House Clerks Leking and others reported that the American Ships Remmonds and King had entered the Port; and on the 4th day of the same month the two Sze Magistrates made their joint report respecting the new regulations they were commanded to frame for despatching civil Officers to search and examine the foreign ships, with a military and police force. They report the result (of their deliberations) and wait for orders how to act:"

Draft of regulations, copied out, and handed up for the consideration (of the Governor).

Regulations for the guarding against the smuggling of Opium by the foreign ships lately arrived. On receipt of it let the several officers respectfully obey it. We, the Sze Magistrates, in obedience to the regulations proceed to lay them before you:

§ 1. Immediately a foreign vessel anchors in the outer Waters, an officer should be delegated to take her measurement and draught of water; this should be clearly written out and notified in a sealed certificate. After her arrival at Whampoa it would be expedient to send an Officer again to measure her, when, should it appear that her depth of water does not agree with that entered in the certificate, the discrepancy should be reported, that orders might be issued to fine her.

Upon examination it appears that the merchant ships of the various foreign nations which bring Cargoes to Canton to trade, anchor, for a time, at Lintin and other places in the outer waters; Here in league with traitorous blackguards of the Inner land, they smuggle Opium, and secretly dispose of other contraband goods. They then enter the river. These evils are without bounds, and are indeed intensely wicked. The Opium ships now in the outer waters have delivered up every particle of the smoking filth which they had hoarded up, and which is now all destroyed; they are also sternly prohibited from ever bringing it hereafter. But it is to be feared that at some future day their former wickedness will again bud forth; we must not, therefore, omit to enact laws before hand to guard against this.

Now the Collector of Customs has determined that, both in the outer waters and in the river, (the foreign ships) shall be subject to the same laws respecting their draught water, as the Grain boats.* An Officer being delegated to measure them and note their depth of water. By this salutary measure, the evil may be completely guarded against.

§ 2. All foreign vessels coming to Canton, in future years, to trade (the season of their arrival being always the same) must be correctly measured outside ere they will be permitted to enter the Port.

Whampoa being situated so near the Capital, no Officer of rank has ever been stationed there:

§ 3. As the foreign vessels will have to be measured again when there, it would be expedient to appoint an Officer of known ability, to superintend the management of the business.

The plan is expedient, and hereafter as soon as it is reported that a ship wishes to come to Whampoa, the Government will delegate from Canton an Acting Magistrate, of known ability and talents, to proceed thither beforehand, taking with him linguists and people to measure the ship. On her arrival there she must, according to law, be measured: the Officer superintending in person. Should her draught of water not correspond with that mentioned in the sealed certificate, it will be appa ent that smuggling has been going on outside during her passage up, and a report of the fact must be forthwith sent to Government, that the affair may be investigated and punished. When he has completed the duties of his mission he will be allowed to return to the Capital and report himself.

§ 4. When a foreign ship comes into Port, she should, on arrival at Whampoa, be watched, and prevented from smuggling. The Officer should be stationed on the left and the Custom House runners on the right side of her, their boats being anchored on each side of her. Thus for keeping her in awe there would be the deputed naval Officer: for guarding against her, the soldiery belonging to the Cruisers on that station: for taking account of the lading and unlading of Cargo, the Whampoa clerks: and for accompanying the Cargo up to Canton, the river police. This regulation comprehends every emergency, and, if only acted upon faithfully, will completely prevent the least smuggling going on. If may hereafter become expedient to appoint another Officer to superintend and enquire into the conduct of the military and police forces employed on the above duty. Should he discover that there has been the least remissness, negligence, smuggling, receiving bribes, carelessness in guarding, or any other such vile practices, he should forthwith report the facts, and the offenders should really be visited with the heaviest penalties.

It appears by this, that for guarding against smuggling on board foreign ships which come up to Whampoa, there are—an Officer of ability—Custom House runners—Clerks—and soldiery, whose duty individually and collectively is to watch and examine. The above regulation is really excellent and most complete, but it does not provide for a high civil Officer being delegated to superintend the whole; and to enquire into the conduct of the police and soldiery; to see that their duties are more than nominal, and that carelessness in attention does not take the place of watchful energy. It is therefore now determined:

§ 5. That an able officer of rank be delegated to superintend the whole, and to keep a check on the police and soldiery. It is expedient to select an officer who is well known for his ability, acquaintance with the duty, and trustworthiness, who must remain constantly on guard. This will effectually ensure watchfulness and alertness in guarding, and will prevent (the soldiery &c.) from secretly enjoying their pleasures, and connivring at the foreigners smuggling.

Respecting the selection of Officers for this duty, it may happen at the time that they have other appointments to attend to, which will make it difficult to send them on this mission. The number of acting Officers and those waiting for appointments, now in Canton is not great, neither are they well fitted by experience to undertake the duty, and are liable to be called away on any other duty, and are consequently unable to remain any length of time to watch and guard. Besides this it would be an extremely difficult task to muster three gentlemen to select one of their number:

§ 6. It is therefore permitted that, according to the circumstances of the time being, any one, from among the candidates for office, Asst. Magistrates, &c. who may not be employed on any other duty, may be selected to superintend and guard.

When the foreign Ship has completed her lading, and left the Port, (should there be no other vessel at Whampoa) there will be no further occasion for the police and Soldiery to guard against and keep them in awe:

§ 7. Orders may, therefore, then be sent to the Chief Superintending Delegate to return to the Capital, and report the completion of his duties. Afterward an another vessel coming up, the same Officer should he be engaged on no other duty, must be sent to superintend this.

The duty of this Officer will be extremely onerous as, immediately a ship arrives, he will be sent down, without a moment's delay, to superintend her second measurement.

We the Sze Magistrates have hitherto had no reports, sent to our Office, of the time of a foreign vessel's arrival at Whampoa: and were the report to be first sent in, orders to be waited for ere the Officers could go, and consideration as to the selection to be made, much delay would occur ere the ship could be measured. It is therefore enacted:

§ 8 That hereafter when the merchant vessels of the various nations come to Canton to trade, the time of their arrival must be immediately reported to Government, who will send either an assistant Magistrate, or an officer from the Chuyuen's office, down to Whampoa beforehand, and give his whole energy, day and night, to the maintenance of a strict guard and surveillance.

Should there be any such blackguards among the police and soldiery, as to harp away from the ship, or neglect their watch, or smuggle, or receive bribes, or show connivance and trifling, or dare to borrow pretences for extorting money from the common people, then the whole circumstances of their offending must be forthwith secretly reported to Government, and the offenders sent up to Canton to meet their punishment.

As to all thin, fish, ferry, compradar boats, &c. which ply about the shipping, orders should be requested for the Deputy to search and examine them, that all evils which might arise therefrom may be prevented.

Whether the number of Ships of all nations, which may, in after years, resort to China, will be large or small, there is no means of knowing certainly.

§ 9. Should the number of them, which hereafter come up to Whampoa, be very considerable, it will be necessary for one officer to superintend the measuring, and another the guard and surveillance. It is expedient therefore that, in such case, two officers be appointed, one to superintend each department. Should the number, however, be small, the measuring department will be but trifling, and one officer can superintend both duties. The measuring officer will therefore remain to superintend the preventive guard, and to keep the soldiery to their duty.

Thus the whole duty of measuring and washing will be performed, without it being necessary to send two officers, and with much less trouble and inconvenience.

§ 10. Should the said Delegate be remiss in his duty, receive bribes, or allow the clerks and soldiery to connive with the foreigners, he should, immediately the fact is known, be shore of his rank and dismissed the service.

An official court of enquiry, must in such case be held, to determine his guilt or innocence, and strict justice done. The whole facts of the case, with the verdict, must be reported to Government to receive its sanction. At the same time reports of the case must be sent to the Collector of Customs, for his information and guidance.

"This coming before me the Governor, I do ordain, in reply, that these regulations, setting aside all former ones, be adopted for managing the trade.

"The Hong merchants Howqua and Puankequa are hereby commanded forthwith to notify the ships of the American merchants Remmonds and King, in accordance with the new and final regulations. Let them proceed, in person, to Whampoa and there with all sincerity and energy subject (the ships) to the strictest scrutiny and examination.

"The Bond hitherto required must be signed both by the foreigners and Hong-merchants, by which they solemnly bind themselves cheerfully and willingly to abide by the consequences of their crimes, should they be discovered to have Opium, and to deliver it up.

"His honor the Collector will also on his part, (should he discover Opium) when the hatch are opened by his orders, forthwith deliver it up to me the Governor, that it may be recorded.

"Business must now be carried on as above is set forth. The Hong-merchants must second their most implicit obedience; and, in company with the linguists, hasten forward, and in all sincerity give their whole minds to the management of their business. Not a moment's delay will be permitted. If they allow any smuggling, or dare, as formerly, to pass it over as a trifling matter, or do not carefully search and investigate, or if they rashly and heedlessly give the Bond, and smuggling of Opium or other contraband goods is afterwards detected, then immediately as discovery of the facts is made, the senior, junior, and security Hong-merchants with the linguists, shall all be taken and visited with most extreme punishment. Not a particle of indulgence will be shewn them.

"Let this be circulated among all the Officers of the province for their information and guidance.

On receipt of the above I, the Collector, in compliance therewith issue this edict for general information. Immediately the said Linguists receive it, let them accord their implicit obedience to the Governor's regulations for managing trade. Do not trifle with nor disobey this Edict, lest you become involved in guilt. Haste! Haste! A special Command.

June 23d, 1839.

‡ This is a bow drawn at a venture, but it has hit the mark. It is a melancholy fact that the use of Opium is very much on the increase in England.

† Literally, "happily do not tell lies or gloss over matters." It must however be borne in mind, that these and similar expressions do not among the Chinese convey the exceedingly offensive meaning that they do among Europeans. Still, even among themselves, language of this kind is not looked upon as too polite.

United States.

State of the Sub-Treasury for 1839.—The Globe of Tuesday night, contains the report of Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, on the Treasury. From this document, we annex an account of the resources, with the charges upon the Treasury, for the current year:

Resources of 1839.

The ascertained balance in the Treasury on the first of January, exclusive of $500,000 for the use of the mint, is		$9,200,000
Receipts from customs,	$18,000,000
Lands,	5,000,000
		$23,000,000
Balance due from late deposite banks, being less than as stated by the Treasurer, owing to anticipated payments,	2,200,000
From miscellaneous sources,	400,000
		$ 2,700,000
		$34,900,000

Charges upon the Treasury.

Appropriations authorised by former acts, which will be required for the public service, but were not drawn out prior to the first of January last, according to the Treasury account,		$18,260,000
Appropriations already reported, viz:
Indian annuities &c.	$ 846,960
Army,	5,348,220
Pensions,	2,469,019
Northern frontier,	500,000
Navy,	5,170,781
Civil and diplomatic, deducting the nominal appropriation of $ 5100 000 for the Post Office,	2,834,364
Partial appropriations for Congressional expenditures, besides those included in the preceding bill,	549,344
Cumberland road,	300,000
		$19,078,678
Appropriations under permanent laws for pensions, arming and equipping the militia, &c. including $730,000 for the gradual improvement of the Navy, transferred at the last session,		2,146,000
Appropriations carried to the surplus fund, which must be again appropriated,		293,000
For the Military Academy (to be reported)		128,055
For preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities in Florida, (to be reported)		1,804 776
		37,764,507
Of the foregoing appropriations, there will probably be undrawn at the close of the year, (being the short session, the estimate is less than at the close of the last year)		13,000,000
		24,764,507
Certificates for return duties on merchandise destroyed by fire at New York, receivable in payment for duties, as estimated by the commissioners,		400,000
Treasury notes to be redeemed,		7,712,350
		32,876,857
Deduct the resources,		29,900,000
Deficit,		$3,976,857

To meet this deficiency, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell the remaining bonds of the Bank of the United States, amounting, with interest, to $2,380,000, and there remains $2,287,850 of the Treasury notes authorized to be issued by the act of 1838, which have not yet been issued. Should the former be sold, and the limitation of the Treasury note act of 1837 be extended to the 20th June, and no appropriations be authorized during the present session but those embraced in the foregoing statement, there would be an estimated balance in the Treasury on the 1st January next of about $690,000. Even this balance will be reduced by some additions which will be necessarily made during the session to the appropriations enumerated in the foregoing statement. Should Congress authorize the usual amount of few appropriations, and the three millions proposed for fortifications, harbours, &c. it would be necessary to provide five or six millions for the Treasury, in addition to all the resources and receipts existing or contemplated. New York Courier and Enquirer.

Memoranda of a visit to Chunhow, the temporary residence of the imperial commissioner, who in person there superintended the destruction of the opium, recently surrendered to the Chinese government. June 17th 1839. By E. C. B.

In the afternoon of the 18th instant, at the request of Mr. King, I embarked with him from Macao, in the ship Morrison, captain Benson, and proceeded up the river to Chuenpe. Mr. K's object was twofold;—first to witness the destruction of the opium, then going on in that neighborhood; and in the second place, to make inquiries respecting the conditions, on which ships may hereafter enter the Bogue. Since many declared that the Chinese would not destroy one catty of the drug, and many others have expressed their belief that, should the destruction be actually undertaken, great quantities would be purloined; it seemed the more desirable that some foreigners should obtain admittance to the place where the drug was actually being destroyed.

The opportunity, therefore, of being an eye-witness of a scene so novel was gladly improved, with the determination to make every practicable inquiry and observation, respecting the fidelity of the work as it went on under the immediate inspection of the high commissioner. Contrary to our expectations, no obstacles were opposed to our wishes; and I have only to regret, that others could not have availed themselves of a like opportunity to witness the same scene. That liberty to do this should be given, seems evidently to have been intended by the emperor's own mandate, in which he commands, that the opium should be destroyed in Canton, where natives and foreigners "both alike might hear of it, and see it."

About noon, on the 16th, the Morrison anchored at Chuenpe, near the station where the deliveries were made from the receiving ships, perhaps two miles below the fort on Anunghoy, and less than one fourth that distance from the guns on Chuenpe and those in the junks of war in Anson's bay. In the course of the afternoon a card, and an open note stating the object of the visit, were put into the hands of the naval officer on the station, who after some demurring, saying the request ought to have been made at Macao, &c., promised to send off both by express to the commissioner, and to return an answer before noon next day. A pilot, who came off from the fleet at sunrise, the following morning, to make inquiries about the Morrison, said a favorable answer would be given; and his report seemed to be confirmed by the unusual display of flags on board the junks, and by the appearance of several large barges in the fleet.

At half-past nine o'clock, A. M., one of the large boats came along side, having on board Lao Taeyue, a naval officer of the rank of captain. He was immediately received on board, and conducted into the cabin. After being seated, and passing compliments, he said he had been directed by the high commissioner, and the admiral, his master, to convey in person their pleasure that Mr. K. should proceed to Chunhow. He asked whether the party would prefer to go in his barge, or in the captain's gig; and remarked that it was unnecessary for us to take any arms, and faithfully protected and conducted back by himself. He further very politely —and very gallantly too for a son of Han—inquired if Mrs. King would like to join the party.

While our boat was being made ready, Lao improved the opportunity to give a statement of his exalted self and of the imperial navy, and made sundry inquiries about admiral Maitland, whom he had the pleasure of seeing some months back. He inquired particularly for Mr. Morrison, who acted as interpreter on the occasion; and wished to know if the Eng lish superintendents, Elliot and Johnston, were both at Macao. He did his best to make himself agreeable to us, and was throughout the day attentive and lavish of compliments. He admired the ships and crew, and did not fail to mark the contrast between them and his own.

At 10 o'clock we left the Morrison, our party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. King, captain Benson, myself and seamen. Lao, in his own boat, manned with about 60 seamen, with few attendants, led the way, and our gig followed. As we passed through the fleet, several other boats, with officers on board, joined the party, some under sail, and others with rowers—all in high spirits and full of glee. When east of Anson's bay, having a little islet on our right and the ruins of an old fort on the left, we passed through Samhow (three fathoms) and the creek) and over Sinkok (Sandy point), and with our wind and tide reached Chunhow, in less than an hour from the time of leaving the ship. Chunhow is, I should think, five or six miles from the fort on Chuenpe; and nearly due east, distant, say, two miles from the fort on Anunghoy. From the islet, above mentioned, our course was N. E. up a small creek, with hills and sides rice-fields and rivulets, on each side. A few poor houses were seen here and there, with two or three small villages on the south-east. In the opposite direction, near the banks of the creek, there was a military station, a mere watch-house, and a large ancestral temple. A good many boats were passing and repassing the river, exhibiting on all sides the aspect of quiet and industry.

Chunhow is a long narrow village, on the east side of the creek, running north and south, perhaps one third of a mile. The site selected for the deposit and destruction of the opium, is on the bank of the creek, at the brow of a hill, about distance from the south end of the village, including an area about 400 or 500 feet square, strongly enpaled with bamboos. Crowds of spectators appeared in the boats, on the houses, and on the sides of the hill, as our party passed by the village. As we approached the landing-place, the war-boats and junks beat a salute; and two divisions of troops, in full uniform, were drawn up under their respective standards, one on the south, the other on the north, of the enclosure. It was a fine morning, and the Chinese seemed delighted with the arrival of our little gig. The scene around us, taking it all in all, was pleasing and some what imposing; still there was something in the work itself which made me feel sad and sick at heart.

Just before reaching the landing-place, Loo, our guide, asked whether we would see the commissioner. Being answered in the affirmative, he inquired what ceremonies we would perform, and whether we would make the kotow or not. Refusing to perform the latter, and intimating what would be our own pleasure, it was agreed at once, that we should conform to the usages of our own country.

Loo, stepping on shore before us, begged us to wait till he could announce our arrival, and make arrangements for reception. After a short absence, he returned attended by a military officer, named Wongchin, deputed by the commissioner to wait on the visitors. He wore a long heavy outfas, and was booted and belted like a warrior. He was a Mohammedan, a native of one of the northern provinces; rather tall, stout, of a very dark complexion, wearing a thick long black beard. He had evidently been bred in the camps, and inured to a martial life. As he and Loo approached our gig, the latter pointed out each of us, calling us by name; and then requested me to step on shore. After a formal introduction to his friend Wongchin, Loo stated the arrangements that had been made for the occasion; we were first to examine the whole works in detail, and afterwards were to have an audience with the commissioner, if we desired it. Also it was intimated, that we should choose our own times, and inspect every part as long and as minutely as we wished.

Our party now stepped from the gig, and passing along a pier, entered the enclosure. This, as described above, was a large area, surrounded by a strong palisade, like a Malayan camp. There were gates on each side, excepting the east; at these sentinels were stationed, and no person was allowed to enter without a ticket. And on going out of the place, every one was examined. The number of workmen was said to be about five hundred. The number of officers, civil and military, could not have been less than sixty or eighty. A collection of finer looking men I have scarcely ever seen. Many of the clerks and attendants, too, were young and good-looking. All these officers were employed as inspectors and overseers. A part of them were on elevated seats, under mat sheds, to watch all the movements, in every part of the enclosure; and their position was such that nothing could escape their notice. By alternation, some of them were kept always at their posts, day and night. Another part of the officers superintended the delivery of the opium from the chests, which had been stored up in small enclosures within the large one. Special care was taken to see if each chest and parcel now corresponded to what it was marked down at when taken from the storehouse.

On the west side of the enclosure, just within the palisades, were three large vats, or trenches, running from east to west, say 150 feet long, 75 feet broad, and 7 deep, flagged with stone and lined along the sides with heavy timbers. Each of these three, had its own fence with entrances only on one side. When we were there, one had no opium in it; a second was being filled; and another was nearly ready to be emptied.

The process by which the drug was subjected, was briefly this. In the first place a trench was filled two feet deep, more or less, with fresh water, from the brow of the hill. The first trench was in this state, having just been filled with fresh water. Over the second, in which the people were at work, forms, with planks on them, were arranged a few feet apart. The opium in baskets was delivered into the hands of coolies, who going on the planks carried it to every part of the trench. The balls were then taken one by one and thrown down of the planks, stamped on with the feet till broken in pieces, and were then kicked into the water. At the same time, other coolies were employed in the trenches, with hoes and broad spatulas, busily engaged in beating and turning up the opium from the bottom of the vat. Other coolies were employed in bringing salt and lime, and spreading them profusely over the whole surface of the trench. The third was about half filled, standing like a distiller's vat, not in a state of active fermentation, but of slow decomposition, and was nearly ready to be drawn off. This was to be done by opening a sluice, which opened between the trench and the creek. This sluice was two feet wide, and somewhat deeper than the floor of the trench. It was furnished with a screen, made fine like a sieve, so as to prevent any large masses of the drug from finding their way into the creek.

By half-past 11 o'clock, we had examined, and re-examined every part of the of the process of destruction. The degree of care and fidelity, with which the whole work was conducted, far exceeded our expectations; and I cannot conceive how any opium could be more faithfully executed. The watch was apparently much stricter, on every side, than it was during the detention of foreigners in Canton. One poor man, at Chunhow, for only attempting to carry off small pieces of opium about his person, was, on detection, almost instantly visited with the extreme penalty of the law. If any was pilfered, it must have been in very small quantities, and at the most imminent hazard of life—at least, so I am constrained to believe.

Well satisfied with the inspection of the trenches, we were again asked if we were ready to see the commissioner. A seat for Mrs. K. was provided near the boat in one of the watch-houses, where she was furnished with tea and sweetmeats, attended by captain Benson, while Mr. King and myself, conducted by Loo and Wongchin, proceeded to the east side of the enclosure, to the apartments of the commissioner. These were large and commodious, built of bamboos, like the temporary lodgings of the Chinese. The hall of audience was about twenty feet square, a little elevated, and open on the west side, so as to command a full view of the trenches and landing-place. The floor was covered with carpets, and the walls decorated with scrolls. When within a few yards of the hall, Loo pointed out to us one by one the officers, we were going to meet. Lin, his majesty's high commissioner, occupied the east side of the hall alone; seated in a broad chair or sofa, with two tables near him, one on each side. The admiral, or commander-in chief, of the maritime forces of the province, occupied a seat alone at the commissioner's right, on the north side of the hall; at his left, on the south side of the hall, the hoppo and commissioner of justice, or ngancheae were seated. All the other officers were standing, some within and others without the hall, habited in their summer dresses, wearing silk boots, with light straw hats or bonnets, crowned with buttons indicative of their respective rank.

When leaving Macao, we had little expectation of being so soon ushered into the presence of such dignitaries as those now before us. However, we determined to take full advantage of Chinese moderation and to protract our interview as to see and to learn whatever the occasion would allow. With a suitable air of indifference, and all due gravity, à la Chinoise, we advanced to the west side of the hall. Here we took off our hats, and bowed to the commissioner, standing directly before him, surrounded by a dense crowd of officers and attendants. Loo and Wongchin, at the same time in the middle of the hall, kneeled and prostrated themselves before his excellency; who immediately bade them rise, and the conference commenced, and lasted full two hours. Loo and Wongchin were chief speakers, first addressing the commissioner, and then communicating with us.

The commissioner opened the conversation by inquiring if Mr. K. had received his communication, addressed to him, sometime back, while in Canton. In reply to this, reference was made to the inconveniences and losses sustained by the late proceedings; and it was inquired, whether any security would be given that such should not occur in future. This prepared the way to ask for a specification of the conditions on which ships will henceforth be allowed to enter the port. His excellency said, the evils had grown gradually and secretly, because their authors had been dealt with so leniently; and that now the time had come when forbearance was no longer possible. It was solely for the suppression of the traffic in opium that the late severe measures had been prosecuted. The illicit trade be said, must now be stopped; the other should be protected. After speaking long and animatedly on this point, the commissioner gave the following in writing.

"Vessels engaging in the clandestine sale of opium, shall assuredly be examined and treated with great severity, and no degree of favor or leniency shall be shown to them.

"All those who are good, are conscious of their upright intentions; and all those who are evil, are conscious of their bad intentions. Certainly the good shall not be involved on account of the evil; and as certainly, the evil shall not be screened on account of the good.

"Let the good, dismissing all anxiety of heart, prosecute their commerce freely, without any apprehensions of difficulty.

"As for those who are evil, it only remains that they early leave about change their practices, and abandon their vain expectations."

In the course of the conversation, Mr. K presented two papers to the commissioner—and referring to his own vessels, asking that they might enter as formerly. This, the commissioner said, should be granted. In the second paper, after alluding to the unhappy and dreadful state of things which had existed in the country, and to the measures now being taken to put a stop to them, it was urged, that special precaution ought to be made for all honest and lawful trade to proceed, that ample security should be given that the future execution of the regular trade should not be disturbed, and that it should be clearly proclaimed that it would be against the traffic in opium that severity is to be exercised. With a view to remove existing evils, to guard against their recurrence, to preserve peace, and to extend commerce, it was further suggested, that the following changes should be made according to the customs of goods;—that three additional ports, northward, should be opened to all foreign nations for trade, and that liberty allowed to have their families reside with them;—that in all criminal cases the offender should be tried by his own consul, acting jointly with the local commissioners of justice—that ministers plenipotentiary should be allowed to reside in the capital, near the emperor's throne.

Very particular inquiries were made respecting the intentions of the English in withdrawing from the port, and also as to the best mode of conveying communications to the queen and other European sovereigns, in order to secure their co-operation for the suppression of the traffic in opium.

Inquiries were made for maps, geographies, and other foreign books; and particularly for a complete copy of Morrison's Dictionary.

From the whole drift of the conversation and inquiries during the interview, it seemed very evident that the sole object of the commissioner was, and is, to do away the traffic in opium, and to protect and preserve that which is legitimate and honorable. He is the strictest disciplinarian of the nation, he appeared; and I believe it, indeed, now and then, more or less of that partiality for his own country and countrymen, and that disregard of all others which are characteristics of great statesmen. Throughout, he was bland and virtuous, and exhibited nothing that was "barbarous or savage." He appeared to be not more than 45 years of age; is short, rather stout; has a smooth full round face, a slender black beard, and a keen dark eye. His countenance is open, and he does not like most Chinese officers I have seen, seem inclined to care and inscrutability. Once only he smiled—almost laughed,—when Mr. K declined to characterize the members of the cabinet. The question was, who of them were good? It was not answered. The occasion gives him of being more than power—especially of his steamers—seemed rather unpalatable, and once or twice raised a frowning look on his brow.

After taking leave of the commissioner, we were conducted back in the same manner, to our boats. A large collection of presents from the high officers was, for five, p. m. we were on our way back to Macao. As about nine o'clock, in the evening, our old friend Loo came down to return the papers to us for translation, they having been presented in English, and the commissioner's linguists being unable to understand them. A translation was promised to be soon ready, and he again took leave. The next day we returned to Macao, well pleased with the trip.

P. S.—The commissioner has to his service four natives, all of whom have made some progress in the English tongue. The first is a young man, educated at Penang and Malacca, and for several years employed by the Chinese government at Peking. The second is an old man, educated at Rampore. The third is a young man who was sent at the school at Cornwall, Con. U. S. A. The fourth, is a young lad, educated in China, who is able to read and translate papers, on any common subject, with much ease, correctness, and facility. Canton Register 16th July.

Bombay.

In the matter of a Habeas Corpus directed to JOHN WILSON, Clerk, Doctor in Divinity, to bring up the body of DHANJEEBHOY NOWROJEE.

JUDGEMENT.

If it were not for R. v. Delaval I should think that the absolute want of protection under this writ were delivered to his uncle, would make it necessary so to deliver him, but there the object of the writ was in the worst possible hands, so had that the Court granted a Criminal information for a combination to place her there; yet did not the Court restore her to her father holding that in him was the contemplated that the writ was for her protection, and finding a doubt afterwards removed, on that I cannot, however, assume the high prerogative of the King by the chancellor, and I can only look to legal guardianship as instrumental to protection, & of usually to protection of personal liberty.—In infancy of very tender age personal liberty is impossible as opposed to parental control, the question, in such cases is, therefore generally one of legal custody, but incidentally only, and therefore not universally. R. v. Hopkins 7 East 579, Hobhouse

Corpus is not the specific mode of claiming guardian-ship, as shewn in argument, or indeed the rights of another in any form as in case of master and apprentice, R. Exparte Lansdown 5 East R. 58.

Much has been said about full age, for my own part, whatever weight any habit of Parsees to act upon Hindoo usages in Hindoo countries may have in point of discretion, I know no law under which any Parsee d miciled in Bombay can be of full age under 21, nor do I know of any law under which, when domiciled and actually resident here, there can be any part of the law of England in regard to personal liberty which does not apply to him.—Parsee parents are entitled to the protection of the law in educating their children in their own religion; and though I believe his own statement of his age to be the true one, because Herjeebhoy knew where to get the Horoscope if it were not, I consider that parental authority is still in the course of exercise when a schoolboy of 16½ is attending a school where he was placed by his friends (habitually though not invariably going home to sleep and for his meals) and excepting employment occasionally withdrawing him from home by permission of those who are parents, but it is here not merely stated irregularly without oath by the boy, but on the oaths of many persons, stating not entirely unreasonable fears, that danger is to be apprehended from acceding to this motion. Not so in R. V. Kistna Mohun Banajee where the Prosecutor was a father, and there were vague and irregular charges against him; but, here Herjeebhoy though a kind friend, may not quite have parental feelings, and where it is too clearly shewn by the many affidavits or his own declarations to Doctor Wilson, that he is an instrument in the hands of others, whose zeal for an object which they are reasonably interested in, is not qualified by that parental feeling. (I speak not of the highly respectable Gentlemen of the Panchayet; who I am sure would do their best—their known good sense and good conduct have often shewn it) but whilst we ought not to be affected in our duty by a feverish dread of public feeling, I cannot but say that upon the evidence to-day of highly respectable persons it is rendered at least doubtful whether a delivery to Heerjeebhoy would be safe—and as only one person (Pallonjee Dhunjee) is named, and in fact the case does not admit of the others being named so as for me to be enabled to bind them to keep the peace, I am reluctantly obliged to refuse the motion. Had I hopes of the arrival of another Judge in a few weeks I would not do so alone but I m st not delay indefinitely.

I have intentionally abstained from observing on the irritating matters—but I do not feel myself bound, as to one matter chiefly observed on either side, to withdraw my respect from the highly respectable persons who have been placed in opposition.

That Defendant, if not by advertisements, yet by the course of public examination, and many other things conclusively proved to day, is cleared from the imputations of clandestine proceedings, is most clear: but I think, to use Mr. Advocate General's words, that the respectable Parsee Gentlemen "have been sleeping over the intimations given." Our own countrymen too often place their children in situations where their principles are likely to be perverted, closing their eyes to the danger. That such has been the case here I have no doubt, they left their children to learn christianity as a part of western literature and science, as some Europeans study the Sanscrit books, but are alarmed, as is to be expected, when they find an actual abandonment of their own creed.

With regret I pronounce that Dhunjeebhoy Nowrojee is at liberty to go where he likes, will be protected from any interference: R. v Delaval leaves me no choice.—Bombay Times, 18th May.

More Tigers.—We regret to learn that within the last fourteen days two more men have been carried off by Tigers, one of them at a distance of scarcely more than two miles from town. It is to be apprehended that of late these animals have increased in number in the settlement, and very much to be desired that some efficient means should be taken to extirpate them, as the number of deaths they have occasioned, within the last year or so is somewhat in advance of a dozen. We know of nothing more likely to effect their destruction than by offering a reward for every Tiger brought in sufficient to induce the natives to undergo the risk of capturing or killing them, and we venture to recommend a subscription to form a fund for the purpose.—*Sing. Lombock.—For about the last eighteen months the island of Lombock has been torn by intestine commotion, and a prey to civil war; and its annals during that period have been characterised by an event of the most tragical description, of which we wish it was in our power to give more particular details. About the beginning of last year the Goostie or chief of Mataram headed a rebellion against the royal authority of Karang-Asam, at that time swayed by a female sovereign. The Queen maintained and defended her rights with courage and resolution, protracting the war from month to month, until the successes of her rebellious vassal compelled her to solicit the assistance of the Java government. Before this could be given, she was reduced to the extremity of distress, and on the point of falling into the hands of the rebel force—Driven to desperation, and resolved to avoid the ignominy of being lorded over by a vassel, she called a council of all her kindred, male and female, and urged upon them the alternative of self-sacrifice in preference to falling into the hands of their enemies. The proposition received the unanimous consent of all present, and shutting themselves up together in the palace, the whole, to the number of about fifty, took an early opportunity of destroying themselves in the presence of each other, by stabbing themselves or falling on their swords! The Goostie of Mataram, whose rebellion led to this terrible act of self-immolation, did not survive to enjoy the fruits of his ill-omened success, having himself been killed in the course of the war, and the Rajah Moorah Mattie, the only relative of the late heroic Queen who was left alive, succeeded to the sovereignty of Lombock, a dignity which he was allowed to enjoy unmolested until, not many weeks ago, the present Goostie of Mataram, following the example of his predecessor, threw off his allegiance, and succeeded in deposing his rightful liege-lord, who is still in arms however for the recovery of his lost power. These disturbances have in the meantime compromised property to a considerable amount belonging to an English mercantile house settled in Lombock, the present de-facto ruler having thought fit to confiscate all the outstanding debts due to them, on the plea of their having given assistance to the former rulers of the country—a proceeding which the said Rajah would be at no difficulty in finding a law for, being himself a debtor of the mercantile establishment in question. The local authorities have, we understand, been applied to for the in assistance in recovering the property confiscated—and we hope they will address a firm remonstrance to this Polynesian Tharrawaddy on the subject. Even that not very scrupulous personage would scarcely think of confiscating property on the ground that its owners abetted pretensions of one sovereign, in a country where there had been three in the course of little more than a twelvemonth. Ibid.

The Sun Superseded.—The newly-invented light of M Gaudin, on which experiments were recently made at Paris, is an improved modification of the well-known invention of Lieut Drummond. While Drummond pours a stream of oxygen gas through spirits of wine upon unlaked lime, Gaudin makes use of a more etherial kind of oxygen, which he conducts through burning essence of turpentine. The Drummond light is fifteen hundred times stronger than that of burning gas; the Gaudin light is, we are assured by the inventor, as strong as that of the sun, or thirty thousand times more so than gas, and of course, ten times more so than the Drummond. The method by which M. Gaudin proposes to turn the new invention to use is singularly striking. He proposes to erect in the island of Pont Neuf, in the middle of the Seine and centre of Paris, a light-house five hundred feet high, in which is to be placed a light a hundred thousand to a million gas-pipes strong, the power to be varied as the nights are light or dark. Paris will thus enjoy a sort of perpetual day, and as soon as the sun of the heavens has set, the sun of the Pont Neuf will rise!

March 22.

Probable Resignation of Ministers.—Lord John Russel—Sir, I rise for the purpose of postponing some of the orders of day. The first of those orders is the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill; and with respect to that measure I propose to the House that they should go into committee upon it on the 15th of April. Sir, in moving this postponement, I take the opportunity of stating that it is my intention in the very first week after the recess, on one of the first days after the holidays, to take the opinion of the House with respect to the government of Ireland. (Great cheering.) Sir, it appears by the minutes of the proceedings of the House of Lords, that that House, at an early hour this morning, appointed a select committee to enquire into the state of Ireland since 1835. Sir, without wishing to enter into the circumstances as to the propriety of appointing that committee, I think it is obvious that the appointment of such a committee, fixing the year 1835 as the time of crime and outrage, must give a general belief throughout the empire, and more especially in that part of the United Kingdom which it affects, that it is intended to transfer the Executive Government of Ireland to a select committee of one House of Parliament, and more especially intended to call in question the exercise of one of the highest prerogatives of the Crown, that of mercy by calling witnesses before the Select Committee. I do not say that there may not be circumstances which may justify such a course—I do not say at this moment whether there are or are not—I will not enter into the question now whether the House of Lords has or has not done right (Hear, hear.) It doubtless heard arguments before it adopted the course which it has done; but this I must say, that no person can proceed to carry on the government as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, without being assured whether it is the intention of the House of Commons that those principles which have governed the Administration of Ireland since 1835 should be adhered to or whether they should be now abandoned. (Great cheering.) In conformity with the declaration which Lord Melbourne has made at various times—but in conformity, more particularly, with one special declaration of that noble lord, that he held office only as long as he retained the confidence of the House of Commons—(Hear)—I think it incumbent upon me to bring this question to issue—(Great) cheering)—whether this House adheres to the principle upon which the administration of the government of Ireland has been conducted. The measures we ourselves have thought it advisable to pass, I candidly admit, we have not been able to carry through Parliament; but this much we have been able to do with the confidence of the House—(Hear, hear),—and the forbearance of the other, we have been enabled to carry on the Administration of Ireland in a manner that has conduced to the prosperity of that part of the Empire. (Loud cheers.) On these grounds we think it necessary to ask of the House Commons whether it is disposed to approve of my noble friend, Lord Fortescue, continuing to adopt the measures which have hitherto been adopted. He will continue to execute the laws in the manner in which the Executive has hitherto been carried on, if the House is pleased to agree to those measures; but if, on the other hand, the House does not approve of this plan, but is willing that it should be abandoned, and other principles be adopted, then there is nothing left but to relinquish into other hands the government of the country. (Vociferous cheering.) Bombay Times 18th May.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

Having noticed in your last paper, an attempt to fasten upon us, the "questionable honor of being the first to give into a very tyrannical Chinese law, which compels people to put their names to they know not what"; we send you a copy of the certificate, and the only certificate, drawn up by us, as the form we were ready to sign, for the satisfaction of this Government.

We offered this strong obligation, because we are sincere, in wishing that the import of the drug cease; because we are aware, that certificates have been regularly given by the foreign residents for years past, and as constantly evaded; and because we fear, that without a penalty in view, the factories will soon again become the residence of Opium-Agents.

With the preparation of the bond you object to, we had nothing to do; We regard it as a legal nullity; and yet, as objectionable; first, for its vague reference to new regulations, and, secondly, for its him to screen the resident merchants, by throwing the responsibility on the Captains. For ourselves, we neither proposed nor desired such cover.

In fact the form in question was prepared between the senior hong merchant and the American house having the largest control over the shipping at Whampoa; whither we ordered the Morrison, only after their example, and after positive assurances from the Commissioner himself, (which no one else waited for) that she should be subjected to no new regulations.

The English form having been thus prepared, and agreed to by the American residents, and declared by Messrs. Parker and Thom, a faithful transcript of the Chinese; the only remaining point of difference was,—as to the propriety of placing the certificate in both languages, on the signed paper.

We could not be ignorant, that in diplomatic writing, and public papers concerning parties, using two languages, it is the custom to employ both, as the mutual exponents and conveyancers of each other's meaning. In one view, therefore, the request that the Chinese copy be placed at the top of the page, the English beneath it, and the signature below the English, pointed out the proper mode of making out the paper. To have persisted in refusing it, after the acceptance and translation of the certificate, would have been, in our judgment, to part with our common sense, or at least, to do our own intelligence, a very "questionable honor."

We will only add, that while we do wish well to the Chinese in their efforts to exclude the drug, and will, of choice, meet all their demands for reasonable securities, we have in every petition, insisted, (and shall always insist) on the right of trial in open court, one public representative assisting; and on the right of access, in the last case, to the supreme dispenser of pardon; not only have we claimed these safeguards repeatedly, as matters of private justice, but we have just been declaring them to the Commissioner himself, at a late interview, to be the only terms on which China can extend her laws over us, without involving herself in hostilities on the first act of punishment.

Without deciding on the duties of men of other nations, we deem it proper for us, as Citizens of the U. States, to submit ourselves to such securities as foreign cupidity has forced on the Chinese, in the matter of Opium; claiming at the same time every safeguard for the just administration of their laws, and commending ourselves, if wronged, to the protection of our country. In this course, whatever local prejudice or rivalry may say, we count on the final approbation of all whose esteem has any value.

Begging that you will exercise a more becoming distrust of like communications in future, and that you will not allow the name of your late informant to reach us,

We are &c.

OLYPHANT & Co.

FORM OF CERTIFICATE.

I, C. W. King, an American citizen, residing as a merchant at Canton, being aware of and fully approving the desire of the Emperor, to suppress the Opium traffic; do hereby declare that I will, now and ever faithfully endeavor to further this, the Imperial purpose.

I further declare, that the American Ship Morrison, captain Benson, now arrived at Whampoa to my consignment, has no opium on board, and that I have charged the said Captain to prevent any from being taken on board by his officers or seamen.

I further consent, in case any person connected with the said ship be charged with smuggling opium; that he be tried in open court, by the Ganchasze; the consul of his nation being present and assisting.

I grant it to be right, that all property in and upon the said ship, belonging to the accused, be confiscated on his conviction. In consideration that the guilty is a foreigner, only partially acquainted with language and laws of the Empire I take it as a concession of the Emperor, that his first offence be punished by perpetual banishment instead of death, as inflicted on the native.

In case he repeat the offence, I admit that he be dealt with as a native offender.

This bond is given by me to bind so far as is consistent with the laws and customs of my country

Foreign relations with China. The Opium Traffic in China.—We shall confine ourselves exclusively to native smuggling, and the reader will draw his inferences as to the extent of the evil and the necessity of a radical change.

Opium was brought at a very early period to this country, and we read in a work of 1745 upon the commerce of this country, that it was a prohibited article that yielded a very large profit, but had to be introduced with great caution. After this, the year being unknown, its introduction was legalized as a common drug. The growth of the evil may be dated from the prohibition under Kea king, its extension from the forcible expulsion of the receiving ships from Whampoa, and its apparent annihilation from the late measures of Lin. Time, the surest judge, can alone decide how far his extraordinary proceedings have answered their end, and we only remark here that at present the smuggling has been revived with considerable vigour.

The unexampled increase of this traffic is perhaps peerless in the annals of commerce. It ought however never to be forgotten, that China is the most populous country in the world, whilst the nation is gross in its appetites, the coast extensive, the rivers and canals innumerable, and the mercantile community remarkable for their cunning in evading the laws; and all this may in some degree account for it. A system of smuggling in all small articles is organized throughout this wide realm, abetted by the highest functionaries and the lowest tidewaiters. To our distant readers who draw their opinion of this Government from the edicts, which are full of good moral sayings and exceedingly strict and proper, this will appear a paradox and be little believed, the more so, at temporary severe measures seem to give the lie to this assertion. It is therefore necessary, that we should exhibit a general view of the spirit of the executive.

The Government, being strictly despotic, rules over a larger mass of men than any other; and has to manage an overgrown population. The great art of governing consists in keeping the country in a state of tranquility at all risks, and especially to prevent starvation amongst the large bulk of the nation. This is a very difficult task, and the sacrifices on the part of the rulers which the realization of these principles requires are very great, still they must be made at every hazard. Every regulation therefore, how excellent and necessary soever, which affects the livelihood of a numerous class of people, cannot be carried into effect for any length of time; the many mandarins feel the pulse of the public, and as soon as they perceive, that the pressure upon the nation would be too heavy, they relax and suffer the mandate to remain dormant. The number of people engaged in this nefarious traffic has been so considerable, the amount of capital so large, that every violent interference has been fraught with disastrous consequences, and could never be persevered in for any length of time without giving rise to a serious disturbance in some part or other. To seize a few individuals, imprison them, and confiscate the property, were matters of no very great moment; but to stop smuggling for the course of a whole year was perhaps beyond the power of the Government. Even in the present state of things, when a plenipotentiary makes his appearance, and shews himself more determined than any of his predecessors, the terror after a successful career of some months subsides, and the former state of things, notwithstanding all the preventatives, is gradually again approaching. We cease therefore to wonder that, after the most unwonted energy on the part of the officers, which no state on the wide globe can better display, there is a sudden lassitude, the edicts lose their power, and a great reaction takes place.

A number of officers has been promoted for their talent, the majority have bought their appointments, or stand indebted for their advancement to patronage. With few exceptions they are as well versed in the art of acquiring money as any Celestial, and make the most of their station. Venality is therefore an inherent vice, and all the branches that yield to them large profits, are certain to find in them powerful protectors. None however appear to have furnished such large and illicit gains as the traffic in Opium, and it is therefore very evident, that they were anxious to uphold it. Whatever may be the proclamations or fiscal regulations, matter nothing; so long as they materially interfere with the interests of the men who issue them, they will never be faithfully executed; a few victims are brought to satisfy the demands of the law, but the evil still continues to operate with destructive power under the fostering care of the rulers. Such is the real state of things in this country.

We do not believe, that so much ingenuity has been shewn any where, as in the introduction of this poison. The junks for Singapore and other places bought generally as much as their funds would admit. Every Chinaman on board laid out the spare money in the purchase of this commodity, and went perhaps with two or three balls back to his country. On the arrival of these vessels at Canton, Chaouchoo, Amooy, and Shanghai, the commander either struck at once a bargain for the whole cargo of legal or illegal articles, or left it to every man on board to manage best how to get his share on shore. In all these ports a regular tariff, varying from 20 to 100 dollars per chest, had been established. The money then received was carefully distributed amongst all the influential Mandarins, who received this gratuity under various names. The men who directly traded with the smugglers had bought their appointments at a high price, and by paying this money with the occasional presents, they exempted them from all blame of participating personally in these illicit gains, and took upon themselves the whole responsibility. It was next to impossible to escape the vigilance of these myrmidons, who kept up the closest connexion with the principal smugglers, and were acquainted to the most minute details with all their proceedings. Whenever therefore a cunning merchant tried to elude them, he fell often a victim to their revenge, was denounced, and punished according to the law. In this way went things on for months together, when on a sudden an edict from the court or from the Provincial Governor appeared, fierce and threatening; then it was that the most noted transgressors of the law were taken into custody and severely punished by confiscation of their property and not seldom banishment, especially if they had forgotten to pay the customary fees. A temporary stoppage ensued, the bribes were raised; gradually things flowed again into the old channel, until the payment, on account of the easy mode of eluding the revenue officers, was reduced to such a minimum as to render the proclamation of new prohibitions necessary.

Not however satisfied with the gains proceeding from intermediate persons, the local government often determined upon taking the matter into its own hands. In this enterprize the naval and revenue officers rendered themselves most conspicuous. Having almost reduced the whole smuggling by vigilance and severity to nothing, and thus raised the premium to a considerable degree, their own vessels became the carriers, they themselves engaged often largely in the traffic, and having enriched themselves, paid a very large sum of money to the most influential personages in the province or at court to obviate accusations. Such was the state of things in almost every sea port, and even at Tientsin, though situated near the capital.

The question has again and again been asked by foreigners, how could such corruption be suffered to exist? But let it be remembered that money is all powerful in this country and that courtiers, princes of the blood, and ministers of state, shared indirectly in these profits and were generally well informed of all that was going on. They have been pointed out by censors, again and again been denounced, but only in a few instances suffered condign punishment, for they possessed that most powerful of al-means to put a stop to legal prosecutions—silver.

The great central point from whence the poison overflowed the country was doubtless Canton. Numerous vessels, each with several hundred chests on board, proceeded every year to Keang nan and Chih le where they sold the drug with very great profit. In Teen tsin where the river is very narrow, and smuggling to any extent next to impossible, these junks effected notwithstanding enormous sales. During August, September, and October, capitalists from Peking, the Northern and Western Provinces, and even from Manchoo Tatary, flocked thither in crowds and bought la ge quantities of this commodity. Thus it happened, that the opium spread its baneful influence not only to the court, but to the very verge of the Empire, and was even smoked in Turkestan. The transit could only be effected with great difficulties. for it was impossible to fee all the custom house stations on the road. Various devices were therefore used in packing and disguising the drug, and it passed often as tea, oil clothes, and furs. To make it still however more secure, many civilians, who were removed to other ports of the Empire, took it amongst their luggage and thus prevented search. Mandarins, whose duty rendered constant travelling necessary, became dealers to a large amount, and escaped until lately with impunity. Without their cooperation the maritime provinces might have been infested, but opium could never have reached the central districts. From the frequent reports however it appears that this dreadful scourge has penetrated and afflicted the whole Empire, and that poverty alone has opposed the only effectual bar against its introduction. With the train of an examinator or during the circuit of a judge it was scattered far and wide; a conscientious custom house officer could not check its introduction, and the organisation of a complete system of corruption put it beyond the reach of patriotic civilians. To make matters still worse; the people begun to cultivate the poppy to a large extent in the interior, and especially in Yun nan and Che kiang, and as their drug was powerless they mixed it with the foreign commodity, and thus most materially contributed towards propagating the vice.

BANISHMENT AND TRANSPORTATION.

From times immemorial it has been a leading principle of the Chinese Government, to remove those dangerous persons who by their example would spread the contagion of vice. History tells us, that unruly statesmen being sent to the neighbouring Barbarian states, so much influenced these rude children of nature, as to effect an entire regeneration. The present code of laws still enforces banishment, which is of a threefold nature. The worst class of criminals have their faces branded, and are according to their doom sent to a distance of 2000 to 3000 miles from their native place. Persons who have not so much transgressed against the law receive a mark on their arm, which is however indelible, whilst others for slighter peccadilloes are merely sent into another Province. Put under the surveillance of a military commander, they may be allowed to walk about in perfect freedom, if they have money to pay for this indulgence. otherwise they are subjected to great hardships and treated with great rigor. The place of their new abode is generally in such Provinces which differ materially in climate and productions from their homes. Government does not seem to support them, so that they are often exposed to great want, and we ourselves have met several who were in a starving condition. Some are banished for life, others only for a few years, and on memorable occasions, or at times of general calamity, the Chinese monarch promulgates an universal amnesty, and they are all permitted to return. Such instances occur frequently.

Transportation is far worse. A native of the southern provinces is sent to the northwestern frontiers or to the river Amour, where cold and hunger, and the ferocious treatment of the soldiers, upon whom the criminals are bestowed as slaves. in many instances put very soon an end to their life Some however manage to get through all difficulties, ingratiate themselves with the military, try to render themselves useful, and not seldom escape to Bukharia, where with their customary industry they try to amass a little fortune. The worst malefactors are sent to the Amour, the Siberia of China. Here they have to pass their lives under dreadful deprivations and a severe climate, occupied in the most fatiguing work, with scarcely rags sufficient to cover their nakedness, and deprived of the means to satisfy their craving appetite. Few only can endure this hardship and surrounded with ice and snow, it is in vain to endeavour to escape. Mogul and Mantchoo Tatar convicts are sent to Yunnan or some unhealthy districts where the pestilential climate soon finishes them. Transportation in all its rigor can only be viewed as a lingering death; but there is something to alleviate its peril, viz—the permission of enjoying the company of one's families and the tender attentions of wife and children.

Some mandarines and linguists have been sent from Canton to Hongkong to investigate an affair that has taken place on shore there a fortnight since, being, as we are told, an affray between some sailors and Chinese, in which one of the latter is said to have been killed and others severely maltreated. We have not yet heard the result of the investigation.

The Peking Gazettes are filled, we are told, with reports from many of the Provinces regarding the suppression of the Opium-traffick and smoking. Many officers have been promoted for the success their efforts have met with, and the receipt of sundry quantities of the drug that had been seized is acknowledged by the Peking Government. But here and there bitter complaints have reached the government, that its officers avail themselves of the terror of the new laws to extort money, and to punish innocent persons. Several special cases of this sort are recorded in the Gazette, as likewise the imperial indignation at such practices, threatening severe punishment to officers thus offending and promising that the greatest care shall be had not to involve the innocent in the punishment of the guilty. From two provinces also the officers report that, since the people find it impossible to obtain any more Opium, they have found a substitute equally intoxicating but much more expensive. What this substitute may be these reports say not, it being called in them by probably a slang-name, which our informant does not remember to have met with before. May this not be a decoction of the hemp-flower, so extensively used for intoxication in the south of Russia, in Tartary and in a great many parts of India? If so, we fear the Chinese have made a bad exchange, the effects of the "bang" being much worse on those that use it for intoxication than even Opium.

In another column will be found a communication to us from Messrs Olyphant & Co. respecting an account we inserted last week of the signing of the bond required by the Chinese government previous to ships being allowed at Whampoa to discharge their cargo. Messrs Olyphant & Co. call it "an attempt" to fasten upon them the questionable honor of being the first to give into a very tyrannical law etc. but as far as we understand the communication of which these gentlemen complain, it's correctness as to facts is corroborated by their own letter, the only difference being on the opinion as to whether it is a "questionable honor" to have signed first or not. On this point we agree with Messrs Olyphant, that it was not worth while delaying the ships, their Captains being once resolved to sign the bond, merely because they were both in the Chinese and English languages. The ships at Whampoa had given them no cue into the power of the Chinese knowing that this bond was required of them, and their commanders and consignees were willing therefore. we may presume, to do what the Chinese asked of them; it was consequently of no use to delay the settlement any longer for so immaterial a point, particularly as it was far from certain that refusal to sign, as the Chinese demanded, would have made these retract, they being much better able patiently to wait the issue than the ships laying at Whampoa on a heavy demurrage.

We now have a few remarks to make on Mr. King's proposed "form of Certificate." Believing, as we do, this gentleman sincere in his wishes to do away with the use of Opium in China, we can find no fault with his offer to assist the Emperor in suppressing the Opium traffick. and hope that the two together may succeed, but we are not astonished that the Chinese should not have consented to allow the Morrison to discharge on the terms proposed by him, it being impossible for them to change their laws and customs at the suggestion only of one individual of a foreign nation. If the punishment which Mr. King awards to his countrymen for smuggling of Opium, of "perpetual banishment" be merely meant that the culprit is to return to his own, never more to visit this country, it is no punishment at all. but if it be, as it will probably be understood by the Chinese, perpetual banishment into the Chinese penal settlements, his countrymen have no reason to thank Mr King for modifying their doom; and this being once suffered, there can be no apprehension of the culprit repeating the offence for which in such case he is to "suffer death, as inflicted on the native." Objectionable, therefore, as appears to us the spirit of this "certificate," as well as that of the "bond" already signed, as giving a handle to the exercise of injustice and oppression by the Chinese it appears still more so to us that an individual of a nation should, without the sanction of his government, attempt entering into a sort of treaty with a foreign nation by which he not only acknowledges the justice of an atrociously bloody law, of which the codes of his country know nothing, but holds good also that his countrymen should be punished according to it, thus disposing of their liberty and lives. It is transgressing the faculties belonging to a private individual and such certificate just as well as the bond is, as Messrs Olyphant & Co well express it, a legal nullity, which will only serve as record that, to obtain a temporary advantage, foreigners have allowed themselves to be forced by the Chinese into the approval of a sanguinary law being held over them in terrorem, which their own most enlightened legislature abhors.

Analogies. Foreign residents in China have not only recently, but on many previous occasions, had to complain of the want of discrimination on the part of the Chinese, in inflicting punishment alike on the guilty and innocent. This to any one acquainted with the laws and usages of the country will appear little singular, natives being punished in the same manner; f. i. a whole family for the crime of a single member. and whole villages and communities for that of a family. But this usage which is so very repugnant to our present notions of justice, obtained some centuries ago with regard to foreigners in most countries in Europe. Macculloch tells us, in his articles on treaties, that "at one time it "was usual in England to make aliens liable for "the debts and crimes of each other", and it was stipulated by Edward II. in 1325 "that the mer- "chants and mariners of Venice should have power "to come to England, for 10 years, with liberty to "sell their merchandize and to return home in "safety" without having either their persons or "goods stopped on account of other people's crimes "or debts." International treaties and the progress of civilization and, with it, a better understanding of the principles of justice have long since abolished this barbarous usage in Europe, the last and latest remnant of which was the "droit d'aubaine" entirely abolished we believe only by the revolution in France, and according to which the King of France or the lord of the Barony inherited the property left by aliens deceased in France.

We hear from Canton, that the authorities have at length listened to the representations of the outside dealers, and allow them in future as before to occupy their shops in new and old China street, subject however to some new regulations, one of which is that such of the shops as now lean against the foreign factories are to be separated from them by a wall, leaving an intermediate space of three cubits, and bamboo palisadoes to be put a the top so as to prevent any one from that side to have access to the factories. No outside dealers are to be allowed in future to enter the foreign hongs at all, but foreigners having dealings with them are to go to their shops; Hoqlane, which was blocked up during our imprisonment at Canton. so as to prevent egress from thence into the square, has been opened again.

Rumours have been some time prevailing of the Imperial Commissioner being about to visit Macao, or at least Casa branca, but nothing certain is known. It is also said that the Imperial Government has expressed itself discontented with the Commissioner's report of the voluntary surrender by foreigners of the Opium, whilst the coercive measures he had used to obtain his object were well known at Peking, and the he was held responsible for all the consequences. This may somewhat lessen Lin's exultation at his success.

We have received from the Register the account given by a Gentleman who made one of a party on a visit lately to Chumpee to be witnesses of the destruction of the Opium. From this account it would seem that great care was taken to render that destruction as complete as possible, and to guard against theft. It will also be seen that two of the party had an interview with the Commissioner and a long conversation.

By the Sultana from Bombay and Singapore we have not received our Bombay papers, and only a Price Current of the Singapore Free Press of 4th instant, from which we copy the following, as likewise some extracts from late Bombay papers kindly lent to us. The Good Success had arrived at Madras, and the delivery of the Opium had become known at Bombay. We copy some resolutions of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, and want of room obliges us to postpone the insertion of the Petition of the Parsees of Bombay to the British Government, praying for prompt payment of the value of the Opium delivered to Captain Elliot for the service of the British crown. The news from China had created great distress in the money market, and shaken confidence.

Before the Rover's arrival there was scarcely a chest of the Bengal drug left in the market, and sales of a chest or two at a time were making at ₹ 190 @ 195, cash and ₹ 200, 2 mos., but since then about 140 @ 130 chests of Benares have been sold @ ₹ 120 @ 125, cash, and @ ₹ 120 @ 130, 2 mos. If we have no further arrivals for a fortnight, prices may be expected to improve, but as the Tenasserim, Selph and other vessels are looked for in a few days, with further considerable supplies, and as the 5th Sale, consisting of about 4,500 Chests, to take place on the 1st instant, was not expected to average more than 180 Rs per chest, holders are anxious to realize.

"At a General Meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, held on Monday last, the following resolutions were passed unanimously, viz:

As one of the objects of the Chamber of Commerce is to protect, in every way, the general interests of the trade of this Presidency, and, as it appears of great importance, to those interests, that an early declaration should be made of the intention of Her Majesty's Government, respecting the promised guarantee of Captain Elliot to the holders of Opium in China. It is resolved that a letter should be addressed, by this meeting, by the overland Mail now under dispatch, to the different East India and China Associations in Great Britain, soliciting their powerful co-operation in inducing Government to make known, as early as possible, the course which it means to pursue towards the Claimants for compensation.

2. Resolved.—That, as the Despatches from Captain Elliot, communicating the late occurrences in China, will attract public attention to the general question of our commercial relations with China, the letter, now to be addressed to the different Associations, also solicit them to urge on H. M. Government the propriety of availing itself of this opportunity to establish this important trade on a more secure and permanent footing than has yet prevailed; And that, as the system hitherto practised by the Court of Directors, for their financial operations with India, has, occasionally, been found to have an injurious effect on Mercantile operations in this Country and China, a brief allusion be also made to that subject, that it may not escape attention, and with a view to some beneficial alteration.

3 Resolved.—That the letter now read be adopted and forwarded without delay to the different East India and China Associations in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, Newcastle and Hull—and that copies be sent to all public and private Companies interested in the India and China trade.

4. Resolved.—That copies be also sent to the Chambers of Commerce at Calcutta and Madras.—Bombay Times, 5th June.

The following is the result of the labours of the Committee appointed at the meeting of British merchants held on the 12th and 17 June:

CAPTAIN CHARLES ELLIOT,
CHIEF SUPERINTENDENT OF THE TRADE OF BRITISH SUBJECTS IN CHINA.

SIR,

With reference to the interview of the Committee appointed at the Public Meeting held at Messrs Dent & Co's Office on 12th and 17th June, with you, on the 8th Instant, I am now directed to hand you the enclosed Copy of the notes of a meeting of that Committee, with a proposed Scale of Demurrage for Ships now lying in the outer Anchorages.

I am particularly to call to your attention that the Committee do not profess, in the absence of legal decisions on any strictly analogous cases, to determine on what parties any claim for Demurrage may eventually fall, the point being one which it may be necessary to determine in the English Courts of Law, unless the British Government should, by admitting in the first instance, the validity of the claim on them, render any such reference unnecessary.

In regard to such Ships as may be partially loaded, and be desirous of transhipping their Goods to other Vessels, it appears to the Committee that such transhipment could only be made, on the Government, or you as their Representative, taking the responsibility of insurance, in so much as the Owners and Consignees of Goods at present hold the underwriters liable under the original policies of insurance, and cannot be expected to perform any act, which would release them from that liability, without some other equally effectual security.

The Committee are clearly of opinion that as the ultimate incidence of the payment for Demurrage must be left for adjustment by the British Government, or Courts of Law, the Consignees of Goods here cannot be expected to make any payment on that account, and as Goods cannot be detained except for Freight, the Captain and Consignees of Vessels should see for their demurrage in England, under protests to be made and recorded here.

In cases of transhipment, the Consignees of Goods, the Committee apprehend, will hold the Ships liable for eventual due Delivery of the Cargo under the original Bills of Lading; and transhipment would therefore be most properly made the subject of arrangement between the Captain or Consignees of the Ship bringing the Goods, and those of the Vessel to which they may be transferred:

And with this view the Committee consider that, should, under special circumstances, such transhipment become necessary, the hiring of the requisite Store Ships would rest with H. M. Superintendent; who could best decide on the necessity of that measure, with reference to the particular merits of each individual case.

Should you have any suggestions or observations to make with reference to the enclosed paper, or the remarks connected with it, I shall be happy to receive and communicate them to the Committee.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most Obt. Humble Servt.
GEORGE T. BRAINE,
Chairman.

Macao, 10th July, 1839.

Notes of an adjourned meeting of the Committee appointed at the public meeting held at Dent & Co's Office on 17th June.—present:

W. Dent.
A. C. Magniac.
D. Rustomjee.
C. Kerr.
A. Jardine.
O. Smith, and
G. T. Braine—Chairman.

1. In accordance with a suggestion made by Captain Elliot in a personal interview, the Committee consider it desirable to frame a scale of demurrage for Goods on board Ships now lying at the outer Anchorages.

2. At the same time the Committee deem it proper to record their opinion that in the absence of any decided cases of strictly analogous character to the present position of matters in China, they are not competent to form any conclusion as to whether the Ships have a valid claim for demurrage, and if demurrage be actually due, on whom such claim may equitably fall; the object of forming the proposed scale being merely to establish uniformity of practice in respect to the rate of charge.

1. The Committee consider it desirable to divide the Vessels for Whampoa into three Classes.

2nd " from 350 @ 600 " "
3rd " under 350 " "

2. The Committee are of opinion that demurrage, if due, might fairly, under the circumstances, commence one month after arrival in Macao Roads, or Hongkong; but in no case to begin until one Month after the date of Captain Elliot's public notice of 23rd March 1839.

3. The Committee have thought it desirable to propose the following Scale, as a reasonable claim for demurrage on the part of the Owners of the Ships.

1. Ships from India.

Per Measum.

On Cotton 1st Class Ships, 30 cents ₹ Bale of 300 lbs
2nd do. 20 " " "
3rd do. 15 " " "
Sandalwood & Fish maws 20 " ₹ Pl. in all Ships.
Saltpetre, Rice, Betelnut,
Pepper, Tin, & any other
India Produce not enumerated. 10 " ₹ Pl. in all Ships.

2. Ships from England.

Measurement Goods ₹ 24 per Ton of 50 cubic feet.
Metals and other dead weight ₹1 per Ton of 20 cwt.

GEORGE T. BRAINE.
Chairman.

Macao 15th July 1839.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 10th Instant, and I beg you to convey to the Committee my thanks for the attention they have afforded me on this occasion.

My own opinion is concurrent with theirs that the determination of the parties upon whom any charge for demurrage should eventually fall must be left to the decision of the Courts in England.

Respecting ships partially unloaded, and which it may be desired to discharge, I am ready, for convenience sake, to undertake the public responsibility of it (arrange of any goods or produce (not contraband in the country) transhipped for me to Canton) into British bottoms. Upon an understanding, however, that the charge should devolve upon the shippers, if it should hereafter be legally determined that the Master, under all the circumstances of the case, would have been justified in making such deposit, at the risk of the Merchant.

I agree with the Committee that as the ultimate incidence of the payment for demurrage must be determined in England, it is not reasonable that any payment should be made here on that account. It is likewise my impression that the terms of transhipment should most properly be left for arrangement between the masters and consignees of the carrying ships, and those of the vessel to which they may be transferred.

The opinion of the Committee, concerning transhipment at all, expressed in the last paragraph of your letter, is coincident with my own.

I have the honor to remain,
Sir, Your most Obedient Humble Servant
CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

VOL. 4. No. 43. Macao, Saturday, 27th July, 1839. No. 199.

OFFICIAL PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Macao 26th July 1839.

In obedience to an order of His late Most Excellent Majesty in Council, dated on the ninth day of December one thousand eight hundred and thirty three made in pursuance of the provisions of an Act of Parliament of the 3rd and 4th year of His late Majesty's Reign entitled "An Act to regulate the Trade of China and India":

The following rules of practice and proceeding are hereby promulgated, to be observed in the Court of Justice with Criminal and Admiralty Jurisdiction, created in the aforesaid order in Council, for the trial of offences committed by Her Majesty's Subjects within the Dominions of the Emperor of China and the Ports and Havens thereof, and in the high seas within one hundred miles of the coast of China.

SECTION I.

Concerning Arrest.

RULE 1.

No Subject of Her Majesty to be arrested for trial under this Jurisdiction unless charged upon oath of one or more credible Persons before the Chief Superintendent, or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent, with such an offence as will justify holding him to bail when taken.

RULE 2.

Arrest may be made in three ways

First, by warrant under the hand and Seal of the Chief Superintendent, or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent (see Appendix No. 1.)

Second, by word of Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent (or at the Stations of the British Shipping) by any Magistrate or Quarter master of the Police, in the emergency only of any Subject of Her Majesty committing a sudden and dangerous breach of the Peace, or felony in their respective presence.

Third, in the absence of other competent authority by any Subjects of Her Majesty, who shall by such means be able to prevent the commission of a felonious offence by any other subject of Her Majesty.

RULE 3.

Officers or others charged with the execution of Warrants of arrest to exercise the like authority, to be entitled to the like immunities, and to be liable to the like penalties for unlawful proceedings as officers or others executing the Warrants of the Courts oyer and terminer in England.

SECTION II.

Of Commitment.

RULE 1.

When a Person charged with a crime be arrested He is to be brought before the Persons named in the Warrant for examination,

RULE 2.

Persons conducting examinations not to take any subsequent part in any capacity, in the trial of the Prisoner, examined before them.

RULE 3.

Examination of Prisoner, and the information of person brought with him or having any knowledge of the alleged crime to be taken in writing. Witness only to be sworn

RULE 4.

If it shall plainly appear that no such crime has been committed by the Prisoner, He is to be discharged, otherwise to be detained for safe custody (see appendix No. 2.) till the Examinations can be submitted to the Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent, for further disposal.

RULE 5.

Persons authorized to examine, to be sworn, and to have the like Powers with respect to summoning of witness (being subjects of Her Majesty) as are herein after vested in the Court, and British Subjects refusing to attend the Summons of Examiners to be liable to the penalties herein after provided for failure of attendance (see appendix No. 3 for form of subpoena.)

SECTION III.

Of Bail.

RULE 1.

The Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent to have the like power in respect to bail as belong of Law and Usage to the Court of Queen's Bench in England; and to be liable for refusal or delay in the case of bailable offences to the like penalties as Magistrates in England.

RULE 2

If the Prisoner be not bailed, to be committed by Warrant under the hand and Seal of the Chief Superintendent, or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent, to take his trial for the offence charged against Him.

RULE 3.

The principles and practice of the Law of England to obtain with respect to the time in which a Prisoner should be placed on his trial, or within which Prosecution for past offences, committed in this Jurisdiction, should be instituted.

SECTION IV.

Of the manner of Prosecution.

RULE 1.

In all cases falling under the Jurisdiction of this Court, to be by way, only, of Indictment preferred to, and presented on oath by a Grand Jury.

RULE 2.

Recording officer of the Court to return every Session 24 good and lawful Subjects of Her Majesty, habitually resident in China, to enquire, present, do, and execute all those things which on the part of Our Lady the Queen shall then and there be commanded them.

RULE 3.

Grand Jury to be sworn to the amount of twelve at the least, and not more than 23, so that twelve may be a majority.

RULE 4.

In the finding of the Indictment twelve of the Jury at least must concur, and the Grand inquetes to be conducted generally, according to the principles and practice of the English Law.

RULE 5.

Persons above 70 years of age, or persons laboring under sickness, Surgeons, Officers of the Queen, in actual public employment, may be exempted from serving on Grand or Petit Juries, on claiming privilege.

SECTION V.

Of Process.

RULE 1.

Sessions to be declared from time to time by Public Notice under the hand and Seal of the Chief Superintendent and all Persons Her Majesty's Subjects upon any account concerned therein to be attending at the time and place so fixed by Public Notice.

RULE 2.

Court to have the like power and pursue the like course as the Courts of Oyer and Terminer (as far as the Difference of circumstances will permit) for compelling Defendants to appear not in actual custody upon certificate of Indictment found.

RULE 3.

Arraignment to be in the manner, and subject to the rules of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England.

RULE 4.

If the Prisoner "stands mute" or "confesses the fact" Court to proceed agreeably to the practice of the Court of Oyer and Terminer in England.

SECTION VI.

Of the Pleas and General Issue.

RULE 1.

Pleas to be allowed to Prisoner according to the Practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England.

RULE 2

Herein the Prisoner shall be entitled to request any Person being a Subject of Her Majesty (and having due sanction of the Court) to support on his behalf any point of Law which may arise proper to be debated.

RULE 3.

Court to proceed herein agreeably to the principles of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England, but with especial regard to the general scope and intention of the particular Laws under which, and the objects for which, this Court is created.

SECTION VII.

Of Trial.

RULE 1.

Recording Officer of the Court to return at every Session a pannel of 24 good and lawful Subjects of Her Majesty, either habitually or occasionally resident in this Jurisdiction to the end that twelve thereof may try and make deliverance between our Sovereign Lady the Queen, and any Prisoner placed at the bar of the Court for offences committed within this jurisdiction, according to the principles and practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England

RULE 2.

Regard being had to local circumstances the Prisoner shall have no privilege of peremptory challenge, but only for cause, to be determined according to the Practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England'

RULE 3

Trial to be had, and evidence to be taken, both in the prosecution and defence in the manner and subject, as far as circumstances may permit, to the principles and practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England.

RULE 4.

If it should be impossible for the trial to conclude in one day the Court regard being had to local circumstances) shall have the power to adjourn from day to day without confinement of Jury, swearing them "neither to speak themselves to any other person than one of their own number, nor to suffer any other person to speak to them touching any matter relative to this trial."

RULE 5.

In respect of illness or death of Jurors, Court to proceed agreeably to the Practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England'

RULE 6.

Verdict to be found agreeably to the practice of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England i. e. by unanimous decision of the Jury, and upon both the Law and the Fact.

RULE 7.

Court to have the power of sending the Jury to reconsider their verdict.

RULE 8.

When the Prisoner is convicted, sentence is to be pronounced by the Chief Superintendent in the manner declared in the Order in Council, and when the Prisoner is acquitted upon the merits, he is for ever free and discharged upon that accusation.

RULE 9.

When the acquittal arises from a defect in the proceedings and cannot be pleaded, the Prisoner may be detained in safe custody by Warrant of the Court, to be indicted in such a manner as may fulfil the ends of Justice.

SECTION VIII.

Of the mode of compelling Jurors Grand and Petit to perform their duties, and witnesses to attend.

RULE. 1.

A Person being a subject of Her Majesty (not herein before excused) who shall fail to perform his duties as a Grand or Petit Juror, being duly summoned by the Recording Officer of the Court shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 for the first offence, or $250 for the second (at the discretion of the Court) to be for the use of Her Majesty.

RULE. 2.

Any Subject of Her Majesty whose evidence may be necessary to prove or disprove any Indictment, may be bound over under sufficient surety by the Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent to appear and give evidence at the trial of the Prisoner: And the Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent shall determine the amount of reasonable penalty according to the circumstances of the case.

RULE. 3.

In the case of Witnesses about to leave the Country upon urgent business, they may be examined by the consent of the Prisoner as well as the Chief Superintendent upon interrogatories before the Chief Superintendent or in his absence the Deputy Superintendent.

RULE. 4.

Citizens or Subjects of foreign states whose evidence may be desirable to prove or disprove an Indictment shall be invited for the satisfaction of the ends of Justice to appear before the Court; But failing attendance the Jury to deliver their verdict upon the best evidence before them.

SECTION. IX.

Reprieve, and "Judgment"

RULE 1.

In these respects the Court to be guided by the principles and practice of the Lawof England and to have the like powers, which belong of right to the Judges in the Courts of Oyer and Terminer in England.

CONCLUSION.

And Notice is hereby further given, that these Rules of Practice and Proceeding shall take effect from the date hereof, and are binding till the same be disallowed by Command of Her Majesty.

RECENT OUTRAGE ON THE WEST COAST.—From the following statement, which we take from the Penang Gazette of 1st instant, it would appear that it is not Captain THIBAUD of the French brig Dorade that was lately murdered on the West Coast of Sumatra, as we reported in our number of the 13th inst, on the authority of Captain VAN YSEGHEM of the French barque L' Aglae:—

"The French ship Hercule which arrived on Thursday last from the West Coast of Sumatra, brings, we are extremely sorry to say, a confirmation of the report which reached this by the brig Echo of the murder, by the Malays of Muckie, of Captain VAN YSEGHEM, of the French barque L' Aglae, which sailed hence on the 17th March last, and of the subsequent seizure of the vessel by the Malays of Boalussama for an alleged debt. We gather these few particulars from a letter dated Origue 8th May addressed to a gentleman here by Captain MORTIN of the French barque Diadeh which also sailed from this for the West Coast on the 17th April."

Our private advices from Penang concur with this account, except as to the locality of the disaster, which is stated to be Rigas and not Muckie,—they add that Captain VAN YSEGHEM, met his death at the hands of an Achinese chief with whom he had a dispute while engaged in weighing some Pepper,—the Achinese employed abusive language towards Captain VAN Y. which he is said to have resented by a blow, upon which the former immediately drew his kris and stabbed him on the spot. It was Captain VAN YSEGHEM, who communicated to the public, through the medium of the Penang Paper, in October last the account of the murder of Captain WILKINS of the American ship Eclipse at Muckie,—and it would appear that Captain DURANDON had confounded the circumstances attending that catastrophe, with those of the more recent act of violence of which Capt. VAN Y. himself has been the victim.—Sing. Free Press 27th June.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

DEAR SIR,

As you have taken the freedom to give currency to an anonymous report of a late meeting held at Canton, respecting the new certificate, at which I attended on the part of Olyphant & Co., you will of course allow your readers a sight of the enclosed report of the meeting as made by the Secretary.

I need only add that no part of the responsibility of the late proceedings rests in me, except for the preference, that the form which had been agreed on by all parties, should if necessary be signed in both languages and also printed, to prevent Chinese alteration.

It is entirely untrue, that any influence was used by me, to induce Captain Bowers to sign the certificate; our own choice being to sign it ourselves, or at least to share the risk, if there be any, with our Captains.

Indeed I think it desirable that the certificate should have the signature of the Consignees also, in order to prevent any renewed connection between the Opium trade and foreign factories.

I am very truly &c.

Mr. W. S. Wetmore was elected chairman and Mr. W. R. Lejee Secretary. The chairman stated to the meeting that the object for which they had been convened, was to take into consideration the propriety of ship masters signing the newly prepared Bond, written in the Chinese characters in place of English as heretofore. Whereupon Mr. Delano submitted the following Resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Forbes and carried unanimously.

Resolved that we, the American merchants and ship-masters present, forming a large majority of the whole number now in China, hereby enter our solemn protest against signing any document in the Chinese language. We consider such a precedent as dangerous to us, and owing to the want of a proper interpreter in which we might constantly have recourse, we cannot consent to sign any paper which we do not understand.

2nd. It was then proposed by Mr. Forbes, and seconded by Mr. Nye, that a committee be appointed to wait upon Howqua, and convey to him the contents of the first resolution, whereupon the following Committee were appointed: Mr. W. S. Wetmore, Capt Benson of Ship Rouble, Capt. King of Ship Paris, Capt. Johnson of Ship Cynthia, Capt Benson of Ship Morrison, and Capt Johnston of Ship Sabina.

Capt. King then expressed his opinion that enquiries should be made, and information obtained, if practicable, whether the Bond now under consideration had originated with the Imperial commissioner, the viceroy, or the Hong-merchants.

The Meeting was then dissolved.

REPORT.

The Committee appointed this morning at a meeting of American Merchants and Ship Masters assembled at the American consulate, beg leave to report as follows.

"That they called upon Howqua and informed him of the contents of the Resolutions passed this morning by the American Merchants and Ship masters now in Canton.

Howqua observed that he was surprised that there should be any objections on the part of the ship masters to sign the Bond as now written in Chinese characters, particularly as Mr Forbes had given his assent to it; and under this assent and concurrence of Mr. Forbes he had acted and arranged the matter with the high officers of Government, and that he could not now, without subjecting himself to be accused of duplicity, make known to the Authorities the Resolutions submitted to him by your Committee.

Howqua further remarked that he advised Mr. Forbes, not to agree to sign the Bond written in the Chinese Characters, and he should not have promised the Authorities that it would be so signed had not Mr. Forbes given it his full concurrence and assent. Howqua suggested that the Bond and translation might be printed, so as to prevent any alterations, and it might be signed between the Chinese characters and the translation if thought more advisable.

Your Committee are sorry to say, Howqua evinced no disposition to yield to the wishes of the Meeting, and from what they could understand from him they see no hopes of getting the American Ships cleared, unless the extraordinary demands of the Authorities are submitted to.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

As you reassert in your paper of the 20th, the charge, that we were "the first to give in to a tyrannical Chinese law, which compels people to put their names to they know not what," we again state

1st. That we were not the first to bring vessels within the Bogue, an act which you (and many others) pronounce, a virtual assent to the Bond, &c.

cause it placed the ships in the power of the Chinese.

2d. We were not the first to confer on, agree to, or present, a bond; for the form sent you in our last (for explanation's sake) was anticipated by the movements of others, and never seen nor rejected, by the Chinese.

3d. We were not the first to sign the bond, either in English or Chinese, for the initials of the Representative of Mess. Russell & Co. were first attached to it, on the demand of the Senior Hong-merchant; whereupon the signed paper was submitted to the local officers, and it became impossible to retract.

The enclosed memorandum made by a Gentleman present at the meeting, along with the Secretary's report, will satisfy you on this point.

4th. If we had been first, to sign the certificate, it would not have been a yielding to a demand, to sign "we knew not what." The original had been submitted to two translators at Cantou, and as many more at Macao; and no doubt rested on the sense. It is as untrue, of the signers, that they signed in ignorance, as it is of the whole Community, including the Consuls, in the signature they have affixed, within the last few months.

With these remark's, we leave the Bond, to such an Editorial amende, as your own fairness and gentlemanly feeling may suggest.

As respects the Editorial in your last, we need only say—that we have not turned upon the Opium trade, because it has lost countfavor; for the same views, which now operate to make us ready to give every pledge to the Chinese made us abhor the traffic, when it was lucrative and safe. These views have long been known to all in our employ, (and we do no busine.s but our own) and any connexion with Opium is therefore a breach of contract with us. It is not we who dispose of the lives and properties of such as may transgress the Chinese regulations; for our part is, and has long been, by plying timely warning, and not temptation, to preserve both safe. If we admit to the Chinese Government, that its laws are just, it is, to make them such, by securing a practical safeguard against corruption or mistake.

In our own country, we should oppose any interference by Government with religion, morals, or popular tastes. There, public opinion is the better agent. But in China, under its present polity and actual circumstances, we think its measures for the suppression of the Opium trade a mercy to the people, and therefore, we choose to comply with the requisitions, which it deems necessary, to its own success.

As to the term—perpetual banishment—it of course meant, the penalty which has lately been inflicted on a number of our fellow—residents. It was suggested by us, Mr. Editor because it was already in practice, and because it was light; though far from being "no punishment at all" as you say; we all know, it has in some late cases, been severely felt.

The fact is, Mr. Editor, that with all our declamation about Chinese atrocity &c., and in the face of our late losses and humiliations, THE OPIUM TRADE REVIVES; and there is great danger, that a few months will bring parties to Canton or Whampoa, to meet the native dealers, and concert for the deliveries of the drug along the coast. We all know, that the first discovery of such a secret connexion will again awaken the indignation of the Chinese Government, and heavy penalties fall upon the innocent.

With these hazards before us, and with no foreign flag over us, are we to be told, that we, private men—transgress our bounds, in answering the demands of the Government which controls us, and are the interests of the absent to be sacrificed to this nonsense? Or are we not safe, while within the precedents of our diplomatic Codes while stipulating in the absence of every public representative, for the very guaranties, the British Government is contending for, and which have satisfied our own even in the states of Barbary?

I am glad, that the "enlightened legislature" of America are moving toward entire disuse of Capital punishments, and I trust with you, that both the Chinese and British Governments will soon catch the same spirit, and thus relieve the alien within their boundaries, from those bloody statutes, which are now, with all the friends of humanity, matters of equal abhorrence.

very truly &c.

OLYPHANT & Co.

Canton July 22d.

After the Report of the Committee had been read.

Mr. Forbes, of the house of Mess Russell & Co., remarked in explanation, that Howqua had mis understood him, when he said that he, Mr. Forbes agreed that the Bond should be signed, written in Chinese Characters, by the American Ship Masters. It was true that Howqua did shew him a Bond written in Chinese, the contents of which he explained, and then enquired if it would answer and the American Captains would sign it? to which Interrogatory Mr. Forbes replied, he thought they would Howqua then said, before any further steps were taken, it was necessary that Mr. Forbes should put his initials to the Chinese bond as PROOF OF ACCURANCE, WITCH Mr. FORBES COMPLIED WITH. but in doing it, Mr. Forbes observed, he never intended to do more, than to agree, that the Bond should be signed in the English language.

Mr. Forbes then went on to state if Howqua really understood him, that the Bond should be signed in the Chinese language, in consequence of his having put his initials to the Bond, he would then sign the Bond himself for Captains King and Remmington.

After this assertion of Mr. Forbes, Capt. Benson of the Rouble demanded, that his consignee, Mr. Delano, of the house of Russell Sturgis & Co. should sign the Bond for him in the event of Mr. Forbes doing it for Captains King and Remmington, which Mr. Delano promised should be done.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

Although we have but little time or taste for Newspaper controversy we consider it our duty to ourselves to put the matter alluded to in your paper of the 20th inst., and signed Olyphant & Co. upon a proper footing, and as we are therein directly and pointedly alluded to, we now attempt to do so. Whatever our Agency has been in the matter of the Bond we have tried to modify it, and we think that we have combated the original document with some success, yet we take no especial credit to ourselves in whatever light the Bond may be received; for its form was duly submitted from time to time to the principal established Houses in Canton, and after having reduced it to a very small compass to say the least, we ascertained that the Chinese copy of it must be signed by the Captains. A meeting of all parties interested was called and fully attended and it was there agreed that no Chinese document should be signed, and a day was fixed for a further meeting, it being generally understood by a very unanimous vote, that an action on the Bond should be had until the day named, before which time it was expected that the Hong merchants, or whosoever else had the power, would give way, or in other words, come to our terms. Contrary to this understanding we received overtures from the senior Hong merchant, who thought that the Bond would satisfy the local authorities, provided that we were willing that it should be written in English and Chinese, the former at the top and the latter at the bottom of the sheet, the Captain signing in the middle; several parties having, or expecting ships at Whampoa were consulted, and it was thought this course would do, but the next day it was ascertained that the Imperial dignity would be degraded by having the English stand over the Chinese. At this stage of the business we should have been perfectly willing to have waited until the day to which the meeting was adjourned, had we not become aware of an intention on the part of Mr. Morss, (a principal in the House of Messrs Olyphant & Co.) and one other party controlling a ship to our consignment, to sign the Certificate in a new form and as now fixed. Mr. Morss called at our office with a Bond in Chinese and English, one on each side of the sheet, duly signed on both sides, having however a note above the signature to the Chinese copy to the effect that it was "signed as a true translation of the English on the other side," and which English differed slightly in its language, though it was the same in substance as the copy to which we had appended the Chinese. We begged Mr. Morss not to present this paper, representing to him that it would not avail if the Chinese knew the meaning of the note, and if the meaning of the note were not explained, it would of course be by them considered as a bonafide signing of the Chinese writing. Mr. Morss distinctly told us that this form was *so much less objectionable than the one he was prepared to give that he should not hesitate to give our form as he was in haste to secure the Morrison, the Captain having already signed the Bond and gone to Whampoa.

The Senior Hong merchant requested us to put the Chinese over the English and sign at the bottom of the page, and he thought that would probably answer. We did not give our assent to this new form until we consulted the principal parties interested, and it was considered even less objectionable than the form with the English above and Chinese below. The Bond was given accordingly, and we should be glad to claim the merit of having reduced the Bond to its present form, but as we have consulted other parties directly interested in the question we cannot answer this merit. We have thus given you a plain unvarnished statement of facts and we have merely to notice in conclusion some of Messrs Olyphant & Co's. remarks.

They say, the Morrison came in after our example.

They say that the Commissioner assured them that the Morrison should be subject to our regulations; if they depended upon the word of the Commissioner in regard to this ship, they would not have waited for the example of any one, had their ship been within reach.

Our position here, it should be observed, was somewhat different from that of Messrs Olyphant & Co; they, being owners, acted as principals in the matter of the Morrison. We, as agents in the matter of the ships consigned to us; and if our constituents are satisfied with our course, we shall very meekly put up with the strictures of the Press and the animadversions of our friends outside who do not favor us with their approbation.

We are,

Yours truly,

RUSSELL & Co.

FOREIGN RELATIONS WITH CHINA. — The Chinese government was either ignorant of the existence of the opium traffic, or unable to put it down, or willing to connive at it; either of those three things must have been the case, for otherwise such an extensive smuggling would never have been carried on for so many years. As long as the supreme government issued edicts against this pernicious drug, particularizing the mode of its introduction, and sending commissioners to the various ports to support it, one can possibly not plead ignorance as an excuse. But still it may be said in exculpation, that the evil spread under the auspices of corrupt local officers, and that all the high functionaries, and above all the cabinet were free from contamination. This appears to us a mere theoretical opinion, adopted for the sake of argument to exempt the court of Peking from all the blame in this affair. Can we for a moment suppose that the large importations into the capital by way of Teen tsin could for more than 20 years have taken place without the tacit connivance of the men in power, many of whom by means of their many spies were thoroughly conversant with the illicit traffic? And can any man acquainted with the Chinese character suppose for a moment, that their indifference respecting its importation was not bought with solid gold? But this is not mere suspicion, it is a fact known, that opium enjoyed the clandestine patronage of the court, and that the prosecutions against the smugglers were more rare at Teen tsin than at any other port. The local authorities at Canton will never attempt to prove their innocence, for they have been again and again deeply implicated, the governor of the Province not even excepted. What grounds are there for exculpating other high Mandarins in the different Provinces? Certainly no others than the admission that Canton and Peking are the seat of overwhelming corruption, in which none of the Provincial Governments participate. Now, though we fully admit, that there are noble minded, patriotic statesmen in the highest officers, yet we do not scruple to assert, that the gaine-king, intriguing race, with which all the courts swarm, silences them. In their hands is the power, they wield it with a powerful arm, and to them China is beholden for the increased consumption of the opium. The reader ought to understand us well, we do not wish to exempt the foreigners from their share, but merely represent matters as they are.

The incapability of the Government has often been brought forward, the argument however must be taken under sundry restrictions. Again and again, whenever the whole of its force was concentrated, a cessation of the traffic followed. Tang, the Governor of Canton himself, has put a stop for months together to its introduction, and it has been during the last year nearly excluded from all the seaports. And what have we to say of the late measures, when Lin with great vigor and violence went to annihilate the whole? These are facts that speak for themselves. At the same time we also admit, that after such rigorous exertions, the body politic, harrassed and fatigued, sinks into a kind of slumber, and the evil revives anew. Still, conscious of its strength and convinced of its efficacy by a series of of trials, it is a blot upon the Chinese Government not to have strained every nerve to exterminate this terrible hydra; but on the contrary to have allowed it to increase and penetrate into every quarter.

We must therefore come to the conclusion, that the supreme government connived at the smuggling, and that the respective local authorities abetted it. There is more than one cause which produced this tampering with a gangrene, that infested the very vitals. Besides the reasons enumerated in a former paper, we may here add, that many persons in office had become habitual smokers, and that it was a fashionable vice. Under such circumstances it becomes a matter of great difficulty to arrest the introduction. But when the Chinese Government is cited before the tribunal of nations, and it even be proved, that the same hand that signed the death warrant of the smuggler and confiscated all his property, received likewise the bribes that scarcely was the ink of the prohibitory edicts dry, arrangements for importing the destructive drug in large quantities were made, what plea will then be brought forward to palliate such a glaring inconsistency? It may however be again asked, were the Mandarins never in earnest? We reply again, yes, the impulse given from Peking has been powerful enough at various times to rouse the most lethargic and frighten the most venal Mandarin, and never was perhaps stronger than lately; but these impressions have soon passed away, and a relapse which made things much worse than before, has unavoidably taken place.

The question however never so much engaged the attention of the court than after the first proposition for the legalisation of the drug was made. The author of that memorial is celebrated for his able statespapers, and we remember to have seen one which he presented several years ago upon giving the utmost freedom to trade, which might have done credit to a Huskisson. Whether his measure was a wise one or fraught with terrible disasters we will not decide, as we are in the fullest sense of the word abolitionists, but it gave rise to the deepest reflections. The subsequent addresses to the throne give us rather a favorable idea of the talent of some Chinese writers, but we really wonder, that there is not one, who strongly urges to rouse the moral energies of the people against the degrading act of [illegible]ing the drug. Withholding however our bl[illegible]ell as praise from their productions, as the [illegible]shore the public in good translations, we sim[illegible] trace the motives that called forth such remonstrances.

Here we would, at first and above all, point out one evil, which has only been hinted at, but never plainly stated to be the paramount cause for excluding the opium from the shores of China—we mean the far spreading corruption and venality to which the introduction of opium had given rise. We do however not intimate, that such things did not exist previously, on the contrary, they spring naturally from existing circumstances. Nothing however furnished such inexhaustible store for strengthening and perpetuating propensities, that corrode the very heartscore of Empires as this system of smuggling. The temptation it held out was overwhelming and wherever it insinuated itself, probity, honesty and, in fact, every public virtue had to take their departure. We are little acquainted with the details, but still the havoc it has made amongst the present race of functionaries is incalculable. And could such things be hidden from the autocrat, and must he not have paused and mourned in anticipation at the dreadful consequences upon the administration of the state?

Add to this the increased importation, the growing demand, and would these things not have moved the most apathetic ruler.

The financial difficulties, that are said to have arisen from the increased exportation of silver are founded upon very defective data.

One truth has however come to light, that China suffers under the same difficulties as most of the Western Kingdoms, and this seems to be the order of the day. Great as the sums may be, that this country has lost in exchange for this destructive poison, yet, even supposing a total stoppage to be practicable, China cannot escape from the consequences of the derangement of its finances. This woeful state of things took its rise during the latter years of Keen lung's reign, greatly increased under Kea king, and has become more and more injurious under Taoukwang. From every part of this extensive country, the general complaint—we have not sufficient withal to pay the taxes and keep up the government—resounds, and matters are as bad as if the state were burdened with 800 millions of debts.

Some latent fears there moreover existed, of the growing influence of foreigners, and the total prostration of this country before their feet, as long as millions could not do without the use of the drug. It gave them a complete command over the nation, which is thought incompatible with the present order of things. We deeply regret that amongst the propelling causes, so little stress is laid upon the demoralization of the people; this does not speak well for the originators of the total suppression, but we must expect this from heartless Mandarins.

When the plans had been matured, Lin appears to deal the death blow. Whatever may be the opinions about this man, it will be admitted, that he was sincere in his measures, not only succeeding in getting a great quantity of the drug into his possession, but also weaning thousands of smokers from the habit. His violence can never be approved, for he has thereby defeated his own ends—and also of all committed one radical error, fraught with mischief incalculable—that of involving his country with foreign states. He might have been pardoned for not effecting the total suppression, but rather putting matters on a worse footing than they were ever before; but he can never be forgiven for having abandoned the policy which has always kept this country from serious collisions with western Empires. It is he, who most deliberately cut the Gordian knot that bound China, it is he who has provoked hostilities and courted the enmity of powerful nations. If it even were possible to overlook his proceedings, still, he has opened the door to every aggression, and the same means will again be used under different circumstances, if his first violent course is pardoned. He has brought China into a position in which it never stood before, he has changed the existing order of things, and henceforth this country will necessarily be forced to measure its strength with antagonists with whom it has never coped before. So far Lin's doings. The Chinese Government itself might have adopted a much wiser course if it would have stooped to view others as equals; but, in order to maintain its nominal supremacy, it hurries on in a destructive course, and approaches a precipice, at the very sight of which the Tatar conqueror ought to tremble.

THE CORNLAWS IN CHINA.

There is something original in the institutions of this country, which is often deserving of our unqualified praise. It is a fundamental system of a government, to rule in such manner as to leave the population beyond want. To increase therefore the means of subsistence to any extent, even so as to lessen the cultivator's profits, ought always to be the leading principle of the measures respecting the corntrade. Instead therefore of excluding foreign grain from the market, the government does not load it with any duty, but even exempts the vessels that bring it from various charges. If native vessels fetch rice from Siam or Cochinchina—thus says the law—the supercargo who sells it in any Chinese port, shall be rewarded with a nominal rank and be permitted to wear an official button. If he continues in such laudable enterprises, his conduct is to be recorded to the Emperor, who will not fail to give him some substantial tokens of his approbation.

On the other hand the trade between the different provinces is by no means free. If some parts are remarkable for their want of fertility, and allowing even the price of grain in the adjacent territory to be much higher than within their jurisdiction, yet the exportation cannot legally take place, unless the law is for a short time suspended. This rather cramps agricultural industry. We have even seen orders stuck up at Macao, at the time when large importations of rice from Manilla had taken place, prohibiting the reexportation of this valuable commodity to other districts. This is really a narrow-minded policy and must defeat itself.

To obviate starvation and put into the hands of government the means for swaying a numerous population, large granaries are established in every district. In these the landtax in kind is not merely stored up, but the landholders are also obliged to put a quantity of their produce in trust of government, which keeps it so long as it suits its own views. As soon as the price rises, it opens its stores and soon reduces the market to its level. Whatever want infests the country, the peasant receives need even in advance, which he has to repay with interest in autumn. Myriads at such time are also maintained and saved from starvation, and the supreme government is enabled always to provide the necessaries of life for its own people. The great defect however in this arrangement is, that much of the grain thus kept is spoiled by time, and that thus the government as well as the shareholders suffer great losses, whilst in times of plenty, the farmer is almost ruined by its being put to sale and reducing the price of his own produce to nothing. Do these defects weigh against the advantages of store houses, and would India have been saved all the evils of starvation if such granaries had existed?

Edict from

Their Excellencies the Commissioner, Governor and Lieutenant Governor promulgating the new law against Opium dealers &c.

LIN, Imperial Delegate, Member of the Cabinet, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces, specially appointed to enquire into and regulate the maritime affairs of the Canton Province, with power over the naval forces, &c &c.;

TANG, President of the Board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces, &c. &c.; and

E, Vice President of the Board of War, Lieutenant Governor of Canton &c. &c.; once more issue warning a and admonitory edict, to communicate the new severe law against Opium.

The stuff called Opium has from time immemorial been prohibited by law, although, in former years, when the insidious effects of the poison, were yet but lightly felt, the punishment for the crime (of dealing in it,) was trifling. In late years, however every spot became infected with the spreading evil, the holy wrath of the Emperor was roused, and, last year, his terrible determination was made known, to investigate and adopt measures to cut off the evil, It is universally known that in every case where a law exists it is put in force. Even before the promulgation of the new law no few broke themselves of the habit of smoking Opium, but the number of those who buoyed themselves up with hope, and persisted in the vice was truly large.

In the third month of the present year an Imperial edict was published in the Peking Gazette, commanding that the practice of delivering up false Opium paste and new pipes,* should be put a stop to. The sacred thoughts are bent with intense earnestness on the adoption of effective measures, and the laws are now ten times more severe than formerly.

We have heard that there is a class of insidious traitors who go about spreading false and idle reports, and endeavoring to delude the people into the belief that these new laws will not be put in force. Think for yourselves a little:—it is now plainly to be seen that you can no longer deceive the Government by delivering up false paste or new pipes, neither will you be allowed to secrete your genuine "mixed" nor old pipes:—we hesitate shewing mercy even to those who report themselves to Government as smokers willing to renounce the vice; can it be supposed, then, that those who wickedly persist in it will be allowed to go at large and escape punishment? The wretches, who spread these reports to mislead the vulgar, are said by many to have formed mistaken judgments, while they are in reality but base and traitorous liars to serve their own purposes, and, verily, as soon as they are caught in the act, the facts shall be thoroughly investigated and they shall be visited with the most severe penalties the law allows. As to those deluded wretches who suffer themselves to be thus imposed upon, and dare to disobey our warning commands, they are bringing punishment on their own heads, they are throwing away their lives and madly rushing into the courts of death:—How is it possible that the common people can be such idiots?

On the 6th instant, just as we, the Commissioner, Governor and Fooyuen, were deliberating about issuing fresh commands, we received a despatch from the Privy Council, containing a copy of the law against the crime of trafficking in Opium. Besides placarding the sacred commands on yellow paper, immediately we received them, we now publish them in an explanatory edict; and as we feared the clauses might not have been otherwise, perfectly understood, we have had them separately written out.

We now therefore, issue this edict, to the end that, in every town of the province, the noble, the merchant, the student and the vulgar, the officer, the soldier and the emissary of police, may know and understand.

It must be now apparent to all, when the awful severity of this new law is considered, that the traffic in Opium must be cut off completely and for ever, ere the son of Heaven will stay his hand. For the seller of Opium, if he do not quickly forsake his vile calling, decapitation will follow conviction. For the smoker of Opium, if he do not quickly renounce the habit, there will be little chance of escape from strangulation. Persist in the vice and die. renounce it and live! There is no man but fears to look on death, and clings to life; tremble, then, at the penalty and flee the crime!

If any are apprehended after the promulgation, by these presents, of the new law, they will be dealt with in accordance therewith. Read and understand. Indulge no longer in hopes of delay: you are but playing with the law, knowingly involving yourselves in crime and wickedness, and forfeiting all claim to pity after your death. Do not say you have not had timely warning!

Let all tremblingly obey.—These are the commands.

Annexed is the

with the several clauses separately written out.

SECTION 1st.

Furnace-keepers or wholesale dealers.

Whoever shall hereafter open a "furnace" and connive with and secretly buy Opium of the outside barbarians, storing it up for sale, shall if he be the principal, be decapitated immediately on conviction. The royal authority shall be respectfully produced and the law executed, ere a report is sent to the crown. The head of the offender shall then be stuck upon a pole, and exposed upon the sea coast as a warning to all. The accomplices, advisers, participators, receivers, givers (those who deliver the drug) and boatmen who knowingly receive Opium on board their boats for transport, shall be sentenced to strangulation, and thrown into dungeous to wait the royal warrant for their execution. The houses and boats of these parties shall be sequestrated.

§ 1. Any officer or soldier on the coast station who shall receive bribes to connive at Opium being brough in, whether the quantity be large or small, shall immediately upon conviction be strangled. He who, knowing it to be such, allows Opium to be brought in, but without receiving a bribe, shall be transported to Sinkeang.

§ 2. If any persons join together and open a furnace for the purpose of selling Opium, he who originates the plan shall be considered as the principal.

§ 3. He who stores Opium brought by the foreign ships shall be dealt with in the same manner, as accomplices in furnace." He who, knowing it to be such, consents to conceal Opium for any notorious dealers who may have fallen into the hands of Government, shall be punished one degree less severely than the principal.

§ 4 He who receives a bribe to release any Opium seller or smoker from his custody, shall be punished in the same manner as if he were an Opium seller or smoker himself. Should the amount received be considerable, he shall be held punishable under the law against "False and malicious informations."†

§ 5. Any jailor who shall buy Opium and supply it to the prisoners under his charge, shall be transported to the most distant and unhealthy settlements. Any guard or overseer, guilty of a similar offence, shall be transported to a nearer settlement, should the amount received for purchases be considerable, it shall be computed, and the offender held punishable under the act against "False and malicious informations.

§ 6. Any soldier or policeman or any one of those idle blackguards who infest every place, who shall, without a warrant, enter a house and under pretence of searching for Opium forcibly carry off other articles, or who shall, through malice or a desire to extort money, themselves secrete Opium in the house, that an accusation may be supported (against their victims) shall, whether principal or accomplice, be held punishable under the law against "false and malicious information," and transported to the most distant settlement. If the amount stolen shall exceed in value 100 taels, the principal shall be sentenced to strangulation and kept in prison till the warrant for his execution shall arrive.

§ 7. All persons sentenced to transportation for crimes connected with Opium shall be excluded from the benefit of the law respecting "indulgence to offenders for the sake of their parents"‡

SECTION 2nd.

Keepers of retail and smoking shops.

Any person, who shall keep a shop for selling Opium to be smoked on the premises, shall, if the principal, be sentenced, on conviction, to immediate strangulation, and his house shall be sequestrated. Accomplices, accessories, or those who knowing for what purpose, still consent to let their houses to such characters, shall, on conviction, be transported to Sinkeang to be slaves to the military, and their houses sequestrated. Any soldier or policeman who shall receive a bribe for conniving at and "securing" these dens, shall receive the same punishment as a principal. "Ground-Sureties"§ and neighbours, who know of the existence of such places and do not report same to Government, shall be punished with 100 blows, and transported for 3 years. If they shall receive hush money, the amount shall be computed, and the law respecting "false and malicious informations put in force against them.

§ 1. Any native traitor who shall cultivate the poppy for the purpose of expressing its jucie to make Opium, for preparation and sale, or who shall sell either the "paste" or "mud" to the extent of 500 taels, or if, altho' the amount does not equal that sum, he shall sell at a great number of different places and times, he shall if apprehended within the next 18 months, be sentenced to strangulation (if a principal) and thrown into prison to wait the arrival of the warrant for his execution. Accomplices shall be transported to the most distant and unhealthy places. If any are convicted of selling only once or twice, the whole amount of such sales not being Taels 500—they shall be transported, if principals, to Sinkeang to be slaves to the military. If accomplices, they shall be transported to a distance of 4000 Le. After the expiration of the 18 months, both principals and accomplices shall be sentenced to be strangled. If any soldier or policeman receive a bribe to connive at and screen them, he shall be punished in the same manner as the principal. If the amount received be considerable, it shall be computed and the offender punished under the law against "false and malicious informations" Any landlord, who knowing for what purpose, lets a field or house to Opium dealers, or any boatman who shall knowingly hire his boat for transporting the drug, shall, if the offence take place before the expiration of one year from this time, receive a hundred blows, and be transported 2000 le—if after one year, he shall be transported to the most distant settlement, if within half a year he shall be sentenced to receive a hundred blows and three years transportation. The fields grounds, houses and boats shall in all cases be sequestrated. If any dealer shall voluntarily confess his crime and cause by his information the apprehension of other dealers, he shall be pardoned, and his house, ground or boat shall not be sequestrated. If the parties implicated by the informer's confession shall escape and elude the vigilance of Government, although his crime shall be pardoned, his house, ground, field, or boat shall be confiscated. Any "Ground surety" or neighbour, who knows of the existence of such dealers and does not forthwith inform against them, shall be punished with 100 blows If he receive hush money, the amount shall be computed and the law respecting "false and malicious informations" put in force against him

§ It was the general practice, before the Government began to be serious in its endeavours to put an end to the Opium traffic, for Opium dealers to make a bargain with the police and soldiery not only to connive at the shops themselves, but to prevent others, less venal, from interfering with them. This however was not confined to underlings alone, as high Officers of Government have not only supported but made handsome fortunes in the system.

‖ In every street there is one person, elected by the inhabitants for life, and sanctioned by the Government, between which and the electors to serve as a medium of communication. He is held responsible for the good conduct of his neighbors, amongst whom he acts as arbitrator in all trifling disputes. He is supported by the contributions of the inhabitants, his salary varying from $ 50 to $ 200 according to the size and importance of the street.

§ 2 The law against the Crime of Opium smoking, shall take effect in Peking from the day the sacred commands were received:—in the provinces from the day that the commands of the Board were made known. These were received in the City of Canton on the 26th day of the 5th moon from which time they will date in all the Cities, towns, throughout The Province. One year from that date will be allowed for all to renounce the habit. At the expiration of that period, all who have not renounced the habit, whether they be of the nobles, the military, or the vulgar, shall on conviction be sentenced to strangulation and thrown into prison to wait the arrival of the Warrant for their execution If any are apprehended within the year of probation, if of the vulgar, they shall be punished with 100 blows and be transported to a distance of 2000 le, &c. if they are unable to say from whom they got the Opium, their punishment shall be one degree more severe; they shall receive 100 blows more, and be transported be a distance of 2500 le. If of the Tartar soldiery, the offender shall first be expelled from his banner, (or regiment) and then dealt with as one of the common people: If a Government underling a relation of an officer, a secretary or follower, the offender shall be punished one degree more severely than a common man. If an officer of Government, the offender shall be sent to Sinkeang on some degrading and laborious mission. If of the provincials, or general army, the offender shall be transported to a shorter distance.

§ 3. Manufacturers and sellers of Opium smoking apparatus shall be held punishable under the law against gaming. ¶

§ 4. In every case where a son or younger brother of a family shall be convicted of selling or smoking Opium, besides punishing him, the head of the family must be apprehended and convicted under the law against "Neglecting to interfere and prevent robbery." **

§ 5. Should any one of the Canton Hong Merchants who trade with foreigners visiting China, disobey the established precedent, and allow a ship to loiter and stay, after her cargoes are bought and sold, he shall for such disobedience of the law receive 100 blows. Should any of them be discovered warehousing Opium, their hongs, &c shall be confiscated to Government and themselves punished under clause No. 2 of Section 1.

§ 6. Should the officers and soldiery be resisted, in the execution of their duty of searching and apprehending, by a large and armed mob, they shall be authorised to use fire arms, and shall be held irresponsible for any deaths they may cause thereby. Should any persons assemble together to the number of three and upwards for the purpose of resisting the Officers of Government in the execution of their duty, should they cause the death of any by the use of their arms, the ringleaders and the actual murderer shall be sentenced on conviction to immediate decapitation. Those who shall merely wound without causing death shall be sentenced to decapitation after waiting in prison the usual time The same sentence shall, in such cases, be also awarded to the ring leaders. Persons aiding in the fracas, and those who wound or break bones with the hand only shall be sentenced to strangulation after waiting in prison, the usual time.

§ 7. The several magistrates are commanded to use all diligence and sincerity in enquiring into and regulating the affairs of the places under their jurisdiction, and in watching the behaviour of the sureties Let a license be granted to every ten householders, and one of their number appointed to keep the said license in his charge. The number and names of the inhabitants of each house, with their trade or occupation, must be entered in this license, and the most minute particulars noted; the penalties of the law for smoking and selling Opium must also be written therein, that every body may know. The holder of the license must also be commanded if he knows any of those, whose names are written in the license, to be sellers or smokers of Opium, he must instantly inform against them If he receive bribes to keep their names secret, not only he, but the "Ground surety and neighbours, shall be most severely dealt with.

Taoukwang 19th Year 6th moon July, 1839.

We have on one or two occasions, given to our readers an account of how the popular lotteries in China are managed annually when the literary examinations take place; the manner in which they are drawn is briefly this—A number of literary aspirants (about 6000) are annually brought together to dispute the prize of literary excellence; Judges are appointed by government to award the prizes, each essay, to prevent the possibility of favoritism is marked by a number only, the judges being supposed not to be acquainted with the names of the candidates belonging to the respective numbers. Among so great a multitude it becomes of course a matter of speculation as to what numbers are likely to be the favored ones and, like the, in other countries, usual wheel of fortune, the Chinese have made the result of these examinations a matter of gambling, and large sums have, we understand, been lately collected in Canton, on this occasion, when the local authorities, being apprized of the circumstance, seized the collectors and their money, and every one of the players thinks himself, in consequence, cheated out of the great prize of $ 50 0 or upwards, and considerable discontent is said to prevail among the populace. Some collectors, however, are said to have been enabled, by speedy flight, to save themselves and their funds, a circumstance, no doubt, of congratulation to themselves, but fully as unsatisfactory to the public, as if the Government had possessed themselves of the money.

We mentioned in our last the existence of some rumours of the Yum-chae's being about to visit Macao, or a least Casa branca.—It was said that H. E. intended to pay his respects to a marine deity who enjoys the honors of a very handsome temple in Macao, and whose origin is by the Chinese traced to Chinchew parents, the countrymen of the Commissioner; other accounts lately come from Canton say that the idea of a visit to these parts has been abandoned, and that a temporary residence for the commissioner, already partly finished had been again pulled down. It is moreover said that Lin's credit at the Court of Peking is on the wane, and that he has received an imperial Edict reproaching him with the means used in possessing himself of the Opium belonging to foreigners, and holding him responsible for the consequences. The Commissioner's request to go to Chin-chew to visit the graves of his ancestors is said to have been refused.

Matters of more local interest have prevented our giving some interesting correspondence on the subject of the late forced delivery of Opium which we find in the Bombay Times received from the Hurkaru. From some hints in the Bombay paper it would appear that a part of the Bengal Press denies to the sufferers in this delivery the right of compensation from the English government, though they surrendered their property upon the injunction to that effect of the British Chief Superintendent of Trade. In our contemplated review of the events of the last four or five months, of which we have now given three introductory papers, we shall discuss this question at large and think that we shall probably arrive at the same conclusion of the writer Nemo in the Hurkaru, that the Government in England is bound by the acts of its representative here. From a Public Notice, in the first columns of this paper it will be seen that the present Chief Superintendent claims the same powers as were conferred upon Lord Napier now more than five years ago.

We publish, in foregoing columns, some letters from Messrs Olyphant & Co. and Messrs Russell & Co. on the subject of the signing of the "bond" from which our readers will, we hope, be able to come to a conclusion to whom the "pas" is due in this business. We have, on a former occasion, given our reasons why we attribute very little consequence to either the priority in signing the bond, or to the manner in which it was done; our objection has always been and will ever be, that it was done at all and that American citizens, knowing that such bond was required of them, gave themselves willingly into the power of the Chinese and signed away on a contingency, the lives of their fellow citizens for the sake of being able, partly to thrive in a carrying trade between the outer anchorages and Whampoa, partly to get some Cargoes of tea for the American market; do they not apprehend that, the tea being purchasable by them only under such conditions, their countrymen will, as they did some thirty years ago in Japan, abstain from the use of tea altogether, rather than subject themselves to humiliation? We do not wish, on this subject, to say anything displeasing to any part of the foreign community in China, but we owe it to the whole body that we should speak out plainly upon a matter which to us seems to be fraught with the greatest evils to all. Knowing that they will subject, not only themselves, but their countrymen under their control, to the punishment of death, these masters of ships, approve of the punishment of death for the infringement of some Custom-house regulations, and the approval of this sanguinary law they might have avoided by remaining outside; yet the ships proceed to Whampoa, the objectionable bond is given, and the Yum chae now invites others to follow the example given by the Americans!

Let it not be said that the trial for the offence of smuggling, a trial for life or death, will be just, because some of the American houses of Canton have stipulated, that they ought not to take place without the presence of their Consul ——— a gratuitous stipulation, in our opinion, as we believe that no Consul or representative of any nation, whatever be his title, would sanction, by his presence, the infliction of a punishment which the laws of his own country do not warrant, particularly where that punishment is capital.

Messrs Olyphant & Co. in their letter take occasion to compare the bloody statutes of England against aliens with those of China.—They allude, we suppose, to the late troubles in Canada, and the capital punishment many of the leaders in those troubles suffered. Much as we lament that such punishment should have been deemed necessary, we cannot but recollect that in almost every instance where capital punishment was awarded, the sufferer had been guilty, not only of what is called treason, but of burning and killing; it is impossible, in any country enjoying the benefits of the laws, that such outrages against the peace of the country and the lives and properties of its inhabitants, can pass unresented, as without the fear of consequences, they would be daily repeated; to prevent such disorders, and not for revenge, must the law, now and then, make these terrifying examples. We need not, we suppose, call to mind of our Correspondent the outrages only lately committed in several parts of his own country, by a mob unrestrained by any superior authority, and leave him to judge whether it be preferable (the comparison he has forced upon us) to live under the Lynch or the English law.

We learn that not many days since, at a Sing-song or theatrical exhibition on the river near Canton, a boat or floating Opium-shop, that had intruded among a great number of boats filled with spectators, was seized by the Mandarins and its inmates immediately taken into the City. We publish in this number, a translation of the new Opium laws as promulgated at Peking and explained or annexed to the people by the Canton authorities. From this it will be seen that the threats of the law are as severe as ever, and both dealers and smokers are in most instances to be capitally punished. The extreme severity of this law will, we fear, prevent its efficacy, and the new burdens and responsibilities thereby thrown upon the Hong merchants will probably deter every man of respectability or means to become one of that body. But most laws in China seem to be made to be enforced only on extraordinary occasions, and when such happen, no one of the whole population, almost, can hope not to have transgressed the one or other of its provisions.

* Among the many tricks and impostures, which the late severe measures of the Government gave birth to, this was the most successful. New pipes are almost worthless, but those which have been much used, are greatly prized, as from the quantity of essential oil absorbed by them, they have the property of communicating, to a certain extent, a flavor to other articles—as tobacco &c.

NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Macao, 29th July, 1839.

Notice is hereby given that the chief superintendent has moved Her Majesty's and the British Indian governments to forbid the entrance of Tea or other produce from this country, imported in British vessels entering the port of Canton. In violation of his lawful injunctions, to the serious injury of measures taken for the general security of this trade.

And the Chief superintendent has further to give notice that he has also moved Her Majesty's and the British Indian governments to forbid the entrance of cargoes from this country (till the port of Canton be declared safe for British Trade under his hand and seal), except their manifests be duly signed in his presence. By order of the chief superintendent.

EDWARD ELMSLIE,
Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

The Opium Question.

To the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru.

Sir,—I have read with some surprise the arguments which have been advanced by you and your cotemporary of the Englishman, regarding the asserted right of the British Government, to repudiate the pledge given to the Opium holders by Her Majesty's representative at Canton. The question is important on both public and private grounds, and I propose to discuss it, as one involving the relative duties of the Sovereign and the subject, so far as the Government and the Opium dealers are concerned, and as one of national right, as relates to the question of indemity between the countries.

I shall commence by endeavouring to meet a difficulty, to which you have alluded, though you state that you are not prepared to go the whole length of the party by whom the objection will be urged; that objection is to the Opium trade itself, "from its deteriorating effects on the moral character of the consumers," and a consequent want of sympathy for the losses of those by whom it was conducted. The pests feigned a golden and a silver Age but there is no fiction in describing this as the age of cant and humbug, as an Age in which many thrive "who make piety a profit and godliness a great gain;" whose cry is loud, if words avail, their interest, but who blench from all attempts by which rank or riches are likely to have their pleasure or profits impaired. Numbers will be found to anathematize our Calcutta merchants for the crime of purchasing Opium, manufactured by their own Government, and selling it to the Chinese, with the notorious connivance of the Provincial authorities at Canton. The walls of St. Stephen's shall ring with the epithets. Smuggler, and Poisoner, applied to men who have assisted the Government in reaping an enormous revenue. The Legislature shall be called on to place these men out of the pale of protection, for trading in an article supplied to them by this Government for the very purpose of the trade, yet what shall rouse that sanctified Legislature into ire against the Hells called Clubs, the Gin shops called Palaces, the Brothels called Saloons, all of which exist in our moral evangelical England? Legislative enactment touches' been not, for they administer to the pleasures, or enhance the profits of those clamors, to whose rank gives influence, or who by wealth have acquired power.

I feel assured that it is from this species of cant, the claims of the Opium dealers are most likely to suffer, while it must be difficult to stem it fostered and augmented as it will be by the British and Indian Governments, who will allege the unworthiness of the objects, as the excuse for withholding the compensation. If this manœuvre be resorted to, it should be met by a firm and clear exposition of the merits of the case, and relative position of the parties.

It can be shewn from the 30th, 31st and 32nd sections of the late Indian Act, 3rd and 4th. Will 4th c 85, that the Board of Control have a full knowledge of and power over all the Acts and Legislations of the Court of Directors and Court of Government, and, therefore, the Board is fixed with having sanctioned whatever it permits to remain unrepealed. This responsibility also extends to the Queen's Government, for a Cabinet Minister presides at the head of the Board. The Parliament have likewise similar controlling powers and means of knowledge, for by the 51st section, their right is preserved to legislate for India, and all the Laws and Regulations which may be enacted in this country are directed to be laid on their table.

This, Sir, establishes sufficiently for my a gument, that species of direct privity, a bunting between the British Parliament, the English Cabinet, and the Indian Government, that the Opium dealer could not reject a claim by an Opium trader, the two former would be equally precluded from putting forward a similar objection. The position of the parties in this, the Indian Government have created, and supplied the trade and profited by it, the Parliament and Cabinet have given it their sanction, the trader has been merely the person employed, and through whose exertions the immense revenue has been obtained.

Under this state of facts, looking at the question in a moral and legal point of view, I broadly lay down, that the Parliament, the Cabinet and the Indian Government are, by every principle of justice, stopped from objecting to the claims of the Opium Merchant, on the ground of the illegality or immorality of the trade. Viewing it as a moral question, I ask, was it excite any thing but laughter, should we hear a man, who had supplied a highwayman with weapons, charging him 400 per cent. above their value, proceed to edify the thief with a lecture on the crime of robbery which he was enabling him to commit; but as a legal question, what is in the traffic contrary to English Law which could prevent the Company from suing or from being sued for transctions, which might arise out of the trade.

If this clears away the objection which I have classed under the head of cant and humbug, I come next to the question of the relative duties of the Sovereign and the Subject, as applicable to this case.

The whole point turns on the proclamation of Mr. Elliot, his right to make it, and the necessity of obeying it. The 3d and 4th, Will. 4 ch. 93, sec. 5th enact "that it is expedient for the objects of trade and amicable intercourse with the dominions of the Emperor of China, that provision be made for the establishment of British authority in the said dominions;" and it proceeds to authorize the appointment of Superintendents of the trade of His Majesty's subjects. The 6th section enables the King "to give to the Superintendent powers, and authorities, over, and in respect of, the trade and commerce of His Majesty's subjects, within any part of the said dominions, and to make and issue regulations, touching the said trade and commerce, and for the Government of his Majesty's subjects within the said dominions, and to impose penalties, forfeitures and imprisonments for the breach of any such Regulations or regulations." Hence by the statute, Captain Elliot had full power to issue the order which he did, and to enforce obedience to it. But the common law will carry the matter much further. The act confers on the Superintendents a power of issuing proclamations in particular cases, and therefore the whole law as to proclamations in England will be applicable to British subjects in China. The Statute I. Edw. 6th, c. 12, repealed the infamous Act of the 31, Hen. 8th, c. 8, declaring that the King's proclamations should have the force of Acts of Parliament, therefore it is the settled rule, that the King cannot create an offence which was not an offence before; ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio. (12 Coke 75) But, says Mr. Justice Blackstone, "though the making of laws is entirely the work of a distinct part of the legislative branch of the sovereign power, yet the manner, time, and circumstances of putting those laws in execution, must frequently be left to the discretion of the executive Magistrate. And therefore his constitutional acts concerning those points, which are called proclamations, are binding upon the subject, where they do not either contradict the old laws or tend to establish new ones, but only enforce the execution of such laws as are already in being in such manner as the King shall judge necessary." (1 Com. 270). This is precisely the present case, the law is being one, that the Superintendent might issue directions and regulations touching the trade and for the Government of Her Majesty's subjects. This is what he has done, to obey was the duty of the subject, to have disputed could be held to incur a penalty. The right to order, the injunction to obey, are distinctly defined, if there be error of judgment (no matter how gross) in the order given, the consequences must fall on those who conferred upon an incompetent person, the power to make orders, but not upon those who under penalties were enjoined to obey. There can be no doubt that under the authority of this Act, and his commission, that Mr. Elliot might have forbid the Opium trade altogether and imposed penalties upon, and imprisoned those who disobeyed his order, but as he could only act according to English law, he could not confiscate the Opium, which had been previously brought to China, without any breach of English law. He considered it necessary for public purposes, that it should be given up to him. As the Queen's Representative, and under the authority with which he was vested, he made his requisition, the holders of the Opium acknowledged his authority, and surrendered their property on the terms proposed by himself, how can it then be said that the Government are not bound by his acts? If he possessed the power, which I contend he did, under the words of the Statute, the only possible objection which could be raised is to the improvidence of the Act, but no such doctrine has ever been broached either in politics or law, that a principal can annul the engagements made for him by a fully authorized agent, under the pretext that his interests have been injured. I am not attempting to argue either for or against the expediency of the Superintendent's measures. I deny that their folly or wisdom have any thing to do with this question; it is not a question between the Envoy and the Sovereign, it is a question between the Sovereign and the Subject: She has enjoined obedience to her Envoy's orders, that obedience has been shewn, and her order that he should be obeyed will be just as binding on her to complete the terms of his agreement as it would be bound to pay his tradesmen for goods, which he had directed him to supply according to his steward's orders.

It has, however, been urged that, supposing all this to be true, the command to deliver the Opium is invalid, because it was given under duress. The constraint to which this term is applied, if of two kinds, the duress per minas or fear of loss of life or limb, or the illegal restraint of liberty. But in both cases, there must be a reasonable ground of fear, non suspicio cujus libet rei et meticulosi, sed talis qui possit cadere in virum constantem: talis enim deputone metus qui in se continent aliquod periculum, aut corporis cruciatum. Did the Opium dealers or the Queen's Government can avail themselves of this excuse, it must be clearly proved, that Mr. Elliot was, in that situation, which would have induced any firm man to believe, that he could only preserve his life, limbs or liberty, by consenting to the delivery of the Opium. It must also be remembered, that the duress of third parties, unless they be husband, wife, parent, or child, forms no excuse, and this was entertained in the case of Hanscombe and Standing in the siege of Jerusem the 1st. But all the cases in which duress has been held to put an end to an engagement, have arisen between the part guilty of the act of violence, and the party on whom it was committed, and depending, therefore, on the acknowledged principle, that no man shall profit by his own wrong. The present, however, is a case of third parties, and if there was duress these third parties have sacrificed their property for the preservation of another. The more imminent the danger, the greater was the service, and the more meritorious the act, the less is the excuse for setting up such a defence. But if there was no danger, then was there no duress. And this species of duress altogether fails. Let us suppose a man seized by an Indian banditti and carried into the mountains, from whence he writes to a banker in the next city, stating, that if he would give ten thousand scudi to the bearer, it would save the robber's throat from being cut, and that as soon as he had regained his liberty the money should be repaid; let us suppose the banker admitting to the messenger, that he was well aware of the captive's ability to repay him, but that he would not send the money to relieve the captive from his danger, merely because he was in danger, and therefore in duress—let us suppose the threat of the captive cut, and the most eminent Counsel being of opinion, that the banker was not liable, I think it would be the opinion of the world of that banker's conduct, and where is the man who will quote the price, for which he would endure the banker's feelings. I ask you, Mr. Editor, what your own feelings would have been, if you had received that requisite on and enclosed pledge from Mr. Elliot, if you had sent him the money, Sir, you are in duress, and I cannot therefore legally part with a ball of opium to relieve you, and the next morning you had heard that his and others throats had been strangled at the stake? I believe that you would have thought your property well but had it been given to save their lives. But I have as yet only stated one side, and that not the strong side of the question. I have only put the case of the banker or the opium dealer, withholding their property to save life, but we now put the case that to suppose the banker paid the ten thousand scudi, the money's lost to him, for the liberty to the captive. The Opium dealer has paid the money by which his existence has been ransomed, he replies by stating, duress I was under and will not pay. I know not the country in which the law precludes by which such a plea would be supported, and I trust I may never know the man who would not pronounce such a defence a piece of unreasonable villany. I admit, Sir, that in the present instance, it is not Captain Elliot who will refuse to pay, but only the State who employed him; but the morality is the same—if there were a difference, there is one, then I have shewn, that independently of the conduct of a British officer, sacrificed their property to save the life of that officer and the lives of a number of British citizens, and the country should redeem the pledge on which that sacrifice of property was made. But if there was no duress, the question returns to the simple point, that the authorized Agent of the country has issued an order, which he was competent to issue, and which order every British subject was bound to obey.

The last point, which is the right of England to demand reparation from China, hardly requires an observation, that the demand must not be limited to mere salary for the property offered to be restored, for the tremendous Mandarian may be easily frightened into such a concession, and will as easily keep the Emperor and the people in utter ignorance of their submission. The only effectual and notorious reparation will be to exact from them the full value of the property of which they pursued themselves by a breach of all national law, and by committing a second insult; as long as they can be made to believe that they have only made any reparation for their misdeeds, or that they ought to have the least respect for your power; nay, or far from it, they will heartily despise the folly which may induce you to put up with the loss of your money, and accept in its stead the miserable which the Mandarins may coin. I admit that the Chinese were fully entitled to seize any smuggled goods wherever they could find them, and, if the laws of their country authorized it, to inflict even the punishment of death on the convicted smuggler, but this is distinct from the outrage of imprisoning the official Representative of the British Empire, and threatening his life when he had been guilty of no offence; and if some letters are correct even this is nothing to the outrages perpetrated on the person of the second Superintendent, Mr. Johnston. The barbarian poltroons had not the courage to attack the guards at Canton, and, therefore, they seized helpless individuals, and are guilty of a piracy on the ocean of the most aggravated description, which they had a right to suppose, but which they had not courage to attempt. I feel convinced that the whole of this violence has been countenanced by the commendable policy of Mr. Elliot in disbanding the opium trade and endeavouring to suppress it. The moment they saw it abandoned by the ruling authority they feared that authority no longer, and they attributed his measures to pusillanimity. Impressed with the idea that he was afraid of them, and hereby ready to run the first chance of success, it became their policy to seize his person and threaten his life. It is puerile in the extreme not to accommodate yourself to the people with whom you have to deal. Who would give a lecture in a Mechanic's Institution in the language in which he would write a paper for the Royal or Antiquarian Societies, or address to a country entry the arguments he would employ in a Congress? How vain would be the attempt to reason with the Chinese, that they had sinned against United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; that even the admirable maxim of Story and Wheaton, though both American republicans, could unqualifiedly condemn them; it would be absurd to reason with men who are not sufficiently advanced in civilization to reason with you; you must meet them on their own ground. They understand an outlawed right, to them it is a science unknown, but they do understand how to levy black mail, and therefore, when any one of your national representative and its hundred of its citizens, and threaten to strangle them, unless they compel others to give up two millions of property, you should canonry Canton with your conquerors and storm-serfs until the last piece of the plunder is disposed. If this be not done, both will be your Indian possessions, those which are separated from them by the Burrah and Nepaul, will be the first to feel the effects of your guilty. These States have long discontented the Chinese, as if Canton does not turn out pay tribute, the impost which it enjoys may encourage the Mogadore from the North and the Burmese, from the South, to impose that fate on the metropolis of British India.

I am, Sir, &c. &c.

A LETTER ADDRESSED, BY THE BOMBAY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, TO THE DIFFERENT CHINA AND EAST INDIA ASSOCIATIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

To the Secretary of the

Sir,—Your Association has, no doubt, become acquainted with the late extraordinary transactions in China, the sudden destruction of the

* Printed in the Bengal Almanac of the year, Appendix I. p. p. 33, 34.

Opium trade, and the enormous sacrifice of British property in that country, which has been the consequence. Independently of this sacrifice, the loss by Opium still in store in India, now rendered of little value, will also be immense.

As the various circumstances which have led to this alarming state of affairs must already be known to your Association, they need not now be alluded to. For sundry weighty reasons stated, Her Majesty's Chief Superintendent at Canton enjoined and required the immediate surrender, to him, of all the British Opium, and held himself responsible to the owners, acting in the name and on behalf of the British Government, that they should be fully indemnified at a future period. An immediate declaration on the part of Her Majesty's Government at home, as to its intentions with regard to this indemnity, is imperatively called for, as the present doubt and suspense greatly aggravate the evil under which the general trade of India, and that of Bombay more especially, is now suffering, in consequence of the shock received by these occurrences in China. It is to entreat the exertions and powerful influence of your Association, to press the British Government to an early declaration of its intentions in this respect, that, at a Special General Meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, it was resolved to address you, and to solicit the aid and interference of your Association to this end.

Into the propriety or policy of the trade in Opium it is not requisite, on this occasion, to enter. That trade has been encouraged and countenanced, and has been conducted by the Government of India under the express sanction and authority of the British Government, entirely for State purposes, through the instrumentality of the capital, exertions and enterprise of her subjects. In this way, the Government has derived an enormous revenue from it, equal, latterly, to Two millions Sterling per annum, nearly one-tenth of the total Revenue of India. Both the British and Indian Governments knew that the export of it was confined to China and that it was there an illicit and contraband trade.

It has been so extensively promoted and encouraged by the Government of the country, as now to form nearly one third of the total exports of Bengal and Bombay: this will be seen in the table annexed. In that table will also be seen what a valuable portion of the supply of Silver, for the coinage of the country, the Government has received from China, owing chiefly to the Opium trade, while a glance at the published statements of the British trade at Canton will shew the immense importance the trade of India with China had been to the direct trade between England and China; which importance has also chiefly arisen from the Opium trade. Without the India trade the Court of Directors could not have so favorably conducted their large remittances for Home charges, nor could merchants, in England have purchased Teas, to the amount they have done without having sent large remittances, in Bullion, to that country. However much then, the trade in such an article, by the Government of a country, is to be condemned, in a case such as the present, the enormous advantages the British nation have derived through it, should not, in fairness to those by whose instrumentality they have been gained, be lost sight of.

That these advantages have been most important and most valuable, to the Government, the few facts now stated must prove to you.

The value of the property surrendered to the British Authorities in China, estimated at upwards of Two millions Sterling, must of itself, convince you of the disastrous effects likely, for a time at least, to be occasioned to trade in India, and, as one-half of this amount is owned in Bombay, the effects must be severely felt in this market. Already has the want of the usual returns produced a great scarcity of Cash, which checks the pure use of many of the Imports of British Goods, seriously affects credit, and casts a general gloom over the trade of the Port. The longer some settlement of the claims preferred is delayed, or a declaration of what the British Government really means to do in regard to them is withheld from the public, the evils we now suffer will be prolonged in proportion, and be so much the more aggravated. In a question of such magnitude and importance, all doubt and suspense ought to be rendered as short as possible, and we thus most earnestly solicit your powerful aid and most active exertions to press her Majesty's Government, for an early declaration of its intentions.

If the trade in Opium has thus been any obstacle, it is now removed, and as some reparation will surely be demanded for the forcible imprisonment of the British Representative, we trust your association, with all the mercantile influence of Great Britain, will join in most strongly soliciting the Government to avail itself of this opportunity, and to take the proper means of now and for ever establishing our Commercial intercourse with China, on the firm and honorable position its importance to both countries demands.

It will now become necessary to institute another system for successfully carrying on the trade with China, and the opportunity seems a good one for a different arrangement, by the Government, for the East India Company's Financial operations with that country.

Were the Court of Directors to fix a fair Exchange, which all parties could rely on being steadily adhered to, up to a date named (by one year or more) there can be little doubt they would receive, at home, a much larger amount of money than hitherto, against their drafts on the Indian Government.

On the subject, however, this Chamber will confer with those of Calcutta and Madras and again address you.

I have the honor to be,

Your most obedient servant,

H. G. GORDON,—Chairman.

Occupation of Candahar.

(From the Englishman 27th May.)

We have at length received intelligence, on which we can rely, of the fall of Candahar. The following is from Loodianah and is dated the 15th instant:

"A letter from Colonel Wade's camp received last evening, contains the news of the fall of Candahar; but I regret, it gives no particulars. The following is an extract:— We this morning (the 7th) received intelligence, while at breakfast, of the fall of Candahar, but this will be no news to you. Wade instantly directed a royal salute of be fired, and on our guns opening, and the cause being known, the example was followed by Runjeet's troops, and also taken up by the fort, and we had a royal from every gun in the camp, so, as you can fancy, we made noise enough at any rate. In the evening the Shazadah holds a durbar to congratulate us on the event. We break ground the day after tomorrow, en route for the Khyber pass; at the entrance of which we halt until Mackeson joins with some levies.—Dost Mahomed's son with 10,000 men is all ready to dispute our passage, which if true (and we have no reason to doubt it) will cause some broken heads, ere we come back again. Ferris of the 30th is appointed Quarter Master General to our united force. There has not been a line from the army for I know not how long. An express went through this ye-terday to the Governor General with, I suppose, all particulars. There is a little anecdote connected with the night march across the desert, which I have not seen mentioned in any of the letters. During the hour's halt in the middle of the night to refresh, the lads of the Foot Artillery, not having had enough, got the fiddler of the company, a descrd good one, by the bye, and he must have been careful what he have kept his fiddle together so long; however, they got the chap, went to Capt. Kay, borrowed the Park Canteen, and danced country-dances and, reels until the bugles sounded the assembly, when they all declared that hour's dancing was worth all the sleep in the world. Runjeet was so much better that Mr. Clark had had an interview. I must now conclude; but, should I get any further particulars, you shall have them."

We have accounts from Peshawur that the occupation of Candahar by Shah Soojah and the British troops was beginning to produce an effect in Cabul, in asmuch as the people were up in arms against the Ameer, and had seized some of his guns between Cabul and Jellahabad. It was expected that he would follow the example of his brothers and fly to Persia. The terms of surrender offered him by our government were, we have reason to know, one lac of rupees per annum and an asylum in our territories. He is a great donkey for not accepting them.

The difficulty which our army experienced in obtaining supplies on the march to Candahar does not appear to have arisen so much from want of information on our part as to the resources of the country, but from the hostility of the Khan of Kelat, who threw every obstacle in our way, and departed from all previous promises. Fifteen hundred men at Quetta are watching him, and a local corps of eight hundred is about to be raised there to keep the footing we have obtained.

By all accounts, the feelings of the people towards Shah Soojah, have been found somewhat different from what was generally anticipated. We know that the Shah himself gathered no adherents between Shikarpore and Candahar, and now hear that his son, who accompanied Runjeet Sing's quota of troops through the Punjaub (and was by the last accounts leaving Peshawur for Cabul) was equally unfortunate. The reason given for this absence of adherents is that Dost Mahomed held many important hostages in his hands for the good behaviour of the chief, and had moreover used his best endeavors to rouse the religious feeling of the people.

We have mentioned the 'quota of troops,' which, by the treaty with Shah Soojah and the British Government, Runjeet Sing was bound to furnish.

It has reached us that, in this respect, the Maharajah has put a somewhat different construction on the treaty from that which the other parties meant it to bear. When Shah Soojah's son, Colonel Wade and his suite reached Peshawur there were no Seikh troops ready to go on!—According to the last advices, however, five thousand men (all Mussulmans) had joined the Shazadeh, a portion of whom, viz., four companies and a troop of artillery, two regiments of infantry, of 500 or 600 constituted the guard of the Prince: Dr. Lord being also with them as 'in charge' of the Suwars. This shuffling on the part of the monocular chief of the Punjaub, was just what those who have known him for a considerable time anticipated.

On the 18th of this month, the Shazadeh and Colonel Wade, started from Peshawur, for Cabul, by the Khybur Pass, but it was by no means quite certain that they would reach Cabul without a gentle 'flare up.'

Our Delhi correspondent has sent us the following. It confirms the intelligence we have already communicated:—

'Intelligence received from Peshawar to the 7th instant, is to the effect that the authority of Shah Soojah-ool-Moolk has been established at Candahar without a struggle. The Shirdars appear to have fled towards Persia on the 26th April, when the Shah, with the British army, was close to the city. One of their influential Chiefs, Adjoo Khan Kohur, had joined the Shah, and they seem to have been without any support or sympathy in the population, or with out other followers than their own immediate military retainers. The perfect authenticity of this information cannot yet be declared, but, on a comparison of dates and other circumstances, there is too grounds to rely on it. The intelligence was universally believed to be true at Peshawur, and there had been marked rejoicings in consequence. The town was to be illuminated for three nights, and there had been repeated salvoes of triumph from the artillery in the Sikh camp, and in that of the Shah Zada Tymour.

The above date of April 26th, (the 11th of the Mahomedan month of Sufur,) is mentioned in the Peshawur intelligence as that of the flight of the Sirdars of Candahar. Letters have been received from the army direct to the 19th April, which show that the day of expected arrival at Candahar was the 25th or 26th of the month.

One of the letters alluded to is from the cavalry brigade at Doudigolai, about 15 miles to the North of the Kajak Pass. This place is mentioned as being within 6 marches of Candahar. The Cavalry Brigade had reached that ground on the 16th April, and was halting until the whole of the army should have crossed the Pass. The chance even of opposition is not mentioned in the letter. The crossing of the Pass had been a work of some labour, and had occupied the brigade from 6 A. M. to 2 P. M. A delay of 2 days had taken place in the entire transit of the tents and baggage. The camp followers had been at times fired upon by the Atchirkaye Mountain robbers, but without, as is stated, the occurrence of any casualty.

It is further reported that Shah Soojah was to be crowned at Candahar, and that the army would probably remain there for a month or six weeks.'—Sing. Free Press 4 June.

On the morning of the 24th, the King approached Candahar, but without any intention of marching into the City. The scarcity of water, however, compelled His Majesty to approach within 3 miles. The British army was in the rear. The King was even in advance of his own troops. The morning had scarcely dawned when parties of horse were discovered—they were soon ascertained to be friends, come to pay their duty to their Sovereign. They galloped up, dismounted, drew up in line, prayed for the King, who welcomed them, and then fell into the rear of the procession. One standard after another thus joined the King, and, ere his Majesty had reached Candahar, he had been joined by about 1,500 well mounted dressed, and caparisoned horse.

Mr. Macnaghten and the Officers of his Mission, with a small honorary escort, were alone in attendance. All the Chiefs of Candahar had tendered their allegiance, with the exception of the three Sirdars who had fled to Geishk.

On His Majesty's entry into the city, there could not have been less than between 60 and 70,000 persons present. The balconies were crowded with women—the streets lined with men,—and from all quarters a universal shout of welcome was heard. The exclamations were "Candahar is gained by the Barukzyes." "May your power endure for ever," "We look to you for protection," "May your enemies be destroyed," "Son of Timour Shah, you are welcome." Flowers and loaves of bread were cast before His Majesty.

After passing through the City, the King dismounted from his horse, and proceeded to the shrine containing the shirt of the Prophet, and offered up thanksgivings; thence he went to the tomb of his grandfather and prayed. On both these occasions, he was accompanied by the British Envoy, and the Officers of his Suite. The party returned through the City with the same demonstrations of loyalty and respect on the part of the populace; and the eventful day passed over without an accident.

Accounts had been received from Herat up to the 29th March, and we are happy to state that grain and other necessaries of life were becoming more plentiful in that City. Measures were in progress for provisioning the City, and improving its defences.

Colonel Stoddart, we are happy to state, was well at Bokhara.—Bombay Times Extra, 5th June.

The Philippines.

A small pamphlet with the title "Memoria sobre el Comercio y Navegacion de las Islas Filipinas" por Don Rafael Dias Arenas, Comendador de la orden Americo de Isabel la Catolica" has been sent to us, and we opened it with a considerable degree of curiosity hoping to find therein much information on a country of which comparatively little is yet known generally, and if our expectations have not been altogether realized, we yet find some notices of the eastern commerce carried on in these Islands which, being probably new to our readers, we shall translate. The author informs us, that, being elected one of the Deputies to the Cortes for the Philippine Islands, he proceeded to Spain, and employed his time during the passage in writing notes on the Commerce of those countries, not, however, with a view to their publication, but merely to while away time, but thinking afterwards that they might be useful to his countrymen, he resolved to publish his as he calls it "humilde y pobre trabajo." Appearing therefore with so little ostentation before the Public, we have perhaps no right to complain of the scantiness of these notes, but must be grateful for what has been given.

There is a chain of Islands which stretches from the southwestern point of the large Island of Mindanao to the northeastern shores of Borneo, of which the largest is named Jolo or Sooloo, and from this the whole group derive their name of the Jolo or Soolo Islands. From their vecinity to the Philippines a considerable trade is carried on between them and we shall now proceed to translate what Mr Dias Arenas says concerning the traffic now carried on there.

"Opposite to Zamboangan the most southerly Spanish settlement in the Philippine Islands, is the Island of Jolo which, though in itself of little importance, has become, during some months of the year, the centre of a considerably active trade, occasioned by the Malays from the adjacent Islands going thither to dispose of the produce of their fisheries and of the slaves made during their predatory excursions.

"Vessels destined for Jolo leave Manila in the months of March and April, and touching at Antique or Iloilo first proceed to Zamboangan to obtain a clearance if they are not provided with one from Manila. Vessels some few years ago, were prohibited from touching at these places under a penalty of 500 $, because these ports were not then opened to foreign trade, and the produce of these provinces would consequently have been exported without paying duties; the ships nevertheless went there under pretext of average etc. it happening here as elsewhere that the love of lucre was stronger than the law; these proceedings were often however denounced, and voluminous judicial proceedings and heavy expenses were the consequence.

"The merchants of Binayan, when sending their small vessels to Jolo were obliged first to go to Manila and there enter their cargoes in the Custom-house, whence the clearance was given them; but in doing this, most of the provinces being nearer to Jolo than to Manila, they experienced the great inconvenience that, their destination being south, they had first to go in the opposite direction, thus beginning their voyage perhaps threefold. At length to obviate these hardships, a custom-house was established at Zamboangan in May 1821.

"Though the vessels for this trade are fitted out by merchants at Manila and the cargoes for the most part bought with their money, it is carried on chiefly on account of Chinese, who are almost invariably the charterers and shippers. The Government of Jolo is so arbitrary and despotic, and the annoyances so many which the merchants who confidingly put themselves into the hands of the Datos are subjected to, that the Spaniards have relinquished it altogether, leaving it in the hands of the Chinese. These whose policy it is to suffer any thing for the sake of gain, live in Jolo among the Malays exposed to be wounded and maimed for the slightest fault, and obliged to exempt themselves from numberless extortions by presents to the Sultan and Datos. The former is the sovereign, and the latter are the principal nobles who compose a strong aristocracy capable of resisting the Sultan when ever they please, and though they generally seemingly acquiesce in what he orders, they act as they think fit. The Sultan and Datos are owners of slaves who form the population of Jolo. Lawsuits are unknown there; the quarrels of the Datos are decided by arms; each gathers his slaves and abuses his opponent by words, and this happens more frequently than actual fighting some other Dato or the Sultan himself then interfere and peace is made. If any slave has done wrong, the Dato draws his kris and cuts his head off, or orders an other slave to spear him. If the killed slave was his own, he only loses the value of his industry, if another's he has to pay that value, or replace him by one of his own. In short, such is the want of personal safety that both buyer and seller go to market armed with lance and shield. To such a country come annually Spaniards, mestizos, Indians and Chinese to trade, and 6 or 8 vessels may be seen at a time at Cruz, where many Chinese establish themselves marrying Soloo or captive women of their islands.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

As we are now in the last days of July, will you allow me to ask, what is to be the precise position of life and property, on board British vessels below Whampoa Chinese waters, on and after the 19th proximo.

The following extracts from the Kinchen's edict of April 19th, will shew the grounds of my inquiry.

"Hereafter, for ever, foreigners will never more be allowed to bring Opium into this country. The decree is already passed, and if they do so, they shall be capitally punished and their Cargoes confiscated.

"You, the English Superintendent Elliot, have desired that a warning be given before such edicts were again declare that you will act in obedience to the law, the period being indulgently extended. This your statement seems reasonable; but, as to the request that a period of five months be allowed for the Indian ships, and two months for those direct from England, these periods are indeed too long." "The period ought to be changed and fixed at four months for the Indian ships, and of eight, for the direct ships, at the Expiration of which periods, they MUST CONFORM TO THE NEW REGULATIONS, &c. &c.

Some allowance should be made for the possible incorrectness of quotation and translation, yet it seems clear, that the 19th proximo is recorded, on the part of the Chinese Government, as the date, after which all the Indo British Commerce becomes liable to the severity of the new laws, with the full sanction of the Superintendent. To be afloat on the same bottom, or wrecked on the same shore, with an opium chest, is after that period, to expose the Subjects of Her Majesty to severe punishment. As the American Consul, on the recent occasion, gave his Excellency only this more guarded assurance, that "the merchants of his country, acting in obedience to the new regulations, will not presume to traffic in opium;" and as the new certificate lately signed at Canton, does no more than repeat this assurance, and certify to the non-importation of the drug, it is not so clear how the Commissioner regards their liabilities. As it appears however, that some parties who deemed it necessary for them to return to Canton for a time, (less they should be mistaken as joining in the Opium quarrel,) are about to bring this point to his Excellency; and are prepared to learn Canton, in case the laws of the Empire are to be extended over them, in the full extent of the above quotation unless accompanied by securities such as their interesting usage sanctions; it seems natural that equal solicitude should be felt for the safety of the larger number of British subjects, still within Chinese jurisdiction.

I make this inquiry, Mr. Editor, with diffidence, but seeing the period named by his Excellency so near, and hearing a report that some British vessels from an Opium ship have already fallen into the hands of the Chinese, I feel desirous to known what steps are about to be taken. If indeed, the Americans are unsafe at Canton, under the most solemn pledges of protection, what is the security of the British fleet at Hongkong, where its unlawful stay and hostile attitude are presumptive evidence of criminal intentions?

Yours &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

We have perused the several articles in your paper of the 27th Inst., and beg you to understand distinctly, that we think the matter in dispute, namely "who first signed the bond" is not of the least importance. We do not think there is one man in Canton, whether agent or principal, who would have hesitated to recommend any Captain to sign the present bond, provided he had a cargo ready for shipping and a ship ready for cargo. We certainly should not have hesitated, and if any one of our countrymen feels any compunction of conscience for having agreed to sign the bond in its present form, we are perfectly willing to take the burthen on our shoulders, and to incur the "odium," be it small or great. We ordered the two first ships, the Paris and Nautilus to Whampoa, fully expecting that the Captains would be called upon to sign a much stronger paper than the present one, and a copy of which paper was handed to them at Macao, and to which they offered no objections. It cannot therefore be said that we compelled the Captains to sign a bond after getting them inside the Bogue. We were determined to delay signing any paper, as recommending any paper to be signed, for a reasonable time, and to get the paper alluded to above modified as far as possible. We felt persuaded that the Chinese were anxious to have the trade opened, and that any modification of the bond could be obtained as easily with the ships at Whampoa as if they remained in Macao Roads, exposed to the vicissitudes of the climate; the sequel has proved that our conclusions in this respect were correct. We have not evaded the "odium" of having first signed the bond, or of having conceded it, because we considered either as an act derogatory to any Agent, but because it was really and truly an act of the American merchants residing in Canton, and having American merchant ships under their orders. No man having control over a ship, and who ordered her into the river, could possibly have expected less than the bond now in force. Whether the responsibility rests with us or not, we are perfectly willing to assume it if our doing so will please any member of the community, and especially put an end to this most unwarrantable subscription to your columns, which should be filled with more interesting matter.

We are Your's truly,
RUSSELL & Co.

THE MARITIME TRADE OF CHINA.—China has perhaps the longest navigable coast of any country in the world; including Mantchooria, an integral part of this Emperor, the whole extent is not less than 1800 miles. Only the central part between the Yang tsze keang and the Yellow river, is devoid of harbours, the remainder is more or less indented, and furnishes many excellent anchorages. These advantages did not pass unnoticed by the gain-seeking race of inhabitants, that live on the coast, yet a natural aversion against the sea kept them for a long while from contending with its boisterous waves. So little did the ancient Chinese engage in maritime enterprises, that the very existence of so large an island as Formosa, of which the mountains may be seen on a fine day from the opposite coast of Fokeen, was unknown up to the 14th century. Some unfortunate mariner might have been driven there by stress of weather, but nobody took the trouble of investigating its situation and extent. Even to this very moment, when all the world is smothered with improvements and glorying in discoveries, the island has never yet been circumnavigated by any Chinese vessel. At the same time, the natives made more extensive voyages under the Tang dynasty, than even the present race of adventurers. What Chinese junk would venture at present to Ceylon or the Persian Gulph? But then they went in a safe manner creeping along the coast, trading wherever they found a harbour, and did not care, if they even spent 2 or 4 years in a single voyage. These enterprises were restricted to only a few vessels, and these were no immensely large, that perhaps one half got a ground and was lost. According to the extravagant descriptions that are left to us, these leviathans resembled cities, and there were gardens kept on board to supply the crew with vegetables. Now, though this may appear a mere traveller's tale, there is a little truth in it. The Chinese possess several kind of cresses, of which the seed, when thrown into the water, very rapidly grows. Of this herbage the sailors are very fond, and they are in the habit of taking the seeds with them and sowing it at pleasure.

These distant adventures were continued until the Arabs entered into competition, and then they became more and more scarce. What a pity it is, that the Chinese never published journals of these voyages; what light would they have thrown upon the condition of the Indian Archipelago? How well they might have described the islanders that confessed Hinduism and Budhuism. All this however we must now forego, and it is really annoying, that even the national history does not mention a single instance of such a voyage, though whole pages are filled with the miserable intrigues of a wretched court.

We believe that during all this time the maritime native trade consisted strictly in coasting along the shore, and that even this was not carried on to a very great extent. There were several reasons, which render this probable. Kwang tung and Fokeen, the two southwestern provinces, were during the middle ages only scantily inhabited, the natives lived a semibarbarous life and were far behind in the useful arts. It is however from those, that maritime commerce has received its principal impulse. On the other hand the island navigation was in many respects so well directed, the intercourse between the provinces on account of the many canals and rivers so easy, that the people felt less the necessity of seeking a communication by sea. Moreover many disasters seem to have occurred, a proof that navigation was quite in its infancy, which deterred the people from embarking in these perilous undertakings. One of the principal causes that made Kublai construct the great canal, this master piece of Chinese hydraulics, was the loss of the grain junks by sea. We may also form a conclusion of the structure and command of the sea craft of those times, by reading that of the innumerable fleet with which the Tatar conqueror assaulted Japan; only a few vessels escaped, all the remainder being scattered by a storm. They were perhaps unwieldy, manned with people who had never before seen the sea, and on the slightest breeze blowing gave up all hopes of saving their lives, abandoning themselves to the caprices of a treacherous element.

Under the Ming dynasty naval affairs were in a sad state. From this lethargy however the Japanese roused the celestials. A nation hitherto confined to its reclusa islands, all at once was induced to visit for the sake of commerce the harbours of China. The merchants, insulted and cheated, very soon turned pirates, and committed the greatest atrocities along the whole coast. Self defence very naturally forced the Chinese to improve their naval architecture, and by degrees a navy put to sea in order to cope with the worthless marauders. It appears that the celestials took their model from the invaders, and this constitutes until this very day the pattern for building the sea going junks. The greatest benefit however accrued to navigation from the invasion of the Mantchoos and the establishment of a separate state on Formosa. Thousands of Chinese, loath to bear the yoke of those barbarians, and to wear the badge of servitude, a dangling tail, sought a refuge on the wide sea, where they either turned pirates or joined Koksing; others, moreover, driven from their houses, fled to the islands of the Archipelago, and whilst founding new settlements engaged their countrymen to visit them from time to time. The navy of Koksing must have been very respectable, for he was able to bid defiance to a Dutch fleet, a nation who at that time had the fame of being the bravest of the brave. He even insulted the Spaniards with his squadron at Manila, and for some years, actually was master of the Chinese seas. To this valiant chieftain the Tatars had to oppose a most miserable fleet, which was again and again beaten and almost annihilated. We have heard that some minister proposed to the Emperor to change the build of the vessels, and that the displeased monarch threw to the innovator a shoe, saying, take this for a model. Whether this tale is true or not, one thing is certain, that the carpenters have invariably given the form of a shoe to their junks, and will continue to do so, until foreigners oblige them to adopt different measures.

It is under this dynasty that navigation has been in the most florishing condition, and though the Chinese have effected no considerable improvement, yet have they multiplied their maritime craft to an immense degree, and sail now in every direction of the coast. It is however very extraordinary, that whilst they witnessed the great improvements of western nations, they remained in this very useful art stationary. Even allowing, that the bulk of the nation, whilst living under the most despotic away, could not improve in architecture, yet those who have settled in the Archipelago under liberal governments have never availed themselves of those advantages. Let hundreds of junks be lost, yet they will continue to build junks. We once happened to be on board a brig commanded by a Chinese Captain. He however navigated the vessel just as if she had been a junk, and though an old quadrant was hanging in a corner, it had lost the index and was there for ornament sake.—However, in discussing these subjects we have almost forgotten that we were going to write upon maritime commerce, which we must do another time to make good the superscription.

A Copy of the following letter which we take from the Register, was by Howqua, in the name of the Co-hong, sent to an American merchant with the request to make its contents known to his countrymen.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CAPTAIN ELLIOT TO HOWQUA.

(Translated from the Chinese)

A respectful communication.—I have long been your friend, and we have mutually loved and respected each other for a long time.

I think that according to the principles on which friendship is founded—that each one that a piece of business is not going on properly, he ought to admonish and warn his friend before hand. Now I find that at Hong Kong, the place where the Foreign ships are anchored, there are a number of people who, in opposition to the laws, clandestinely take the goods and produce belonging to Englishmen, and translship them to the vessels of other countries, borrowing their name to bring them to Whampoa.

I would like to ask of you and the other Hong-merchants how, that knowing these facts, you can thus give into them?—Or how that you can thus oppose the laws, and, for the object of gaining a trifling profit shut your eyes to the injury you are bringing upon yourselves.

My country, in carrying on its transactions, only desires that these transactions be carried on uprightly, and does not wish that people who are here buy and sell at their own will and pleasure, in opposition to the laws. I am only waiting till a cruiser of my country, now daily expected, shall arrive; when I shall take all these illegal circumstances and lay them in naked truth and verity before the high officers of government; at that time I fear much that you and the other hongmerchants will have difficulty in freeing yourselves from the charge of connivance at these irregularities, which will lead to your being severely punished. I consider that you are a clear-headed and talented man, and you must, therefore, know that a trade carried on in opposition to the laws has not the slightest regularity or propriety about it; far better to do no business at all: this would be the wisest and most proper plan.

As regards the reasons why the men and ships of my country cannot now proceed to the city to carry on their business legally, I have already most minutely explained to you all the circumstances connected therewith: and I now take the original document and having had it copied out, hand it up for your perusal: I beg that you will examine it and act accordingly.

Moreover, I must entreat of you to lend an early ear to my warning and admonition. Do not cause unpleasant business, but endeavour to have affairs transacted properly, and thus the men dwelling afar off and who have committed no crime will not again be involved in loss.

Further, you ought to admonish the officers of government, and beg of them that they will manage matters justly and properly; and if they can only repose confidence in me, and consult clearly on the subject, we may yet so arrange matters as to avoid any unpleasant collision. Think of this! Beware of consequences! This for your information, and with compliments.

All entries, stating the name of the Boat, Owner and the Color of the dress to be worn by the pullers, also the number of oars pulled in the races for Boats of all Classes to be sent in sealed to the Secretary, on or before the 24th August at noon, when full particulars of the races will be published.

By order of the Committee,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Macao, 26th July. 1839.

Above will be found the prospectus of a Boat and Oar Horse-race, which are shortly to take place here. Besides these amusements the Portuguese and Foreigners have united to open a theatre on which amateurs are to perform alternately English and Portuguese plays. The temporary theatre, capacious enough to hold upwards of 400 spectators, is now, we understand, building, and it is expected that the first performance will take place early next month. The house, we learn, is to be called the Luso-Britannic Theatre.

By the Amer. ship Apthorpe from Singapore we have received the Sing. Free Press to the 13th July, and note the arrival there from this on the 12th of H. M. S. Larne and of the Cumacian Family. By the French ship Ademar from Batavia and Singapore advices have been received from the former place to the 12th and from the latter to the 23d July. Some Dutch vessels just arrived at Anger from Holland have brought dates from thence as late as the 6th April. We have heard of no news.

We recopy a letter addressed to the Bengal Hurkaru on the subject of the Opium-question now pending between the former owners and the British Government; we think the subject ably discussed. we also find in the Bombay Times of 6th June a letter signed H. Piddington, recommending for the sake of more safely carrying on the smuggling trade in Opium, to disguise vessels as Junks so as not to excite the suspicion of the Chinese authorities. However cunning such proceeding may be thought by that Writer, we doubt very much whether such disguise would have the desired effect, but whether under their true or false colors, we hope that the visit of Opium-clippers to the coast will soon cease altogether, and that this traffic will no longer endanger the other legitimate trade: we are however of opinion that it will not cease unless the Chinese Government enter into friendly negotiations with that of Great Britain on the subject.

We have recopied from the Register a proclamation issued by the Canton authorities to the outside shipping; to judge from its language it must have been done into English by one of the Consumboi-er's interpreters, of whom, we are told, he has four, and we guess its meaning to be an invitation to the shipping to proceed to Whampoa. This is the second invitation of the kind sent to the ships outside. From another letter, on the other hand, written by Capt. Elliot to Howqua, and of which the latter sent a copy to the American merchants at Canton for their information, and from the public notice issued by H. M. Superintendent on the 29th ult., in which he informs British subjects, that he has written both to India and England requesting the authorities there not to admit surgoes coming from here, unless their manifest has been countersigned by him, it will be seen, that on this subject the Imperial Commissioner and Capt. Elliot are as much at issue as ever, it being the interest of the latter, and probably that of his nation, to prevent any British property from being put under the control of the Chinese, until sufficient guarantees for its safety shall have been given. That such guarantee do not at present exist must be evident to every one, as any chance meddly on the coast or the denunciation of a single Opium smuggling transaction might again, as it had done before, jeopardize the whole trade. Besides, the Chinese owe reparation for the insults heaped upon foreigners, and if that is not given either voluntarily or enforced, and without quibble and subterfuge, it will be impossible that the trade can ever again be carried on as before; the Chinese, emboldened by manifold successes, without having ever been called to account, will in future on every favorable opportunity just repeat the same scenes, and the consequent uncertainty of the fate of the trade cannot but ruin it. Being on this subject, we have to notice the letter from our Correspondent V. V., who reminds us that the term of four months originally by the Commissioner to vessels bringing opium after the promulgation of the new decree is, in short, to expire on the 12th inst. and that after that time the shipping outside will be exposed to danger from these laws. That, as our Correspondent says, their stay there is hardly a tenable attitude are presumptive evidence of orders to themselves, does not appear clear to us; these vessels carried home most of them, with perfectly legal cargoes, but seeing that the Chinese Government had closed the port to trade with unobtainable conditions, they remained outside to wait either for the termination of the present difficulties or to sail away again. The "hostile" attitude is no other than that of a defence which common prudence demands should be kept up on the coast of a country the Government of which has more than once threatened their annihilation.

A circular informs us that a meeting of British merchants is to be held this day at the house of the Chief Superintendent, to take into consideration the forming of a British Chamber of Commerce.

We have been requested to state that in the programme issued by the Secretary of the Canton Regatta Club (as given above) instead of "four to be given to the second boat," of the sailing boats contending for a cup given by Mr. Fox, it ought to be— "$ 20 to be given to the second boat," and has accordingly been thus printed by us.

We are sorry to hear a report that three Lascars have fallen into the hands of the Chinese somewhere on the Westward. Under present circumstances we much fear that these poor men may become the first victims of the "new laws."

SOCIETY FOR GUTZLAFF'S BENEVOLENCE.—The Rev. Mr. Gutzlaff, August for this philanthropic and useful institution has called us on a few members of the particular committee named by this society under the title of "Journal de la Société Gutzlaff des Naufragés," the object of which is to report the transactions of the society, and to publish papers having in view the perfection of navigation in general. We find in one of the numbers a report of a trial to establish a communication between the shore and a wreck by means of sending lines to the latter fastened to shells, which has proved perfectly successful. In one of these trials, after a boat had been rowed to a distance of 600 feet from the shore, the shell was thrown about 800 feet beyond it, leaving, in its passage a line of half an inch in diameter on board the boat, and the result of this experiment went to show that it was at all times possible, with the greatest precision, to throw a line capable of bearing about 1000 lbs to a distance of 5, 6 or 800 feet according to the charge. We believe that the same means to establish communication with wrecks have been already resorted to with success in England and the north of Europe, and it is very desirable that so beneficial an invention should be more generally applied. We likewise find in these papers the description of a raft as invented by Sir Sidney Smith, which is to said will live in the heaviest sea, without the possibility of being ever submerged, and of a very simple construction. This Society of Shipwrecks extends its care to all countries, and has Agents in most maritime places, particularly where their situation renders frequent calls upon it's assistance most necessary. Mr. Gutzlaff informs us that the Society is anxious to establish an Agency also in Macao or some other place in China, where its aid may prove useful, and we are convinced that if this humane project were to find support here, it might be the means of saving the lives of many of our fellow beings, which are now annually lost during the sudden and heavy gales which so often frequent this port and the Coasts of China generally.

SHIPWRECKS.—We regret to announce that intelligence has been received here during the week of the loss of no less than three British free-traders, the Ormuzia, Siam, and Abigail.

The particulars relative to the loss of the first mentioned vessel will be found in a communication which we publish in the usual place from Captain SHORT. The Siam under command of Capt. BOARDS, which sailed from Liverpool on the 20th February, bound for Manila, struck on the 20th ult. at about 5 A. M. on the SW. end of the reef on the rocks about 15 miles to the eastward of Lone Island, during a heavy squall. She filled with water in about five minutes, and the surf was so high that the Captain, with his wife and two children, and the Officers and crew, altogether 18 in number, had barely time to save themselves in the ship's boats, leaving every thing behind. They were picked up in a few hours by the French ship Gabriel, and arrived on the following day at Batavia where the officers and crew were relieved from the state of destitution in which they found themselves left by the charitable contributions of the British and American merchants, Captain BOARDS and his family soon after taking passage for London in the Platina. Nothing whatever was saved from the Siam not even the log-book—and she began to break up so day-light appeared. The assistance of Government was applied for, which they refused, stating in addition to other and not pleasing replies, that "the Admiral on the Singapore station offered the first man-of-war brig that arrived to go there. Regarding the Abigail we have learned no more than that she was wrecked in Torres Straits, on her passage up from Australia to Batavia, also without any loss of life.

SIAM.—By arrivals from Siam during the week we have received advices from Bankok of dates the 8th and 12th June. The Opium agitation was subsiding; but notwithstanding the extensive confiscation that had already taken place, the King was by no means satisfied that his Ministers had faithfully discharged their duty, and was pleased to insinuate that the smugglers had found favour in their eyes through the medium of the pockets—a suspicion which still continued to subject those high officers to the royal displeasure. The unfortunate Chinese who were seized in the Sampan Pukot from this port with Opium on board, were reduced to the most pitiable condition; they had been thrown into prison loaded with irons, and being strangers, without either friends or relations at Bankok, were left to depend for subsistence wholly upon their fellow sufferers, as the Government makes no provision for the support of its prisoners—and in this confinement these men are in all probability doomed to languish out the rest of their days, unless the British government see cause to interpose for their liberation. The authorities at Bankok pretend that the Chinese were the first to fire into the Siamese guard boat: but our correspondent had his information from a source, of the correctness of which there could not be the least doubt; and his account is, that the Siamese boarded the Pukot ere the latter were well aware who were their assailants, and commenced laying about them with their swords and spears on every side, Six of the Chinese jumped overboard; and one of them who appeared the head-man of the Pukot, was dangerously wounded in the back with a sword—whether he recovered or not is unknown, and what became of the others does not appear, although the Siamese authorities say that only three of the Pukot people were killed. This we have no doubt at all is the more correct version of the affair. As the Siamese had only just commenced to take active preventive measures against the introduction of Opium, and as no intimation of their proceedings had reached Singapore before the Pukot left, it is but natural to suppose that those on board of her were neither prepared for nor expected an attack, and that they were boarded in a surprise. We may expect soon to hear also of extensive seizures of Opium in Sangora, as the government had issued orders for the prosecution of the same measures to suppress the trade in that province as had been adopted in Bangkok. The scarcity of money in Siam was extreme.

A question has arisen whether the Siamese government, in confiscating the treasure and other merchandise found along with the Opium in the Pukot, and in imprisoning the people belonging to her, has not transgressed the stipulations in the treaty of 1826 regarding the importation of Opium into Siam by the subjects of the British flag. The 10th article of the Treaty, after providing that there shall be an unrestricted trade by sea between the Strait's ports and all the Siamese provinces, proceeds; "But merchants are forbidden to bring Opium, which is a contraband article in the territories of Siam; and should a merchant introduce any, the government shall seize burn and destroy the whole of it"—and the construction which we are told both European and native merchants have all along given to this is, that confiscation of the article was the only penalty to which the importers of Opium were liable. We doubt much, however, whether this view of the question can be upheld on proper grounds. At the time this treaty was made, there were doubtless laws in existence in Siam against the importation of Opium; and if the violation of these laws or ordonances involved penalties extending beyond the simple seizure of the property, we certainly do not see how the above quoted case can prove an exemption from such penalties in favour of British subjects. This we imagine could only be done by excepting them in express terms from the operation of the existing laws on the subject—and it could scarcely be the purpose of the Siamese to permit foreigners by Treaty to introduce Opium with more impunity than they extended to their own subjects for the offence of buying it. It seems therefore, that it would be necessary to enquire what were all the penalties that attached to the importation of Opium into Siam at the time the Treaty was concluded, before the charge of violating it, by the imprisonment of the Pukot people, can be substantiated against the Siamese government. The case of those men is however one of peculiar severity even among the late proceedings against Opium dealers resident in Siam; to whom by the edict published in our number of 13th ultimo, a free pardon was extended on condition of the surrender of their Opium. This at least intimates a consciousness, that the laws on the subject had been administered with too much laxity to justify putting them suddenly in force, according to the letter; and we are decidedly of opinion that our government is bound to inquire into the circumstances of the imprisonment of the Pukot people, as trading under a port-clearance from a British port, to the territories of a power with whom our intercourse is regulated by Treaty, in sufficient cause why he indeed we made out to require their liberation, founded on the long admitted abeyance of the laws regarding Opium in Siam, and on the severity exercised towards those men in comparison with that used towards others who were guilty of offending in a similar way. As to the assertion by the authorities at Bankok that the Chinese fired on the guard-boat first, the story like a tale got up to encounter a contingency which only the people here have been subjected. However, it can be proved to be false—as fully as least as such a thing can be expected to be proved false—it can be proved on the faith of a distinct statement, made to a European merchant in Bangkok by one of the Siamese actors in the attack and seizure of the Pukat, to be utterly untrue.

What the Siamese may yet do at Sangora remains to be seen—but it is undeniable that if without notice or warning given, they proceed to the seizure and confiscation of all the Opium found there, it will amount to little short of mere robbery; as not only was no prohibition opposed to its introduction into that territory, but the Rajah who governs there for the King of Siam was himself the largest dealer in the article within the province.—Sing. Free Press, 11th July.

CHINA.—The relations of England and China have assumed a position which will demand all the wisdom and energy of the British Cabinet. It will depend upon the decision which may now be formed, whether our future intercourse with China shall be placed upon a secure and equitable footing, or be left at the mercy of a rampant barbarian power. The unexpected proceedings of the Imperial Commissioner may be considered as having crushed the Opium trade. No merchant, possessed of ordinary prudence, can justify to himself, or his constituents, the outlay of any further capital in so forlorn an enterprize. So far as the trade itself is concerned, we are much inclined to applaud the decision of character manifested by the Emperor's representative. By a sharp, though unjust, remedy, he has extinguished a demoralizing traffic, and saved the empire from an enormous evil. But the means by which this result has been attained, are of a nature which even the barbarian judgment of the Chinese cannot extenuate. At no former period, under all the successive stoppages of our trade, have they afforded us any just cause for the employment of force, and the fact that Opium was smuggled into the empire, under the British flag, without any attempt on the part of "our Nation's Chief," as the Chinese call him, to prevent it, deprived our remonstrances of all moral force. But the recent transactions at Canton have entirely changed the aspect of affairs. That they had a right to confiscate all the contraband Opium found in Chinese waters, and to punish the smugglers, European or native, according to the laws of the empire, will readily be conceded. But nothing whatever can justify the outrages to which the British Representative has now been subjected. There are some who censure him for the assistance he officially afforded the Chinese authorities, some months since, in the suppression of the trade. We are ready to attribute the boldness of the Commissioner to his concessions. But there is every reason to believe, that the determination of the Pekin Cabinet to root out the trade, at all hazards, was of an earlier date than those concessions, and would have been carried into effect if they had never been made. We think, on the contrary, that the aid he afforded the Chinese, in their legitimate efforts to suppress the trade, is the most happy circumstance which could have happened. It takes away even the shadow of excuse from the Chinese authorities, for their atrocious conduct towards one whose public capacity they had acknowledged, and of whose public authority they had already availed themselves. The previous conduct of Capt. Elliot gives vast strength to our claim for redress. He has been censured, again, for proceeding to Canton. But it was impossible for him to have foreseen the violence which, for the first time during our long intercourse with the Chinese, has been exercised towards our Superintendent. He might naturally judge that, in the difficulties which had arisen, his post was Canton. If he continued at Macao, while British subjects were placed under restraint, his absence would not have passed without censure; and it would have been asked, why he did not proceed to the scene of danger, and interpose the sacredness of his person between them and the Chinese authorities.

It is difficult in these circumstances to deny, that a regard for our interests, both present and prospective, not only in China but in India, requires that we should demand ample indemnity for the past, and security for the future; and that this demand should be equitable, but firmly enforced, by the means at our command. If, instead of a well supported remonstrance, we submit calmly to this national insult, it will be constantly repeated, and our commercial connections will be exposed to perpetual interruptions. All violence towards our Representative has hitherto been avoided; and the Chinese, notwithstanding the insolence of their proclamations, have treated us with a certain degree of respect, and made up differences by a compromise. They have now put our national power and character to the test, by acts of unjust violence to the acknowledged Superintendent of British affairs in China. By submission, we shall forfeit all esteem in the eyes, both of the people and the Government, and there will be no end to Chinese insolence and aggression. If a single chest of Opium should hereafter be found to have been smuggled, either in a British or foreign bottom, we shall be held answerable for it; our trade will be immediately stopped; our merchants placed in confinement, and our Superintendent threatened with starvation. It will be impossible to prevent the surreptitious entry of Opium into China, by any power we can exert; and hence the persons and the interests of British subjects will ever be exposed to the wanton excesses of the Chinese. If, however, they are taught, by experience, that injustice to England will expose their maritime cities to destruction, and all the seaborne trade of the empire to confiscation, we may expect fair and honorable treatment; but, we fear, in no other case.

If an ill-timed submission should mark our proceedings, it is not merely the interests of our China trade which will suffer; the consequences will stretch into Hindostan. The most events will be received with the approbation at the court of Nepaul. Thurrenddin will not long remain ignorant of our degradation. If he was able to obtain a translation of the letter which appeared in the Friend of India from Mr. ———; if, through the infidelity of our establishments, he was put in possession of a minute of council, he will speedily hear of the unfortunate position we occupy in China. If the question of a rupture between the English and Persians has agitated Nepaul and Burmah with the desire to humble them, what impression to our disadvantage will not be produced at those Courts, when the tale is recited of the humiliation to which we have been obliged to submit, from a much more proximate authority, from the Lord Paramount of Eastern Asia, whose supremacy is acknowledged and felt by both those States? Our being able to remain at peace with them, under these circumstances, will be rendered more than ever uncertain.

The vital interests of the British empire in the East, are now in the hands of the British Ministry at home, whose measures, unhappily, the public has had too much reason to question. It is greatly to be feared, that in the view they may take of this affair, they will be influenced, either by the domestic, than the imperial interests of England; and that they will rather patch up the matter, and entail a long train of embarrassments on their successors, than put in jeopardy the tea duties for a month. If, however, the Ministry could be induced to look at the question in all its bearings; if the necessity arising from ten could be dispensed with for a brief period; if the upper and middling ranks of society could put on a short allowance of tea for a while, what a revolution, here is a golden opportunity for [illegible] Chinese a lesson, which will tend to smoothe the path of the European family with them for a quarter of a century to come. The Chinese, like all bullies, are cowards. We need not land a single soldier, or even levy a single sepoy, but with letters of marque. A small naval force will give us at once the command of the China seas, and the interruption of all intercourse between the maritime provinces of the empire; and the detention of all Chinese property found on the high seas, would shake the Tartar throne, and render the Chinese a bauble as they are now arrogant. It is possible that in case of a rupture, the Emperor may order two hundred thousand troops to enter Bengal and drive us into the sea. He has seen once enough for such a step. In the Nepaul case of war, he did issue such a mandate, and the troops were put in motion; but, unfortunately, it was countermanded before we could meet them in the field. If the attempt should be repeated, Nepaul and Birmah would immediately be on our hands; they would follow the footsteps of the Lord Paramount and we might see the Emperor of China marshalling the forces of the East against us. Such a contingency is not altogether improbable, but the issue of the contest cannot be doubtful.

There remains to be considered the pounds, shillings, and pence question. Will the British Government at home consider itself bound, by the promise made by Capt. Elliot when he had ceased to be a free agent? Will the Ministry venture to ask Parliament for two millions to reimburse the smugglers; and will the people of England submit to pay it? We concur with both our morning contemporaries in thinking not. Considering all the circumstances of the case, the contraband nature of the traffic; the repeated prohibitions of the Chinese Government; the loud warnings which have been given to merchants within the last six months; and the condition to which this contraband trade had reduced our Representative, we think the Ministry will lack neither will nor argument to reject the guarantee. As to demanding payment of the Company, the merchants may as well demand it of the Insurance Offices. The sooner those engaged in this trade can make up their minds to pocket the loss occasioned by this catastrophe, the better for their repose.—Friend of India.

The following scheme is recommended by Mr. Piddington and forms part of a letter addressed to the Bombay Times. The writer does well to say that a paper like his is not "the place for entering into any discussion on the morality of the trade," about which, such as he recommends it, there can be but one opinion. We hope that the difficulties in which British influence with China are at present involved, will be adjusted by the British Government repudiating the Opium trade altogether, and obtaining for this concession valuable securities for the uninterrupted intercourse in future between the two nations.

"7.—I shall be told that, at present, the coast trade cannot be carried on even by the ships going on purpose; I should be glad to be wondered at in, how they have ever been able to trade at all! A European rigged vessel gives the alarm against herself whenever she appears, and lodges an information in the hands of every individual who may have a spite at the authorities. Only think of the Chinese going to smuggle tea on the coast of England in a Junk and a number of these anchored at one spot, at the month of the Thames or the Severn! This is exactly what we are doing in China; and we come back in utter despair that we cannot smuggle.

"8.—But I do not think it necessary to give up our own intercourse with the Coast, though it ought, I imagine, to be carried on in a far different way, i. e. in clippers rigged like junks, and with false upper-works. This is not a new scheme he is observed, but a well known and long established plan. At Manila, not only the cargoes of all the ships are carried down to Cavite (the port during the E. W. monsoon) in Pandeans vessels of from 50 to 100 tons, with European bottoms and Chinese masts and sails, but moreover steel European-moulded vessels, 2 and 300 tons, built at Pangasinan on the Coast of Luzon, are rigged Chinese fashion and sent with valuable cargoes to Sooloo; I have known them go to Macao, and I believe to Singapore. They have only vast sails for cheapness; but these stand well. Canvas could of course be substituted in blowing weather. A stupor so disguised with a few Chinese mariners and trade-goods on board, could appear as any part of the Coast without risk or exciting suspicion. If necessary, too, the whole crew should have Chinese dresses.

"9.—With a safe depot, we should avoid all collision with the Chinese, and the sins of the smuggling world fall upon them. It would be carried on from a point which could not be watched like the present roadsteads, and I presume that we also could trade on the Coast with vessels properly equipped as before shown.

"10.—If it was found that the course of the trade could thus be changed, it would not, I suppose, be impracticable to purchase the depot Island from Spain, or Phoenix was purchased by America?

"The foregoing are but crude ideas from which perhaps something may be elicited which is feasible. Without force, which is out of the question, we shall obtain no depot on Chinese ground as proposed, I believe, by Mr. Matheson; and without a depot we are never safe from disturbance. I do not advert here to the advantage which might result from having articles brought in exchange for the Opium, as in the general which are now sent to Canton by an expensive land carriage, or to the heavy port dues paid by the Europeans, in addition to the fleecing combinations of the Hong merchants, which such a port would wholly break up. The plan for obtaining one is surely worth a trial; and if it succeeds it must be beneficial both to the Spaniards and to ourselves. There are, no doubt, both facilities and objections which we do not now perceive, but at present I do not think, that with good management, these are any insurmountable obstacles in the way. A paper like this is not of course the place for entering into any discussion on the morality of the trade."

H. PIDDINGTON.

IMPORTS, DELIVERIES, AND STOCK OF TEA, FOR THE YEAR 1839.

London, 15th March.

Sir,

The endeavour to give a correct Statement has this, as it did last year, occasioned much delay:—our accounts from the Out-Ports are again not perfect.—We discover that the estimate of the Deliveries of the United Kingdom for 1837 was overrated.

Correcting the Deliveries of 1837, we find that in the Home Consumption of 1838 there is a small increase, but that the Exports are seriously lessened:—in 1837 they amounted to 4,700,000 lbs., but of this quantity 982,000 lbs. were Bohea shipped for the return of the 1s. 2d. duty, so that the continental demand was only about 3,700,000 lbs.—the Exports for the past year were 2,778,000 lbs.

It was resolved in November, 1837, that after the East India Company should have completed the sale of their stock of tea in December, that the system of quarterly sale should be adopted, and accordingly the first quarterly sale was commenced on the 19th December, 1837, and continued until January, 1838:—the spirited purchases, and great advances given at the October sale, 1837, led to the putting up at this sale quantities so far beyond the power of the dealers to take off, in addition to the East India Company's that very great depression prevailed, and an average fall of 1d. to 2d per lb. was the result.

At the April sale excessive quantities were again brought forward, and a fall of 1d. to 3d. per lb. upon the previous sale took place.

Again in July fatness prevailed, and a further reduction of 2d. to 3d. per lb. was experienced.

At the following October sale prices again receded to the extent of 2d. per lb.

Thus at the close of a year of depression, an average reduction upon the October sale, 1837, of 6d. to 8d. per lb. was established.

The January sale, 1839, commenced at a further fall of 1d. to 2d per lb.—this drew the attention of Speculators, who purchased rather largely, and gave an impetus to the next sale in March, which brought in prices nearly to those of October; but a small sale which was brought on, on the 26th February, was attended by a fall to the lower prices, of January. The notification of this sale caused a resolve to try Monthly sales, the first of which will be on the 2nd April.

In the above Account, the Cargo of the "Earl of Balcarres" which entered into London on the 31st December, 1838, and contained 1,713,000 lbs., is neither included in the Import of 1838 nor in Stock on the 31st December; and it may be well to remark that the Cargoes of the Ships—"Blake," "Glenelg," and "Tickler," do not form a part of the above Statement, as they arrived in the Port of London early in January.

The Cargo of the "Volunteer" which went into Liverpool, is included in the above Account, but not that of the "Mary Anne Webb," which reported at Liverpool on the 11th January, 1839.

We estimate the Imports of the United Kingdom, on and from the 31st December to this time at 5,500,000 lbs.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,

When the Opium-Crisis was drawing near, we paid to the report of privately in well-meaning efforts to guard the interests of our little community. When these efforts could no longer avail, we were silent, and it was our full measure to suffer in silence. A misfortune common to many, a few hundreds more or less could not be felt, but for us it could not allow distress to fix its sting, to our daily lamentings, to pass unnoticed.

We are glad to see, by your last number, that the responsibility for the act in question, is thankly answered by the parties, to whom it fairly belongs, and as we are unwilling to bear it as ours, the contest is at an end.

In thus getting free from an injurious charge, we are quite ready to admit, that the absence of our senior partner from Canton throughout the late discussions, has prevented our expressing ourselves clearly enough, with respect to the Blood. To put an end to misconstructions on this and some other points, is the object of this letter; with which, our part in this correspondence must end.

When the American residents were invited to follow the British example, and withdraw from Canton, our main reason for not doing so, was—that such a retirement, following immediately on the Opium-Crisis, and accompanied by so many hostile expressions, placed our conduct with the Chinese on unfortunate grounds. Helpless ourselves, our only hope of succour and amelioration evidently rested on the support of the influential classes in our native countries. The known character of the Opium-traffic—the spring of our present evils—threatened to arm all the moral force of Western Society against us. In China, we saw the people ranged on the side of their Government. Two things were to be done—to change the current of sympathy in the West—and—to draw off the Chinese Government from its intrenched position in the conscientious support of its people. To accomplish these things, it was necessary to make the largest concessions to both these parties; to satisfy our countrymen by ample confession and real amendment; and, to gain in China an entirely new field for the contest. An immediate and hostile withdrawal defeated in our view both these purposes. It was only by remaining, for a time, that we could evince the sincerity of our pledges; A frank submission to every proper requisition, an honest and confiding continuance at our factories, were the best proofs we could give, that we were no parties to a hasty quarrel, nor to a revived Opium-trade from the outer anchorages. This course could not release the Chinese Government from responsibility for its late acts; for all these had been solemnly referred to our Home Governments. It fell in too with the claims of personal duty binding us as trustees of absent and unoffending merchants.

Having no vessels in port, the writer of this remained at Macao till the arrival of the Morrison, June 16th, and then proceeded in her to Chuenpee, where he was admitted to an interview with the Commissioner. On that occasion, strong assurances were given that the ship should be permitted to trade on the old regulations, and relying on these, the Morrison proceeded to Whampoa, where four American vessels had already anchored. On her arrival there, security was refused, because negotiations respecting a new certificate were pending. Remonstrance against this violation of a pledge was made in vain, the power of petition was entirely cut off, and the ship held bound to the result of the pending negotiations.

Even under these circumstances of disappointment and compulsion, had we believed that the signing the new certificate was "a signing away the lives and properties of other men," we would neither have done it ourselves, nor have permitted any one in our employ to do it for us. As to whether this disbelief was well or ill-founded, let us consult the history and terms of the new certificate.

The requisition of a Bond with Capital penalties, was first made in his Excellency's Edict of March 18th, and replied to on the 25th by the "solemn pledge" of the foreign residents, "not to deal in Opium, nor to attempt to introduce it into the Chinese Empire."

The Bond itself was first laid before the residents through the Chamber of Commerce on the 4th April following. It required a union in the "plain declaration," that, "from the commencement of autumn in this present year, any merchant vessel coming to Kwang tung, that may be found to bring Opium, shall be immediately and entirely confiscated, and the parties left to suffer death &c." "As regards such vessels as may arrive here in the two quarters of spring and summer now current, they will have left their countries while yet ignorant of the existing investigations &c," such, as in this state of ignorance bring any Opium, shall surrender it as they arrive &c."

This requisition was answered by the disbanding of the Chamber, and the subject dropped, till called up again by his Excellency's Edict of 19th April. This Edict stated, that the Bond had been laid before the foreign Consuls, and that the British representative "had declared that he would act in obedience to the law," 5 months being allowed to the Indian ships and 10 months to the English, before the new penalties come into operation.

The Dutch Consul (if we read the Edict aright) is made to say that after the autumn of this year, any ship found to have Opium on board, shall be confiscated (with the Cargo) and the parties left to suffer death &c.

The American Consul is made to say, that his "merchants, in obedience to the law of the country, will not presume to traffic in Opium."

His Excellency takes some exception at the language of the Dutch and American petitions, but to the British proposition he replies distinctly—"the period ought to be fixed at 4 and 8 months, at the expiration of which, they must conform to the new regulations &c."

That this limitation is not superseded by the certificate, but understood under it, is manifest, from the paragraph immediately following. "Again, special commands are given to all foreigners, that in accordance with the prescribed form, they present bonds &c."

On the 9th June, the position of the American ships outside became further embarrassed, by the issuing of injunctions, that "they enter port, or sail away, immediately." Their commanders were thus placed in the dilemma, of infringing their bills of lading, or of incurring criminality and suspicion, by disobedience of the new orders.

On the 12th, the ships Paris and Huntsville were reported as having applied for pilots, whereon a new order was grounded, for the rest to follow the example.

At this time the Morrison came up and was proceeded to sink for her anchorages of a proper reception. As we stood by the lines where the Opium was being destroyed, the white sails of the Rouble and Cashmere appeared over the low grounds between Chuenbee and Tiger island, as those ships moved up the river.

On the 23rd June, the "NEW PORT REGULATIONS" were issued at Canton, as the rules of future intercourse. The 10 articles of this new code, refer only to the prevention of the import of opium, and lay no penalty on the foreigner found guilty of so doing. That point is dealt with, in the accompanying edict of the Governor thus. "This coming before me, I ordain that these regulations, setting aside all former ones, be adopted for managing the trade" &c. The bond hitherto required, must be signed both by the foreigners and hong merchants, by which they solemnly bind themselves, cheerfully and willingly to abide by the consequences of their crimes, should they be discovered to have opium, and to deliver it up"

Then came the bond itself, translated, though not exactly, thus. "The foreign captain, * * * belonging to * * has now received the commands of the Heavenly Dynasty, rigidly prohibiting opium: and he has had it clearly proclaimed to him, that certain new regulations have been established to that effect; and the said foreigner, holding the same in great dread, will not dare to oppose or violate. Now the said ship brings no opium, and I now give THIS, as a true certificate of the same."

This, Mr. Editor, is the history and nature of a transaction, on which all your late effusions have been grounded. And yet with all deference to all that has been said, we must still agree with better authorities than you or we on Chinese law, language &c., that no native judge can base a sentence of death upon them.

Let us examine this point further. The Bond itself quotes certain new regulations, but specifies no penalty. What are the regulations, referred to? Are they the new port regulations? They name no penalties. Are they the new Imperial laws against the growth, import and use of opium? They are silent as to foreign parties, and point with all their deadly force, at the native population only.

Is it the last edict of the Governor, then (though not in the Bond) the ground of hazard? It specifies no "consequences of crimes," but "to deliver up" the Opium.

Are the prior edicts of the Commissioner on the old form of the Bond (which has not been signed) the point of danger? They are all coupled with express limitations, in favor of vessels now arriving, and under which every vessel finds shelter.

Lastly, does the risk arise from the adoption of a new Imperial policy and the extension of it over us by implication? The same danger extends as to the whole penal code of the Empire, and if we are dishonored and endangered now, we have always been so, ever since we landed in China.

Now, Mr. Editor, with these things before you, how could you say, in your paper of July 9th "A Bond has been signed, which may at any time be adduced as evidence of the readiness of foreigners, to sanction the execution of their own countrymen." And again July 27th. American citizens have signed away on a contingency, the lives of their fellow citizens." Had no other considerations operated to restrain such statements, could you forget that the Commissioner is said to take the newspapers; and that your own editorials were so many temptations to and excuses for severities? Should this paper find that access to his excellency, which is denied to our direct addresses, be it known to him, that the undersigned will never "sign away" a fellow creature's life and that this is their solemn protest against all such consequences.

We may be met here by the question, if you believe the bond to be thus harmless, why do you disown responsibility for it? Because its burden is thrown unfairly on the captains; because it slurs over alike penalties and limitations; because in short, it is just such a paper, as may weigh heavily ere long on the legal merchant, while it will oppose no check on the return of the Opium traffic to the factories.

Again we may be asked, why with your views of the new certificate, would you offer such a form as was published in the Press of July 9th? Because the establishment of a mixed jurisdiction, seems the best security for the administration of justice here, and because it has been sanctioned by the plans of the British Government in this country, and the adoption of the American Government in the states of Barbary. Whether the Chinese will adopt this practice, will depend on other causes, than its being suggested by one or one hundred individuals. It is enough for the present citizen, if he meet the new demand of despotic powers not in diplomatic correspondence with his Government, with language drawn from existing treaties. He cannot guide himself, in trying times like these, by the conflicting expressions of local passion and interest; nor by newspaper directions. He is safe, only, under the shadow of the highest forms of law, his international usages.

And here, Mr. Editor, you will allow me to say, that you are unfair, in representing the atrociously bloody law just enacted by the Chinese, as a law against "the infringement of some Custom House regulations." It is not such; for the ground of all this new legislation is, that the drug saps the foundations of society and threatens the safety of the Empire. It is not as a fiscal offence, that its growth, import, and use, are alike made penal; for the Chinese do not follow the examples set them, to make money out of opium. They treat the offence as one of another character; as involving the joint guilt of seduction and treason. In this aspect, is a crime less threatening than forgery? Or is the law which makes it capital, of a more "atrociously bloody" type, than one which hangs for stealing 40 shillings?

Our own belief is, that falling as the use of opium did, on the higher and ruling classes, its progressive import could hardly have gone on many years, without so weakening the hold of the upper ranks on the respect of the lower, as to endanger the peace of the Empire. In this aspect, the deepest respect is due to the Imperial policy, for we cannot be good judges of the moral cessity of the state; and the late measures are not local, but Imperial measures. Besides, we must look to both sides of the question, the native as well as the foreign; and to causes, as well as consequences. We are not now suffering under alien laws,—under partial, and hostile legislation. The native feels the full force of the new laws, without our limitations. The hands we shrink from, are laid on the whole Empire. The millions of this people groan under expenses and responsibilities, they would have never felt, but for the traffic in Opium. None of us, probably, now in China, have hit the exact line of right, a attempting to assign their just place, to the moral, the commercial, and the political considerations connected with the late crisis. Those who have not been interested in the opium traffic are in danger of conceding too much to the Chinese; those who have been, are equally exposed to the opposite errors. It is for a distant and impartial tribunal to decide, where we differ.

As to the future, we take this occasion to say, if we have parted company with friends on the Opium ground, it is, we hope, to meet on a better. If the just claims of Great Britain have been damaged, by placing them on a disadvantageous field, it is better for all, that the Americans avoid the like error. If the opium ground be in our view untenable, while the abstract point of the security due to life and property is firm and good, then let us, without a quarrel, keep the latter.

The course to be pursued, we think—is this. An oversight having been committed in not guarding the ships now arriving more carefully against possible implication, a united but quiet effort should be made to prevent any misapprehension on the subject of the limitations. All attempt to damage these limitations, should be discowned, and at the time for their expiration drawn near, the whole question—of the position of life and property in China, should be met and settled. If a sufficient impression has been made on the Government, by the quiet and correct conduct exhibited in the mean time, to disarm its fears, the exemption may be extended, or the penalties withdrawn. If the confiscation of the drug and the banishment of its holders, have been, in the Commissioner's hands, instruments sufficiently powerful, to destroy the agencies, they should be sufficient still. If his Excellency go beyond these penalties, already in practice, (and which we take to be the legal penalties now in force), then let him grant corresponding safeguards. We are ready to hand him a copy of the American diplomatic Code, and if he will select any one of its sets of provisions, we will submit to them. In so doing, we shall feel that we do not transgress the faculties belonging to a private individual, nor make "gratuitous stipulations" but we meet urgent demands, in the way most becoming to private citizens.

If indeed the policy of the Empire is so far settled, as to admit no mitigation of the law as it now bears on the native, in favor of our alien circumstances, then we hold ourselves ready to retire from the commerce of the port, until we have the directions of our Government.

We need not say, that we suppose no American resident will hesitate upon this alternative. And yet, in doing this, in the very act of withdrawing from Canton; on new and impregnable ground; we will repeat our convictions—that the cessation of these troubles is on the foreign side—that the Imperial policy is sincere, though mistaken—that deeper sympathy is due to the native than to us, and that our Government will be deeply disgraced, if it make these things, the ground of hasty hostilities.

And now, Mr. Editor, in closing this correspondence, we cannot thank you, for involving us in it. Again we insist, that, if further anonymous communications are made you, involving our names, you have the fairness to give us opportunity to explain, before you publish. In this instance, you have been the occasion of drawing out worse feelings, than we supposed, existed near us, and at a moment, when it was particularly desirable that such should not be exhibited. As for the unprovoked abuse, which has also been lavished on us, we can only reply by silence; in any candid and gentlemanly discussion, we are ready to take a part, but we will not enter the lists with any, whose language is not that of truth and soberness.

We disclaim all personal feeling in these remarks, and see with pleasure, that you also "wish not to say any thing unpleasing to any part of the foreign community", though, "you feel it to be a duty to speak out plainly" on matters "which seem to be fraught with great evils." We cannot but approve the application of an honest and friendly foresight to the consequences of our movements, nor do we doubt you feel a double obligation to watch faithfully, over the future, when you review your Editorial course, in the flourishing days of the opium-traffic.

We cannot join with you in the fear that our countrymen at home will reject our teas, for they can discriminate between the authors and the victims of the late crisis; and there is a maxim current among them, of high authority—"Let none of you suffer as an evil doer, but if when ye do well, ye suffer for it, this is (not only excusable, but) acceptable &c."

It is true the keeping of this rule of patience has been so difficult of late, that we have seriously meditated a withdrawal from China. We are checked chiefly by the recollection, that wherever man go, social evils, political abuses, remain as they are. The Americans at home must bear part of the odium and load of domestic slavery. The Englishmen at home must share in the administration of a penal Code, murderous in the letter, and loose and lying in the practice. We hesitate therefore for the present, in the hope that our common suffering will call up effectual intercession. And wherever His Majesty will deign to throw the light of declaration on our path, we will review the past by that light; restoring whatever we wrongfully possess; and as for the future, where we have done evil, we will do so no more.

Your's &c.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 10th Aug. 1839.

LATE MEASURES OF THE COMMISSIONER.—To the most superficial observer it will be apparent, that the presence of plenipotentiary Lin has considerably changed the very fundamental principles of Chinese policy. We do not now refer to his rashness that has caused a collision with foreign powers, but to his extraordinary line of conduct which he has lately adopted towards foreigners.

When flushed with success, on perceiving thousands after thousands of chests of opium garnishing the store house of his Imperial master, he resolved with himself to issue a simple law—viz—so long as any opium is brought to the country, no legal trade shall exist. Such was his decree made known amongst the officers immediately under his control. He was confident that this terrible veto would be the very talisman to explode for ever the destructive poison from the shores of the Central Empire. Knowing his determined spirit and the full powers he had received, one scarcely doubted, that he would make good his threat.

The delivery effected and the destruction of the drug carried on, whilst foreigners after foreigners leave the provincial city, the factories become seen as solitary as the Convents in France; instead of a numerous fleet of ships, only a few stragglers make their appearance in Whampoa. He waits, but things do not mend. Under such circumstances the invariable rule of Chinese diplomacy is to shew the utmost indifference and nonchalance, for it is well known, that the foreign merchants are from various causes obliged, nolens volens—and we may say almost on any terms, to commence operations. From this grand principle, the very basis of the policy of the Celestial court, the magnate departs. He sends a commissioner to Macao who publishes a paper inviting the Barbarian ships into the river, and admonishing them not to give head to the instigations of designing men. Not satisfied with having these suggestions proclaimed in the flowery language, there is also a translation made and distributed amongst the shipping at Hong-kong. The wishes of the high commissioner being however not yet realized, he tries to revive the trade by other means. A fawning edict appears, commanding the ships either to go up the river or to return home, within the space of five days, and unless this requisition be complied with, the whole Celestial navy is ordered to come down upon the unfortunate foreigners. Hitherto Lin had kept his word as the term however expires, but the Barbarians remain obstinately at anchor, and the proclamation is forgotten, just as many hundreds of its predecessors. Some Cochinships in the mean while arrive, intrigue is busy to entice them into the river, but utterly fails to accomplish this object. Then again the commissioner stoops to a issue document requesting them to come, instead of publishing his injunctions, as always was the custom. To make sure that his directions should not be falsified by a translation, he employs his own people, who by hook and crook furnish a version worthy of their employer. Then comes an invitation to a merchant to repair to Canton and settle matters, with sundry other inducements unknown to the public; and we may be sure, that H. E. will not let matters rest there.

The argument which has hitherto so triumphantly been wielded by the advocates of existing abuses, that the Chinese did not care for the trade, falls therefore entirely to the ground. They care indeed for it, yea, we may venture to assert, that it is more important to them than to ourselves. We fully agree that the duties derived from the foreign commerce, having to pass through so many hands, dwindle away to a small sum on re-aching the Imperial treasury. Yet even a few millions of taels are of some importance in these bad times of a general deficiency of revenue. The local Mandarins stand in need of this trade, in order to maintain themselves in their situations. Capitalists as well as a very large number of influential merchants from all parts of the Empire depend upon its existence to anticipate heavy loss and perhaps utter ruin; a numerous population of labourers, artizans, and tea cultivators look to it for a livelihood. Can their claims be forgotten, when a disregard to them would be fraught with insurrection? We shall make here one remark, perhaps a trite one, but notwithstanding very true—China has come into the commercial wheel, and any attempt to arrest it, would immediately be followed by a derangement of the whole machinery. It is too prudent a statesmen not to know this, and he is therefore on very anxious to accelerate it's present sluggish course.

With these matters of fact before us, we ought not to despair of our commerce. Let us turn the tables, persevere in the course adopted, and then oblige the Chinese to make such propositions and give such guarantees ad interim as will obviate heavy loss and total stoppage, under the present precarious state of circumstances. To bend now to them would be a fresh proof of our willingness to a cede to any terms, merely for the sake of obtaining a trifling gain. Supposing even that the present question were waived, and an immense property put into the hands of the powerful Lin, could we ever be certain,

…not so other direful catastrophe might not very soon …ensue? Persuaded that so long as the Hoppo …comes it necessary to collect duties, no interruption …to the trade would follow, whatever might happen …outside; how can we guarantee a continuance, if this …object are attained, and the ships being anchored in …the river cannot avoid paying their dues? The an…nexity of the Commissioner to have the vessels near …Canton arises from various causes. We cannot but be …wrong to suppose, that his master has by this time …heard of the withdrawal of the English from Com…merce, and that he is informed of the absence of their …shipping; moreover, the remittances from the out…ports-house will tell best. what is going forward in this …corner of the Empire. If therefore hard pinched, …will not some overtures be made, to put matters a…gain in a fair train, merely to save himself from a …well deserved accusation of dilapidating the finances …of the state? We have often been told in the edicts, …that the whole trade was not worth a feather's down, …but now it comes to the point of losing it, the gos…samer becomes so heavy as to press down the stout…est Kinchoe that ever graced Canton with his pre…sence.

THE MARITIME TRADE OF CHINA.—Taking all …of all together, this trade was never in such a …flourishing condition as under the present dynasty. …There have been many interruptions of it, prin…cipally on account of the weakness of Government …to put down piracy, but still it has always regained …additional strength. The possession of the West …coast of Formosa has mainly contributed to give …vigor to its extension. Here was a rich market, …hundreds of vessels might find employment by car…rying the produce to the opposite shores and the …southern harbours. The maritime provinces them…selves being situated under such a great variety of …climate (from 18 to 41°) stand naturally in need of …each other, whilst the inland communication is rarely …if ever expensive. A Canton junk in the fair …season will reach Teen tsin within a fortnight, whilst …a river boat will take from 2 to 3 monthsto reach its …destination. In times of draught, when the canals …become very shallow, it becomes still more difficult …to pursue the voyage, and the outside passage is by …the more preferable.

To a European all these arguments seem to be …hard, but a Chinese thinks differently of matters. …To the most urgent considerations did at first not …influence the Manchoo princes. Fearing lest the …empire might again be wrenched from their hands …by foreign influence exerted on the coast, they com…manded the natives to remove into the interior, and …hoped to cut off all connexion with ships. …This plan not succeeding, was abandoned; Kang he …allowed all his subjects to sail wheresoever they …would, and by a stretch of unheard liberality threw …the ports open to foreign enterprise in 1685. …This extraordinary man acted in many instances …with as great prudence and foresight, as if he had …thoroughly studied M'Culloch, but at other times …was swayed by pusillanimity and bigotry. Thus …happened at the end of his glorious career, that …ignorant officer sounded the alarm of a total sub…version of the Empire, if the natives were permitted …the trade to the Archipelago, and foreigners permit…ted to approach indiscriminately the shores of the …central Empire. Great restrictions were therefore …laid upon all maritime enterprises, and, as customa…rily evaded by the cunning of merchants and the …connivance of the guardians of the laws. It was …therefore deemed necessary to wink at evils, and …things were mending considerably, until piracy …spread the ardour of Chinese adventurers. This …state being finally removed, the trade could again …flourish. Still the Government is very suspicious …regarding maritime commerce. The people en…gaged in it do not bear the best character; so long …as they are on the wide seas, they are beyond the …reach of the law, and by a judicious combination, …they may bid defiance to their Government. No …fear as the navy remains inefficient. such suspicions …are not entirely unfounded. A wise government …never ought to shew itself above fear. One …sure would greatly benefit it—to take the sailors …and merchantmen into its service. Instead of this, …we see a number of ignorant soldiers put on board, …a pilot who has never been beyond the jurisdic…tion of the squadron. In bad weather this poor …set of beings are entirely helpless; and as for fight…ing on the wide ocean, that is entirely out of the …question. These however are the men who. according …to the maritime code, keep the four seas in subject…ion, and rule without a rival in all waters. Send …them out of sight of the land, one degree beyond their …customary cruising ground, and they give them…selves up for lost.

JULY 6. PEKING. H. M. has lately given an ex…ample of great piety to his subjects.

As rain having fallen on the imperial dominions, …he immediately sent some of his relations to offer …libations and recite prayers. As this however did …not yet prove efficacious. he went himself to a tem…ple and whilst stopping there, the dark clouds ga…thered and general showers descended in abundance …which is already the second time during the summer, …that Taoukwang succeeded in calling down a bless…ing upon the parched soil.

Religious persecution — Honan Province. A …memorialist has represented to the Emperor, …there exist in Honan province a number of …temples dedicated to the unborn old women (a god…dess of whom we are not able to find the name in …the Chinese Pantheon.) This appears to be an idol …set up by foul heresy, and it was therefore ordered …three years ago, that the building in which her …statue existed should be destroyed. Instead of …this salutary measure, the stupid people not only …repair to these haunts of superstition, but also go in …crowds to the temples to recite nonsensical charms …or prayers, whereby multitudes are deluded. It …is the general practice never to allow large num…bers of citizens to assemble (what would the Man…darin say, if some demagogue established debating …clubs, to canvass Lin's measures?), the Emperor …has, in conformity to the suggestions of his ad…visers, that all these temples shall be destroyed, and …that no more be made in the adjacent provinces whether …the abuses have crept in.

Kwang sze. Robberies.—In the northern parts of this province, and principally on the banks of the Hwan river, great robberies have lately been com…mitted, and these depredations have become so dar…ing, that they bid defiance to government. These scenes of rapine have taken place near the thorough…fare of the grain junks, that proceed with tribute to the Capital, and H. M. is very earnestly enjoining the total extirpation of these bold villains.

The prosecutions against opium smoking and dealers are still carried on with vigor throughout the Provinces. The Peking gazettes make no men…tion about the last events at Canton.

PEKING.—The Peking gazette which in all its late numbers has been so very diffuse in detailing the measures adopted against the opium smokers, men…tions several culprits who have been sentenced to pu…nishment. Amongst them we find a member of the Imperial clan, and several officers of the higher Tri…bunals. One of them who had already weaned him…self from the use of the narcotic poison, is dismissed, because he had smoked before.—The son of the Go…vernor of Soochoen was also fond out to be addicted to the vice. and his father was punished with the loss of salary for one year (about 12,000 Taels) for not having restrained his child.

KWANGSE.—Some serious disturbances, whether among the Chinese or with the aborigines we know, not, have lately taken place in that mountainous province. A number of civilians and military officers who have been most zealous in asserting the rights of Government are each respectively rewarded by a gracious decree from his Imperial Majesty.

We mentioned in our last that the Commissioner had by his own interpreters got up a proclamation to the shipping outside, in the English language. This proclamation was actually distributed among the shipping a few days since by a Linguist's clerk sent to Hong-kong for that purpose. Our readers will, we fear, experience some difficulty to make out the meaning of this document, which is no other than to prevail on the shipping to come to Whampoa.

GREAT IMPERIAL COMMISSIONARY'S

Governor's of Two Kwang Provinces Lieutenant Governor's of Canton.

EARNEST PROCLAMATION

to foreigners again issued.

For the managing opium on the last spring being stopped trade for present time till the opium surrendered to the Government than ordered be opened the trade the same as before.

The American vessels are ready to continually enter into the port ten and more ships have been examined by the Hupoo officers are bringing no opium on board and the hong merchants and foreign merchants give bond for the same then Captain Simon's ship loaded and filled with Cargo sailed and returned to her Country but English Country Ships get anchored in outside sea not get information coming into the port must being deceived by rumour of bad persons saying you are being ready selling opium now if you go into the port should be put you into the punishment therefore you are still retain and expect some other chance why your are never think Celestial Impire treat natives, and foreigners all equal in the world if any to be found out had merchant dealing with opium will be brought into punishment if honest merchant from what…soever may come into the port should be allowed to trade the same as w s and will not intend to say being do a kindness to one and to not another never will treat you foreigners by two manners of ways therefore another proclamation.

Now your are whose persons had any opium on board the Celestial Empire law as strictly should be not allow such opium bring into the port if any honest merchant without any opium the Great Imperial Commissionary the Governor and Lieutnant Governor must be to representate cherishing favour of Emperor the Great and valiantly protect you and to make no separate black and white put you into boat you must tak…ing in good purpose get your formation enter to the port all the constitutions of examine and bond will be according American Ships managed and not to be deceived by rumour when you did not intend come into the port and quickly will back to your Country and not allow to be continue these proclamation.

Taouk wang, 19th year, month, day.

In the night from Tuesday to Wednesday last a band of about 60 robbers entered the village of Chy-mae, about two to three miles distant from Cass-branca, and broke into a pawnbrokers shop whence they carried off considerable booty. Some police who attempted to cut off their retreat, less numerous than the thieves, were severely beaten and three of them badly wounded. It is supposed that the suspension of the smuggling trade, by depriving a great number of people of bread, will much swell the bands of banditti with which the coasts in this neighbourhood seem at all times more or less infested, and these depredations consequently become more frequent and daring. Intelligence of this rob…bery at Chy-mae was immediately given to the authorities at Cass-branca, and the magistrate pro…ceeded thither to investigate.

We hear it said that several mandarins have late…ly been arrested at Canton by order of the Com…missioner for implication in the Opium-trade, and that it is likely the new law will make an example of them. We must confess that we hitherto had some doubts of either the power or the sincerity of the Peking Government impartially to administer their measures, seeing that the most guilty part, their own officers by whose connivance the Opium-trade had attained such rapid growth, was to escape unscathed, for hitherto all the efforts of the Com…missioner seem to have been directed towards the punishment of Hong-merchants, foreigners, and the common people, whose guilt is by no means so great, the former having merely abt prevented what they had no power to prevent, and the two latter having only broken laws which, by the criminal connivance of the officers of all grades, had become a dead letter. Now these seems to prevail a determination also to call these latter to account, and it is only by doing this that the restriction of the Opium-traffic can be effectually prevented.—If these officers are allowed to go unpunished, their present impunity will en…courage them again to render nugatory the laws and enactments of their superiors.

The following was circulated on Thursday last:

PUBLIC NOTICE TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Macao, 8th August, 1839.

It is requested that persons who submitted to the Chief Superintendent schedules of property left behind in Canton on the 24th of May last, will be pleased to call at this Office on or before the 21st instant, and set forth the amounts remaining at the dates of their respective appearance.

(Signed) EDWARD ELMSLIE.

Secretary and Treasurer to the Superintendents.

In a foregoing part of our paper will be found a long letter from Messrs OLYPHANT Co. in reply to which we beg to offer a few remarks. These gen…tlemen inform us that a "malicious communication" drew them reluctantly from their plan of being silent; we do not believe the communication in question to have been malicious, being aware that our informant had no personal or if any, a very slight, acquaintance with Messrs Olyphant Co.; not knowing of the circumstances, our infor…mant, seeing, as really was the case, that Capt. Benson, first offered the bond duly executed to the Hong merchants, made his statements accordingly, and we have no doubt believed to have stated the truth. We, whose invariable rule it is in the con…ducting of our paper, to abstain from personalities, did not consider the mentioning Messrs Olyphant's name to come under this rule in this instance, it being coupled with an act of very great public im…portance to the whole foreign community.

We have always considered and still consider the signing of the bond a matter of much more serious import than Messrs Olyphant & Co. represent it to be. It is very true that in such Chinese regulations and edicts as these gentlemen quote, the punish…ment of death for the smuggling of Opium is either not mentioned, or made conditional, and if only these regulations existed, the bad consequences to be dreaded from the signing would be much less. But Messrs Olyphant & Co. in the enumeration of regulations and edicts, have most unaccountably forgotten the most important, one which bears upon the subject, and upon which, in spite of the better authorities on Chinese law and language these Gentlemen have consulted, the Chinese may in our humble opinion very well base a sentence of death. We mean an Edict headed: "From the Kwang…chow Foo commissioning the orders of the Com…missioner, Governor, and Lieut. Governor, regard…ing the punishment of Foreigners for dealing in Opium." This edict bears date of 9th May and is addressed to the British Chief Superintendent, and the American and Dutch Consuls, (see Canton Press, 18th May). The translation is by Mr. Morrison, and we extract from it the following. "All you foreigners of every nation,—should you "not come hither, there the matter rests; but "should you come to the territory of the Celestial "Court. be you people of any country whatsoever, "so often as Opium is brought, in all cases, in ac…"cordance with the new law the parties shall be "capitally executed, and the property entirely con…"fiscated. Say not that it was not told before-"hand!" We see therefore that a law, involving the punishment of death, has been expressly made for foreigners, and that by the signing of the bond foreigners acquiesce in the justice of such law; there is no condition attached to it, and we suppose that no one will deny that the Chinese will consider this very proclamation as making part of the "certain new regulations" which the signer of the bond pledges himself not to dare to oppose or violate. The Chinese have an undoubted right to legislate for their own people, and have the power to issue and, for a time, enforce oppressive laws made against foreigners, and this they will and can do without the consent of foreigners, and it is very plain that the Chinese attached such great importance to the signing of this bond by for…eigners, because they considered that it would hold them harmless from the resentment of any of the western Governments, should they punish with death, for the smuggling of Opium, any of their citizens or subjects. That the Chinese could have no other object than this in plain, for otherwise, why resort to such an extraordinary and unusual step as to require of foreigners to mention by their special approval a law of the Empire? Being therefore im…pressed with the conviction that the Chinese con…sidered the signing of the bond as an approval of the new laws, not excepting therefrom the one we have quoted, we made use of the expressions which Messrs Olyphant & Co. quote with disapprobation, nor do we see that those being read by the Yamchoo can possibly place affairs in a worse position than they are already by the signing of the bond. We do not think that any western Government will ever ap…prove of their subjects or citizens being punished with death by the Chinese for the smuggling of Opium, whether this be called a violation of Can…tonnese regulations, or "the joint guilt of seduc…tion and treason." The offence is simple, and ac…cording to our notions not sufficiently great to deser…ve the utmost rigor of the law. China being ruled by a despotic government, it naturally follows that any of the laws given proceed either from the wis…dom, the folly, the passions or the prejudices of the few in power; to day they may make a law highly favoring us, which to morrow may be changed into another equally prejudicial. Without treaties with the Governments of foreigners trading in China, these will never be safe from arbitrary acts of power, and to obtain such treaties ought to be the earnest endeavour of these Governments. In the meanwhile, however, we consider it not only not right, but dangerous to the foreign community that Hong-merchants should transact the business of foreigners, and we are sure of many foreign governments, and we are sure of many foreign citizens, not parties to it, in this respect. It may here be observed that the danger to be feared does not lie in the signing of the bond by individuals does not bind others; this, we fear, will not be the opinion of the Chinese on this subject, and to them, for a while, will belong the interpretation.

It must be a matter of regret to all whose interest it is to see present difficulties speedily settled, that the signing of this bond should have enabled a part of the trade still to continue at Whampoa. We are aware of the many considerations which determined the American merchants to remain at Canton, and without intending to imply blame, we may yet regret the remain. It will be perfectly apparent to every one that the treatment which foreigners have lately experienced at the hands of the Chinese, and the insults offered to their officers, particularly to the British Superintendent, cannot fail to draw from the British Government at least a demand for satisfac…tion. It must depend on the manner in which this is received, whether commercial retaliation can be resor…ted without proceeding to hostilities. We do not ap…prehend that the latter will take place, but hope much that the late crisis, however humiliating and disastrous for the moment, will be productive of much good, by forcing the Chinese into a commer…cial treaty and by lowering the impudence which they are so fond of shewing to foreigners because their numbers are small. In such treaty, by whatever nation made, it is evident the whole foreign com…munity will be equally partaken; and that it's ob…jects would have been facilitated, had all foreigners properly resented the treatment suffered two or three months ago, and withdrawn to Macao, is there can be little doubt, as it would have at once impressed the Chinese with the fact that in their bullying they had overstepped the line of safety, and exposed themselves to the resentment of foreign nations, of which they now, acting them divided in action, may reasonably entertain some doubt.

In pursuance to advertisements published by the British Chief Superintendent a Court of Oyer and Terminer is to be held at Hongkong on Monday next. Writs have been served on a number of Gen…tlemen to serve on the Jury, and they leave for Hong-kong this day. Capt. Elliot sailed in the Luna Cutter yesterday.

At a meeting of British merchants held at Capt. Elliot's house on Saturday last, a British Chamber of Commerce was instituted. It's committee was to have been elected yesterday.

It will be seen from an advertisement that the races are postponed to the 19th, instead, as originally contemplated, of the 12th of this month. The meeting of the Regatta-Club is also, we hear, to be postponed.

By the Morea, from Singapore, letters brought to Batavia by the Navigator from Boston 4th April, have been received, and we are glad to learn that the news brought by her are to the effect that the boundary question which threatened to involve New Brunswick and the State of Maine in hostilities, has been referred to peaceable settlement between the two general Governments, and all apprehension of war between the two nations is therefore at an end.

We have had, on Wednesday and Thursday last, what the Chinese call, a strong Tyfoong. The night preceding Wednesday was unsettled and squally, but the Barometer did not give any signs of bad weather coming on, till Wednesday morning when it fell rapidly from its previous point of 29.70 to 29.45 at noon. Early in the morning strong squalls came from the eastward—the wind then veered to N. N. W. and it continued blowing hard all day from that direction, with a good deal of rain. The wind shifting to N. E. by E. about eight during the night, and blew a strong gale in the morning of Thursday between 3 and 4 o'clock. The wind then went round to E. S. E., and moderated consi…derably, and though we still occasionally experien…ced smart puffs, towards noon the weather was comparatively fine. We have, excepting a few minor casualties, such as boats upset etc., not heard of any damage done; H. M. Cutter attempting on Wednesday to move from opposite the Praya into the inner harbour, was at one time in some danger of being blown on shore, but escaped unhurt.

The Tigris from Liverpool brings dates to the 6th April, and therefore the latest accounts from England we are yet in possession of. We have kindly had London papers to the 20th March lent to us, but they contain no intelligence of importance. We see that the death of Lt. General Sir Herbert Tay…lor, which took place at Rome, is announced. Par…liament had been prorogued to the 15th April. In another column will be found the copy of a circular from one of the principal London tobacconists, from which it will be seen that prices of that article were still declining, and that the stock on the end of the year, including cargoes at least visible for five days after was fully equal to that of the previous year, and equal to 20 months consumption. The Manch…ester news from China will probably produce some spe…culation. We are glad to see that in future, instead of the quarterly, tea will be brought forward in monthly sales, thus avoiding the bringing forward too large quantities at a time. This is some improve…ment on the former system, though we must con…fess that we do not see what advantage either im…porter or consumer can derive from periodical sales, and their interests are we presume there chiefly to be consulted, though the brokers or middlemen seem hitherto to have had it all their own way.

IMPORTANT FROM MAINE.

(From the New York Evening Star, March 20.)

By the Eastern Mail of last evening, we have received the following, which we copy from the Augusta Weekly Journal. It puts an end for the present to all hostile measures on the frontier, and one at least all cause of controversy, until further instructions shall be received from the British Government. The President of Maine will of course immediately return to their homes. Maj. Gen. Scott seems to have acted in this affair in the capacity of mediator.

Head Quarters, Eastern Division, U. S. Army, } Augusta, Me., March, 21, 1839.

The undersigned, a Major General in the Army of the United States, being specially charged with measures for the peace and safety of their entire Northern and Eastern frontiers, having cause to apprehend a collision of arms between the proximate forces of New Brunswick and the State of Maine on the Disputed Territory which is claimed by both, has the honor, in the sincere desire of the United States to preserve the relations of peace and amity with Great Britain—relations which might be much endangered by such untoward collision—to invite from His Excellency Major General Sir John Harvey, Lieutenant Governor, &c. &c.—a general declaration to this effect:

"That it is not the intention of the Lieutenant Governor of Her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, under the expected renewal of negotiations between the Cabinets of London and Washington on the subject of the said disputed territory, without renewed instructions to that effect from his Government, to seek to take Military possession of that territory, or to seek by Military force to expel therefrom the armed Civil posse, or the troops of Maine."

Should the undersigned have the honor to be favored with such declaration or assurance to be by him communicated to his Excellency the Governor of the State of Maine, the undersigned does not in the least doubt that he would be immediately and fully authorized by the Governor of Maine to commandicate to His Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick a corresponding pacific declaration to this effect:—

"That in the hope of a speedy and satisfactory settlement, by negotiation between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, of the principal or boundary question between the State of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick, it is not the intention of the Governor of Maine, without renewed instructions from the Legislature of the State to attempt to disturb by arms the said Province, in the Possession of the Madawaska settlements, or to attempt to intercept the usual communication between that Province and Her Majesty's Upper Provinces; and that he is willing in the mean time, to leave the question of possession and jurisdiction as they at present stand;—that is, Great Britain, holding, in fact possession of a part of said territory, and the Government of Maine denying her right to such possession; and the State of Maine holding in fact, possession of another portion of the same territory, which her right is denied by Great Britain."

With this understanding the Governor of Maine will, without unnecessary delay, withdraw the military force of the State from the said disputed territory—leaving only, under a Land Agent, a small civil posse armed, or unarmed, to protect the timber recently cut, and to prevent future depredations.

Reciprocal assurance of the foregoing friendly character having been, through the undersigned, interchanged, all danger of collision between the immediate parties to the controversy will be at once removed and time allowed the United States and Great Britain to settle amicably the great question of limits:

The undersigned has much pleasure in renewing to his Excellency, Major General Sir John Harvey, the assurances of his ancient high consideration and respect.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

To a copy of the foregoing, Sir John Harvey, annexed the following:—

The undersigned, Major Gen. Sir John Harvey, Lieut. Governor of her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, having received a proposition from Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott of the United States Army, of which the foregoing is a copy, hereby, on his part, signifies his concurrence and acquiescence therein.

Sir John Harvey renews with great pleasure to Major Gen. Scott, the assurance of his warmest personal consideration, regard and respect.

J. HARVEY

Government House, Fredericton, New Brunswick, March 23, 1839.

To a paper containing the note of Gen. Scott, and the assurances of Sir John Harvey, Gov. Fairfield annexed his acceptance in these words:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT. } August, March 25, 1839.

The undersigned, Governor of Maine, in consideration of the foregoing, the exigency for calling out the troops of Maine having ceased, has no hesitation in signifying his entire acquiescence in the proposition of Maj. General Scott.

The undersigned has the honor to tender to Major General Scott, the assurance of his high respect and esteem.

JOHN FAIRFIELD.

We learn that General Scott has interchanged the assurances of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and also that Governor Fairfield immediately issued orders recalling the troops of Maine and for organising the civil power that is to be continued, for the time, in the disputed territory. The troops in this town will also be immediately discharged.

From the Boston Atlas of yesterday.

STATE HOUSE AUGUSTA. Tuesday, March 26, 1839.

Our Madawaska war seems now unquestionably ended. I forward to you copies of correspondence that has passed between Gen. Scott and Sir John Harvey, which place that matter beyond a doubt. Gov. Fairfield has issued orders this morning, discharging all the militia in the service of the State.

This arrangement has been effected entirely by General Scott. Gov. Fairfield seems to have acted only a subordinate part in the matter—agreeing with great readiness to any terms that were offered him.

The arrangement carries fully into effect the recommendation made at Washington by Mr. Fox and Mr. Forsyth, which the governor repudiated in his recent message.

(From the New York Evening Star, March 20.)

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

By the brig Neuva, from Havana, we have files from that city to the 13th inst. From the paper of that date, we extract the following:

"By letters from Vera Cruz of the 10th March, we learn that a treaty has been concluded between Don Manuel de Gorostiza and General Victoria on the part of Mexico, and Admiral Bandin on the part of France, the British Minister, Mr. Pachenham, acting as mediator, of the following tenor:

1st There shall be an armistice of 15 days.

2nd The Mexicans shall pay Drs 600, 000 in periods of 2, 4 and 6 months.

3rd Indemnification for the expenses of the war and to the expelled Frenchmen, shall be finally agreed by a treaty to definitively, with the two contending parties.

4th. The Castle of San Juan de Ulua shall be delivered up to the Mex cans as soon as it shall be known that the treaty has been ratified by Congress.

The same letters say that there was no doubt the treaty would be immediately ratified. M. Gorostiza had set off for the city of Mexico to remove any difficulties that might present themselves. In the meantime the discharge of all vessels of all classes and nations was allowed.

Vera Cruz will again receive within her walls the persons who have emigrated, and the 11th will open to the merchants their former places of business.

The above intelligence is confirmed by the arrival at Havana of the British frigate Medea Commodore Douglas, and British sloop of war Race Horse, from Vera Cruz, with letters to the above effect. They would proceed directly to England.

FRANCE AND MEXICO—FURTHER PARTICULARS.

(From American and Commercial Daily Advertiser, April 1, 1839.

The editor of the Louisianian have received the following details in addition to those already given in relation to the late negotiation between Admiral Baudin and the Mexican Plenipotentiaries.

The right of trading by retail, formerly refused with so much obstinacy by the Mexicans, is granted to French subjects by the treaty. The sum up to Drs. 600,000 is to be paid to the French government as compensation of old injuries, besides the indemnity to French subjects who have been driven from the country. These payment are guaranteed by the English minister.

Before entering upon any negotiation, Admiral Baudin demanded full reparation for the insult put upon him by Santa Anna and afterwards by President Bustamente, in their relation of the skirmish at Vera Cruz in which the admiral was accused of having violated a suspension of arms. This reparation was made in the most satisfactory manner. Having thus obtained reparation for injuries inflicted upon himself and fellow subjects, the admiral thought himself authorized to be generous in what interested his government. He gave up the demand for reimbursement of the war expenses, on being advised by the plenipotentiaries of the deplorable condition of the Mexican finances, and being assured that it was with difficulty the indemnities stipulated in the treaty could be paid. And finally to save the feelings of national honor from being too severely wounded, waived his privilege of signing the treaty on board of his ship, and consented to perform that ceremony on shore.

The following topographical notice of the immediate neighbourhood of Macao, or rather of the villages under the jurisdiction of the Keun min foo, and situated between this and the large town of Heang shan at the other end of this island, we take from "O Commercial" of the 10th August.

"1. Pacsenlean, 5 lo, from the barrier, of more than 500 houses.

"2. Pacsiac, 9 lo, of about 150 houses.

"3. Hacshan, 12 lo, of about 20 houses.

"4. Chinsan, (or Casa branca) about 15 lo, from the barrier, with 600 houses. In this place lives the Keun min foo (subprefect of the district) and the military Mandarin, Fuhu, who commands about 1000 men, and whose rank is equal to that of a Colonel with us.

"5. Ngaotonghang, 16 lo, with 70 houses.

"6. Cha mae, 25 lo, contains upwards of 1000 houses. There live many rich people there, of whom each keeps upwards of one hundred servants. It was formerly the residence of the Chotang, or Judge.

"7. Chiangua hin, 30 lo, containing huts only.

"8. Nang ty chong, 35 lo, of more than 500 houses.

"9. Paiscgun, 37 lo, a hamlet of about 40 dwellings.

"10. Ky chong, 38 lo, with 70 houses.

"11. Kuo hac, 40 lo, with only about 20 dwellings.

"12. Chinlong, 75 lo, with 40 houses.

"13. Sachsiac, 77 lo, a small hamlet of only 15 dwellings.

"14. Jhunmatoe, 80 lo, with 300 houses.

"15. Sahcoot, 90 lo, contains only 7 huts; here those travelling from Macao to Heangshan rest a while before climbing the high hill, over which a road leads to the latter town. The summit of this hill, called Kauntoeng, is about 100 lo from the barrier, and the whole distance from Macao to Heangshan 160 lo. There are no more villages between Sahcoot and Heangshan.

W. P. Livingston, Esq	H. Mesquitta, Esq.
J Mathews, Esq.	B. Mesquitta, Esq.

and Captain Elliot addressed the Grand Jury as follows:

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury—Situated as we are, with [illegible] the Chinese Empire, it is impossible but that [illegible] offences will occasionally occur, which the Court, [illegible] tions of may serve to guide you in the important task you are here to perform.

Let me crave your attention, then, to a few general remarks upon the nature of your duties, upon the manner of conducting the inquest, and lastly to some observations bearing upon the principal case to be laid before you. The authorities I have consulted shall be noticed for your satisfaction as I proceed.

It is a principle of the Law of England that no man can be convicted at the suit of the Crown of any Capital Offence unless by the unanimous voice of at least 24 of his neighbours and equals i. e. by 12 at least of the Grand Jury assenting to the accusation, and afterwards by the whole Petit Jury finding him guilty on his trial. But if 12 of the Grand Jury assent it is a good presentment, though some of the rest disagree.

According to the common Law of England too, it is a settled necessity that all the Grand Inquest should be inhabitants of the county for which they are sworn to enquire. And I may take this occasion to explain the reason which led me to confine the performance of Grand Jury functions in this jurisdiction, to persons habitually resident in China.

In our position it appeared to me to be a very suitable adaptation of this principle to devolve these duties upon persons usually resident; because they would bring to the task a more familiar knowledge of the Customs of the Country, and of the particular pressure of circumstance, than it could be reasonable to expect in casual visitors, and would therefore be better able to judge of what should be sent to trial, for the ends of Justice and of Peace.

Indeed it must be obvious to every reflecting person who knows that the heavy responsibility of acting upon the Jurisdiction order in Council, [illegible] the whole machinery has been set in action by the Queen's Government, and a more proper person were here to fill this seat, than myself) has been forced upon me.

With our intercourse interrupted, I may certainly say, chiefly, if not entirely, because it is impossible to consent to the pretensions of the Chinese Government to judge Her Majesty's Subjects by their forms of Judicature, for offences declared to be capital, how could we disregard an unprovoked outrage upon the peaceful inhabitants of this Empire, attended with loss of life, charged by the Chinese Officers upon British Subjects.

"From the oldest times says the profound and eloquent Lord Stowell, speaking of the intercourse between the men of the Western parts of the World and the nations of the East, "an homicide character has been kept up: foreigners are not admitted into the general body and mass of the society of the nation. They experience strangers and sojourners in the land as all their fathers were." Burls cannot stem [illegible] unbroken wisdom."

But these extreme differences of Custom and Law could never be suffered to cover impunity for crime; and hence the separate jurisdiction for foreigners, which it has been necessary to establish in all the nations of the East with which they maintain any general intercourse.

Here, indeed this necessity has never been conceded by treaty, or special arrangement; but here more particularly than in any part of the World it is admitted in principle, and constantly adverted to in practice. The theory is, whenever a foreigner charged with an offence be delivered up to the Chinese Government, that he has been tried by his own Officers and people and found guilty; a feature specially noticed by Sir George Staunton, and dwelt on as one inducing character to the Officers of the Canton possessions of the Foreigner with the consent of his own countrymen.

In no instance that I am aware of, except one, has the Government of this country ever resorted to them for the apprehension of a foreigner charged with offences against the Laws of the Empire, and in that case it is material to remark the individual was not surrendered. On another occasion indeed, they deported an individual by forcible means from Canton, and from the Empire, but so far as British Subjects be concerned at all events, there has been no instance of apprehension and execution, without reference to British Authority.

Perhaps it may not be misplaced to remark here that the anxiety of this Government, to obtain the sole criminal cognizance to be tried by their forms of punishment, (which constitutes the main difficulty of our Jurisdiction) is not without reason, as the history of the Portuguese Settlement will show. Upon that one hand, that it is impossible to have our own consent to trial by Laws so contrary in spirit and form to our own; upon the other, that our Government would find it impossible to interfere, if such laws were enforced, upon the persons of our own countrymen.

On the whole I have thought that it behoves me in this position to exercise both these powers of granting process, to arrest or to bail as may seem to me fit, the functions of the Court of Justice and of the Magistrate demands of this Government. I can deliver no more into their hands, which they have required me to do; but I have invited their officers to be present at an impartial trial (according to our own forms of law), for the grave offences charged against British Subjects, as if those offences had been committed upon our own country men, upon our own shores.

Reserving your excuse for this digression, I resume the subject in hand.

The particular mission of the Grand Jury is to hear evidence in support of an indictment and in support only, for the grand inquest is strictly in the nature of an enquiry or accusation, afterwards to be determined. Whilst however they are only to enquire whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer it, they should also be persuaded of the truth of an indictment, so far as the evidence goes; and not be satisfied with remote probability, a doctrine that might be applied to very oppressive purposes.

I will now submit a few plain rules, concerning the kind of evidence which a Grand Jury may receive or should reject.

1. They are bound to take the best legal proof of which the case admits.

2. The testimony must be sworn, except in the cases provided for in the Rules and Regulations of practice and proceeding.

3. They should find no indictment upon the testimony of incompetent witnesses, as of persons convicted of [illegible] of any infamous crime. And the Bill to proceed with no more credible witnesses endorsed upon it, the Court upon application will direct the Grand Jury to reject it.

4. One credible witness to one overt act will suffice.

5. The Grand Jury cannot find one part of the charge to be true, and another part false, but they must either maintain or reject the whole.

It may now be desirable to say a few words upon what I believe is the concurrent doctrine of all the best authorities concerning the finding of Bills in cases of homicide, where there is doubt as to the degree. In all such circumstances it is advised to find for the higher offence, because that course is to the ease and advantage of the prisoner in the important respect, that it will bar subsequent prosecution for manslaughter. For if he is [illegible] appeared in evidence upon a trial for murder, that the offence was only of manslaughter, the Petit Jury might have found him guilty in that degree. The finding for manslaughter on the contrary exposes the prisoner to be harassed with fresh accusation. For if the Grand Jury throw out the Bill upon the capital charge, he may be again indicted, which it is material to remark can never take place after an open acquittal. In some authorities, it is laid down as a rule, for the above reasons, that wherever the fact of homicide is clear, the Grand Jury should find the Bill for the murder. And if upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the prisoner appears to the Jury to be guilty of manslaughter, they may find him guilty of the latter offence.

If however the Grand Jury should determine upon finding at once for manslaughter, I should observe, that it is considered the safer course to prefer a fresh indictment for that offence, than to make any erasure on the original Bill. The difference consists only in the omission of the words "of malice aforethought" maliciously and the specialties charging "murder." All other respects the matter may stand, and it is to be observed particularly that the words "feloniously and "felony" are essential, because the crime of manslaughter amounts to felony, but without the benefit of Clergy.

It remains to touch upon the distinction between murder and manslaughter, and I may begin by laying down what I believe are the accepted and best legal definitions of either offence.

It is murder according to Lord Coke. "When a man of sound memory and of the age of discretion killeth any reasonable creature in rerum natura and under the King's Peace by malice prepense or aforethought, either expressed by the party, or implied by Law."

Manslaughter according to Blackstone, Hale, and many other very learned authorities, is the unlawful killing of another, without malice either expressed or implied, which usually either arises from some sudden heat, or involuntary, but in the commission of some unlawful act; and Blackstone has a rule, perhaps as easy of practical application as the real difficulty of seizing the distinction in particular cases will ever admit.

"In general" says he, "when an involuntary killing happens in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the act which occasioned it. If it be in prosecution of a felonious intent or if its consequences naturally tended to bloodshed, it will be murder; But if no more was intended than a mere civil trespass it will only amount to manslaughter."

Concerning the first condition of Lord Coke's definition of murder "that the agent should be of sound memory and discretion" it may be necessary to remind Juries of common occurrence, that the drunkard who kills another, shall not be excused from punishment, but when heat or ill nature be death, his drunkenness doth aggravate his [illegible] common christian at insensible at delight" By the words "under the kings peace" all persons except an alien enemy in the actual host of war are taken to be included—and indeed to kill an alien enemy except in battle is murder.

We now come to the circumstance in English Law which chiefly distinguishes murder from every other description of homicide, namely that there must be express or implied malice aforethought by the party to be judged by the Law.

The legal sense of this language however does not confine it to a purpose of hatreding to the deceased: It extends to an evil design in general, a wicked mind regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Such is held to be a reading as exists in the Law besides malice, as for example when an Officer of Justice is killed in the discharge of his duty, or a private person killed endeavoring to suppress affrays or to prevent felonies, or to apprehend felons actually at large, or in the execution of legal process, or to keep the peace, or to disperse any unlawful assembly, or to suppress any dangerous riot, or to keep the watch by night as directed by the statute of Winchester, with all other like positive offices and duties of public justice.

The principal question in the distinction between murder and manslaughter will arise, I opine, in cases where the circumstances will admit of the plea of provocation, and shall be considered of sufficient importance, therefore when the fact of killing be once con-

IMPORTANT FROM MAINE.

(From the New York Evening Star, March 29.)

By the Eastern Mail of last evening, we have received the following, which we copy from the Augusta Tri-Weekly Journal. It puts an end for the present to all hostile measures on the frontier, and sets at rest all questions of controversy, until further instructions shall be received from the British Government. The troops of Maine will of course immediately return to their homes. Maj. Gen. Scott seems to have acted in this affair in the capacity of mediator.

Head Quarters, Eastern Division, U. S. Army,
Augusta, Me., March, 21, 1839.

The undersigned, a Major General in the Army of the United States, being specially charged with maintaining the peace and safety of their entire Northern and Eastern frontiers, having cause to apprehend a collision of arms between the provincial forces of New Brunswick and the State of Maine on the Disputed Territory which is claimed by both, has the honor, in the sincere desire of the United States to preserve the relations of peace and amity with Great Britain—relations which might be much endangered by such untoward collision—to invite from His Excellency Major General Sir John Harvey, Lieutenant Governor, &c. &c. a general declaration to this effect.

"That it is not the intention of the Lieutenant Governor of Her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, under the expected renewal of negotiations between the Cabinets of London and Washington on the subject of the said disputed territory, without renewed instructions to that effect from his Government, to seek to take Military possession of that territory, or to seek by Military force to expel therefrom the armed Civil force, or the troops of Maine."

Should the undersigned have the honor to be favored with such declaration or assurance to be by him communicated to his Excellency the Governor of the State of Maine, the undersigned does not in the least doubt but he would be immediately and fully authorized by the Governor of Maine to communicate to His Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick a corresponding public declaration to this effect:—

"That in the hope of a speedy and satisfactory settlement, by negotiation between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, of the principal questions depending, and in the full confidence that the Province of New Brunswick, it is not the intention of the Governor of Maine, without renewed instructions from the Legislature of the State to attempt to disturb by arms the said Province, in the possession of the Madawaska settlements, or to attempt to intercept the threatened communications between that Province and Her Majesty's Upper Provinces; and that by yielding in these same time, to leave the question of possession and jurisdiction as they at present stand;—that is, Great Britain, holding, in fact possession of a part of said territory, and the Government of Maine claiming her right to such possession; and the State of Maine holding in fact, possession of another portion of the contested territory, which her right is denied by Great Britain."

With this understanding the Governor of Maine will, without unnecessary delay, withdraw the military force of the State from the said disputed territory—leaving as the under a Land Agent, a small civil guard around, or a sheriff, to protect the timber recently cut, and to prevent future depredations.

Reciprocal assurances of the foregoing friendly character having been, through the undersigned, interchanged, all danger of collision between the immediate parties to the controversy will be at once removed and time is hereby the United States and Great Britain to settle amicably the great question of boundary.

The undersigned has much pleasure in renewing to his Excellency, Major General Sir John Harvey, the assurances of his highest consideration and respect.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

To a copy of the foregoing, Sir John Harvey, annexed the following:—

The undersigned, Major Gen. Sir John Harvey, Lieut. Governor of Her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, has received a proposition from Major Gen. Winfield Scott, of the United States Army, of which the foregoing is a copy, touching the disputed territory, the intercourse and acquiescence thereto.

Sir John Harvey annexes with great pleasure to Major Gen. Scott, the assurances of his highest personal consideration, regard and respect.

To a paper containing the note of Gen. Scott, and the acquiescence of Sir John Harvey, Gen. Fairfield annexed his acquiescence in these words:—

Executive Department,
Augusta, March 26, 1839.

The undersigned, Governor of Maine, in consideration of the foregoing, the request for calling out the troops of Maine having ceased, gives no hesitation in signifying his entire acquiescence in the proposition of Maj. General Scott.

The undersigned has the honor to tender to Major General Scott, the assurance of his high respect and esteem.

JOHN FAIRFIELD.

We learn that General Scott has immediately set out on the business of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and with that Governor Fairfield immediately broke up the marching troops of Maine and the organizing the staff force that is to be continued, for the time, in the disputed territory. The troops in this town will also be immediately discharged.

From the Boston Atlas of yesterday.

Boston Morning Advertiser,
Tuesday, March 26, 1839.

Our Readers will see some very unquestionably authentic intelligence in our notice of correspondence that has passed between Gen. Scott and Sir John Harvey, by which that matter is settled, for the present at least. Gen. Scott has ordered another division of troops, discharging all the soldiers in the centre of the State.

This arrangement has been effected entirely by General Scott. Gov. Fairfield seems to have acted only a subordinate part in the matter—agreeing with great readiness to any terms that were offered him.

The arrangement carries fully into effect the recommendation made at Washington by Mr. Fox and Mr. Forsyth, which the governor repudiated in his recent message.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

By the brig Nonna, from Havana, we have files from that city to the 18th inst. From the paper of that date, we extract the following:

"By letters from Vera Cruz of the 10th March, we learn that a treaty has been concluded between Don Edward de Gorostiza and General Victoria on the part of Mexico, and Admiral Baudin on the part of France, the British Minister, Mr. Packenham, acting as mediator, of the following tenor:

1st There shall be an armistice of 15 days.

2nd The Mexicans shall pay Drs 600, 000 in periods of 2, 4 and 6 months.

3rd Indemnification for the expenses of the war and to the expelled Frenchmen, shall be finally settled by a nation in friendship with the two contracting parties.

4th. The Castle of San Juan de Ulua shall be delivered up to the Mex cans as soon as it sha l be known that the treaty has been ratified by Congress.

The same letters say that there was no doubt the treaty would be immediately ratified. M. Gorostiza had set off for the city of Mexico to remove any difficulties that might present themselves. In the meantime the discharge of all vessels of all classes and nations was allowed.

Vera Cruz will again receive within her walls the persons who have emigrated, and the 11th will open to the merchants their former places of business.

The above intelligence is confirmed by the arrival at Havana of the British frigate Medea Commodore Douglas, and British sloop of war Racer Horse, from Vera Cruz, with letters to the above effect. They would proceed directly to England.

FRANCE AND MEXICO—FURTHER PARTICULARS.

(From American and Commercial Daily Advertiser, April 1, 1839.

The editor of the Louisianian have received the following details in addition to those already given in relation to the late negotiations between Admiral Baudin and the Mexican Plenipotentiaries.

The right of trading by retail, formerly refused with so much obstinacy by the Mexicans, is granted to French subjects by the treaty The sum of Sp Drs. 600,000 is to be paid to the French government as compensation of old injuries, besides the indemnity to French subjects who have been driven from the country. These payment are guaranteed by the English minister.

Before entering upon any negotiation, Admiral Baudin demanded full reparation for the town I put upon him by Santa Anna and afterwards by President Bustamente, in their relation of the skirmish at Vera Cruz in which the admiral was accused of having violated a suspension of arms. This reparation was made in the most satisfactory manner. Having thus obtained reparation for injuries inflicted upon himself and fellow subjects, the admiral thought himself authorized to be generous in what interested his government. He gave up the demand for reimbursement of the war expenses, on being advised by the plenipotentiaries of the deplorable condition of the Mexican finances, and being assured that it was with difficulty the indemnities stipulated in the treaty could be paid. And finally to save the feelings of national honor from being severely wounded, waived his privilege of signing the treaty on board of his ship, and consented to perform that ceremony on shore.

The following topographical notice of the immediate neighbourhood of Macao, or rather of the villages under the jurisdiction of the Keun min foo, and situated between this and the large town of Heung shan at the other end of this island, we take from "O Commercial" of the 10th August.

"1. Parcenleon, 5 li, from the barrier, of more than 500 houses.

"2. Patsiar, 9 li, of about 150 houses.

"3. Hachion, 12 li, of about 20 houses.

"4. Chinsen, (or Casa branes) about 15 li, from the barrier, with 800 houses. In this place lives the Keun min foo (subprefect of the district) and the military Mandarin, Fuhu, who commands about 1000 men, and whose rank is equal to that of a Colonel with us.

"5. Ngootongheung, 16 li, with 70 houses.

"6. Chy nee, 13 li, contains upwards of 1000 houses. There live many rich people there, of whom each keeps upwards of one hundred servants. It was formerly the residence of the Chetang, or Judge.

"7. Chiungen hin, 20 li, containing huts only.

"8. Nung ty chong, 25 li, of more than 500 houses.

"9. Pokegun, 27 li, a hamlet of about 50 dwellings.

"10. Ky chong, 40 li, with 70 houses.

"11. Koo hoc, 50 li, with only about 30 dwellings.

"12. Chinhong, 75 li, with 40 houses.

"13. Sathsoot, 80 li, a small hamlet of only 15 dwellings.

"14. Hunmunloc, 90 li, with 500 houses.

"15. Sathsoot, 80 li, contains only 7 huts; here those travelling from Macao to Heungshan rest a while before climbing the high hill, over which a road leads to the latter town. The summit of this hill, called Kuantsong, is about 100 li from the barrier, and the whole distance from Macao to Heungshan 160 li. There are no more villages between Sathsoot and Heungshan.

COURT OF JUSTICE AT HONG-KONG

The first sessions of this court were held at Hong kong on Monday last the 12th inst The following Gentlemen were of the Grand Jury.

J. H. Astell Esq., Chairman.
W. Bell, Esq.	P. Scott, Esq.
G. T. Bruine, Esq.	J Ricketts Esq.
D. L. Barn, Esq.	W. Dent, Esq.
T. Fox, Esq.	D. Rustomjee, Esq.
T. Gemmell, Esq.	D. Pardesee, Esq.
C. Kerr, Esq.	F. Jamsetjee, Esq.
W. P. Livingston, Esq	H. Rustomjee, Esq.
J Matheson, Esq.	B. Manockjee, Esq.

and Captain Elliot addressed the Grand Jury as follows:

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury—Situated as we are, you will believe that I have diligently applied myself to the most sources of reference within my reach for such directions and information as might guide you in the important task you are here to perform.

It is a principle of the Law of England that no man can be convicted at the suit of the Crown of any Capital Offence unless by the unanimous voice of at least 24 of his neighbours and equals i. e. by 12 at least of the Grand Jury assenting to the accusation, and afterwards by the whole Petit Jury finding him guilty on his trial. But if 12 of the Grand Jury assent it is a good presentment, though some of the rest disagree.

According to the common Law of England too, it is absolutely necessary that all the Grand Inquest should be inhabitants of the county for which they are sworn to enquire: And I may take this occasion to explain the reasons which led me to confine the performance of Grand Jury functions in this jurisdiction, to persons habitually resident in China.

In our position it appeared to me to be a very suitable adaptation of this principle to devolve those duties upon persons usually resident: because they would bring to the task a more familiar knowledge of the Customs of the Country, and of the particular pressure of circumstances, than it could be reasonable to expect in casual visitors, and would therefore be better able to judge of what should be sent to trial, for the ends of Justice and of Peace.

Indeed it must be obvious to every reflecting person who bears in mind the heavy responsibility of acting upon the Jurisdiction order in Council, [till the whole machinery has been set in action by the Queen's Government, and a more proper person were here to fill this seat, than myself] has been forced upon me.

With our intercourse interrupted, I may certainly say, chiefly, if not entirely, because it is impossible to connect to the perpetrators of the Chinese Government to judge Her Majesty's Subjects by their forms of Justice, for, as Officers declared to be capital, how could we disregard an unprovoked outrage upon the peaceful inhabitants of this Empire, attended with loss of life, charged by the Chinese Officers upon British Subjects,

"From the oldest times" says the profound and eloquent Lord Stowell, speaking of the intercourse between the men of the Western parts of the World and the nations of the East, "an immoveable character has been kept up; foreigners are not admitted into the general body and mass of the society of the nation. They continue strangers and sojourners in the land on all their forbois were." Doris cannot many one intermarry nation."

But these extreme differences of Custom and Law could never be suffered to cover impunity for crime; and hence the separate jurisdiction for foreigners, which it has been necessary to establish in all the nations of the East with which they maintain any general intercourse.

Here, indeed this necessity has never been conceded by treaty, or special arrangement; but keep since particularly than in any part of the World it is so sanctioned in principle, and consistently observed in practice. The theory is, whenever a foreigner charged with an offence be delivered up to the Chinese Government, that he has been tried by his own Officers and people and found guilty; a feature specially noticed by Sir George Staunton, and which at once explains the eagerness of the Chinese Officers to gain possession of the foreigner with the amount of his own countrymen.

In no instance that I am aware of, except one, has the Government of this country ever resorted to force for the apprehension of a foreigner charged with offences against the Laws of the Empire, and in that case it is material to remark the individual was not executed. On another occasion indeed, they deported an individual by forcible removal from the Empire. But so far as British Subjects be concerned in all cases, there has been no instance of apprehension and execution, without reference to British Authority.

Perhaps it may not be misplaced to remark here that the anxiety of this Government, to obtain our own written consent to be tried by their forms of judicature, (which constitutes the main difficulty of our present situation), is explicable only upon a mixed principle of justice and policy. Upon the one hand, they feel desirable to have our own consent to trial by Laws so contrary in spirit and form to our own; upon the other, that our Governments would find it impossible to interfere if such laws were enacted, after the procurement of our own written consent.

On the whole I have thought that it became me in this serious conjuncture both upon general and special grounds, to provide as far as lay in my power, for the satisfaction of the ends of justice and of the reasonable demands of this Government. I can deliver no man into their hands, which they have required me to do; but I have invited their officers to be present at an inquest in a trial (according to our own forms here), for the crimes offences charged against British Subjects, as if those offences had been committed upon our own countrymen; upon our own shores.

Requesting your excuse for this digression, I resume the subject in hand.

The particular mission of the Grand Jury is to hear evidence in support of an indictment and to enquire only, for the grand inquest is strictly in the nature of an enquiry or accusation, afterwards to be determined Whilst however they are only to enquire whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer it, they should also be possessed of the truth of an indictment, so far as the evidence goes; and not be satisfied with remote probability, a doctrine that might be applied to very oppressive purposes.

I will now submit a few plain rules, concerning the kind of evidence which a Grand Jury may receive or should reject.

1. They are bound to take the best legal proof of which the case admits.

2. The testimony must be parol, except in the cases provided for by the Rules and Regulations of practice and proceeding.

3. They should find an indictment upon the testimony of he-sworn witnesses at least of persons examined of a respectable, or any infamous crime. And it is not to be presumed that so many rounds a witnesses endorsed upon it, the Court upon application would direct the Grand Jury to reject it.

4. One credible witness to one overt act will suffice.

5. The Grand Jury cannot find one part of one charge to be true, and another part false, but they must either maintain or reject the whole.

It may now be desirable to say a few words upon what I believe is the concurrent doctrine of all the best authorities concerning the finding of Bills in cases of murder, where there is doubt as to the degree. In all such circumstances it is strained to find for the highest offence, because that course is to the ease and advantage of the prisoner in the important respect, that it will bar subsequent prosecution for manslaughter. For had it appeared in evidence upon a trial for murder, that the offence was only of manslaughter, the Petit Jury might have found him guilty in that degree. The finding of a manslaughter by the Grand Jury exposes the prisoner to be tortured with fresh accusations, and if the Petit Jury throw out the Bill upon the capital charge, he may be again indicted, which it is material to prevent can never take place after an open acquittal. In some authorities, it is laid down as a rule, for the above reasons, that wherever the fact of homicide is clear, the Grand Jury should find the Bill for murder. And if upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the prisoner appears to the Jury to be guilty of manslaughter, they may find him guilty of the latter offence.

If however the Grand Jury should appreciate such a finding at once for manslaughter, I should observe, that it is considered the safer course to prefer a fresh indictment for that offence, than to make any erasure on the original Bill. The difference is also only in the case of the words "of malice aforethought" and "of malice prepense" and the conclusion charging "murder." In all other respects the matter may stand, and it is to be observed particularly that the words "feloniously and" before" are essential, because the crime of manslaughter amounts to felony, but withd the benefit of Clergy.

It remains to touch upon the distinction between murder and manslaughter, and I may begin by laying down what I believe are the accepted and best legal definitions of either crime.

It is murder according to Lord Coke. "When a man of sound memory and of the age of discretion kills any reasonable creature in rerum natura not under the King's Peace by malice prepense or aforethought, either expressed by the party, or implied by Law."

Manslaughter according to Blackstone, Hale, and many other very learned authorities, is the unlawful killing of another, without malice either expressed or implied, which may be either voluntary upon a sudden heat, or involuntary but in the commission of some unlawful act; and to these definitions, perhaps as easy of practical application as the real difficulty of bringing the distinction in particular cases will ever admit.

"In general" says he, "when an involuntary killing happens in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the act which occasioned it: If it be in prosecution of a felonious intent or if its consequences naturally tended to bloodshed, it will be murder; But if no more was intended than a mere civil trespass it will only amount to manslaughter."

Concerning the first condition of Lord Coke's definition of murder "that the agent should be of sound memory and discretion" it may be necessary to remind you of another principle of the Law laid down by the same authority "that a drunkard, who in misconstrue drunkenness hath no understanding of himself, but when he doth death, his drunkenness doth aggravate it, Non excusat vinum de voluntate et intellect sed figit." By the words "under the kings peace" all persons exception alien enemy or the actual host of war are taken to be included—and indeed to kill an alien enemy except in battle is murder.

We now come to the circumstance in English Law which chiefly distinguishes murder from every other description of homicide, namely that there must be malice aforethought either expressed by the party or implied by the Law.

The legal sense of this language however does not confine it to a particular enormity to the deepest; it extends to an evil design in general, a wicked and perfidious motive, an intention to do evil, the event of which is fatal—in a variety of cases the law implies malice, as for example when an Officer of Justice is killed in the discharge of his duty, or a private person legally interfering to prevent crimes, or when death happens in the prosecution of some unlawful design, and when in lieu of blind such violence is said in the circumstances will not soften into simple felonious homicide.

The principal queries in the distinction between murder and manslaughter will arise in cases of sudden quarrel—Every homicide is murder, but if committed in the heat of blood, upon a sudden falling out between parties, and shall be so considered not justified or excused, therefore when the fact of killing be unaccomblished, it remains for the Prisoner to make sure that he is justified or excused by that the fact is reduced to manslaughter by some adequate provocation: All killing is taken to be felonious and malicious until the contrary is shewn in evidence—But I must again carefully remind you that when the death manifestly flows sudden heat of blood or some grievous provocation, the offence is reduced by the tenderness of the Law to manslaughter.

For the easier apprehension of this distinction it is material to enquire whether the force or weapon used by the prisoner was likely to produce death, because there can be no doubt that the use of fire arms, swords, pikes, or other weapons of deadly strife will carry more construction than that of sticks or less dangerous instruments casually snatched. Upon the whole we may conclude in the language of an excellent practial treatise on the criminal Law (Chitty) that if the provocation be light, if the resentment be inadequate to its cause, if dangerous instruments be used under pretence of correction, where correction is lawful, or be the provocation what it might, if time for reflection intervened; if previous malice can be shewn, if there be traces of deadly animosity from whatever cause, the offence of homicide is murder. But if the cause be but sudden passion, overstepping the bounds of correction well intended though too severe, a sudden fury though blind, the Law reduces the crime to manslaughter.

The cases of riot and assault to be submitted to you present no difficulty. They are no more than offences against the Peace, accompanied however, I am ashamed to admit by credible averment, by unprovoked and unmanly outrage.

Two indictments were presented to the Grand Jury, one against a seaman, for wilful murder of a Chinese named Lin-Weiheo, on the 7th July in or near a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hong kong.

Ignored by the Grand Jury—

The other against five seamen for riotously, unlawfully and injuriously entering certain dwelling houses in a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hongkong, in search for spirits, and for them and there riotously assaulting the inhabitants, men and women, cutting, beating, and otherwise dangerously ill using them. Also for having on the 7th July last and riotously damaged and injured a certain Joonhoe in the neighbourhood of the above said village.

A true bill was found against these five seamen, and after the evidence had been fully gone into the Jury returned a Verdict of Guilty.

On the day following Capt. Elliot passed sentence on the prisoners, and addressed them in the following words:

"You have been found guilty after a very patient trial of riotous conduct committed on shore in the immediate neighbourhood of this anchorage on the 7th July last, neither do I find any evidence to disturb the painful fact laid in the indictment, that this riot was occasioned by the determination to procure spirits.

And in the train of this indulgence of a brutal vice what follows? Shameful riot attended with unmanly outrage upon men, women, and children: The loss of innocent life, and increased jeopardy to vast public and private interests to an extent which no human wit can foresee.

The Jury, however, making a distinction upon the evidence in the conduct of which I perfectly concur, find that you, ——————, and you ——————, and you ——————, are guilty but merely of the riotous conduct which led to all these disastrous consequences, but that you participated in the actual violence or assault laid in the indictment.

Seeking anxiously on your behalf for some circumstances which might attenuate these serious offences, I must reluctantly confess that so far as you are all concerned, both as Englishmen and Christian men I can find none. You have done these things which you ought not to have done, under the incitement of a vicious motive.

But looking to my own duties here I feel myself compelled as a spirit of strict justice, and not at all of leniency for the offences you have committed, to pronounce a mitigated sentence upon you mainly, because of the inexcusable negligence of permitting so many persons of your station to go on shore, particularly at such a moment as the present, without regard to your personal steadiness, and with no officer to control you, in spite of the dictates of common prudence, and contrary to my own recent injunctions.

Be assured also that the evidence of general good character you have produced has had its full weight with me.

Thus impressed then, the Sentence of the Court is that you ——————, and you ——————, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals, or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom, which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of three calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our Sovereign Lady, the Queen of £10 lawful money of England, and that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And the Sentence of the Court is that you ——————, you ——————, and you ——————, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of correction in the United Kingdom, which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of six calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our sovereign Lady, The Queen of £10 lawful money of England. And that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And you ——————, ——————, ——————, ——————, and ——————, will severally understand that the period of your respective imprisonments now adjudged, will take place from the date of your respective committal within such of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom, as Her Majesty may be pleased to command and that till a suitable opportunity presents itself to send you to England, that you will be detained in safe custody according to the customs and usages of the Sea Service (and agreeably to the manner of your behaviour) on board such ships or ships as the Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China may think fit to appoint from time to time.

LORD PALMERSTON'S LETTER.

Macao 19th Aug. 1839.

The enclosed is an extract from a despatch from Viscount Palmerston dated on the 27th February last, which I request you will be pleased to communicate to the British mercantile community

In fulfilling the duty imposed upon me of impressing His Lordship's concluding observations upon the British merchants resident in China, I may remark that the p ram-ant seriousness of the present crisis will fix upon all Her Majesty's subjects the necessity of leaving to the Queen's Government the unembarrassed adjustment of the British trade and intercourse with this Empire upon a secure and honorable basis.

I have the honor &c. &c.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

To James Matheson Esq.
Chairman of the British Chamber of Commerce.

EXTRACT FROM DESPATCH No. 1 DATED FOREIGN OFFICE, FEBRUARY 27th 1839.

Your despatch No. 11. of the 29th of March last. including a Copy of the memorial of the British merchants interested in this matter, was received here on the 19th October last. In this memorial the merchants prayed for the interference of Her Majesty's Government with that of China to establish a settlement of their claims upon more equitable terms than that which had been proposed by the insolvent Hong, and which had been sanctioned by the Governor of Canton. But on the other hand it appears from Canton News papers lately received in England that about the time when your despatch was received at this Office, the British merchants at Canton had effected an arrangement upon terms not very different from those against which they had, in their memorial, protested.

I request that you will inform me whether this statement is true, and if it is, I have further to instruct you to impress upon the merchants resident in China, that it is of great importance to their own interests, as well as to the character of this country, that they should not, on any future occasion, hastily apply to the British Government to found a representation to the Chinese Government in their behalf upon principles which they themselves may be disposed to abandon before such representation could reach the Chinese authorities.

I am &c. &c. &c.

(Signed) PALMERSTON.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 17th Aug. 1839.

It will be seen from the following edicts a translation of which we owe to the kindness of a friend that the Commissioner has again threatened to deprive the English now resident at Macao of food and servants unless the man who killed a Chinese in an affray at Hongkong be given up These threats have already been partly carried into effect, many of the servants having left, and market people having been punished for selling food to foreigners. Under these circumstances a meeting of British residents was convened yesterday at the Superintendent's office, at which a Committee was appointed to deliberate on the best means to be adopted. We have not heard yet what the result of the Committee's labors has been. In the meantime the British residents are preparing to leave Macao, and most of the ladies will embark, we believe, this day. Capt. Elliot has on several occasions said that he held the most positive orders from his Government under no circumstances whatsoever, to deliver a British Subject over to the Chinese and unless these latter withdrew their pretensions we do not see how the present difficulty can be arranged. The Commissioner and Governor of Canton, are, it is said on their way to Macao, accompanied by a strong detachment of troops, which are however, as a proclamation from the Keun min foo informs the Chinese of Macao, not to enter this town, but to remain at Casa branca, to avoid causing unnecessary alarm. The Chinese authorities appear to be very anxious to obtain possession of the person of some British subject or other, for in Canton, about a week since, on their entertaining suspicions of the Captain of an American ship at Whampoa being an Englishman, a Wei yune with some police were sent, and it was only on the most solemn assurances from his Consignee of his being an American, that he remained unmolested.

In another column will be found an account of the proceedings at the Court of Oyer and Terminer held on board the Fort William at Hong-kong on Tuesday last, the 13th inst. The case tried presented little of interest, being one merely of riot and assault, but as being the first British Criminal Court held in the Chinese waters, it deserves attention. The arrangements gave, we understand, general satisfaction, and a number of spectators from the surrounding ships were present.

Capt. Elliot has circulated part of a despatch from Lord Palmerston, which will be found in another column, from which it will be seen that his Lordship is displeased with the merchants here having made an arrangement themselves with the insolvent hongs, after having applied for assistance to the British Government. We cannot deny the justice of this rebuke, but the great loss of time by correspondence with England must be pleaded as an excuse.

The Ariel we are informed, spoke the following vessels in the Sooloo Sea: Orizo, Tigris Parrott Hall, F. Staunton, and the Isabella was spoken by a Whaler in the Straits of Macassar.

It will be seen from an advertisement that the Races which were to have come off next week, are for the present postponed. The threatening measures of the commissioner are the cause.

Proclamation.

Lin High Imperial Commissioner, Tang Viceroy of Kwangtung and Kwangse, and E, Fooyuen of Kwangtung, conjointly issue this proclamation to the end that unauthorised communication between natives and foreigners be interdicted.

Whereas it appears that the natives of the central land and the outside foreigners are not permitted of themselves mutually to give and receive—this being a circumstance which the established laws of the land most strictly prohibit—therefore it is that in all matters relating to business or to correspondence (between natives and foreigners) the high officers have appointed Hong merchants for such purpose, and in so far as the supplying (of foreigners) with their daily meat and drink is concerned, the said high officers have furnished them with compradores that there may be no occasion for fighting or quarreling, and that fraud and deceit may be duly prevented.

Now during the 5th moon of the present year, we find that the Taugche Keun minfoo of Macao, with a certain Wei yune petitioned us, saying, that the English Superintendent Elliot had sent them a note which contained these and other words: "At Tsoen shi tsay on the ocean's surface (i. e. "Hongkong) while your ships of war lie anchored "there, it is very difficult for the foreign shipping "to obtain the necessary supplies" &c. &c. &c. We the Imperial Commissioner and Viceroy found that these War ships were there only on the preventive service, and not for the purpose of cutting off provisions from the foreign shipping, nevertheless as the benevolence of the Celestial Dynasty cherishes men from afar in order to subdue their hearts by goodness, and as our compassion extends even to their most minute concerns, so, finding that from our ships of war surrounding them the hearts of the said foreigners were filled with fear and dread, out of our indulgence we permitted the cruizers to shift their moorings for the time being to Sha kok, thus setting the minds of the foreigners at rest: and further, at the time we sent the war ships to Sha kok, we gave orders to the Wei yune and others in their turn to command Elliot to take the empty Opium store ships, and fixing a limited term, order them to get under weigh; and in respect to the merchant vessels which had arrived or were going away, to let these set sail and those enter Whampoa: all of which is on record. But up till now,—a month and more—the empty Opium store ships did not yet get under weigh, and the merchantmen still kept staring and looking about them, until as time rolled on, the number of ships daily increased, which in fine led to a number of the English sailors going ashore and getting drunk, when they forced their way into the village of Tsoen shatuay, and taking a man called Lum-weihe, who was passing bye at the time, wounded him so severely that he died! This is indeed going to the extreme of disobedience to the laws! In course the Che hean magistrate of Sin-gan district made a clear inspection of (anglice-held a Coroner's inquest upon) the corpse of Lum-weihe. The different wounds he had received from a club or clubs, were all distinctly stated in his report to us—and at the same time he, in communication with the military officer of the district, apprehended Lo sam, who had arranged the paying of the money as a bribe * to hush up matters: and on the very day that the disturbance was raised, how many sailors there were ashore—what ships they belonged to—how they possessed themselves of the clubs or staves with which they struck and wounded Lum weihe till he dropped down—what time it was that a certain ship's Captain brought a foreign surgeon to wait upon and relieve the wounded man—what time they conveyed him to the sandy beach—what time they breathed his last—what man it was that gave orders about hushing up the matter with a bribe—how much money was paid down on the spot—who it was that induced the relatives of the deceased to grant a certain document by way of proof that he had lost his life by accident)—in reference to the balance of the money not yet paid, who it was that wrote out the promissory note for it—within how many days the said balance was to be paid in full—these particulars, every one of them, came out in Lo sam's evidence as clearly and distinctly one by one, as if they had been delineated upon a map! And at the same time the relations of the deceased having handed up the said promissory note, and the same having been translated into Chinese—the name of the ship's Captain specified therein—the name of the ship—the amount of the note—the date when due, and person who guaranteed payment of the same—every item corresponded most perfectly with the evidence given by Lo sam! In one word then, the murder is now fixed and settled (or traced home); what use to go groping about, and inquiring any further!

The English nation having an officer entrusted with the management and control of the public affairs of that country, who went himself to the village of Tsoen sha tsay to examine into and arrange this matter, ought immediately to produce the foreign murderer, that according to the established law and custom he may forfeit his life for the life he has taken: this would show due respect and submission, and be acting in conformity with the great principles of justice! But on the one hand you will not deliver up the the murderer, and further you would not consent to receive our edicts—you only wished most unreasonably to throw the blame of the murder on the Americans!† Immediately after this however the American Consul Snow sent up a petition stating vehemently in reply, that the charge was false! Again with your excuses and evasions about "killing with malice prepense" and "killing by mistake" and "supporting widows and orphans" and such phrases, all these are so many evasions to screen and varnish over the real facts of the case! Then to wish that the foreign murderer may escape capital punishment, and that (the ghost of) the dead man may still be longing for revenge in the regions below, and his vengeance be unappeased;—to hold the employment of a nation's officer and unjustly oppress the wages of a murdered man (by depriving him of his expiatory victim), is this reasonable or not?

Had it been a Chinese who had struck and killed a foreigner, the mandarins of the Celestial dynasty would immediately have given orders for the apprehension of the murderer, and executed him in open day! Take for example what occurred in the fourth moon of the present year:—there were some native soldiers who landed on the Praya grande at Macao, and who struck at and wounded a foreigner. Now altho' the said foreigner recovered, yet we, the High Commissioner and Viceroy, commanded the offender to be seized and punished severely according to the statute. On going back we find that in the 19th year of Keaulung, there was a French foreigner called Sha luy she (?) who wounded with a musket a foreigner of the said country (England) called Chache Polang (George Brown?) so that he died. The Viceroy and Fooyuen of that time took the said Frenchman and condemned him to be strangled after having been kept some time in the prison of the district magistrate. There are records to this effect which may at any time be referred to. Besides this there have been successive, by records kept of the other cases where foreigners have killed natives, or where natives have killed foreigners: how can the said country but be aware of the fact! He who kills a man must pay the penalty of life for life, whether he be a native or a foreigner the statute is in this respect quite the same. Moreover to give money as a bribe to hush up the matter, is a flagrant breach of the laws; the punishment is more or less grave in proportion to the amount of the bribe, and he who gives and he who receives it, are punished alike! And yet ye know not to deliver up the murderer and beg for mercy! On the other hand, you varnish over the truth with false pretexts and give way to the most outrageous obstinacy! Why did you alone not reflect on the circumstance, that, as a foreigner has deprived a Chinese of his life, and as you are still obstinate in refusing to deliver up the murderer for condign punishment—how can we permit the Chinese to furnish foreigners with the necessaries of life, and not prohibit them from privately selling these to you?

Now it appears that the Weiyune and others have reported to us, that at T-oumshatsuy (or Hongkong) there are daily upwards of 100 compradore's boat, and several shops for the sale of rice, wine, and miscellaneous articles, opened near the sea shore for the supplying the foreign shipping with provisions: it is in accordance with the regulations that all such be most rigidly prohibited, and for as much we now send our cruizers, that they take up different stations at Tsoen sha tsuy, and stop and seize all the compradore's boats that come from every creek and inlet to sell provisions to the ships;—and hereby rigidly forbid the people of the shops and stores near the sea to hold any clandestine dealings with foreigners: besides all this it is proper to unite these circumstances and embody them in a clear and distinct edict, and for as much we now issue this proclamation that the people belonging to every foreign ship may thoroughly know and understand: do ye then immediately in conformity with the contents of this proclamation, take the real murderer and deliver him up to us forthwith that he be tried and executed! In sending cruisers to stop and seize the compradore's boats and prohibiting the shops and stores near the sea side supplying you with any necessaries as we are doing at present, this is in perfect conformity with the established law and custom of the celestial dynasty, but if the said foreigners have occasion to purchase the daily necessaries of life we can only permit these in accordance with the law, to supply to a linguist who will petition the mandarins for liberty to supply a compradore; you cannot be allowed to carry on clandestine dealings with the Chinese which will involve you in heavy penalties—only wait till after the foreign murderer be delivered up when we will then consult about and arrange this matter of supplying the compradores. It is proper that all tremble and obey! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 6th moon, 23rd day,
and August, 1839.

To be pasted up on the Praya Grande, Macao, on a spot secure from wind and rain.

Tsoang, Keun min foo of Macao, Gen. Che hien of Heanghan district, and Pang, Tso tang of Macao, hereby conjointly issue this proclamation, that all may know and understand.

We have just received a dispatch from their Excellencies the High Commissioner Lin, the Viceroy Tang, and the Fooyuen E, which contains the following, viz:

The English merchant ships which arrived here during this present year, having gone in a heap to anchor at Tsoen sha tsuy (or Hongkong) on the high seas, a number of sailors and others in consequence of this went ashore, got drunk and raised a disturbance, which led to one of our people being deprived of his life. Immediately afterwards a certain Wei yune commanded Elliot to produce the murderer for trial and execution. Who would have supposed it! Elliot in opposition refused to receive our edicts and obstinately declined to deliver up the murderer! previously to this the said Keun min foo had commanded the Wei ie to (procurador) to petition the Governor of Macao, to give Elliot orders that he should forthwith bind the murderer

* Captain Elliot denies that he paid the money as a bribe, he gave it as compensation to the widow and the orphans for the irreparable loss they had sustained.

† The mandarins very falsely accuse Captain Elliot of having baptized the murder to the Americans. All he said was, that, on the day of fatal affray, American and other foreigners were ashore as well as Englishmen.

and deliver him up to expiate his crime, but we have no document from the Keun min foo stating that he has complied with our demands. Attentive to this, we, the High Commissioner &c., had given orders in reference to the empty store ships which had discharged their opium, that they should forthwith get under weigh and return to their country, but they have already delayed upwards of two months, and scarcely eleven of their number have yet been reported to us as having passed the Ladrone islands! the rest of them still keep loitering and looking about them! And further in respect to Dent and others whom we had received a positive Imperial edict to expel and drive back to their countries, hardly six individuals of them are yet reported to us as having set sail, the rest are either staying at Macao or living on board the foreign ships, neither the one nor the other has any intention to fix a date for returning home, they delay and put off in a manner which amounts to positive opposition to the laws of the land! Now we find, that among crimes, none is greater than the crime of murder, and among the affairs of this world, none are of so much importance as those where human life is concerned. What reason is there why we should permit you to screen a murderer, and decline acting in a case of this kind! Respectfully searching the records, we find that during the reign of the Emperor Keaking, because that the outside foreigners showed a great deal of pride and perverseness and conducted themselves most unsubmissively, therefore an Imperial edict was with deep respect received, commanding that upon the receipt of this Imperial order, prohibit all entrance to Macao by water, and cut off all supplies of food &c. &c. Respect this!" and at this present moment as the circumstances of the case are somewhat similar, so ought we to set to work in a somewhat similar manner. But then this present affair has reference to the English foreigners alone, and as they persist in offering opposition to the laws, we cannot but show them the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire. As for the Portuguese dwelling at Macao, and the foreigners of every other Country whatever, they are not one hair's breadth concerned in the matter. As respects the Portuguese dwelling at Macao, let them make out a clear and distinct list of the rice flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks and other eatables that they require for their daily consumption, and the cooked victuals for the black slaves which done, let them petition the said Keun min foo and Tso tung who will examine the list and settle the quantum, and give a chop along with it to show the shop keepers and others that they may sell this amount to them the same as ever, to manifest our sympathy and compassion. As regards the English foreigners however, who dwell at Macao, the half of them are Captains and mates of ships, who when they come to Macao to live, by forming connections with the Portuguese and having constant intercourse with them, come to be as intimate as brothers. These said Englishmen who live at Macao, pay very handsome sums for the houses they rent, to serve as bait to their hook. The Portuguese covet the rents thus to be obtained, and utterly forget the preventions they ought to take against those robber—birds who wish to possess themselves of their nest! It is indeed hard to secure that these Portuguese will not supply (the English) with provisions, thus getting most egregiously duped and befooled by them, and it is also not certain that they may not feel pleasure in giving them this assistance! We the High Commissioner, Viceroy, and Governor, wish to subdue the hearts of these southern barbarians according to the principles of reason, and forasmuch looking up and embodying the goodness of the Great Emperor, fearing lest their hearts be at the extremity of fright and agitation, and feeling anxious about their simplicity and stupidity in allowing themselves to be duped, cannot but completely explain all these particulars and issue this edict that you (the inferior Mandarins) may immediately in your turn communicate the same (to the Portuguese,) &c. &c. &c.

Now we the said Keun min foo, Tso tung &c., having received this edict, we find that some English sailors having got drunk deprived one of our people of his life, and yet set themselves against the delivering up of the murderer; that the merchant vessels which had arrived, would neither enter the port to Whampoa, not spread their sails and go back; that the empty opium ships which had delivered their opium, as well as those vagabond foreigners who had been expelled by a positive Imperial Edict to that effect, had not entirely returned to their country. In every instance have these English shown the utmost contempt and recklessness, which is equivalent to the putting of themselves by their own act out of the pale of the laws! Now we the said Keun min foo &c., have received a communication from His Excellency the Imperial Commissioner and the High Officers of the provincial government, commanding that a display be made of the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire in cutting off the provisions; but this view or intention is meant to apply to the English foreigners only, the Portuguese who dwell at Macao, as well as the foreigners of all other countries being in no ways concerned in this matter, ought as formerly to remain quiet in the full enjoyment of their wont et odium cum dignitate. But as the English foreigners who are now residing at Macao, have firm friendship and constant intercourse with the Portuguese, it is hard to secure that these last may not clandestinely buy provisions for the English, and it is equally difficult to secure that our own shop keepers and common people, may not clandestinely supply them with the same.

Besides then, in accordance with the edict from the High Officers issuing our commands to the Portuguese Wei le to (or procurador) that he communicate the same to the Governor of Macao, that he in his turn command all the foreigners dwelling at Macao, that with one accord they permit not the English people to be supplied with the necessaries of life—as relates to the provender required for the daily sustenance of the Portuguese and all other foreigners dwelling in Macao, whether it be rice, flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks, fish, flesh, or other eatables, as also the food prepared and bought for the black slaves, let lists of the men, women, children, servants &c. be made out, and these have passed to the procurador, who will sum them up and acquaint us the Keun min foo &c. with their total amount, who having examined the same and settled the quantum will conformably give orders to the said shopkeepers and others that they duly supply the same—besides all this, really fearing lest many of our native people and shopkeepers now dwelling in Macao, may not fully know our manner of acting, we hereby unite the circumstances, and issue this clear and perspicuous edict, and by these presents command that all the natives dwelling at Macao, shopkeepers &c. &c. make themselves thoroughly acquainted therewith. Do ye supply the Portuguese and all other foreigners (excepting the English) residing at Macao with the provisions and necessaries as specified in the duly examined and certified accounts; beyond this sell not one hair-breadth more! which will lead to the English receiving sustenance by stealth, and other evils of like nature! In reference to the compradors, servants and others in the employment of Englishmen, we have already issued a proclamation that they be immediately driven forth. As for you shopkeepers, who have long been resident at Macao pursuing your business, you surely will carry out these views with all sincerity, but if you dare clandestinely to sell provisions (to the English) so soon as discovered, your persons will be seized and most vigorously punished, and your shops will be closed and sealed up! Most assurredly not the slightest indulgence will be shown you! Regarding the said English foreigners, if they can repent of their crime and awake to a sense of their error and immediately deliver up the murderer, then we, the said Keun min foo &c. &c., will petition the high officers of Government that as an act of extraordinary goodness they extend mercy towards them, and removing these restrictions, permit them to transact business as before! As for you the said shopkeepers and native inhabitants of Macao, ye have all properties and lives! let each and every tremble and obey! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 9th moon, 7th day.
Macao, 15th August, 1839.

Tsung, Keun min foo of Macao, Lan, Chief magistrate of Heang shan district, and Pang, Tso tang of Macao, conjointly issue this clear and perspicuous edict, to the end that all men may know and understand, viz.

Whereas it appears that during the present year, the merchant ships of the English nation which had arrived here, went in a fleet, and cast anchor at Tseem sha tsuy on the ocean's surface (or the high seas) and that they would not on arrival enter the port of Whampoa, which led to a number of their sailors and others going ashore and getting drunk, when they raised a disturbance, which ended in depriving one of our people of his life!

Now the High officers of Government have already communicated their orders thro' a Wei yune to Elliot, commanding him forthwith to deliver up the murderer for trial and punishment. But who would have supposed it! Elliot has now for a long time refused to deliver up the murderer, and in reference to the empty Opium store ships which were ordered to get under weigh and return home, it appears that hardly a dozen of them have yet been reported as having passed the Ladrones! and in so far as regards Dent and the other foreigners whom we had received a special Imperial Edict to expel and send back to their countries, those who have been only reported to us as having gone home, were amount to six individuals! the remainder of the Opium store ships, and the foreign vagabonds still keep loitering here and looking about them the same as ever! In every instance have delay and procrastination been persisted in, which amounts in fact to a determined opposition to the laws! and therefore it is that the high officers feeling indignant thereat, have resolved to show them the majestic severity of the Celestial Empire, and for as much without discriminating between those who remain on ship board, or those who dwell at Macao, we shall treat them in the same way by utterly cutting off their provisions and in other respects treating them with increased rigor. Besides the Portuguese, and all other foreigners of different countries now dwelling at Macao, whom this affair does not at all concern, and whom we permit to be supplied with their necessaries as heretofore, in order to make a distinction, and for this end now issue another special proclamation, besides these, we find that the English foreigners depend entirely upon compradores, servants, chinese traitors and others of that ilk for the supply of their food, who buy the same from native shops and stores, and give it to the said Englishmen. Having now received the commands of the high officers of the provincial Government to cut off the supply of provisions to the English, and to execute the same most rigorously, we ought on the instant to have seized these said compradores, servants (or "sha wan") and chinese traitors and calling out their names one by one, assign them to examination and severe punishment! out of pure indulgence, however, we first issue this clear and intelligible proclamation before hand, that the compradore, servants, chinese traitors and others in the service of the English foreigners whether on ship board or ashore, may all know hereby, that we have limited the term of THREE days within the which they must return to their homes and follow after some other occupation. If they dare to delay or still render services (to the said English) most certainly they will be apprehended and punished with the utmost rigor of law! Assuredly we shall show no indulgence! Tremble and beware! Do not oppose! A special edict!

From a Correspondent.

MARITIME TRADE OF CHINA.—The innumerable vessels, that cover the Chinese sea speak of themselves in favor of this branch of industry, and we shall now give a few details of this commerce.

Chih le, Shan tung and Leaou tung. These are the northern Provinces and their productions very much resemble those of Europe. The least favored of all is Chih le, which has only one harbour of any note, that of Tsen tsin, but being the emporium of the Capital, it enjoys great advantages. The genius of the natives however is by no means enterprizing, they are almost entirely ignorant of navigation, and their most distant voyages do not extend beyond Leaou tung and Shan tung. Their craft is very clumsy, almost primeval, small and paltry. With these they coast along close in shore, quite in the ancient fashion, coming at anchor during the night, if they can fetch a safe place, and waiting for a fair wind to avoid the trouble of tacking. It is very extraordinary that they never imitate the models of their countrymen from the south or the central part of the Empire, which crowd in the Pe ho. Jealousy perhaps on the part of the supreme government forbade them to improve in naval architecture, as this would enable them to perform distant voyages and escape the wrath of Heaven's son.

There are scarcely any articles for exportation, and this is another most powerful drawback upon the trade. The native merchants therefore reexport merchandize from Tsen tsin to the small places on the coast, and fetch provisions from Leaou tung. The whole however is so trifling, that it scarcely deserves any notice.

The inhabitants of Shan tung being in possession of many excellent harbours, shew a little more spirit, though they are notwithstanding rather loath to leave their favorite homes. Their craft is a little better than the former, but generally very small. Great numbers of agriculturists having left their native country for the opposite shores of Leaou tung, the intercourse between those two districts is very brisk. Hundreds of small vessels speed to those regions of plenty and during all seasons of the year, except the most rigorous part of the winter, they may be found cruising about. But this is the whole sum of their enterprize and besides coasting and occasionally going to Tsen tsin, they never move towards the south. Had it depended on the countrymen of Confucius to reach the equator and discover the islands of the Indian Archipelago, they would until this very day have remained unknown to the world. Speak to a Shan tung sailor about going upon a trip of a month's duration, and he imagines, that it is repairing to the fiery regions of Sahara or the icefields of Siberia. No sum of money would tempt him to go beyond the confines of the yellow river. We happened once to meet a poor fellow who had been cast away towards the south and he was greatly surprised, that the world was actually so large, and that men could live under a climate of eternal summer.

The northern harbour Tung chow is far famed, but almost entirely occupied with the native trade. Kaichow, to the south, is a resort of junks from different parts of the Empire, but rather a poor place. There is a variety of stuffs, much resembling grass cloth, manufactured, which with various other articles makes up the investment to Leaou tung. The people there confine themselves exclusively to agriculture and willingly give their produce in exchange. The capital employed in this traffic is by no means considerable, but its speedy return enables the merchant to realize some profit. It will be scarcely credible, that the coast of Korea, which is so very near, that with a fair wind a vessel may reach it in 36 hours, is never visited by the Shantung men. We believe, that this is the only instance of two countries considerably advanced in civilization, refusing to hold beneficial intercourse with each other, a woeful proof how far a crooked policy can damp the ardour of a commercial nation. Most of the maritime ports of this province are almost totally devoid of timber. Now in Korea the Chinese might get it for the mere cutting. There are uninhabitated islands along the coast clothed with primeval forests, where perhaps the axe was never busy; but no Chinese dares to go thither, for fear of his Emperor or the King of the land. Whenever an unfortunate vessel loses its course and approaches the coast, it is instantly driven away, and not allowed to loiter about. Laws and regulations and the wish of the ruler of Korea to monopolize all the trade through his Embassador at Peking and on the frontiers, are the principal reasons for this extraordinary system of commercial antipathy.

Leaou tung has no maritime trade of its own, but rich in its own resources waits the arrival of foreign craft. The shallowness of its harbours, and the hidden dangers of the coast prove a great drawback upon navigation, yet the trade with every maritime province is extremely brisk, and the gulph is entered with fleets destined for its emporiums.

Along the whole coast of Kirin, a very extensive province up to the Hih lung kiang, there is neither harbour, so far as our knowledge extends, nor trade in any shape. The fear of seeing the rich furs and the valuable ginseng of this district smuggled, suggested perhaps to the Chinese court the precaution of never permitting there a maritime trade. The country is moreover very scantily inhabited, and there are no industrious sons of Han settled to give vigor to the commerce.

We quote here a remark of a Chinese Admiral respecting the western trade—He says: "The pirates range all along the coast, but go not beyond the promontory of Shen ung, because the commerce is there so trifling as to make it scarcely worth their while to visit those quarters." This was written more than one hundred years ago. Since then things have materially changed. The port of Tsen tsin was then visited by a few military vessels, and the principal articles were sent through the interior. But Kaou lung afforded greater facilities to this traffic by reducing the duties on merchandize, and thus encouraging the junks from Canton and Fokien to repair to the ports. It has even been known during the last twenty years, and is now one of the most flourishing and profitable branches of industry. Whosoever can reach Tsen tsin in safety, makes sure of gain; but the voyage is in the estimation of the Chinese beset with perils. Having reached certain points, they refuse to start, unless the wind blows from the right quarter, and they would rather forfeit solid advantages, than start on an unlucky day. Notwithstanding all these precautions however, and what can be more prudent than to commit fate, a great number of vessels are lost, whilst others not being able to reach the port in due season, bear away for one of the southern ports.

MACAO NEWS. The officers have lately been very active to find out the ruffians that robbed the pawnbroker's shop. Several hundred soldiers have also been dispatched to the village where the robbery took place in order to give weight to these investigations. There are at present numbers of men, who having been thrown out of employ by the late changes, prowl about on sea and land and commit the most atrocious acts.

CANTON.—A boat containing several ten thousands of taels of tribute was dispatched some days ago to the Capital. In the neighbourhood of Hwuychoo a band of daring highwaymen attacked her and robbed the vessel of every farthing.

We have a file of the Canton Court Gazette before us which gives a short account of the movements and actions of the Mandarins. There are several reports sent in to the Governor, enumerating the surrender of opium pipes and other paraphernalia, and also of some caskes of opium. It seems to be quite fashionable to present these trophies of public opinion over inveterate habits to the supreme courts. Six opium smugglers have been apprehended and delivered over to a court of justice.

The plan of giving mutual pledges to put down opium smoking, is carried into effect throughout the district. Every five families become responsible for each other and are to be constantly punished for the slightest neglect. In the hall of every dwelling hangs a small tablet on which the names of one or two persons are written and the householder mentioned. Large red papers are stuck up from street to street giving a short account of the measures adopted against the prevailing vice by the supreme Government. So far this is very well, but when villains wreak their vengeance upon the innocent, and private malice as well as thirst after gain are quenched by appealing to this new law, it will become a source of ever flowing misery. Like many good customs, this also, we fear, will fall into disuse and be forgotten as soon as the law of extirpation has passed into oblivion.

We quite anticipated the disapproving voice of the late measures at Canton in the Indian news papers. Almost all reason from edicts which are published without comment, and since the premises are wrong, the conclusion can not be otherwise but fallacious. There are wrongs to be adjusted on both sides, and this being the case, the inference drawn is, that western Governments have no right to meddle with these affairs. Is it then not a sacred duty on the part of every civilized state to put matters on an honorable footing and to arrest ruin in its course? If this be against the international laws, it would be much better, that all diplomatic relations should at once cease. Had a tenth of the affairs that took place at Canton happened at Constantinople, all Europe would have been in uproar against such an assumption of arbitrary right. But China must be defended, in order to perpetrate all the abuses that have existed for more than a century, in the most aggravated form. Under present circumstances we have not to deal with theoritical questions; let us enumerate simple matters of fact, and then ask all editors of journals whether they in conscience can plead in favor of a horrible system, which Chinese absurdity and foreign cupidity have palmed upon this commerce.—There is at present no Anglo Chinese trade, and there can be no honorable commerce in future unless the system is totally changed. Are the lives of the innocent to be put in jeopardy, and is an immense capital to be placed at the mercy of every Mandarin who wishes to bring on a crisis? We ask wether so large a revenue as the tea trade yields, is entirely to be given up, or to depend upon the policy of any Governor at Canton who may be pleased to stop the trade, whenever his interests dictate such course. Shall the Hong system be continued, debts upon debts be accumulated, and the foreign community be made a constant prey every thing? Shall all the evils that have existed grow worse with every month? If so, may then the clamour of many thousands of poor natives, who are now without rice, drown the voice of men who seek to advocate the ruin of their countrymen, may the poverty and misery which have been the concomitant satellites in the wake of Lin, be brought forward as a proof, that though England has something to gain from a salutary change, China will reap still more substantial benefits.—The interests of India, of the British manufacturers, of the English public at large—of the United States—of Holland—and principally of China, most imperiously demand proper and reasonable arrangements in the commercial relations; and whilst honor and humanity lay the same claims; can there be still our discontient voice upon the propriety of a dignified interference?

PEKING.—There are again bitter complaints uttered by the members of the Board of Revenue against the Lieutenant Governors of Shantung, Shanse, and Hoopih, on account of their remaining so long in arrears of large sums due to the treasury. To make it still worse, these gentlemen have lost all shame and year after year defer payment.

CHUSAN.—On the 10th of June two foreigners in a wretched plight were driven on the shores of this island. They wore the hair in a tuft, being clad in a short garment, and their skiff contained nothing but a water jar. The magistrate on examining them, could not make out what they possibly could be, and it was presumed that they might be people from Korea. Upon further investigation it was ascertained that they were fishermen from the kingdom of Hainan (kingdom of the southern outlanders?) who had been driven hither by stress of weather. The authorities of Fohsen are charged with transporting them again to their homes.

MACAO.—The Keun min foo has published an order forbidding the gainseeking people to leave their homes for foreign countries and to meet ships in the outer seas. This restriction seems to be at variance with the law that indulgently permits Bowery natives to repair to other countries under the promise of returning after a number of years.

SIAM.—More than one thousand Chinamen, both opium smokers and dealers have been taken up by government, and are sent to chains to repair and build the city wall. These precautions therefore turn out to some advantage and are the cause of giving greater stability to government by enclosing the palace with an impregnable wall. The poor fellows do not receive either food nor wages and must procure it themselves. A great number of troops have been sent to the vassals destined for China to Sonka where a rebellion had broken out.

blished, it remains for the Prisoner to make out that he is justified or excused or that the fault is reduced to manslaughter by some adequate provocation: All killing is taken to be felonious and malicious until the contrary is shewn in evidence—But I must again carefully remind you that when the death ensues evidently from sudden heat of blood or some grievous provocation, the offence is reduced by the tenderness of the Law to manslaughter.

For the easier apprehension of this distinction it is material to enquire whether the force or weapon used by the prisoner was likely to produce death, because there can be no doubt that the use of fire arms, swords, pikes, or other weapons of deadly strife will carry worse construction than that of sticks or less dangerous instruments casually snatched. Upon the whole we may conclude in the language of an excellent practial treatise on the criminal Law (Chitty) that if the provocation be light, if the resentment be inadequate to its cause, if dangerous instruments be used under pretence of correction, where correction is lawful, or be the provocation what it might, if time for reflection intervened; if previous malice can be shewn, if there be traces of deadly animosity from whatever cause, the offence of homicide is murder. But if the cause be but sudden passion, overstepping its bounds; correction well intended though too severe, a sudden fury though kindled, the Law reduces the crime to manslaughter.

The cases of riot and assault to be submitted to you present no difficulty. They are no more than offences against the Peace, as accepted however, I am ashamed to admit by credible averment, by unprovoked and unmanly outrage.

Two indictments were presented to the Grand Jury, one against a seaman, for wilful murder of a Chinese named Lin-Weisee, on the 7th July in or near a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hong kong

Ignored by the Grand Jury—

The other against five seamen (or riotously, unlawfully and injuriously entering certain dwelling houses in a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hongkong, in search for spirits, and for them and their custody assaulting the inhabitants, men and women, cutting, beating, and otherwise dangerously ill using them. Also for having on the 7th July last past wantonly damaged and injured a certain Joonkoose in the neighbourhood of the above said village.

A true bill was found against these five seamen, and after the evidence had been fully gone into the Jury returned a Verdict of Guilty

On the day following Capt. Elliot passed sentence on the prisoners, and addressed them in the following words:

"You have been found guilty after a very patient trial of riotous conduct committed on shore in the immediate neighbourhood of this anchorage on the 7th July last, neither do I find any evidence to disturb the painful fact laid in the Indictment, that this riot was occasioned by the determination to procure spirits.

And in the train of this indulgence of a brutal vice what follows? Shameful riot attended with unmanly outrage upon men, women, and children: The loss of innocent life, and increased jeopardy to vast public and private interests to an extent which no human wit can foresee.

The Jury, however, making a distinction upon the evidence in the second case of which I perfectly concur, find that you, ————, and you ————, and you ————, are guilty no mercy of the riotous conduct which led to all these disastrous consequences, but that you participated in the actual violence or assault laid in the Indictment.

Seeking seriously on your behalf for some circumstances which might extenuate these serious offences, I must reluctantly confess that so far as you are all concerned, both as Englishmen and Christian men I can find none. You have done those things which you ought not to have done, under the incitement of a vicious motive

But looking to my own duties here I feel myself compelled as a spirit of strict justice, and not at all of leniency for the offences you have committed, to pronounce a mitigated sentence upon you mainly, because of the inexcusable negligence of permitting so many persons of your station to go on shore, particularly at such a moment as the present, without regard to your personal steadiness and with no officer to control you, in spite of the dictates of common prudence, and contrary to my own recent injunctions.

Be assured also that the evidence of general good character you have produced has had its full weight with me.

Thus impressed then, the Sentence of the Court is that you ———, and you ———, and you ———, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of six calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our Sovereign Lady the Queen of Five lawful money of England, and that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And the Sentence of the Court is that you ———, you ———, and you ———, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of correction in the United Kingdom, which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of six calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our Sovereign Lady, The Queen of Five lawful money of England. And that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And you ———, ———, ———, ———, ——— and ———, will severally understand that the period of your respective imprisonments now adjudged, will take place from the date of your respective committal within such of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom, as Her Majesty may be pleased to command and that till a suitable opportunity presents itself to send you to England, that you will be detained in safe custody according to the customs and usages of the Sea Service (and agreeably to the manner of your behaviour) on board such ships or ships as the Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China may think fit to appoint from time to time.

LORD PALMERSTON'S LETTER.

Macao 15th Aug. 1839.

The enclosed is an extract from a despatch from Viscount Palmerston dated on the 27th February last, which I request you will be pleased to communicate to the British mercantile community

In fulfilling the duty imposed upon me of impressing His Lordship's concluding observations upon the British merchants resident in China, I may remark that the paramount seriousness of the present crisis will fix upon all Her Majesty's subjects the necessity of leaving to the Queen's Government the unembarrassed adjustment of the British trade and intercourse with this Empire upon a secure and honorable basis.

I have the honor &c. &c.

Chief Superintendent.

Chairman of the British Chamber of Commerce.

EXTRACT FROM DESPATCH No. 1 DATED FOREIGN OFFICE, FEBRUARY 27TH 1839.

Your despatch No. 11 of the 29th of March last, including a Copy of the memorial of the British merchants interested in this matter, was received here on the 12th October last. In this memorial the merchants prayed for the interference of Her Majesty's Government with that of China, to obtain a settlement of their claims upon more equitable terms than that which had been proposed by the insolvent Hong, and which had been sanctioned by the Governor of Canton. But on the other hand it appears from Canton News papers lately received in England that about the time when your despatch was received at this Office, the British merchants at Canton had effected an arrangement upon terms not very different from those against which they had, in their memorial, protested.

I request that you will inform me whether this statement is true, and if it is, I have further to instruct you to impress upon the merchants resident in China, that it is of great importance to their own interests, as well as to the character of this country, that they should not, on any future occasion, hastily apply to the British Government to found a representation to the Chinese Government in their behalf upon principles which they themselves may be disposed to abandon before such representation could reach the Chinese authorities.

I am &c. &c. &c

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 17th Aug. 1839.

It will be seen from the following edicts a translation of which we owe to the kindness of a friend that the Commissioner has again threatened to deprive the English now resident at Macao of food and servants unless the man who killed a Chinese in an affray at Hongkong be given up. These threats have already been partly carried into effect, many of the servants having left, and market people having been punished for selling food to foreigners. Under these circumstances a meeting of British residents was convened yesterday at the Superintendent's office, at which a Committee was appointed to deliberate on the best means to be adopted. We have not heard yet what the result of the Committee's labors has been. In the meantime the British residents are preparing to leave Macao, and most of the ladies will embark, we believe, this day. Capt. Elliot has on several occasions said that he held the most positive orders from his Government under no circumstances whatsoever, to deliver a British Subject over to the Chinese. and unless these latter withdrew their pretensions we do not see how the present difficulty can be arranged. The Commissioner and Governor of Canton, are, it is said on their way to Macao, accompanied by a strong detachment of troops, which are however, as a proclamation from the Keun min foo informs the Chinese of Macao, not to enter this town, but to remain at Casa branca, to avoid causing unnecessary alarm. The Chinese authorities appear to be very anxious to obtain possession of the person of some British subject or other, for in Canton, about a week since, on their entertaining suspicions of the Captain of an American ship at Whampoa being an Englishman, a Wei yune with some police were sent, and it was only on the most solemn assurances from his Consignee of his being an American, that he remained unmolested.

In another column will be found an account of the proceedings at the Court of Oyer and Terminer held on board the Fort William at Hong-kong on Tuesday last, the 13th inst. The case tried presented little of interest, being one merely of riot and assault, but as being the first British Criminal Court held in the Chinese waters, it deserves attention. The arrangements gave, we understand, general satisfaction, and a number of spectators from the surrounding ships were present.

Capt. Elliot has circulated part of a despatch from Lord Palmerston, which will be found in another column, from which it will be seen that his Lordship is displeased with the merchants here having made an arrangement themselves with the insolvent hongs, after having applied for assistance to the British Government. We cannot deny the justice of this rebuke, but the great loss of time by correspondence with England must be pleaded as an excuse.

The Ariel we are informed, spoke the following vessels in the Sooloo Sea: Orizo, Tigris Parrock Hall, F. Staunton, and the Isabella was spoken by a Whaler in the Straits of Macassar.

It will be seen from an advertisement that the Races which were to have come off next week, are for the present postponed. The threatening measures of the commissioner are the cause.

Proclamation.

Lin High Imperial Commissioner, Tang Viceroy of Kwangtung and Kwangse, and E. Fooyuen of Kwangtung, conjointly issue this proclamation to the end that unauthorised communication between natives and foreigners be interdicted.

Whereas it appears that the natives of the central land and the outside foreigners are not permitted of themselves mutually to give and receive—this being a circumstance which the established laws of the land most strictly prohibit—therefore it is that in all matters relating to business or to correspondence (between natives and foreigners) the high officers have appointed Hong merchants for such purpose, and in so far as the supplying (of foreigners) with their daily meat and drink is concerned, the said high officers have furnished them with compradores that there may be no occasion for fighting or quarrelling, and that fraud and deceit may be duly prevented.

Now during the 5th moon of the present year, we find that the Tungche Keun minfoo of Macao, with a certain Wei yune petitioned us, saying, that the English Superintendent Elliot had sent them a note which contained these and other words: "At Tseem sha tsuy on the ocean's surface (in Hongkong) while your ships of war lie anchored "there, it is very difficult for the foreign shipping "to obtain the necessary supplies" &c. &c. &c. We the Imperial Commissioner and Viceroy found that these War ships were there only on the preventive service, and not for the purpose of cutting off provisions from the foreign shipping, nevertheless as the benevolence of the Celestial Dynasty cherishes men from afar in order to subdue their hearts by goodness, and as our compassion extends even to their most minute concerns, so, finding that from our ships of war surrounding them the hearts of the said foreigners were filled with fear and dread, out of our indulgence we permitted the cruizers to shift their moorings for the time being to Sha kok, thus setting the minds of the foreigners at rest: and further, at the time we sent the war ships to Sha kok, we gave orders to the Wei yune and others in their turn to command Elliot to take the empty Opium store ships, and fixing a limited term, order them to get under weigh; and in respect to the merchant vessels which had arrived or were going away, to let these set sail and those enter Whampoa: all of which is on record. But up till now,—a month and more—the empty Opium store ships did not yet get under weigh, and the merchantmen still kept staring and looking about them, until as time rolled on, the number of ships daily increased, which in fine led to a number of the English sailors going ashore and getting drunk, when they forced their way into the village of Tseem sha tsuy, and taking a man called Lum-weihe, who was passing bye at the time, wounded him so severely that he died! This is indeed going to the extreme of disobedience to the laws! In course the Che heen magistrate of Sin-gan district made a clear inspection of (anglice-held a Coroner's inquest upon) the corpse of Lum-weihe. The different wounds he had received from a club or clubs, were all distinctly stated in his report to us—and at the same time he, in communication with the military officer of the district, apprehended Lo sam, who had arranged the paying of the money as a bribe * to hush up matters: and on the very day that the disturbance was raised, how many sailors there were ashore—what ships they belonged to—how they possessed themselves of the clubs or staves with which they struck and wounded Lum-weihe till he dropped down—what time it was that a certain ship's Captain brought a foreign surgeon to wait upon and relieve the wounded man—what time they conveyed him to the sandy beach—what time he breathed his last—what man it was that gave orders about hushing up the matter with a bribe—how much money was paid down on the spot—who it was that reduced the relations of the deceased to grant a certain document by way of proof that he had lost his life by accident)—in reference to the balance of the money not yet paid, who it was that wrote out the promissory note for it—within how many days the said balance was to be paid in full—these particulars, every one of them, came out in Lo sam's evidence as clearly and distinctly one by one, as if they had been delineated upon a map! And at the same time the relations of the deceased having handed up the said promissory note, and the cause having been translated into Chinese—the name of the ship's Captain specified therein—the name of the ship—the amount of the note—the date when due, and person who guaranteed payment of the same—every item corresponded most perfectly with the evidence given by Lo sam! In one word then, the murder is now fixed and settled (or traced home); what use to go groping about, and inquiring any further!

The English nation having an officer entrusted with the management and control of the public affairs of that country, who went himself to the village of Tseem sha tsuy to examine into and arrange this matter, ought immediately to produce the foreign murderer, that according to the established law and custom he may forfeit his life for the life he has taken: this would show due respect and submission, and be acting in conformity with the great principles of Justice! But on the one hand you will not deliver up the the murderer, and further you would not consent to receive our edicts—you only wished most unreasonably to throw the blame of the murder on the Americans! † Immediately after this however the American Consul Snow sent up a petition stating vehemently in reply, that the charge was false! Again with your excuses and evasions about "killing with malice prepense" and "killing by mistake" and "supporting widows and orphans" and such phrases, all these are so many evasions to screen and varnish over the real facts of the case! Thus to wish that the foreign murderer may escape capital punishment, and that (the ghost of) the dead man may still be longing for revenge in the regions below, and his vengeance be unappeased;—to hold the employment of a nation's officer and unjustly oppress the names of a murdered man (by depriving him of his expiatory victim), is this reasonable or not?

Had it been a Chinese who had struck and killed a foreigner, the mandarins of the Celestial dynasty would immediately have given orders for the apprehension of the murderer, and executed him in open day! Take for example what occurred in the fourth moon of the present year:—there were some native soldiers who landed on the Praya grande at Macao, and who struck at and wounded a foreigner. Now altho' the said foreigner recovered, yet we, the High Commissioner and Viceroy, commanded the offender to be seized and punished severely according to the statute. On going back we find that in the 19th year of Keenlung, there was a French foreigner called She luy she (?) who wounded with a musket a foreigner of the said country (England) called Chache Polang (George Brown) so that he died. The Viceroy and Fooyuen of that time took the said Frenchman and condemned him to be strangled after having been kept some time in the prison of the district magistrate. There are records to this effect which may at any time be referred to. Besides this there have been successive by records kept of the other cases where foreigners have killed natives, or where natives have killed foreigners; how can the said country but be aware of the fact! He who kills a man must pay the penalty of life for life, whether he be a native or a foreigner the statute is in this respect quite the same. Moreover to give money as a bribe to hush up the matter, is a flagrant breach of the laws; the punishment is more or less grave in proportion to the amount of the bribe, and he who gives and he who receives it, are punished alike! And yet ye know not to deliver up the murderer and beg for mercy! On the other hand, you vanish over the truth with false pretexts and give way to the most outrageous obstinacy! Why did you alone not reflect on the circumstance, that, as a foreigner has deprived a Chinese of his life, and as you are still obdurate in refusing to deliver up the murderer for condign punishment, how can we permit the Chinese to furnish foreigners with the necessaries of life, and not prohibit them from privately selling these to you?

Now it appears that the Weiyune and others have reported to us, that at Tseemshatsuy (or Hongkong) there are daily upwards of 100 compradore's boats, and several shops for the sale of rice, wine, and miscellaneous articles, opened near the sea shore for the supplying the foreign shipping with provisions; it is in accordance with the regulations that all such be now rigidly prohibited, and for as much we now send our cruizers, that they take up different stations at Tseem sha tsuy, and stop and seize all the compradore's boats that come from every creek and inlet to sell provisions to the ships;—and hereby rigidly forbid the people of the shops and stores near the sea to hold any clandestine dealings with foreigners: besides all this it is proper to unite these circumstances and embody them in a clear and distinct edict, and for as much we now issue this proclamation that the people belonging to every foreign ship may thoroughly know and understand: do ye then immediately in conformity with the contents of this proclamation, take the real murderer and deliver him up to us forthwith that he be tried and executed! In sending cruizers to stop and seize the compradore's boats, and prohibiting the shops and stores near the sea side supplying you with any necessaries as we are doing at present, this is in perfect conformity with the established law and custom of the celestial dynasty, but if the said foreigners have occasion to purchase the daily necessaries of life we can only permit these in accordance with the law, to apply to a linguist who will petition the mandarins for liberty to supply a compradore; you cannot be allowed to carry on clandestine dealings with the Chinese which will involve you in heavy penalties—only wait till after the foreign murderer be delivered up when we will then consult about and arrange this matter of supplying the compradores. It is proper that all trouble and obey! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 4th moon, 23rd day,
and August, 1839.

To be pasted up on the Praya Grande, Macao, on a spot secure from wind and rain.

Tseang, Keun min foo of Macao, Hon. Che heen of Heangshan district, and Pang, The tsung of Macao, hereby conjointly issue this proclamation, that all may know and understand.

We have just received a dispatch from their Excellencies the High Commissioner Lin, the Viceroy Tang, and the Fooyuen E, which contains the following, viz.

The English merchant ships which arrived here during this present year, having gone in a heap to anchor at Tseem sha tsuy (or Hongkong) on the high seas, a number of sailors and others in consequence of this went ashore, got drunk and raised a disturbance, which led to one of our people being deprived of his life. Immediately afterwards a certain Wei yune commanded Elliot to produce the murderer for trial and execution. Who could have supposed it! Elliot in opposition refused to receive our edicts and obstinately declined to deliver up the murderer! previously to this the said Keun min foo had commanded the Wei is to (prosecute) to petition the Governor of Macao, to give Elliot orders that he should forthwith bind the murderer

* Captain Elliot denies that he paid the money as a bribe, he gave it as compensation to the widow and the orphans for the irreparable loss they had sustained.

† The mandarins very falsely accuse Captain Elliot of having imputed the murder to the Americans. All he said was, that, on the day of fatal affray, Americans and other foreigners were ashore as well as Englishmen.

and deliver him up to expiate his crime, but we have no document from the Keun min foo stating that he has complied with our demands. Attention to this, we, the High Commissioner &c., have given orders in reference to the empty opium ships which had discharged their opium; that they should forthwith get under weigh and return to their country, but they have already delayed upwards of two months, and scarcely eleven of their number have yet been reported to us as having passed the Ladrones islands! the rest of them still keep loitering and looking about them! And further in respect to Dent and others who we had received a positive Imperial edict to expel and drive back to their countries, hardly six individuals of them are yet reported to us as having set sail, the rest are either staying at Macao or living on board the foreign ships, neither the one nor the other has any intention to fix a date for returning home, they delay and put off in a manner which amounts to positive opposition to the laws of the land! Now we find, that among crimes, none is greater than the crime of murder, and among the affairs of this world, none are of so much importance as those where human life is concerned. What reason is there why we should permit you to screen a murderer, and decline acting in a case of this kind! Respectfully searching the records, we find that during the reign of the Emperor Kaking, because that the outside foreigners showed a great deal of pride and perverseness and conducted themselves most unsubmissively, therefore an Imperial edict was with deep respect received, commanding that upon the receipt of this Imperial order, prohibiting all entrance to Macao by water, and cut off all supplies of food &c. &c. Respect this! " and at this present moment as the circumstances of the case are somewhat similar, so ought we to set to work in a somewhat similar manner. But then this present affair has reference to the English foreigners alone, and as they persist in offering opposition to the laws, we cannot but show them the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire. As for the Portuguese dwelling at Macao, and the foreigners of every other Country whatever, they are not one hair's breadth concerned in the matter. As respects the Portuguese dwelling at Macao let them make out a clear and distinct list of the rice flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks and other eatables that they require for their daily consumption, and the cooked victuals for the black slaves which done, let them petition the said Keun min foo and Too tang who will examine the list and settle the quantum, and give a chop along with it to show the shop keepers and others that they may sell this amount to them the same as ever, to manifest our sympathy and compassion. As regards the English foreigners however, who dwell at Macao, the half of them are Captains and mates of ships, who when they come to Macao to live, by forming connections with the Portuguese and having constant intercourse with them, come to be as intimate as brothers. These said Englishmen who live at Macao, pay very handsome sums for the houses they rent, to serve as bait to their hook. The Portuguese covet the rents thus to be obtained, and utterly forget the preventions they ought to take against these robber—birds who wish to possess themselves of their nest! It is indeed hard to secure that these Portuguese will not supply (the English) with provisions, thus getting most egregiously duped and befooled by them, and it is also not certain that they may not feel pleasure in giving them this assistance! We the High Commissioner, Viceroy, and Governor, wish to subdue the hearts of these southern barbarians according to the principles of reason, and forasmuch looking up and embodying the goodness of the Great Emperor, fearing lest their hearts be at the extremity of fright and agitation, and feeling anxious about their simplicity and stupidity in allowing themselves to be duped, cannot but completely explain all these particulars and issue this edict that you (the inferior Mandarins) may immediately in your turn communicate the same (to the Portuguese,) &c. &c. &c.

Now we the said Keun min foo, Too tang &c., having received this edict, we find that some English sailors having got drunk deprived one of our people of his life, and yet set themselves against the delivering up of the murderer; that the merchant vessels which had arrived, would neither enter the port to Whampoa, not spread their sails and go back; that the empty opium ships which had delivered their opium, as well as those vagabond foreigners who had been expelled by a positive Imperial Edict to that effect, had not entirely returned to their country. In every instance have these English shown the utmost contempt and recklessness, which is equivalent to the putting of themselves by their own act out of the pale of the laws! Now we the said Keun min foo &c., have received a communication from His Excellency the Imperial Commissioner and the High Officers of the provincial government, commanding that a display be made of the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire in cutting off the provisions; but this view or intention is meant to apply to the English foreigners only, the Portuguese who dwell at Macao, as well as the foreigners of all other countries being in no ways concerned in this matter, ought as formerly to remain quiet in the full enjoyment of their wont et odium cum dignitate. But as the English foreigners who are now residing at Macao, have firm friendship and constant intercourse with the Portuguese, it is hard to secure that these last may not clandestinely buy provisions for the English, and it is equally difficult to secure that our own shop keepers and common people, may not clandestinely supply them with the same.

Besides then, in accordance with the edict from the High Officers issuing our commands to the Portuguese Wei le to (or procurador) that he communicate the same to the Governor of Macao, that he in his turn command all the foreigners dwelling at Macao, that with one accord they permit not the English people to be supplied with the necessaries of life—as relates to the provender required for the daily sustenance of the Portuguese and all other foreigners dwelling in Macao, whether it be rice, flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks, fish, flesh, or other eatables, as also the food prepared and bought for the black slaves, let lists of the men, women, children, servants &c. be made out, and these lists passed to the procurador, who will sum them up and acquaint us the Keun min foo &c, with their total amount, who having examined the same and settled the quantum will conformably give orders to the said shopkeepers and others that they duly supply the same—besides all this, really fearing lest many of our native people and shopkeepers now dwelling in Macao, may not fully know our manner of acting, we hereby unite the circumstances, and issue this clear and perspicuous edict, and by these presents command that all the natives dwelling at Macao, shopkeepers &c. &c. make themselves thoroughly acquainted therewith. Do ye supply the Portuguese and all other foreigners (excepting the English) residing at Macao with the provisions and necessaries as specified in the duly examined and certified accounts; beyond this, veil not one hairsbreadth more! which will lead to the, English receiving sustenance by stealth, and other evils of like nature! In reference to the compradors, servants and others in the employment of Englishmen, we have already issued a proclamation that they be immediately driven forth. As for you shopkeepers, who have long been resident at Macao pursuing your business, you surely will carry out these views with all sincerity, but if you dare clandestinely to sell provisions (to the English,) so soon as discovered, your persons will be seized and most vigorously punished, and your shops will be closed and sealed up! Most assuredly not the slightest indulgence will be shown you! Regarding the said English foreigners, if they can repent of their crime and awake to a sense of their error and immediately deliver up the murderer, then we, the said Keun min foo &c. &c., will petition the high officers of Government that as an act of extraordinary goodness they extend mercy towards them, and removing these restrictions, permit them to transact business as before! As for you the said shopkeepers and native inhabitants of Macao, ye have all properties and lives! let each and every trouble and obey! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 9th moon, 7th day.
Macao, 15th August, 1839.

Tsang, Keun min foo of Macao, Lan, Chief magistrate of Heang shan district, and Pang, Too tang of Macao, conjointly issue this clear and perspicuous edict, to the end that all men may know and understand, viz.

Whereas it appears that during the present year, the merchant ships of the English nation which had arrived here, went in a fleet, and cast anchor at Tseen sha tsuy on the ocean's surface (or the high sea), and that they would not on arrival enter the port of Whampoa, which led to a number of their sailors and others going ashore and getting drunk, when they raised a disturbance, which ended in depriving one of our people of his life!

Now the High officers of Government have already communicated their orders thro' a Wei yuen to Elliot, commanding him forthwith to deliver up the murderer for trial and punishment. But who would have supposed it! Elliot has now for a long time refused to deliver up the murderer, and in reference to the empty Opium store ships which were ordered to get under weigh and return home. It appears that hardly a dozen of them have yet been reported as having passed the Ladrones! and in so far as regards Dent and the other foreigners whom we had received a special Imperial Edict to expel and send back to their countries those who have been only reported to us as having gone home, scarce amount to six individuals! the remainder of the Opium store ships, and the foreign vagabonds still keep loitering here and looking about them the same as ever! In every instance have delay and procrastination been persisted in, which amounts in fact to a determined opposition to the laws! and therefore it is that the high officers feeling indignant thereat, have resolved to show them the majestic severity of the Celestial Empire, and for so much without discriminating between those who remain on ship board, or those who dwell at Macao, we shall treat them in the same way by utterly cutting off their provisions and in other respects treating them with increased rigor. Besides the Portuguese, and all other foreigners of different countries now dwelling at Macao, whom this affair does not at all concern, and whom we permit to be supplied with their necessaries as heretofore, in order to make a distinction, and for this end now issue another special proclamation, besides these, we find that the English foreigners depend entirely upon compradores, servants, chinese traitors and others of that ilk for the supply of their food, who buy the same from native shops and stores, and give it to the said Englishmen. Having now received the commands of the high officers of the provincial Government to cut off the supply of provisions to the English, and to execute the same most rigorously, we ought on the instant to have seized these said compradores, servants (or "sha wan") and chinese traitors and calling out their names one by one, assign them to examination and severe punishment! out of pure indulgence, however, we first issue this clear and intelligible proclamation before hand, that the compradore, or vasse, chinese traitors and others in the service of the English foreigners whether on ship board or ashore, may all know hereby, that we have limited the term of THREE days within the which they must return to their homes and follow after some other occupation. If they dare to delay or still render services (to the said English) most certainly they will be apprehended and punished with the utmost rigor of law! Assuredly we shall show no indulgence! Tremble and beware! Do not oppose! A special edict!

From a Correspondent.

MARITIME TRADE OF CHINA.—The innumerable vessels, that cover the Chinese sea speak of themselves in favor of this branch of industry, and we shall now give a few details of this commerce.

Chih le, Shan tung and Leaou tung. These are the northern Provinces and their productions very much resemble those of Europe. The least favored of all is Chih le, which has only one harbour of any note, that of Teen tsin, but being the emporium of the Capital, it enjoys great advantages. The genius of the natives however is by no means enterprizing, they are almost entirely ignorant of navigation, and their most distant voyages do not extend beyond Leaou tung and Shan tung. Their craft is very clumsy, almost primeval, small and paltry. With these they coast along close in shore, quite in the ancient fashion, coming at anchor during the night, if they can fetch a safe place, and waiting for a fair wind to avoid the trouble of tacking. It is very extraordinary that they never imitate the models of their countrymen from the south or the central part of the Empire, which crowd in the Pe ho. Jealousy perhaps on the part of the supreme government forbade them to improve in naval architecture, as this would enable them to perform distant voyages and escape the wrath of Heaven's son

There are scarcely any articles for exportation, and this is another most powerful drawback upon the trade. The native mariners therefore reexport merchandize from Teen tsin to the small places on the coast, and fetch provisions from Leaou tung. The whole however is so trifling, that it scarcely deserves any notice.

The inhabitants of Shan tung being in possession of many excellent harbours, shew a little more spirit, though they are notwithstanding rather loath to leave their favorite homes. Their craft is a little better than the former, but generally very small. Great numbers of agriculturists having left their native country for the opposite shores of Leaou tung, the intercourse between those two districts is very brisk. Hundreds of small vessels speed to those regions of plenty and during all seasons of the year, except the most rigorous part of the winter, they may be found cruising about. But this is the whole sum of their enterprize, and besides coasting and occasionally going to Teen tsin, they never move towards the south. Had it depended on the countrymen of Confucius to reach the equator and discover the islands of the Indian Archipelago, they would until this very day have remained unknown to the world. Speak to a Shan tung sailor about going upon a trip of a month's duration, and he imagines, that it is repairing to the fiery regions of Sahara or the icefields of Siberia. No sum of money would tempt him to go beyond the confines of the yellow river. We happened once to meet a poor fellow who had been cast away towards the south and he was greatly surprised, that the world was actually so large, and that men could live under a climate of eternal summer.

The northern harbour Tung chow is far famed, but almost entirely occupied with the native trade. Kaoukeou, to the south, is a resort of junks from different parts of the Empire, but rather a poor place. There is a variety of stuffs, much resembling grass cloth, manufactured, which with various other articles makes up the investment to Leaou tung. The people there confine themselves exclusively to agriculture and willingly give their produce in exchange. The capital employed in this trade is by no means considerable, but its speedy return enables the merchant to realize some profit. It will be scarcely credible, that the coast of Korea, which is so very near, that with a fair wind a vessel may reach it in 36 hours, is never visited by the Shantung men. We believe, that this is the only instance of two countries considerably advanced in civilization, refusing to hold beneficial intercourse with each other. A short proof how far a contracted policy can damp the ardour of a commercial people. Most of the maritime ports of this province are almost totally devoid of timber. Now to Korea the Chinese might get it for the mere cutting. There are uninhabited islands along the coast studded with primeval forests, where perhaps the axe was never busy; but no Chinese dares to go thither, for fear of his Emperor or the King of the land. Whenever an unfortunate vessel loses its course and approaches the coast, it is instantly driven away, and not allowed to loiter about. Laws and regulations and the wish of the ruler of Korea to monopolize all the trade through his Embassador at Peking and on the frontiers, are the principal reasons for this extraordinary system of commercial antipathy.

Leaou tung has no maritime trade of its own, but rich in its own resources waits the arrival of foreign craft. The shallowness if its harbours, and the hidden dangers of the coast prove a great drawback upon navigation, yet the trade with every maritime province is extremely brisk, and the gulph is entered with fleets destined for its emporiums.

Along the whole coast of Kirin, a very extensive province up to the Hih lung kiang, there is neither harbour, so far as our knowledge extends, nor trade in any shape. The fear of seeing the rich fur and the valuable ginseng of this district smuggled, suggested perhaps to the Chinese court the precaution of never permitting there a maritime trade. The country is moreover very scantily inhabited, and there are no industrious sons of Han settled to give vigor to the commerce.

We quote here a remark of a Chinese Admiral respecting the western trade—He says: " The pirates range all along the coast, but go not beyond the promontory of Shen ang, because the commerce is there so trifling as to make it scarcely worth their while to visit those quarters." This was written more than one hundred years ago. Since then things have materially changed. The port of Teen tsin was then visited by a few solitary vessels, and the principal articles were sent through the interior. But Keen lung afforded greater facilities to this traffic by reducing the duties on merchandize, and thus encouraging the junks from Canton and Fokeen to repair to the port. It has even grown during the last twenty years, and is now one of the most flourishing and profitable branches of industry. Whosoever can reach Teen tsin in safety, makes sure of gain; but the voyage is in the estimation of the Chinese beset with perils. Having reached certain points, they refuse to start, unless the wind blows from the right quarter, and they would rather forfeit solid advantages, than start on an unlucky day. Notwithstanding all these precautions however, and what can be more prudent than to consult fate, a great number of vessels are lost, whilst others not being able to reach the port in due season, bear away for one of the southern ports.

MACAO NEWS. The officers have lately been very active to find out the ruffians that robbed the pawnbroker's shop. Several hundred soldiers have also been dispatched to the village where the robbery took place in order to give weight to these investigations. There are at present numbers of men, who having been thrown out of employ by the late charges, prowl about on sea and land and commit the most atrocious acts.

CANTON.—A boat containing several ten thousands of taels of tribute was dispatched some days ago to the Capital. In the neighbourhood of Howychoo a band of daring highwaymen attacked her and robbed the vessel of every farthing.

We have a file of the Canton Court circular before us which gives a short account of the movements and actions of the Mandarins. There are several reports sent in to the Governor, enumerating the surrender of opium pipes and other paraphernalia, and also of some catties of opium. It seems to be quite fashionable to present these trophies of public opinion over inveterate habits to the supreme court. Six opium smugglers have been apprehended and delivered over to a court of justice.

The plan of giving mutual pledges to put down opium smoking, is carried into effect throughout the district. Every five families become responsible for each other and are to be conjointly punished for the slightest neglect. In the hall of every dwelling hangs a small tablet on which the names of one or two persons are written and the householder mentioned. Large red papers are stuck up from street to street giving a short account of the measures adopted against the prevailing vice by the supreme Government. So far this is very well, but when villains wreak their vengeance upon the innocent, and private malice as well as thirst after gain are quenched by appealing to this new law, it will become a source of ever flowing misery. Like many good customs, this also, we fear, will fall into disuse and be forgotten as soon as the law of excitement has passed into oblivion.

We quite anticipated the disapproving voice of the late merchants at Canton to the Indian news papers. Almost all the reports from the rebels are published without comment, and which of the premises are wrong, the conclusion was not to be drawn but fallacious. There are wrongs to be adjusted on both sides, and this being the case, the inferences drawn in, that western Governments have no right to meddle with these affairs. Is it then not a sacred duty on the part of every civilized state to put matters on an honorable footing and to avoid ruin in its course? If this be against the international laws, it would be much better, that all diplomatic relations should at once cease. Had a tenth of the efforts that took place at Canton happened at Constantinople, all Europe would have been in uproar against such an assumption of arbitrary right. But China must be defended, in order to perpetuate all the abuses that have existed for more than a century, in the most aggravated form. Under present circumstances we have not to deal with theoretical quibbling but as commercial simple matters of fact, and shall all editors of journals whether they be connected or not plead in favor of a horrible system, which Chinese absurdity and foreign cupidity have poisoned for this commerce.—There is at present no Anglo Chinese trade, and there can be no honorable commerce in future unless the system is totally changed. Are the lives of the innocent to be put in jeopardy, and is an immense capital to be placed at the mercy of every Mandarin who wishes to bring on a crisis? We ask whether so large a revenue as the tea trade yields, is entirely to be given up, or to depend upon the policy of any Governor at Canton who may be pleased to stop the trade, whenever his interests dictate such course. Shall the living system be condemned, debts upon debts be accumulated, and the foreign commerce be made a stepping stone for every thing? Shall all the evils that have existed grow worse with every month? If so, may then the clamour of many thousands of your subjects, who are now without rice, drown the voice of men who dare to advocate the ruin of their countrymen, may the poverty and misery which have been the consequence of rebellion in the wake of Lin, be brought forward as a proof, that though England has something to gain from a salutary change, China will reap still more substantial benefits.—The interests of India, of the British manufacturers, of the English public at large—of the United States—of Holland—and principally of China, loudly and imperiously demand proper and reasonable arrangements in the commercial relations; and whilst honor and humanity lay the same claims; can there be still one dissentient voice upon the propriety of a dignified interference?

PERSIA.—There are again bitter complaints uttered by the members of the Board of Revenue against the Lieutenant Governors of Shantung, Shansi, and Hoopih, on account of their remaining so long in arrears of large sums due to the treasury. To make it still worse, these gentlemen have lost all shame and year after year defer payment.

CHOOSAN.—On the 10th of June two foreigners (a wretched plight were driven on the shores of this island. They wore the hair in a tuft, being clad in a short garment, and their skiff contained nothing but a water jar. The magistrate on examining them, could not make out what they possibly could be, and it was presumed that they might be people from Korea. Upon further investigation it was ascertained that they were fishermen from the kingdom of Homan? (kingdom of the southern sea—lescars?) who had been driven hither by stress of weather. The authorities of Fohsen are charged with transporting them again to their homes.

MACAO.—The Keun min foo has published an order forbidding the gainseeking people to leave their homes for foreign countries and to meet ships in the outer sea. This restriction seems to be at variance with the law that indulgently permits flowery natives to repair to other countries under the promise of returning after a number of years.

SIAM.—More than one thousand Chinamen, both opium smokers and dealers have been taken up by government, and are sent in chains to repair and build the city wall. These precautions therefore turn out to some advantage and are the cause of giving greater stability to government by enclosing the palace with an impregnable wall. The poor fellows do not receive either food nor wages and must procure it themselves. A great number of troops have been sent to the vessels destined for China to banks where a rebellion had broken out.

blished, it remains for the Prisoner to make out that he is justified or excused or that the fault is reduced to manslaughter by some adequate provocation: All killing is taken to be felonious and malicious until the contrary is shewn in evidence—But I must again carefully remind you that when the death ensues evidently from sudden heat of blood or some grievous provocation, the offence is reduced by the tenderness of the Law to manslaughter.

For the easier apprehension of this distinction it is material to enquire whether the force or weapon used by the prisoner was likely to produce death, because there can be no doubt that the use of fire arms, swords, pikes, or other weapons of deadly strife will carry more construction than that of sticks or less dangerous instruments casually snatched. Upon the whole we may conclude in the language of an excellent practial treatise on the criminal Law (Chitty) that if the provocation be light, if the resentment be inadequate to its cause, if dangerous instruments be used under pretence of correction, where correction is lawful, or be the provocation what it might, if time for reflection intervened; if previous malice can be shewn, if there be traces of deadly animosity from whatever cause, the offence of homicide is murder. But if the cause be but sudden passion, overstepping its bounds; correction well intended though too severe, a sudden fury though blind, the Law reduces the crime to manslaughter.

The cases of riot and assault to be submitted to you present no difficulty. They are no more than offences against the Peace, as supposed however, I am ashamed to admit by credible averment, by unprovoked and unmanly outrage.

Two indictments were presented to the Grand Jury, one against a seaman, for wilful murder of a Chinese named Lin-Weisee, on the 7th July in or near a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hong kong.

Ignored by the Grand Jury—

The other against five seamen (for riotously, unlawfully and injuriously entering certain dwelling houses in a village on the eastern shore of the anchorage of Hongkong, in search for spirits, and for them and there riotously assaulting the inhabitants, men and women, cutting, beating, and otherwise dangerously ill using them. Also for having on the 7th July last past riotously damaged and injured a certain Joss-house in the neighbourhood of the above said village.

A true bill was found against these five seamen, and after the evidence had been fully gone into the Jury returned a Verdict of Guilty.

On the day following Capt. Elliot passed sentence on the prisoners, and addressed them in the following words:

"You have been found guilty after a very patient trial of riotous conduct committed on shore in the immediate neighbourhood of this anchorage on the 7th July last, neither do I find any evidence to disturb the painful fact laid in the Indictment, that this riot was occasioned by the determination to procure spirits,

And in the train of this indulgence of a brutal vice what follows? Shameful riot attended with unmanly outrage upon men, women, and children: The loss of innocent life, and increased jeopardy to vast public and private interests to an extent which no human wit can foresee.

The Jury, however, making a distinction upon the evidence in the soundness of which I perfectly concur, find that you, ———, and you ———, and you ———, are guilty not merely of the riotous conduct which led to all these disastrous consequences, but that you participated in the actual violence or assault laid in the indictment.

Seeking seriously on your behalf for some circumstances which might extenuate these serious offences, I must reluctantly confess that so far as you are all concerned, both as Englishmen and Christian men I can find none. You have done those things which you ought not to have done, under the incitement of a vicious motive.

But looking to my own duties here I feel myself compelled in a spirit of strict justice, and not at all of lenience for the offences you have committed, to pronounce a mitigated sentence upon you mainly, because of the inexcusable negligence of permitting so many persons of your station to go on shore, particularly at such a moment as the present, without regard to your personal steadiness, and with no officer to control you, in spite of the dictates of common prudence, and contrary to my own recent injunctions.

Be assured also that the evidence of general good character you have produced has had its full weight with me.

Thus impressed then, the Sentence of the Court is that you ——— ———, and you ——— ———, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of three calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our Sovereign Lady the Queen of £10 lawful money of England. And that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And the Sentence of the Court is that you ———, you ———, and you ———, be imprisoned in any of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of correction in the United Kingdom, which Her Majesty may be pleased to command, there to remain and be kept to hard labor for the space of six calendar months. And further that you each pay a fine to our sovereign Lady, The Queen of £10 lawful money of England. And that you be kept in safe custody until you shall have paid the said fine.

And you ———, ———, ———, ———, ———, ———, and ———, will severally understand that the period of your respective imprisonments now adjudged, will take place from the date of your respective committal within such of Her Majesty's Goals or Houses of Correction in the United Kingdom, as Her Majesty may be pleased to command and that till a suitable opportunity presents itself to send you to England, that you will be detained in safe custody according to the customs and usages of the Sea Service (and agreeably to the manner of your behaviour) on board such ships or ships as the Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China may think fit to appoint from time to time.

LORD PALMERSTON'S LETTER.

Marso 15th Aug. 1839.

The enclosed is an extract from a despatch from Viscount Palmerston dated on the 27th February last, which I request you will be pleased to communicate to the British mercantile community

In fulfilling the duty imposed upon me of impressing His Lordship's concluding observations upon the British merchants resident in China, I may remark that the p ramount seriousness of the present crisis will fix upon all Her Majesty's subjects the necessity of leaving to the Queen's Government the unembarrassed adjustment of the British trade and intercourse with this Empire upon a secure and honorable basis.

I have the honor &c. &c.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

To JAMES MATHESON Esq.
Chairman of the British Chamber of Commerce.

EXTRACT FROM DESPATCH No. 1 DATED FOREIGN OFFICE, FEBRUARY 27th 1839.

Your despatch No. 11 of the 29th of March last, including a Copy of the memorial of the British merchants interested in this matter, was received here on the 19th October last. In this memorial the merchants prayed for the interference of Her Majesty's Government with that of China, to obtain a settlement of their claims upon more equitable terms than that which had been proposed by the insolvent Hong, and which had been sanctioned by the Governor of Canton. But on the other hand it appears from Canton News papers lately received in England that about the time when your despatch was received at this Office, the British merchants at Canton had effected an arrangement upon terms not very different from those against which they had, in their memorial, protested.

I request that you will inform me whether this statement is true, and if it is, I have further to instruct you to impress upon the merchants resident in China, that it is of great importance to their own interests, as well as to the character of this country, that they should not, on any future occasion, hastily apply to the British Government to found a representation to the Chinese Government in their behalf upon principles which they themselves may be disposed to abandon before such representation could reach the Chinese authorities.

I am &c. &c. &c

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 17th Aug. 1839.

It will be seen from the following edicts a translation of which we owe to the kindness of a friend that the Commissioner has again threatened to deprive the English now resident at Macao of food and servants unless the man who killed a Chinese in an affray at Hongkong be given up. These threats have already been partly carried into effect, many of the servants having left, and market people having been punished for selling food to foreigners. Under these circumstances a meeting of British residents was convened yesterday at the Superintendent's office, at which a Committee was appointed to deliberate on the best means to be adopted. We have not heard yet what the result of the Committee's labors has been. In the meantime the British residents are preparing to leave Macao, and most of the ladies will embark, we believe, this day. Capt. Elliot has on several occasions said that he held the most positive orders from his Government under no circumstances whatsoever, to deliver a British Subject over to the Chinese. and unless these latter withdrew their pretensions we do not see how the present difficulty can be arranged. The Commissioner and Governor of Canton, are, it is said on their way to Macao, accompanied by a strong detachment of troops, which are however, as a proclamation from the Keun min foo informs the Chinese of Macao, not to enter this town, but to remain at Casa branca, to avoid causing unnecessary alarm. The Chinese authorities appear to be very anxious to obtain possession of the person of some British subject or other, for in Canton, about a week since, on their entertaining suspicions of the Captain of an American ship at Whampoa being an Englishman, a Wei yune with some police were sent, and it was only on the most solemn assurances from his Consignee of his being an American, that he remained unmolested.

In another column will be found an account of the proceedings at the Court of Oyer and Terminer held on board the Port William at Hong-kong on Tuesday last, the 13th inst. The case tried presented little of interest, being one merely of riot and assault, but as being the first British Criminal Court held in the Chinese waters, it deserves attention. The arrangements gave, we understand, general satisfaction, and a number of spectators from the surrounding ships were present.

Capt. Elliot has circulated part of a despatch from Lord Palmerston, which will be found in another column, from which it will be seen that his Lordship is displeased with the merchants here having made an arrangement themselves with the insolvent hongs, after having applied for assistance to the British Government. We cannot deny the justice of this rebuke, but the great loss of time by correspondence with England must be pleaded as an excuse.

The Ariel we are informed, spoke the following vessels in the Bonboo Nan: Orion, Tigris Parrock Hall, F. Staunton, and the Isabella was spoken by a Whaler in the Straits of Macassar.

It will be seen from an advertisement that the Races which were to have come off next week, are for the present postponed. The threatening measures of the commissioner are the cause.

Proclamation.

Lin High Imperial Commissioner, Tang Viceroy of Kwangtung and Kwangse, and E. Fooyuen of Kwangtung, conjointly issue this proclamation to the end that unauthorised communication between natives and foreigners be interdicted.

Whereas it appears that the natives of the central land and the outside foreigners are not permitted of themselves mutually to give and receive—this being a circumstance which the established laws of the land most strictly prohibit—therefore it is that in all matters relating to business or to correspondence (between natives and foreigners) the high officers have appointed Hong merchants for such purpose, and in so far as the supplying (of foreigners) with their daily meat and drink is concerned, the said high officers have furnished them with compradores that there may be no occasion for fighting or quarreling, and that fraud and deceit may be duly prevented.

Now during the 5th moon of the present year, we find that the Taoutche Keun min foo of Macao, with a certain Wei yune petitioned us, saying, that the English Superintendent Elliot had sent them a note which contained these and other words: "At Taoen sha tsuy on the ocean's surface (i. e. "Hongkong) while your ships of war lie anchored "there, it is very difficult for the foreign shipping "to obtain the necessary supplies" &c. &c. &c. We the Imperial Commissioner and Viceroy found that these War ships were there only on the preventive service, and not for the purpose of cutting off provisions from the foreign shipping, nevertheless as the benevolence of the Celestial Dynasty cherishes men from afar in order to subdue their hearts by goodness, and as our compassion extends even to their most minute concerns, so, finding that from our ships of war surrounding them the hearts of the said foreigners were filled with fear and dread, out of our indulgence we permitted the cruizers to shift their moorings for the time being to Sha kok, thus setting the minds of the foreigners at rest: and further, at the time we sent the war ships to Sha kok, we gave orders to the Wei yune and others in their turn to command Elliot to take the empty Opium store ships, and fixing a limited term, order them to get under weigh; and in respect to the merchant vessels which had arrived or were going away, to let these set sail and these enter Whampoa: all of which is on record. But up till now,—a month and more—the empty Opium store ships did not yet get under weigh, and the merchantmen still kept staring and looking about them, until as time rolled on, the number of ships daily increased, which in fine led to a number of the English sailors going ashore and getting drunk, when they forced their way into the village of Taoen sha tsuy, and taking a man called Lum-weihe, who was passing bye at the time, wounded him so severely that he died! This is indeed going to the extreme of disobedience to the laws! In course the Che hien magistrate of Sin-gan district made a clear inspection of (anglice-held a Coroner's inquest upon) the corpse of Lum-weihe. The different wounds he had received from a club or clubs, were all distinctly stated in his report to us—and at the same time he, in communication with the military officer of the district, apprehended Lo sam, who had arranged the paying of the money as a bribe * to hush up matters: and on the very day that the disturbance was raised, how many sailors there were ashore—what ships they belonged to—how they possessed themselves of the clubs or staves with which they struck and wounded Lum weihe till he dropped down—what time it was that a certain ship's Captain brought a forcible argument to wait upon and relieve the wounded man—what time they conveyed him to the sandy beach—what time he breathed his last—what man it was that gave orders about hushing up the matter with a bribe—how much money was paid down on the spot—who it was that reduced the relations of the deceased to grant a certain document by way of proof that he had lost his life by accident)—in reference to the balance of the money not yet paid, who it was that wrote out the promissory note for it—within how many days the said balance was to be paid in full—these particulars, every one of them, came out in Lo sam's evidence as clearly and distinctly one by one, as if they had been delineated upon a map! And at the same time the relations of the deceased having handed up the said promissory note, and the same having been translated into Chinese—the name of the ship's Captain specified therein—the name of the ship—the amount of the note—the date when due, and person who guaranteed payment of the same—every item corresponded most perfectly with the evidence given by Lo sam! In one word then, the murder is now fixed and settled (or traced home); what use to go groping about, and inquiring any further!

The English nation having an officer entrusted with the management and control of the public affairs of that country, who went himself to the village of Taoen sha tsuy to examine into and arrange this matter, ought immediately to produce the foreign murderer, that according to the established law and custom he may forfeit his life for the life he has taken: this would shew due respect and submission, and in acting in conformity with the great principles of Justice! But on the one hand you will not deliver up the the murderer, and further you would not consent to receive our edicts—you only wished most unreasonably to throw the blame of the murder on the Americans! † Immediately after this however the American Consul Snow sent up a petition stating vehemently in reply, that the charge was false! Again with your excuses and evasions, alone about "Killing with malice prepense" and "killing by mistake" and "supporting widows and orphans" and such phrases, all these are so many evasions to screen and varnish over the real facts of the case! Thus to wish that the foreign murderer may escape capital punishment, and that (the ghost of) the dead men may still be longing for revenge in the regions below, and his vengeance be unappeased:—to hold the employments of a nation's officer and unjustly oppress the manes of a murdered man (by depriving him of his expiatory victim), is this reasonable or not?

Had it been a Chinese who had struck and killed a foreigner, the mandarins of the Celestial dynasty would immediately have given orders for the apprehension of the murderer, and executed him in open day! Take for example what occurred in the fourth moon of the present year:—there were some native soldiers who landed on the Praya grande at Macao, and who struck at and wounded a foreigner. Now altho' the said foreigner recovered, yet we, the High Commissioner and Viceroy commanded the offender to be seized and punished severely according to the statute. On going back we find that in the 19th year of Keenlung, there was a French foreigner called She luy she (?) who wounded with a musket a foreigner of the said country (England) called Chache Polang (George Brown?) so that he died. The Viceroy and Fooyuen of that time took the said Frenchman and condemned him to be strangled after having been kept some time in the prison of the district magistrate. There are records to this effect which may at any time be referred to. Besides this there have been successively records kept of the other cases where foreigners have killed natives, or where natives have killed foreigners; how can the said country but be aware of the fact? He who kills a man must pay the penalty of life for life, whether he be a native or a foreigner the statute is in this respect quite the same. Moreover to give money as a bribe to hush up the matter, is a flagrant breach of the laws; the punishment is more or less grave in proportion to the amount of the bribe, and he who gives and he who receives it, are punished alike! And yet ye know not to deliver up the murderer and beg for mercy! On the other hand, you varnish over the truth with false pretexts and give way to the most outrageous obstinacy! Why did you alone not reflect on the circumstance, that, as a foreigner has deprived a Chinese of his life, and as you are still obstinate in refusing to deliver up the murderer for condign punishment—how can we permit the Chinese to furnish foreigners with the necessaries of life, and not prohibit them from privately selling these to you?

Now it appears that the Weiyune and others have reported to us, that at T-eenshatsuy (or Hongkong) there are daily upwards of 100 compradore's boats, and several shops for the sale of rice, wines, and miscellaneous articles, opened near the sea shore for the supplying the foreign shipping with provisions; it is in accordance with the regulations that all these be most rigidly prohibited, and for as much as now and anon our cruizers, that they take up different stations at Taoen sha tsuy, and stop and seize all the compradore's boats that come from every creek and inlet to sell provisions to the ships;—and hereby rigidly forbid the people of the shops and stores near the sea to hold any clandestine dealings with foreigners: besides all this it is proper to unite these circumstances and embody them in a clear and distinct edict, and for as much we now issue this proclamation that the people belonging to every foreign ship may thoroughly know and understand: do ye then immediately in conformity with the contents of this proclamation, take the real murderer and deliver him up to us forthwith that he be tried and executed! In sending cruizers to stop and seize the compradore's boats and prohibiting the shops and stores near the sea side supplying you with any necessaries as we are doing at present, this is in perfect conformity with the established law and custom of the celestial dynasty, but if the said foreigners have occasion to purchase the daily necessaries of life we can only permit these in accordance with the law, to apply to a linguist who will petition the mandarins for liberty to supply a compradore; you cannot be allowed to carry on clandestine dealings with the Chinese which will involve you in heavy penalties—only wait till after the foreign murderer be delivered up when we will then consult about and arrange this matter of supplying the compradores. It is proper that all trouble and stop! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 6th moon, 22nd day, or
2nd August, 1839.

To be pasted up on the Praya Grande, Macao, on a spot secure from wind and rain.

Tsang, Keun min foo of Macao, &c. Che hien of Heangshan district, and Pang, The tang of Macao, hereby conjointly issue this proclamation, that all may know and understand.

We have just received a dispatch from their Excellencies the High Commissioner Lin, the Viceroy Tang, and the Fooyuen E, which contains the following, viz.

The English merchant ships which arrived here during this present year, having come in a heap to anchor at Taoen sha tsuy (or Hongkong) on the high seas, a number of sailors and others in consequence of this went ashore, got drunk and raised a disturbance, which led to one of our people being deprived of his life. Immediately afterwards a certain Wei yune commanded Elliot to produce the murderer for trial and execution. Who would have supposed it! Elliot in opposition refused to receive our edicts and obstinately declined to deliver up the murderer! previously to this the said Keun min foo had commanded the Wei is to (prosecute) to petition the Governor of Macao, to give Elliot orders that he should forthwith bind the murderer

* Captain Elliot denies that he paid the money as a bribe, he gave it as compensation to the widow and the orphans for the irreparable loss they had sustained.

† The mandarins very falsely accuse Captain Eliot of having harboured the murder to the Americans. As he said was, that, on the day of fatal affray, Americans and other foreigners were ashore as well as Englishmen.

and deliver him up to expiate his crime, but we have no document from the Keun min foo stating that he has complied with our demands. Anterior to this, we, the High Commissioner &c., had given orders in reference to the empty store ships which had discharged their opium, that they should forthwith get under weigh and return to their country, but they have already delayed upwards of two months, and scarcely eleven of their number have yet been reported to us as having passed the Ladrone islands! the rest of them still keep loitering and loafing about them! And further in respect to Dent and others whom we had received a positive Imperial edict to expel and drive back to their countries, hardly six individuals of them are yet reported to us as having set sail, the rest are either staying at Macao or living on board the foreign ships, neither the one nor the other has any intention to fix a date for returning home, they delay and put off in a manner which amounts to positive opposition to the laws of the land! Now we find that among crimes, none is greater than the crime of murder, and among the affairs of this world, none are of so much importance as those where human life is concerned. What reason is there why we should permit you to screen a murderer, and decline acting in a case of this kind! Respectfully searching the records, we find that during the reign of the Emperor Keaking, because that the outside foreigners showed a great deal of pride and perverseness and conducted themselves most unsubmissively, therefore an Imperial edict was with deep respect received, commanding that upon the receipt of this Imperial order, prohibit all entrance to Macao by water, and cut off all supplies of food &c. &c. Respect this! " and at this present moment as the circumstances of the case are somewhat similar, so ought we to act to work in a somewhat similar manner. But then this present affair has reference to the English foreigners alone, and as they persist in offering opposition to the laws, we cannot but show them the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire. As for the Portuguese dwelling at Macao, and the foreigners of every other Country whatever, they are not one hair's breadth concerned in the matter. As respects the Portuguese dwelling at Macao, let them make out a clear and distinct list of the rice flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks and other eatables that they require for their daily consumption, and the cooked victuals for the black slaves which done, let them petition the said Keun min foo and Tso tang who will examine the list and settle the quantum, and give a chop along with it to show the shop keepers and others that they may sell this amount to them the same as ever, to manifest our sympathy and compassion. As regards the English foreigners however, who dwell at Macao, the half of them are Captains and mates of ships, who when they come to Macao to live, by forming connections with the Portuguese and having constant intercourse with them, come to be as intimate as brothers. These said Englishmen who live at Macao, pay very handsome sums for the houses they rent, to serve as bait to their hook. The Portuguese covet the rents thus to be obtained, and utterly forget the preventions they ought to take against those robber—birds who wish to possess themselves of their nest! It is indeed hard to secure that these Portuguese will not supply (the English) with provisions, thus getting most egregiously duped and befooled by them, and it is also not certain that they may not find pleasure in giving them this assistance! We the High Commissioner, Viceroy, and Footyen, wish to subdue the hearts of these southern barbarians according to the principles of reason, and forasmuch looking up and embodying the goodness of the Great Emperor, fearing lest their hearts be at the extremity of fright and agitation, and feeling anxious about their simplicity and stupidity in allowing themselves to be duped, cannot but completely explain all these particulars and issue this edict that you (the inferior Mandarins) may immediately in your turn communicate the same (to the Portuguese,) &c. &c. &c.

Now we the said Keun min foo, Tso tang &c., having received this edict, we find that some English sailors having got drunk deprived one of our people of his life, and yet set themselves against the delivering up of the murderer; that the merchant vessels which had arrived, would neither enter the port the Bocca Tampoa, nor spread their sails and go back; that the empty opium ships which had delivered their opium, as well as those vagabond foreigners who had been expelled by a positive Imperial Edict to that effect, had not entirely returned to their country. In every instance have these English shown the utmost contempt and recklessness, which is equivalent to the putting of themselves by their own act out of the pale of the laws! Now we the said Keun min foo &c., have received a communication from His Excellency the Imperial Commissioner and the High Officers of the provincial government, commanding that a display be made of the stern majesty of the Celestial Empire in cutting off the provisions; but this view or intention is meant to apply to the English foreigners only, the Portuguese who dwell at Macao, as well as the foreigners of all other countries being in no ways concerned, in this matter, ought as formerly to remain quiet in the full enjoyment of their wont et odium cum dignitate. But as the English foreigners who are now residing at Macao, have firm friendship and constant intercourse with the Portuguese, it is hard to secure that these last may not clandestinely buy provisions for the English, and it is equally difficult to secure that our own shop keepers and common people, may not clandestinely supply them with the same.

Besides then, in accordance with the edict from the High Officers issuing our commands to the Portuguese Wei le to (or procurador) that he communicate the same to the Governor of Macao, that he in his turn command all the foreigners dwelling at Macao, that with one accord they permit not the English people to be supplied with the necessaries of life—in relation to the provender required for the daily sustenance of the Portuguese and all other foreigners dwelling in Macao, whether it be rice, flour, vegetables, fowls, ducks, fish, flesh, or other eatables, as also the food prepared and bought for the black slaves, let lists of the men, women, children, servants &c. be made out, and these lists passed to the procurador, who will sure them up and acquaint us the Keun min foo &c. with their total amount, who having examined the same and settled the quantum will conformably give orders to the said shopkeepers and others that they duly supply the same—besides all this, really fearing lest many of our native people and shopkeepers now dwelling in Macao, may not fully know our manner of acting, we hereby unite the circumstances, and issue this clear and perspicuous edict, and by these presents command that all the natives dwelling at Macao, shopkeepers &c. &c. make themselves thoroughly acquainted therewith. Do ye supply the Portuguese and all other foreigners (excepting the English) residing at Macao with the provisions and necessaries as specified in the duly examined and certified accounts; beyond this sell not one hairsbreadth more! which will lead to the, English receiving sustenance by stealth, and, other evils of like nature! In reference to the compradors, servants and others in the employment of Englishmen, we have already issued a proclamation that they be immediately driven forth. As for you shopkeepers, who have long been resident at Macao pursuing your business, you surely will carry out these views with all sincerity, but if you dare clandestinely to sell provisions (to the English) so soon as discovered, your persons will be seized and most vigorously punished, and your shops will be closed and sealed up! Most assurally not the slightest indulgence will be shown you! Regarding the said English foreigners, if they can repent of their crime and awake to a sense of their error and immediately deliver up the murderer, then we, the said Keun min foo &c. &c., will petition the high officers of Government that as an act of extraordinary goodness they extend mercy towards them, and removing these restrictions, permit them to transact business as before! As for you the said shopkeepers and native inhabitants of Macao, ye have all properties and lives! let each and every trouble and obey! A special proclamation!

Taoukwang, 19th year, 9th moon, 7th day.
Macao, 15th August, 1839.

Tsung, Keun min foo of Macao, Lan, Chief magistrate of Heang shan district, and Pang, Tso tang of Macao, conjointly issue this clear and perspicuous edict, to the end that all men may know and understand, viz.

Whereas it appears that during the present year, the merchant ships of the English nation which had arrived here, went in a flock, and one another at Tsoom sha tsuy on the ocean's surface (or the high seas), and that they could not on arrival cause the port of Whampoa, which led to a mart or of their sailors, and others, going a shore and getting drunk, when they raised a disturbance, which ended in depriving one of our people of his life!

Now the High officers of Government have already communicated their orders that a Wei yuen to Elliot, commanding him forthwith to deliver up the murderer for trial and punishment. But who would have supposed it! Elliot has now for a long time refused to deliver up the murderer, and in reference to the empty Company ships which were ordered to get under weigh and return home, it appears that hardly a dozen of them have yet been reported as having passed the Ladrones! and in so far as regards Dent and the other foreigners whom we had received a special Imperial Edict to expel and send back to their countries those who have been only reported to us as having gone home, scarce amount to six individuals! the remainder of the Opium store ships, and the foreign vagabonds still keep loitering here and loafing about them the same as ever! In every instance have delay and procrastination been persisted in, which amounts in fact to a determined opposition to the laws! and therefore it is that the high officers feeling indignant thereat, have resolved to show them the majestic severity of the Celestial Empire, and for us much without discriminating between those who remain on ship board, or those who dwell at Macao, we shall trust them in the same way by utterly cutting off their provisions, and in other respects treating them with increased rigor. Besides the Portuguese, and all other foreigners of different countries now dwelling at Macao, whom this affair does not at all concern, and whom we permit to be supplied with their accustomed necessaries, in order to make a distinction, and for this and now issue another special proclamation, besides these, we find that the English foreigners depend entirely upon compradores, servants, chinese traitors and others of that ilk for the supply of their food, who buy the same from native shops and stores, and give it to the said Englishmen. Having now received the commands of the high officers of the provincial Government to cut off the supply of provisions to the English, and to execute the same most rigorously, we ought on the instant to have seized these said compradores, servants (or "sha wan") and chinese traitors and calling out their names one by one, a reign them to examination and severe punishment! out of pure indulgence, however, we first issue this clear and intelligible proclamation before hand, that the comprad re, servants, chinese traitors and others in the service of the English foreigners whether on ship board or ashore, may all know hereby, that we have limited the term of THREE days within the which they must return to their homes and follow after some other occupation. If they dare to delay or still render services (to the said English) most certainly they will be apprehended and punished with the utmost rigor of law! Assuredly we shall show no indulgence! Tremble and beware! Do not oppose! A special edict!

MARITIME TRADE OF CHINA.—The innumerable vessels, that cover the Chinese sea speak of themselves in favor of this branch of industry, and we shall now give a few details of this commerce.

Chih le, Shan tung and Leaou tung. These are the northern Provinces and their productions very much resemble those of Europe. The least favored of all is Chih le, which has only one harbour of any note, that of Tien tsin, but being the emporium of the Capital, it enjoys great advantages. The genius of the natives however is by no means enterprising, they are almost entirely ignorant of navigation, and their most distant voyages do not extend beyond Leaou tung and Shan tung. Their craft is very clumsy, almost primeval, small and paltry. With these they coast along close in shore, quite in the ancient fashion, coming at anchor during the night, if they can fetch a safe place, and waiting for a fair wind to avoid the trouble of tacking. It is very extraordinary that they never imitate the models of their countrymen from the south or the central part of the Empire, which crowd in the Pe ho. Jealousy perhaps on the part of the supreme government forbids them to improve in naval architecture, as this would enable them to perform distant voyages and escape the wrath of Heaven's son

There are scarcely any articles for exportation, and this is another most powerful drawback upon the trade. The native mariners therefore resort to port merchandise from Tsoo tsin to the small places on the coast, and fetch provisions from Leaou tung. The whole however is so trifling, that it scarcely deserves any notice.

The inhabitants of Shan tung being in possession of many excellent harbours, shew a little more spirit, though they are notwithstanding rather loath to leave their favorite homes. Their craft is a little better than the former, but generally very small. Great numbers of agriculturists having left their native country for the opposite shores of Leaou tung, the intercourse between those two districts is very brisk. Hundreds of small vessels speed to those regions of plenty and during all seasons of the year, except the most rigorous part of the winter, they may be found cruising about. But this is the whole sum of their enterprize, and besides coasting and occasionally going to Tsoo tsin, they never move towards the south. Had it depended on the countrymen of Confucius to reach the squares and discover the islands of the Indian Archipelago, they would until this very day have remained unknown to the world. Speak to a Shan tung sailor about going upon a trip of a month's duration, and he imagines, that it is repairing to the fiery regions of Sahara or the icefields of Siberia. No sum of money would tempt him to go beyond the confines of the yellow river. We happened once to meet a poor fellow who had been cast away towards the south and he was greatly surprised, that the world was actually so large, and that men could live under a climate of eternal summer.

The northern harbour T ng shoo is far found, but almost entirely occupied with the native trade. Kwantoon, to the south, is a resort of junks from different parts of the Empire, but rather a poor place. There is a variety of stuffs, much resembling grass cloth, manufactured, which with various other articles makes up the investment to Leaou tung. The people there confine themselves exclusively to agriculture and willingly give their produce in exchange. The capital employed in this traffic is by no means considerable, but its speedy return enables the merchant to realize good profit. It will be scarcely credible, that the coast of Keaou, which is so very near, that with a fair wind a vessel may reach it in 36 hours, is never visited by the Shantung men. We believe, that this is the only instance of two countries considerably advanced in civilization, refusing to hold mercantile intercourse with each other. A woeful proof how far a crushing policy can damp the ardour of a commercial nation. Most of the maritime ports of this province are almost totally devoid of timber. Now to Keaou the Chinese might get it for the mere cutting. There are, nevertheless, islands along the coast abounding with primeval forests, where perhaps the axe was never busy; but no Chinese dares to go thither, for fear of his Emperor or the K ng of the land. Whenever an unfortunate vessel loses its course and approaches the coast, it is instantly driven away, and not allowed to loiter about. Laws and regulations and the wish of the ruler of Keaou to monopolize all the trade through his Ambassador at Peking and on the frontiers, are the principal reasons for this extraordinary system of commercial antipathy.

Leaou tung has no maritime trade of its own, but rich in its own resources waits the arrival of foreign craft. The shallowness if its harbours, and the hidden dangers of the coast prove a great drawback upon navigation, yet the trade with every maritime province is extremely brisk, and the gulph is covered with fleets destined for its emporiums.

Along the whole coast of Kirin, a very extensive province up to the Hih lung kung, there is neither harbour, so far as our knowledge extends, nor trade in any shape. The fear of using the rich furs and the valuable ginseng of this district smuggled, suggested perhaps to the Chinese court the precaution of never permitting there a maritime trade. The country is moreover very scantily inhabited, and there are no industrious sons of Han settled to give vigor to the commerce.

We quote here a remark of a Chinese Admiral respecting the western trade—He says: "The pirates range all along the coast, but go not beyond the promontory of Shan ung, because the commerce is there so trifling as to make it scarcely worth their while to visit those quarters." This was written more than one hundred years ago. Since then things have materially changed. The port of Tsoo tsin was then visited by a few solitary vessels, and the principal articles were sent through the interior. But Keun kung afforded greater facilities to this traffic by reducing the duties on merchandize, and thus encouraging the junks from Canton and Fochoen to repair to the port. It has even grown during the last twenty years, and is now one of the most flourishing and profitable branches of industry. Whosoever can reach Tsoo tsin in safety, makes sure of gain; but the voyage is in the estimation of the Chinese beset with perils. Having reached certain points, they refuse to steer, unless the wind favors from the right quarter, and they would rather forfeit solid advantages, than steer on an unsteady day. Notwithstanding all these precautions however, and what can be more prudent than to remain fast, a great number of vessels are lost, whilst others are being able to reach the port in due season, bear away for one of the southern ports.

MACAO NEWS. The officers here lately been very active to find out the ruffians that robbed the pawnbroker's shop. Several hundred soldiers have also been dispatched to the village where the robbery took place in order to give weight to these investigations. There are at present numbers of men, who having been thrown out of employ by the late charges, prowl about at sea and land and commit the most atrocious acts.

CANTON.—A boat containing several ten thousands of taels of tribute was dispatched some days ago to the Capital. In the neighbourhood of Hwoychow a band of daring highwaymen attacked her and robbed the vessel of every farthing.

We have a file of the Canton Court circular before us which gives a short account of the movements and actions of the Mandarins. There are several reports sent in to the Governor, announcing the surrender of opium pipes and other paraphernalia, and also of some catties of opium. It seems to be quite fashionable to present these trophies of public opinion over to execute habits to the supreme courts. Six opium smugglers have been apprehended and delivered over to a court of justice.

The plan of giving mutual pledges to put down opium smoking, is carried into effect throughout the district. Every five families become responsible for each other and are to be conjointly punished for the slightest neglect In the hall of every dwelling hangs a small tablet on which the names of one or two persons are written and the householder mentioned. Large red papers are stuck up from street to street giving a short account of the measures adopted against the prevailing vice by the supreme Government. So far this is very well, but when villains wreak their vengeance upon the innocent, and private malice as well as thirst after gain are quenched by appealing to this new law, it will become a source of ever flowing misery. Like many good customs, this also, we fear, will fall into disuse and be forgotten as soon as the law of enforcement has passed into oblivion.

We quite misapprehend the disappearing voice of the late merchants at Canton in the Indian news papers. Almost all reason from actions which are prohibited without government, and show the people are wrong, the merchants can not be otherwise than fallacious. There are wrongs to be redressed on both sides, and this being the case, the inference drawn is, that western Governments have no right to meddle with these affairs. Is it then not a sacred duty on the part of every civilized nation to put measures on an honorable footing and to arrest ruin in its course? If this be against the transcendental laws, it would be much better, that all diplomatic relations should at once cease. Had a tenth of the affairs that took place at Canton happened at Constantinople, all Europe would have risen in vigorous union such an usurpation of arbitrary right. But China must be defended, in order to perpetrate all the crimes that have existed for more than a century, in the most aggravated form. Under present circumstances we have not to deal with theoretical questions but of commercial simple matters of fact, and then ask all editors of journals whether they in conscience can plead in favor of a horrible system, which Chinese absurdity and foreign cupidity have poised upon this commerce.—There is at present no Anglo Chinese trade, and there can be no honorable commerce in future under the system to totally changed. Are the lives of the hundreds to be put in jeopardy, and is an immense capital to be placed at the mercy of every Mandarin who wishes to bring on a quarrel? We ask whether no large a revenue as the present yields, in entirety is to given up, or to be abandoned the policy of any Governor at Canton who may be pleased to stop the trade, whenever his interests dictate such course. Shall the Hong system be continued, debts upon debts be accumulated, and the foreign community be made a scapegoat for every thing? Shall all the evils that have entailed grow worse with every month? If so, may then the blood of many thousands of poor natives, who are now without rice, drown the voice of men who dare to advocate the rights of their oppressors, may the misery and misery which have been the consequence of rebellion in the time of Lin, be brought forward as a proof, that though England has something to gain from a salutary change, China will reap still more substantial benefits.—The interests of India, of the British manufacturers, of the English public at large—of the United States—of Holland—and probably of China, must imperiously demand proper and reasonable arrangements in the commercial relations; and common sense and humanity by the same token; so that we may see these disastrous wars upon the property of a dignified inoffensive people?

PENANG.—There are again three executions occurred by the members of the Board of Revenue against the Lieutenant Governors of Singapore, Malacca, and Penang, on account of their remaining so long in arrears of large sums due to the treasury. To make it still worse, these gentlemen have not all shame and year after year defer payment.

CHUSAN.—On the 10th of June two foreigners in a wretched plight were driven on the shores of this island. They were the sole in a raft, barefooted in a short garment, and their chief sustenance nothing but a water jar. The magistrate on examining them, could not make out what they possibly could be, and it was pronounced that they might be people from Korea. Upon further investigations it was ascertained that they were fishermen from the kingdom of Hainan? (kingdom of the southern sea—Insects?) who had been driven hither by storms of weather. The authorities of Fokien are charged with transporting them again to their homes.

MACAO.—The Keun min foo has published an order forbidding the outmanking people to leave their homes for foreign countries and to meet ships in the outer seas. This restriction seems to be at variance with the law that indulgently permits flowery natives to repair to other countries under the promise of returning after a number of years.

SIAM.—More than one thousand Chinamen, both opium smokers and dealers have been taken up by government, and are sent in chains to repair and build the city wall. These proceedings will in the future, not to some advantage and are the cause of giving greater stability to government by rendering the palace with an impregnable wall. The poor fellows do not receive either food nor wages and must procure it themselves. A great number of troops have been sent to the vessels destined for China to Senka where a rebellion had broken out.

ART. IV. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia; government of Vargas, Cruzalegui, Arriola, Zabalburu, Bustamente, marqu's of Torre-Campo, &c. (Continued from Vol. VII. page 541) and from Canton Press No. 31. 6th April.

THE year after De Lan's death (1858), the very illustrious don Juan de Vargas Hurtado arrived, and assumed the reins of the colonial government. Like many of his predecessors, his first public acts were well-directed and popular. The restoration of ruined edifices, the protection and extension of commerce, &c., afforded him ample and useful occupation. But ere long, the gains of this commerce began to work on the public spirit of the governor, and as this was the very point whereon the citizens were most sensitive, they soon came to ill terms with each other.

We turn aside from the detail of these growing dissensions, to notice a fact or a statement, contradictions. We read that the conquest of Mindoro, this population, had been represented to the "council of the Indies," as capable of being made a valuable appendage to the colony. By their order, a new survey was now made, and with considerable success, to reduce and civilize it. Its interior was represented by the leading party, as still retaining the silver gained, negro-population; while on the coasts, men were found of complexions so dark, as to induce the supposition, that they were of Chinese or Japanese descent. The statement, we wish it to notice, is that one of the Mindoro tribes actually had tails. This fact, as our Augustine authority, is so well attested, that I cannot doubt it, though I suppose it to have been an individual singularity, propagated through a race. This singularity, valuable as it might have been to lord Monboddo, seems to have been a very unfortunate thing to the parties chiefly concerned. It introduced sadly with their dignity and comfort, when sitting down. Under the care of the Recollect fathers, who were transferred hither by a Dominican intrigue from the provinces of Zambales, these poor native were gradually led to cast off the works of darkness, and cease, perhaps, to it is that no more is said in the sequel of their tails.

We are again upon a period, when the colonial annals present an unrelieved map of dissensions; the secular and ecclesiastical authorities, contesting with each other, and their satellites coming to blows among themselves. The bold reforms of the archbishop Pardo were the beginning of these troubles, which seem (at least to the reader of the original record,) never to have an end. Information had been laid before him, that the Jesuit order in the colony, were engaged in commerce, contrary to papal decree. One hundred and fifty bales of goods, on board the Santa Rosa, were pointed out to him as the property of the fathers of the Company, and sequestrated by command of the archbishop. The Jesuits, supported by the Audiencia, resisted the ecclesiastical mandate, and at once, the archiepiscopal innovator was obliged to yield. Other occasions of strife did not fail to follow, and at length the prelate's bearing became so irritating to the civil functionaries, that they unanimously agreed to send him into exile. In pursuance of his resolution, the archbishop was arrested in his palace, in March, 1683, and transported to Linayen. This deportation of the head of the church seeming, to certain of the Dominican clergy, unjust, and they abstaining from any intercourse with its authors, the dominant party turned its resentment upon them also, and sent them after the archbishop. These rash proceedings of Vargas and his associates, were cut short in April, 1684, by the arrival of a new governor, the admiral don Gabriel de Cruzalegui y Arriola. The archbishop was forthwith recalled, and received both a cathedral triumphant. Unhappily, he did not get the victory over his own spiritual evil feelings, but proceeded without delay to bring his late persecutors to public confession and penance. Most of them submitted, but Vargas found such a load of humiliation, laid upon him, that he rebelled, and claimed exemption, under the immunities of the military order. A legal process of extraordinary obstinacy ensued, running through four whole years, and filling twenty large volumes. This period of incessant litigation was further marked by a succession of public disasters. The vessels put back in distress; the harvests failed and epidemic diseases prevailed extensively.

At length in 1687, a judge arrived from Mexico, commissioned to decide on the matter of Vargas and his associates. These last, however, had already disappeared from the scene, and Vargas went alone into exile. The clerical opponents of the archbishop now felt his severity, and then, the venerable prelate, having tasted the sweets of revenge to the full, departed this life aged 78, in December, 1689.

His superior in the civil administration, the timid and feud-disliking admiral, had decreased some months before; and in the following year, Vargas died also. From the courts, where they had up, acted a little while before, as accusers and judges of each other, they were thus transferred to quick succession to the tribunal of infinite justice.

The colonial administration had hardly been a year in the hands of Don Alonso de Avila fuertes, when he was superseded (1690), by don Fausto Cruzally Gon,ora. This new governor was a zealous economist, and proceeded, soon after his arrival, to the recovery of large sums due the colonial chest, by various residents. In carrying out his plans of retrenchment, he fell some what into the extremes of more modern economists. The pay of the military, for instance, was reduced so low, that at a later day, when one of his successors examined into these matters, it was found that the soldiers often stood sentry—shirtless and barefoot,—a sort of uniform, for his Catholic majesty's service, which was considered rather too much à la Gougore

It was, however a time when retrenchment became the colony. The last galleon owned in the islands, had just been lost on one of the Marianas. Great exertions were made to build one of extraordinary size, and in nine months she was ready for the voyage to Mexico. A cargo of immense value was laden on the ill fated vessel, but she had scarcely left the port, when a furious gale drove her on the island of Luhop, where she was totally lost, and 400 of the crew perished. A third galleon followed (in 1693), and was never after heard of.

We must here turn back a few years, to notice for a moment the progress of depopulation in the Marianas. As early as 1681, those islands had again become the scene of new exposures. The Spanish force at Guam, was at that time weakened by the absence of a detachment on a campaign of civil and spiritual reduction, among the northern islands. The natives of Guam seized the occasion to revolt, and a large number of the Spanish residents fell under the rude arms of the insurgents, before their comrades returned, to save them from total annihilation. Quiet was again restored, but the colony came very near losing the victim of a plot formed by a crew of runaway convicts from Mexico, in 1686. This danger escaped, new troubles arose with the aborigines; for the grounds of which, it was determined to concentrate the native population on the chief island. This policy was henceforth pursued, and the result was, as has been already remarked, that island after island was disappeopled, and the Marianas tribe was reduced to about 5 00, collected on Guam and Rota.

The Philippine mission had received a strong reinforcement, of sixty Augustine and thirty-eight Dominican friars, in 1680, but the archiepiscopal chair remained vacant seven years longer. In September, 1687, don Diego Camacho arrived, and resumed the unfortunate work of his great spirit with his predecessor Pardo. He early involved himself in difficulties with his clergy, by requiring them to submit to visitations, reexaminations, &c. The united opposition of the regular clergy rendered his efforts, for the time, ineffectual. He decided were they on this point, that when they had occasion, soon after, to resort to the ecclesiastical tribunals, for protection against a governmental inquiry into the titles by which they held their lands, and the archbishop pledged his aid on condition of their submission to visit, they one and all rejected his gratuitous. It is not our province to decide on the point at issue between them. It is worth noticing, however, as a matter of fact, that the Catholic missions in China, had been already disturbed again and again by like difficulties. In 1684, and 1686, for instance, almost all the missions there had been thrown into confusion, by decrees requiring the regular clergy to take off its of subjection to the papal vicars. And now, in the Philippines, when Camacho pressed his demands to extremities, declaring the churches of the recusant clergy vacant, the immediate result was, that the suburban parishes, and a hundred other parties, were deprived of their parochial teachers. These consequences compelled the archbishop to pause, and after a time, to suffer the deprived clergy to return to their altars. The contest was not, however, ended, though we spare to register the long details, which fill almost the whole of the 8th volume of our authority. At length, when these dissensions had gone on to public encounters in the streets, the interference of the governor became necessary, and the whole subject was referred to the decision of his most Catholic majesty. The royal reply of May, 1700, was an unqualified approval of the course of the archbishop, and the audiencia was required to aid him, in enforcing the submission of the regular clergy.

The difficult post of mediator between these contending parties, continued to be held by governor Cruzat, until September, 1700. Don Domingo Zabalburu y Echeverri, who had been named governor six years before, then arrived, and the worthy economist and peacemaker had the double pleasure of resigning his mediatorship, and of handing over a well-filled treasury.

Several years of quiet now intervened, and from such scanty notices as our authority bestows, it may be inferred, that the Philippine commerce was again flourishing. The war between Spain and England does not appear to have affected it much, the only notice taken of it, being the escape of the galleon of 1704, after a sharp contest with an English frigate.

The administration of Zabalburu was now drawing to a natural and quiet close, when unhappily, the celebrated father De Tournon, on his way to China as visitor general of the papal missions, touched at Manila. He immediately showed his extreme punctiliousness, and the governor, aware probably of the danger of quarreling with churchmen, yielded to his protensions, although he showed no authority or requester from the council of the Indies. Not content with this minor triumph, De Tournon proceeded to assume ecclesiastical authority in the Philippines, and even made some alteration in the terms of one of the royal charities.

When the account of these submissions, reluctant as they were, went home to Spain, it drew out a severe censure on the governor and his elders. Zabalburu was deprived of his office, and ordered back to Mexico. The members of the Audiencia were fined and otherwise punished. The archbishop too was made to suffer by a removal to the see of Guadalajara, and prohibited further correspondence with Manila. It was ordered asap, that no person assuming ecclesiastical authority, be received as such in the colonies, unless he exhibited the royal receipt, and thus being refused, his reception was to be confined to a mere discharge of the claims of humanity.

These severe visitations seem to have been provoked by the fact, that De Tournon was a meddling foreigner, and the Spanish court had no mind to brook interference from such a quarter. This jealousy of foreign intervention was clearly shown, in the restoration of the college, with whose affairs De Tournon had meddled, to its old foundation, and the strict limitation of privileges in future to Spanish students.*

After the departure of De Tournon, we are told, "that the commonwealth, affected by many and long-continued trials, betook itself to prayer and penitence. After many public confessions, a royal ordinance of no ordinary importance, was published throughout the islands. Divine Providence, it said, had the republic with the safe arrival of the galleon, with a great quantity of silver; and further in 1709, with the appearance of a new archbishop, Fr F. de la Cuesta.†"

I became the duty of this prelate to put in force the right of visitation, so fully asserted by the late appeal to Madrid, but which still lay unexercised. But De la Cuesta finding that the opposition of the regular clergy continued unabated, consented to a second reference of the question to court, where, on further deliberation, the arch episcopal powers received considerable limitation.‡

CONFUCIUS AND THE CHILD.

From the Asiatic Journal for March.

The following popular tale is not a prelude to any more extensive work, but is merely designed for the use of juvenile readers. Like our more mature, it is the vehicle of instructions on several points of common belief, and is therefore written in an easy and familiar style. The admonitions of the child in his replies is, of course, overdrawn, yet the deference to propriety in receiving correct principles of reading and writing is not there but the example to their children. The characteristics of mind, too, are more particularly expressed in the following tale, and resemble the familiar household words of every hearth, than in the studied efforts of the poet or the dramatist. As such, the European reader will regard it, and though he may be inclined to simplify or to better stories, more witty or more touching, he will appreciate the value of the difference if there. It is consequently placed before him as a specimen of Chinese style and feeling, and as a link in the universal chain of traditions of the human race, pending a discussion which is now before the public, and which, we finally flatter ourselves to the Englishman, will be of considerable interest.

Kungtsze§ was promulgating his doctrines in the west of the kingdom of Loo, when one day he went out in his cart along with his followers for an airing, and met upon the road several little boys at play, and among them one who did not join in the game. The sage, to tag his ear, asked him, "How happens it that you are the only one who does not play?" "Pray excuse me," replied the child; "my clothes are rent and torn; besides, I should only disgrace my father and mother by getting into fights and squabbles, in which there is trouble without any merit; what good is it then? This is the reason I do not play." He directly sat down, took some straw in his hand, and began to build a city. "Confucius, chiding him, said, "Why do you not try to get out of the way of the cart?" "Prom time of old until now," replied the child, "carts have got out of the way of cities—not cities removed for carts." The sage, who was on the point of moving his car, descended from it and exclaimed, "Your years are but few, but how come you to be so artful?" "A child at three years," said the boy, "separates from his father and mother; a boy at the age of three days ranges over ditch and field; a fish three days old roams the river and the lake. This is their natural disposition; can you call it artful?" "Where do you dwell?" rejoined Confucius; "what is your name, surname, and appellation?" "The village of Prih," said the boy, "is my humble birth-place. I am named and surnamed Heaugtu, and have no appellation." "I should like you to take a stroll with me. Are you willing?" said the sage. "At home I have a respected father, whom it is my duty to serve, an affectionate mother, whom I must obey, delicate younger brethren, whom I must instruct, and learned tutors, with whom I must study. What moments, then, have I to ramble with you?" replied the child. "In my car," said Confucius, "are thirty-two chesnuts; will you play with me?" "When the emperor," said the child, "lives after all within the four seas is not regulated; when ministers are fond of play, public business is obstructed; when literati are given to play, studies and pursuits are neglected; when inferiors play, household plans are deranged; when slaves are fond of play, they must be lashed; when husbandmen play, ploughing and seed time are lost; it is, therefore, improper to play." "I should regulate and levellize with you the empire," said Confucius. "What do you say?" "The empire," rejoined the boy, "cannot be levelled. There are towering mountains—there are streams and lakes. If you level the mountains, the birds and beasts cannot find suitable dwellings; if you dam up the streams and the lakes, fishes and tortoises could not go about; if you put aside nobles and princes, the people would be thrown into confusion; were you to destroy sheers, where would be your sage?" "Heaven is not uniform, how can it be levelled?" "Do you know," rejoined Confucius, "what fire has no smoke, what water no fish, what hill no stone, what tree no branch, what man no wife, what wife no husband, what cow no bull, what horses no foal, what cock no hen, what hen no cock, what is a sage, what is a villain, what is not enough, what is too much, what city has no moat, and what moat no shallows?" "The fire of a fire-fly," replied the child, "has no fire; the water of a well has no fish; a mud-hill§ no stones; a dead tree§ no branch; an old child-man§ has no wife; a jade lady§ no husband; an earth-bullock§ no milk; the gentle-horse§§ no foal; the hen-hawg no female; the key to an oath; a virtuous man in a prison (or sage?); a virtuous man in society; the end of a day is not enough; the day is not enough; Mang-ching has not sufficient; inferiors have no appellations." "Do you know," continued Confucius, "what is the controlling power of heaven and earth, the end and consummement of Yin and Yang††, what is to be right, what is to be left, what is an outer garment, what is an inner one, what is the father, what is the mother, what is the husband, what is the wife, whence the wind blows, where the rain commences, the cycle of the year and day set up from, what is the rebuking extent of heaven and earth?" "How I ever miss," said the child sir, "eighty-one; this is the accumulating power of heaven and earth; eight times nine are seventy-two; this is the beginning and end of Yin and Yang; heaven is the father; earth the mother; the sun the husband; the moon the wife; the sun is the left; the planet the west; the rainbow the outer garment; the thunder the inner one; winds regulate the four seasons; rain comes from the heaven above; clouds from the hills; dew from the earth; heaven and earth's calculations extend to infinity, east, north, south, and west have positions of name." "For this," said Confucius, "that father and mother are relations; are husband and wife relations?" "Father and mother are the nearest relations," replied the boy; "I had husband and wife are not relations." "Should a husband and wife not be relations?" "Should a husband and wife be spirits§§ when dead, are buried together. How known is that they are not relations?" "When man is born," replied the boy, "he has no wife, as a cow no wife; when the wheels have been reunlocked, they can be greased; a virtuous woman should marry a man of worth. A two-roomed house, with its pillars, its doors, windows, its six matters, is better than the nine-storied tower; the well-bred daughter of the same house is the chaste wife of the same house; the wife of the same house is the affection for parents in-law." Confucius, sighing, said, "Exceeded! excellent!" The boy then said to Confucius, "I have a few questions to ask of you, which I should like respectively answered, and hope to receive the information which I require. I hope you will not refuse!" Why, then," continued the boy, "do birds swim; do the wild geese crowd; does the fish go into its recesses in winter?" Confucius replied the same. "Most lessons have square feet; the solid grass reeds, because they have long necks; the fir tree is green in winter, because it has a strong heart." "Sir," replied the boy; "fish and tortoises swim; have they square feet? Tough grass; have they long necks? The evident baptism is green in winter; has it a strong heart? How many cows constituted the chief? are there in it a herd of cattle? how many goats in the expanse of heaven?" Confucius replied, "Why you are such earth and hearers. What is the use of talking about such things? you should only inquire about that which is before our eyes." "If this is all," replied the boy, "how many hairs are there in an eyebrow?" Confucius smiled, and gave no answer; looking towards his followers, he said, "The next generation will be astonishing. I perceive, about that one to come will excel the present!" He then ascended his car, and moved on.

He who despises the tender years of an intelligent child, shows that he has more talent and wit than a man; for in talking of the object of nature there is no limit to Clearly the old sage manifested his deficiency. [subjects.

Calcutta.

(From the Englishman, June 27)

Within the last few days we have received several communications from our friends with the Army of Indus. These letters bear different dates and come from different divisions of the Army, some being from Candahar and some from Quota. There is however a painful resemblance in their contents; —they all speak of a fine army sadly broken up, if not nearly ruined, by its tedious march through a country, the natural difficulties of which were almost unknown, or have been imperfectly described by those travellers, on whose accounts the Govern-

* The course of De Tournon, after leaving Manila, belongs to another history. It is sufficient to add, that he carried over to China the same lofty demands, and that the regular clergy there soon became united in opposing him. He next ran foul of the Board of Rites and the emperor Kanghe, by whose decree, he was compelled to retire to Macao, and exile. Roughly treated even by the Portuguese government, he fired on in his place of banishment under many humiliations, and, at length died; an example of the truth, that whosoever exalteth himself, shall be abased.

† Under date of 1706, our authority mentions, in noticing the death of the Jesuit father P. I. Duvla, that he was the introducer of the cocoa plant into the Philippines. It still flourishes in the colony, yielding a heavy net pier only to that of Soconoco.

‡ Two implies mud-earth, without stones. We say a mud-hen and a mud-hill.

§ Kan hoo, a rotten tree. It may be a particular species.

§ Yuh-fee, a jade lady. No explanation in Morrison's Dictionary: not a singular defect. It perhaps implies some supernatural being.

§ Tse-nan. No explanation again. The ebony cow is the buffalo, 'water-cow.'

§§ The he-ma, grain or paddy horse.

†† The male and female principles of nature—motion and rest, light and shade.

ment relied. Looking at the facts accumulated by our correspondents, we should say, that, had our army been opposed by a small and determined force, it could scarcely have made its way through the first pass—the Bolan,—and certainly could not have hoped to have got through that of Kojuck. But Fortune smiled on the expedition, and in addition to the advantage of effecting its objects (as yet) without bloodshed, it has satisfactorily ascertained for us that nothing is ever to be apprehended from any force that may hereafter dream of invading India by the route now always providing that we and our allies fight those obstacles to its progress which the Ruler Sirdars so singularly omitted to oppose to our advance.

As a proof of the great difficulties which the Army has had to encounter, we offer, on excellent authority, the following statement of the condition in which some of the corps were upon their arrival at Candahar, and we leave our readers to guess in what a state they will be when the marches to Girisk and Cabul have been accomplished:

H. M's 16th Lancers.—About fifty men without horses. The cattle generally in wretched condition

2nd Light Cavalry.—Quite unfit for service 53 horses died in one day!

3rd Light Cavalry.—Still in good order.

European Horse Artillery.—The cattle in the worst condition.

N.-W. Provinces Troop of Horse Artillery.—In tolerable order.

Camel Battery.—In serviceable order, but the cattle evidently sinking under starvation and hard work.

H. M's 2d Light Infantry.—400 men only fit for duty. 70 sick.

European Regiment.—400 men fit for duty. About 70 sick.

16th Regt. N. I. About 40 men sick in each corps.

37th Regt. N. I. and all suffering from hard work,

4th Regt. N. I. no food and bad water.

So much has been said about the prices of grain, the climate, and productions of the country, that we need not enter into further descriptions here; but content ourselves with an extract from the letter of an officer of Artillery mentioning a few facts, which, though not very important, are new, and may be turned to account hereafter:

Candahar 17th April.—Sepoys receive one pound of ata, and other natives half pound daily. Compensations are given for ata not issued, and a grass cutter here costs Government about 25 rupees a month. A sepoy from 72 to 74. The ex ra expence averages 2 lacs per diem. Our servants greedily purchase ata at two seers per rupee, when any is procurable, and I frequently see it sold at one rupee per seer.

The climate of this country varies according to your position in it. At the Khojuck Pass the air was delightfully cool. Here, only eighteen miles from the top of the range, we have decided hot winds.

The Persians are said to be in Herat as allies of Kamran. Our plan is to trust them there. No army will ever cross this country in any condition to meet us beyond the passes. Here is our small force without seeing an enemy, quite hors de combat owing to natural obstacles. We cannot go to Herat. We have neither legs nor provisions to take us there.

The stages from the Khojuck Pass to this place are thus:

1. Dundi Goolai	14 miles	road pretty easy—water cut off by the enemy—great distress for it in camp.
2. Uttela	10 miles	road capital—water cut off as yesterday.
3. Melamanda	13 miles	road execrable and most trying to cattle—water execrable and abundant.
4. Near Leila Mujnow	15½ miles	road execrable—Ord river—water slightly brackish.
5. Deh Hadje	8 miles	road excellent—water plentiful—and good.
6. Near Koos shaub	13 miles	water excellent and plentiful—country covered with crops in full ear—road excellent.
7. Kandahar	5 miles,	From Quetta to the camp at Chummun on this side the Khojuck Pass is about 70 miles—so that the distance from Quetta to Khandahar is very close upon 150 instead of 112, as our best information stated. But this whole campaign has been a Tragi Comedy of errors, and has cost about one-third more than it should have done had not Government been grossly deceived on every material point connected with it. * * * * *. Khandahar is in a fine valley; town a regular oblong, about 1½ by ¾ mile—surrounded by orchards. Grain is still very dear, only 4 seers per rupee as yet procurable. There is, however, plenty of it and Government must purchase at any price and sell at 5 seers.' Sing. Free Press 25th July.
Total	72½ miles.

THE FIXING OF IMAGES FORMED AT THE FOCUS OF A CAMERA OBSCURA.—Extracted from the Compte Rendu, of January 7th. M. Arago proceeded to give the Academy a general idea of the splendid discovery of M. Daguerre, of which the public have yet had but a very imperfect idea.

Every one, said M. Arago, knows the optical apparatus called the Camera Obscura. Every one knows with what nicety, with what accuracy of form and tone of colour objects can be produced on paper placed in the focus of the large lens, which constitutes the essential part of that instrument, and every one after admiring these images has felt regret at not being able to preserve them.

This regret will be felt no longer, M Daguerre has discovered a substance on which the optical image leaves a perfect impression; a substance on which every feature of the object is reproduced with an accuracy almost incredible. In fact it would be no exaggeration to say, the interior had discovered the means of fixing the images, if his method could produce the colours; but it should be at once stated, in order to undeceive the public, that the pictures of M. Daguerre as in a crayon drawing, or an engraving, or rather (which will be the best illustration) as in an aquatint drawing, show nothing more than white, black, and grey, nothing but light and shade, and half tints. In a word, in M. Daguerre's Camera, it is the light its If which reproduces the forms and proportions of exterior objects; and so that the relative intensity of the shades of the parts which are white, black, and grey, are exactly preserved while the half tints represent red, yellow, and green.

The process of M. Daguerre has not only brought forth the discovery of a substance more susceptible of the action of light than any before known to physicians and chemists; but M. Daguerre has also suspended that property at any given moment. His designs therefore, when finished may be exposed to the glare of the sun without undergoing any change.

The extreme susceptibility of the preparation which M. Daguerre employs, does not constitute the only feature in which his discovery differs from the imperfect attempts which have formerly been made to impress the mind or copies of a shadow on the surface of chlorate of silver. The substance which is white, is blackened by the light, the white parts of the image becoming black, while the black parts remain white. On the occasion used by M. Daguerre the object and its representation are exactly similar; the white corresponds to the white, the half tints to the half tints, and the black to the black.

M. Arago adverted to the advantages which this discovery of M. Daguerre would afford to travellers. The facility and accuracy which will result from the new process, for obtaining a sketch of men, of no much interest as the scenery, will increase their occupation. They will work less out of doors, but certainly more within.

The new discovery will probably furnish astronomers with an important assistant in their investigations. As the decline of the Academicians, M. Daguerre threw the image of the moon formed by a reflecting telescope on one of his prepared screens, and it evidently had the effect of white impressions.

In formerly making similar experiments with chlorate of silver, a commission of the Academy composed of Biot, Gay-Lussac, and Arago, produced no perceptible effect. Perhaps the exposure to the light was not sufficiently long. It appears that might be, M. Daguerre is the first who has produced a physical impression which can be acted on by the luminous rays of the moon.

M. Biot observed fully in the testimony of M. Arago as to the astonishing results obtained by M. Daguerre; having many times had the advantage of seeing them and of hearing M. Daguerre relate some of the numerous experiments which he has made on the optical susceptibility of the preparation of which it is composed. M. Biot thinks with M. Arago that it will furnish means equally new and desirable of studying the properties of one of the natural agents which it most concerns us to know, and which hitherto we have had so little means of testing by other proofs than our sensations. And he could not better express his opinion of this invention than by comparing it to artificial retina which has been now placed by M. Daguerre at the disposal of philosophers.

EXECUTION OF PIRATES AT ZANTE.—The sentence pronounced by the Criminal Court of Zante, and confirmed by the Supreme Council of Justice, upon the five pirates belonging to the Island of Cerigo was carried into effect on the 27th of November, in the Mole square of Zante, as directed by the sentence of the Court. And it is satisfactory for us to be able to state that the prisoners fully confessed their guilt, and met their fate with perfect resignation.

The crime for which these persons suffered was of a most atrocious nature

A boat arrived at Canea, * in Candia, commanded by Stamati Cocchissa, with four men, under the Greek flag, with a cargo of olive oil and pitch, on the 23d of August, 1837, which was sold for 20,000 dollars; but, unfortunately, as the vessel was in quarantine, this transaction took place in public. Having terminated his operations, the captain put to sea with the money on board for Prezza, on the evening of the 31st of August, with the same crew and five passengers. When the vessel had been a short time at sea, one of the passengers told the captain that he expected a boat to come off, for the purpose of smuggling some silk; to which he objected, but eventually consented to the views of the passenger. About four or five o'clock in the morning a boat approached the one that had left Canea, and four armed persons, who announced that they were Custom-house officers, came on board, and having made themselves masters of the vessel, bound the captain and his men and went in quest of the money. Having got possession of it, they proceeded to disable the oars, and then decided to confine the crew and passengers in the hold, and having forced them into it, they nailed down the hatch-way, and then opened the sides of the vessel. They then escaped with their booty; but the servant (whom they had not thought it necessary to bind, in consequence of his doing state, he having been severely beaten by them) succeeded in cutting the cords of the captain and of his unhappy companions, who, unable to save the drowning passengers, the vessel being in a sinking state, threw themselves into the sea. The pirate boat being not far off, the wounded servant swam towards it, and praying for mercy was inhumanly murdered by them, as were also two other sailors who were swimming away. The captain and one sailor, however, succeeded in reaching the shore, each being ignorant of the other's safety; when they successively presented themselves to the Consul and then to the municipality, and stated what had occurred, not being able to swear to more than that the pirate boat belonged to Cerijo, and that one of the party was the health-office guardian who had attended them during their quarantine. The prisoners were accordingly arrested, and as natives of Cerijo were demanded by her Majesty's Consul, and given up to the Ionian government, and, although they confessed their guilt in Candia, they denied all knowledge of the transaction upon their examination at Zante. The complicated nature of the whole business, and the wish of the tribunal to afford the unhappy sufferers every latitude in their defence, they wishing to bring witnesses from other countries, has led to delay in the termination of the process—but everything having been proceeded with in the most regular manner, they were at last condemned to suffer the penalty established by the penal code for piracy perpetrated with murder. Nautical Magazine.

BRITISH SEAMEN AS THEY ARE.—Sketches of Character, No. 2.

The hardships, wrongs, and neglect which our merchant seamen experience, should induce our merchants for their own sake, to do something more for them than to make long speeches at Exeter Hall, or the London Tavern. In too many cases these have been full of sound and fury, and professions which retard, rather than promote the improvement in the condition of the seamen. Mere words like these do incalculable mischief, for when gentlemen whose names stand high in the mercantile world profess to serve the seamen and gravely bring forward a series of resolutions to improve their condition, and then either neglect or totally abandon their project, (without assigning a reason,) they leave a bad impression, and had better have held their peace. Those whose hopes and expectations they have raised view any future results on their behalf with distrust.

A seaman applied lately at the Shipwrecked and Destitute Sailors' Asylum, and was relieved as far as the fund of the Institution would allow. His name is Jas Pearse, and he sailed from London to Quebec in the autumn of 1836, in the ship Christopher. On the passage home, timber laden, the ship became waterlogged and dismasted. She had a heavy deck cargo. The crew, mate, and five seamen were washed overboard and drowned. On the 5th December the ship capsized, and two more seamen were drowned. She drifted onwards tighted, and two others died on the deck from the effects of cold, hunger, and fatigue. At 4 A. M. the brig George Gordon of Liverpool bore down to the wreck, but could render no assistance as she had lost her boats in the gale. Between the time she first saw the brig and her coming alongside two more men died; the remaining four clung close to the ropes, and endeavoured to throw the ends on board, but they only caught those of the second mate and carpenter, the former was drowned and the latter saved. They made two other attempts to come alongside, but the sea was running so high they could not effect it. At night she bore up for England, leaving Pearse and another man on the wreck. The latter died during the night, and Pearse remained the only survivor. He got into the forecastle, where he remained suffering all the horrors of his forlorn situation until the 12th December, when the brig Persian, bound to Cork fell in with him. He was taken on board by Captain Blanchet, who treated him with the greatest kindness, and landed him at Kinsale on the 14th December. He remained there in the hospital three months and twelve days his hands and feet being frostbitten, and he lost the greater part of of one foot. Having a wife and four children residing at Deptford, he requested to be removed to his native country, and his request was complied with. On his arrival he applied to his owners for his wages, but as freight is the mother of wages, and as the vessel was lost, there was no freight earned, therefore there was nothing for him. They however presented the poor fellow with 2s. 6d. He then applied to the Thames Police Office where that worthy magistrate, Mr. Hallaran gave him relief from funds placed at his disposal for such purposes and which he regretted were nearly exhausted. After such suffering, nothing remained for poor Pearse, but the workhouse and the miserable pittance doled out by the Merchant Seamen's Corporation.

This unhappily is not a solitary case. It is to be hoped the time is not far distant when a permanent asylum will be found for our Merchant seamen, similar to that of Greenwich.

FOREIGN RELATIONS WITH CHINA.—Much has of late been said by the Indian Press on the late occurrences at Canton, and we are surprised to see that many of them, in censuring the Chief Superintendent's measures, deny also to the owners of the Opium forced from them by the Chinese into the hands of the Superintendent and by him delivered over, the right of compensation from the British Government. The reason upon which our contemporaries mostly ground their denial to the right of compensation, is that the Opium trade was illegal, and that as such the Chinese Government was perfectly justified in suppressing it by what means were available and that its proceedings to that effect being justifiable, the British Government cannot become answerable for the losses incurred by its subjects in the prosecution of an illegal trade.

But let us, before we weigh the justice of this opinion of the Indian Press, consider the manner in which this enormous trade was carried on. We grant that as far as the letter of the law goes, the introduction of Opium was strictly prohibited; but it must never be forgotten that foreigners trading to this empire have no means of appeal to the Supreme government; all they are allowed to know of the measures of the government as respects their treatment and trade, is, with a few exceptions of late, communicated to them through the Hong merchants, men who may be thought not to be impartial, having interests of their own to promote, which frequently are at variance with those of the foreign trade; besides, it is a notorious fact, that these hong merchants are looked upon by their own government, if not with suspicion, certainly with contempt, as is sufficiently proved by the ignominious treatment they are at all times made to suffer, so as even to extend to bodily chastisement. Accustomed, therefore, as foreigners have been, to receive the commands of the Chinese authorities, (the Provincial Government of Kwang tung) through a medium which that government itself takes every means to degrade, it cannot be a matter of wonder that little attention was paid to the many edicts against the Opium trade which from time to time were by the Hong merchants communicated to foreigners; some purporting to be Imperial rescripts and others emanating from the Government of the Province; the disregard to these edicts was naturally augmented by seeing that they had no effect whatever on the native population who carried on the smuggling of Opium as privately as ever, protected therein by the local authorities, from the highest officer to the lowest tide waiter, who made enormous profits from the bribes, or fees they received. The fees paid to the authorities for their connivance were reduced into a regular system and their rate periodically altered as best suited the views of the officers. The proceeds there is every reason to believe were distributed among the Government officers according to a certain scale, and they had long been accustomed to look upon the income arising from this trade as part of their regular perquisites of office, the salary of which is in almost all cases so very inconsiderable that to enable them to live and keep up the appearances of their station, mandarins must contrive to find out other means of obtaining money. The Opium trade protected by the Provincial Government, under whose regulations the whole foreign trade exclusively was thus carried on, subject, it is true, to temporary suspensions, which were generally caused to be caused by the inordinate capacity of mandarines in raising the fees; and it has now submitted in this manner upwards of 70 years increasing steadily, until it grew to such enormous extent, that it at last has roused all the energies of the Government to suppress it. There being be little doubt that it tended materially to impoverish the empire, and to demoralize the people.

By many the Opium-trade has been called one of smuggling, and the foreign importers smugglers, but we have already shewn that it enjoyed the protection of the local Government, which is the only Chinese authority with whom foreign merchants can come in contact, and as to the foreign importers being smugglers it is well known that this trade was carried on, as regards orders for delivery outside and payment, as openly as any other. Opium orders on Lintin, we considered good commercial security, and were as negotiable as any Government paper in Europe. The shroffs, or native bankers advanced on them without hesitation, nor was remittance from India to China deemed more safe than in the shape either of the drug itself, or by bills hypothecation. The manner also in which the trade was carried on was not exceeding at Whampoa and that was of very recent growth) not exactly smuggling. The Opium store ships lay, in what the Chinese call the outer waters; foreigners were in no shape introduced the Opium into the country; they merely delivered the drug to Chinese boatmen who came alongside their ship, producing an order for the quantity they had purchased. It was the Chinese who introduced it into the country, it was they who regulated with the mandarines the amount of fees to be paid for connivance. Foreigners themselves never bribed the officers, nor were in any way instrumental in introducing the Opium into the country except by bringing it near the coasts.

The Lintin trade was very properly be compared to that which during Napoleon's continental system, was carried on at Heligoland, which, while that system lasted, became the emporium for British manufactures, whence by means of smugglers they were introduced into the adjacent countries, often in spite of the decrees but more often with their connivance secured by bribes. Like Heligoland the anchorage of Lintin, taking the sea to be such, is friendly ground, and on the natives falls the greatest onus of breaking the laws of their country, and of impoverishing and demoralizing it.

We by no means wish to be thought friendly to the Opium trade, we sincerely hope that measures may be taken so as entirely to suppress it and eradicate the infatuation which now makes so many millions seek their only solace and delight in baneful intoxication; but we see no reason for denying justice to those whom the late measures of the Imperial commissioner threaten to involve in ruin. As is so often the case, now only, in the eleventh hour, when ruin is likely to overtake a trade hitherto beyond example prosperous, do we hear it decried on all sides, now only do people find out its shocking immorality, and now only are those engaged in it and who by means of it furnished the Bengal Government with a revenue of upwards of a Million of Sterling annually, originated as smuggler, poisoners, etc; whilst in the halcyon days of this trade the same people were styled princely merchants, etc.

Let us now consider whether those who lost their property by the commissioner's proceedings have no claim for compensation from their Government? having obeyed the injunctions of the Chief Superintendent to deliver to him all the Opium under their control at the time in the China Seas. We need not now refer to the circumstances which preceded the Commissioner's arrival; the many threatening edicts, nor to the humiliations and insults offered to the foreign community at Canton. Suffice it to say that on the 18th of March the Hong-merchants delivered to the foreigners the Commissioner's edicts, one addressed to the former, and another to the latter, threatening these with imprisonment, and those with death, if within three days all the Opium then in the outside anchorages was not given up. All communication with Macao and even with Whampoa was cut off, and moreover the Commissioner demanded the person of one of the most influential merchants at Canton to be given up. We have at the time circumstantially related all these occurrences, and how the foreign community not only refused to give the order for the delivery to the Chinese of their Opium, but also that they, considering the demand of Mr. Dent's person, not one only of personal importance to that gentleman, but affecting the safety of the whole community, opposed Mr. Dent's going into the City. Until Sunday the 24th of March the Chinese were untiring in their efforts by persuasion to obtain Mr. Dent's consent to go into the City, and to render their eloquence more persuasive the senior Hong-merchants appeared with chains round their necks, typical of the punishment that awaited them should the Commissioner's demand not be complied with. The Chinese had hitherto abstained from using force, though it more than probable that they would soon have resorted to it, but that they preferred the voluntary surrender of Mr. Dent, of whose person in such case, as having been delivered over by his own countrymen which the Chinese would construe into a proof of his guilt, they would then believe themselves to be at liberty to dispose as they liked. That under such circumstances, and knowing this, a similar manner 60 years ago Mr. Flint was detained a prisoner in Casa branca during three years, the refusal of the foreign community to permit of Mr. Dent's going into the City, was unanimous, need not be wondered at, but this obstinacy as the Chinese considered it could not fail if longer persisted in, to produce personal violence, and totally unprotected as the foreign community were, and badly armed, we entertain no doubt that an actual collision with the Chinese military or Police would have been attended with the most dreadful consequences. Every moment might produce this catastrophe, when in the evening of this day Capt. Elliot arrived, and immediately took Mr. Dent under the protection of the British flag. Capt. Elliot's going to Canton has been blamed as unnecessarily placing himself within the power of the Chinese, but we cannot but consider the whole foreign community as deeply indebted to him for the promptness and gallantry evinced on this occasion, and cannot but think that his post as the superior officer of his nation, was with his fellow subjects when in danger. The advantages of his arrival were soon apparent; the demand for Mr. Dent's person was no longer hear'd, but all servants were withdrawn and food refused to be sold. Under these circumstances, Capt. Elliot being forcibly detained at Canton demanded from all British subjects the delivering over to him their Opium, giving the following pledge: "And I, the said Chief Superintendent, do now, in the most full and unreserved manner, hold myself responsible for and on the behalf of Her Britanic Majesty's Government, to all and each of Her Majesty's subjects surrendering the said British owned Opium into my hands to be delivered over to the Chinese Government." Whether Capt. Elliot exceeded his powers in thus conferring the responsibility to his own government, we need not consider; that is a question between him and the home government; but that the latter is pledged by the solemn assurance of it's agent, to reimburse those that, trusting to his assurance delivered over their property, we can have no doubt. It may be objected that there was not sufficient cause for making so large a sacrifice, and that without Capt. Elliot's interference the merchants themselves would have made an arrangement with the Chinese on more favorable terms; that is possible, but there is on the other hand a probability that the owners of the Opium refusing to deliver any part of it, as indeed we heard was the firm resolution of many, would therefore have exposed the whole foreign community at Canton to imminent danger, and thus have prevented for a great length of time the reestablishment of the general trade which to England is of the greatest importance.

The arguments why the British Government is bound to recognize the liabilities contracted in it's name by the Chief Superintendent, are very ably stated in a letter signed NOMEN which we received from the Bengal Hurkaru into our paper of 3rd August, and we therefore refer our readers to it, having nothing to add on the subject, and though we entertain no doubt that the Government will acknowledge the claims of the Opium-owners as lawfully bound thereto, it may not be out of place to recall to mind the obligations they owe to those dealers in Opium, which may possibly render the refunding part of the profits derived from this trade less unpalatable.

It is notorious that for upwards of 60 years the growth and manufactory of Opium in Bengal was a strict government monopoly, and that the revenue raised by means of that trade increased gradually as the use of the drug became more widely spread in China, until at last the profits annually accruing to the Company exceeded a Million of Sterling. It is true the Company never sent the drug to China on their own account, but we can hardly suppose the Bengal government as ignorant as the Company's Supracargoes professed to be before the Committees of Parliament, on the subject of the Opium trade in China. They allowed vessels laden with Opium to clear out for China both from Calcutta and Bombay, and therefore they cannot even avail themselves of the miserable subterfuge of the Company's servants, that they officially knew nothing about the trade. The Bengal Government by letting forward at their regular public sales the annual produce of their Opium districts encouraged its subjects to speculate therein, and these took it to the only market, China, in which there was a demand for that article. The enterprize and management of the dealers in Opium soon procured them the means of disposing of increased quantities, and the Company was not slow in producing, nay, they even anticipated the demand, by bringing into market such large quantities that prices were sensibly affected; but this depreciation was only momentary; the Company calculated justly that the appetite of the Chinese would increase in proportion to their ability to gratify it, and that the enterprizing dealers would leave no means untried to dispose of whatever large quantities were thrust upon them. To these latter therefore the Bengal Government is beholden for a very considerable part of its revenue, and it is probable that the Opium trade would never have drawn upon itself the fatal notice from the Imperial Government, had not the quantities brought to market been so prodigiously increased; in fact the cupidity of the Bengal Government has killed the goose that laid the golden eggs." The Indian Government which derived these vast advantages should, in part at least, make good the engagements entered into by Capt. Elliot on behalf of the British Government; This latter is as much implicated in the Opium trade; for having control over India affairs, it sanctioned the Opium monopoly, nor do we believe that two or three years ago any states man either in England or India would have been unwilling to take the responsibility of the Opium-monopoly upon his shoulders. Now, however, things are changed, and we are told that neither the Government at home or of India have anything to do with a set of desperate smugglers who unblushingly break the laws of the Celestial Empire by procuring to them an annual revenue of upwards of a Million of Sterling.

From a Correspondent.

MARITIME TRADE OF CENTRAL CHINA.—Keang soo and Che keang are the two most celebrated manufacturing provinces of China; the former is also remarkable for its agricultural riches, and in fact the most wealthy region of the Empire. It follows therefore, that the trade must be very flourishing. A strange prejudice exists amongst the inhabitants originating in their absurd notions of the dangers of the Sea, and the impracticability of reaching the shores of Southern countries in the north of Keang soo a maritime rate price is considerably embarrassed by the shallowness of the sea along the coast, and the many hidden dangers of extensive sandbanks. The largest boats therefore are very flat, never drawing more than one foot of water, and even then they do not sail without a fear of the treacherous quick sand. But these vessels farther than the southern parts of Shantung, only very few boats produce of quite a different description is the trade of Shang hae, the only large emporium of Keang soo. The immense quantity of shipping congregated in the river of Woosung, speaks highly in favour of the commercial character of the inhabitants. When it is however remembered that this is the high road to Central Asia, and that the merchants carry on no foreign trade, except in a few junks manned and owned by Fokees now, to the Indian Archipelago, we considerably alter in our admiration of the mercantile genius. Nearly the whole of the floating craft proceeds to Manchuria Tartary or Tientsin, where the rich silks of Keang soo find a ready market in exchange for raw produce. The strength of this trade consists in the natural and artificial resources of the country than which no part of Asia can command greater ones. Whatever Chinese ingenuity would desire for furnishing useful and ornamental staffs for the interior decoration of the Celestial Empire, is here displayed to the greatest advantage. Under such circumstances it is a matter of very great regret, that the navigation to Nanking by means of this river, and the terror which this enterprize spread is still remembered to this very day. This is the heart artery of China; he who commands this river is Lord of the country. Wealthy and extensive fields and flourishing cities overspread the land, the mighty river, nearly ten leagues in breadth at the mouth, presents a destitible stillness scarcely interrupted by the sound of the paddle of a solitary fisherman. So much for the dreading influence of why policy, which destroys God's choicest gifts merely to serve narrow minded ends.

The people of Che keang are more liberal in their views. Here are the extensive emporiums of Ningpo and Hang chow, and some of the second order, such as Chou san, Sieih po, Shaopo. Wan chou and far chou Ning po has by far the most live'y trade, and supplies all the ports of the northern and southern China with its multifarious manufactures of silk, embroidery and cottons. Though its vessels do not amount to one third of those of Keang soo, they are considerably larger, better boldmen, and do not fear the southern breezes. It is a striking sight to behold the merchantmen on a fine summerday scattered over the surface of the ocean and nothing shows China to so great advantage as its numerous fleets. The concentration of riches and articles for an extensive commerce must be sought between the 27th and 33rd degree of latitude. From Chapoo the trade is still carried on to Japan with only five large junks. To value the trade of Che keang itself is absolutely a matter of impossibility, since the Government never takes the trouble of estimating it from the returns of the custom house. A cruise along the coast could perhaps furnish the best criterion of the magnitude of the native commerce. Choo san is a mere entrepot, Shih po remarkable for the fisheries in which it engages, Hang choo for manufactures. It ought however to be observed, that thousands of Fokees men have settled on the coast, and that they in preference to the natives generally man the junks, and fit out the fishing smacks.

HONAN.—A native of this province who is of small dimensions, but of great mental magnitude of his district refused taking notice of the murder of his brother. After many futile explications, he finally resolved upon laying the affair before the higher tribunals. He therefore prepared a clear statement of the case and was well received at Peking. When the matter came to the ears of the monarch he immediately ordered a strict investigation and deprived the magistrate from his office.

FOKEEN.—The superintendent of the salt department, has declared his inability of paying the arrears of several years standing. The natives are a long way off the habit of smuggling this article, that a very small part of the gabelle is paid into the provincial treasury.

JEHOL.—A numerous band of police runners or Official servants have combined together in the neighbourhood of the Imperial summer abode, to extort money from the people, and to act the part of legal robbers. They have committed the most heinous crimes and have become a terror to the whole neighbourhood. A censor having represented matters in the true light, in order to free the people from this scourge, has severely admonished for giving a highly aggravated account of these proceedings. His Majesty however has been graciously pleased to order, that henceforth no such large number of servants, amounting to more than one thousand, should be dismissed from employ. This is the second time we have read of a similar disturbance in the same place; and what must be the state of the country, when scenes of violence and rapine can take place in the very face of the sovereign.

REMARKS UPON THE LATE MEASURES OF THE COMMISSIONER.

Threats have failed, coaxing proved of no avail, entreaties have not had the desirable consequences of getting the chief up to Woompoa, and therefore a new system, petty annoyance has come to end, but not before the American man of war have taken their departure. The following we intend for our distant readers, for those on the spot are aware of all these matters. A Chinese was killed in an affray of some drunken sailors at Hongkong. Hitherto the Canton Government never took any serious notice of the loss of life that happened outside, and even in some instances hushed up any similar affairs at Whampoa, because it did not suit its policy to make a stir about it. According to the Chinese law, a man who in a drunken fit without any malicious intentions kills another, must sever the cangue and be banished, and only the worst malefactor of this description is transported to the river Amour to expiate his guilt. We know the by-law, which declares manslaughter if committed by a barbarian, murder; with this we have at present nothing to do. Let, anxious to make this a very serious matter, demands life for life. A regular trial carried on with the greatest impartiality is instituted at the same time, by the proper British authorities when this manifesto appears, and no evidence is produced against the man who was supposed to have caused the death of the Chinese. The commissioner however still insists upon his being given up, a proceeding contrary to all law, for in no country a thief is hang before he is caught. As he is not forthcoming he orders the servants in the employ of the English away and also prohibits the Chinese from selling them any provisions. Had these measures been executed at Hongkong, we might have said, it was with the intention of forcing the captains to give a sailor up, no matter whether guilty or innocent. But this mighty man puts Macao under an embargo, and makes people, who scarcely knew of the river responsible for the transgressions. Every intelligent man must consider Lin's proceeding most unreasonable. Still he might find apologists on the plea of expediency. But might it not to be remembered, that the case has been tried by a competent court and that the surrender of any Englishmen is quite impossible, even if the meanest and most abject trembling power would sacrifice an innocent victim. What is therefore to be gained by this assurance? Already the people are exasperated at the almost total stoppage of the trade, and they will by those proceedings be inclined to still greater difficulties. Will foreigners bend to unjust indictus of injury by which neither party is benefited? We simply ask what can be the object of this extraordinary course? In vain have we sought for reasons where none exist, and certainly if any arbitrary measure is calculated to make the breach between China and foreign countries still wider, it is the depriving people of provisions.

This foolish business will again pass over and be forgotten like similar disturbances many years ago, but let it always be remembered, that there can exist no safety of commerce, where matters are left in such an unsatisfactory state. Based upon what principle you with Chinese policy, still if such proceedings are permitted things must go to ruin. If there be an additional reason culling for a dignified and proper interference with the arrogant and proud rulers of this land, the present case furnishes an incontrovertible instance of the necessity to put matters on a right footing.

KWANGTUNG PROVINCE.—The last harvest owing to the copious rains has been very abundant, and the people expect a most plentiful harvesting for the next, because the new planted rice has had the advantage of frequent genial showers. Provisions are every where cheap, but money is at the same time very scarce, and the mercantile community much embarrassed.

Public Notice.

TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Macao, 21st August, 1839.

Having ascertained that the Portuguese Inhabitants of Macao are called upon by the Commissioner to withdraw their Servants from Her Majesty's Subjects, and to refuse them supplies, or any manner of assistance, the Chief Superintendent is unwilling to compromise them further in the present difficulties with the Chinese, and has therefore to give notice that he will embark this evening with the Officers of Her Majesty's Establishment.

Her Majesty's Subjects who think fit to accompany him to Hong kong will have the goodness to understand, that the Chief Superintendent does not propose to leave the neighbourhood of this anchorage till the morning of the 23d instant.

By order of the Chief Superintendent, &c. &c. &c.

L. S. EDWARD ELMSLIE.
Secretary and Treasurer.

The American Consul, Mr. Snow, has a few days since left Macao for Canton. We suppose he cannot quietly resume his functions there without satisfaction from the Imperial Commissioner for the insults offered to him some time since; whether this has been done has not yet become known.

We published last week the translation of several edicts regarding the withdrawal of food and servants until a man is given up to the Chinese for the native killed at Hongkong. In obedience to these orders all Chinese servants have left their English employers, and it will be seen from Capt. Elliot's foregoing note that the Portuguese have also been ordered to not to lend any assistance to Englishmen. Thus situated, Capt. Elliot has left Macao yesterday for Hongkong, and many English merchants have done the same. We do not see how the difficulties at present can be settled without a fight, and well supported interference of the British Government; the demand of the Chinese for the giving up of a man for execution, to appease the spirit of the dead chinaman is inadmissible and unjust in the extreme, seeing that no pains have been spared to find out the guilty party but without success. An atonement in the shape of money has been offered to the relations of the slain and in part paid, and that appears to be all the reparation that this unfortunate affair is susceptible of. Yet, in spite of Capt. Elliot's explanation, the Commissioner insists on spilling blood for blood, and prefers driving out the English now at Macao to coming to an equitable arrangement.

Several edicts from the local magistrates have been stuck on the walls this week; one of them states that the present measures of the Commissioner are not intended to apply to any fraternity of other foreign nations, and that their servants need not be apprehensive of punishment for staying with their masters; yet such is the fear of these people or perhaps their love for idling that they make the prohibition to English houses serve as a pretext for leaving their employers. Such is the case with us who are without our usual complement of people at present. Another edict prohibits boatmen from buying more than a catty of fish and a pint of rice a day, lest they should from their abundance supply the wants of the English. The bringing provisions to Macao from the adjacent villages was forbidden some days ago and the natural consequence was that prices of rice and other articles of food rose;—an edict now prohibits shopmen from asking more than usual for their articles, and permits at same time the free introduction into Macao of rice, and we believe of other food also; as regards the latter we are not certain of the reading of the Chop.

In Chin san (Casa branca) serious disturbances are said to have occurred yesterday. It appears that the Mandarins had prevented the usual supplies of food to enter that large village, and prices of all kinds of provisions naturally rose; the soldiery and government attache's now stationed there insisted on purchasing from the shopmen at the old rates, but meeting with determined opposition the parties came to blows, and three or four fights took place, in which the soldiers we hear got well beaten.

We would recommend the equestrian part of the foreign community not to exhaust their rides too near the barrier, it is a fruitful source the amusement apparently of the chinese parties there to sally out with spears and swords, and attack such gentlemen as happen to ride near the gate. On three different evenings has this happened; the first night to two gentlemen, who 6 or 7 men rushed towards them; the day after (the evening before last) to another gentleman who saw a much greater number in pursuit of him; and last night even stones were thrown and hit a gentleman on the head that had unwittingly ventured near the barrier.

The Commissioner is said to be still at Heungshan, with a considerable body of troops. The severity against natives either connected with foreigners or the Opium-trade seems to be increased. Several compradores or head servants of English houses have during the past week been taken into custody, and, it is said that their treatment has been very severe.

CAUTION TO OUR SHIPPING AT HONG KONG.—We state on good authority, if such it can be called as coming from a well informed native, that ships in obtaining water at Hongkong should be extremely careful it being not impossible that the wells or springs may be drugged.

The following translation, alluded to above, has been kindly furnished us:

"Tatan, Keun min foo and Pang, Too tang of Macao, exquisitely loose this clear and perspicuous edict that all men may know and understand.

"It appears that just now the Portuguese Wei le to (or Procurador) has petitioned us saying.

"The American merchant King, now residing at Macao has just laid before me a statement, in which he says that the coolies, compradores, and other people of that class within his Hong, have all cleared out hurry scurry and returned to their homes. Having inquired the reason of this, he learns that it is because of an edict or proclamation limiting three days within the which they were commanded to look after some other profession, and therefore it was that their hearts became agrey to suspicion and anxiety. Now America and England are wide as the poles asunder, only this said class of people do not yet thoroughly know this fact, therefore I must in conformity with the circumstances of the case, request thou you that another proclamation be put up, clearly distinguishing between the different names of the different countries, in order to dispel doubt, and words to that effect.

"Now this coming before us the said Keun ming foo and Too tang, we find that when on a previous occasion we issued a proclamation, ordering away compradores, servants, native traitors and others of that ilk, and limiting the term of three days within the which they were to look out for some other avocation, all this was because that the English foreigners had killed a Chinese, and would not deliver up the murderer, that the store ships which had already discharged their opium, as well as those roguish foreigners who had received the Imperial commands to be driven out, had not entirely returned home and finally that the merchant vessels which had arrived, would neither enter the port of Whampoa, nor go away back again; in every respect showing such trifling and procrastination, so amounted in fact to opposition to the laws, so much so as to draw down upon them the anger of the high officers of Government, who in order to manifest clearly the terrible Majesty of the Celestial Empire, gave orders to deprive them of food and shelter; but the proclamation stated distinctly, that these measures had no reference whatever to the Portuguese or any other foreigners residing at Macao, it pointed out clearly, that any compradores, servants, Chinese traitors or others in the service of Englishmen, no matter whether ashore or afloat, if these dared clandestinely to remain with them or serve them in any way, they should be seized on the instant, and awarded summary punishment. Our former proclamation contained all these particulars in regular succession, and was promulgated with the utmost clearness and distinctness as well as minuteness: how come it then, that the coolies and the whole of the people within the Hong of this American merchant, will still continue to harbour doubt and suspicion? Moreover we have just now secretly dispatched a number of police officers of ability, to go every where enquiring after the numerous traitors in the service of Englishmen, whom they are to seize and bring forward for judgment, but as for the coolies and others residing in the Hongs of Americans, Hollanders, and all other foreigners, the police have been instructed to ask no questions about them, thus it may be clearly seen that the cutting off the supplies of food &c., and the driving out of the compradores, Chinese traitors and others, is pointed against the English alone; as for the Portuguese and all other foreigners of all other countries, it does not concern them a single hair's breadth!

"In accordance therefore with the facts stated in the foregoing petition, we unite the circumstances and again issue this clear and perspicuous proclamation viz. By virtue of these our commands to you, one and all, each and every of you Coolies and others of that ilk, thoroughly know and understand, that while living in the service of the Portuguese, or the Americans, or any other country's foreigners, it is hereby permitted you to go out and come in as before, do not feel any anxiety or alarm on that score, only it will not be permitted you to have any clandestine dealings or other evils of the kind, which will lead to your also being taken and punished. As for the Compradores, Servants, and other Chinese traitors in the employment of Englishmen, if ye dare clandestinely to remain with or serve your English masters, whether it be on shipboard or at Macao, ye will assuredly be seized, and most severely dealt with, truly we will not allow a single one of you to escape out of the net! It is proper that all tremble and obey! Do not oppose! A special edict.

Native Society in India.

From the Asiatic Journal.

Those who observe attentively the habits and manners of the people of India frequently become acquainted with cases in which individuals, supposed or asserted to be dead, make their re-appearance amongst their friends and acquaintances, realising incidents which, when feigned in European tales, are deemed romantic and improbable. In some instances, the whole affair is preconcerted, for the purpose of effecting some particular object; in others, it is the result of accident, and the difficulty of tracing parties who suddenly quit the place of their abode and travel into distant regions.

In no part of India is the country more wild, jungley, and adapted for the purpose of concealment, than that in the immediate neighbourhood of Calcutta, especially towards the sea. For the greater part of the distance between the Sand Heads and the City of Palaces, the shores of the Hooghley are the most desolate that can well be imagined, and were it not for the craft upon the river, it would be difficult to suppose that it led to the seat of government of a flourishing empire, and one of the largest commercial marts in the East. The inhabitants of these shores are a stunted race, striking the eye of the stranger, who expects every thing he sees in India to be upon a vast, magnificent scale, as diminutive. Though small and slightly made, they are, however, remarkably agile and active, making up for their want of physical strength and courage by great suppleness of limb, and no small portion of cunning. Those who gain a livelihood as boatmen, supply the ships at anchor with fruit and vegetables, and carry passengers to Calcutta, are somewhat accustomed to illusionment from the Europeans with whom they come in contact. It must be confessed that persons wholly unacquainted with native usages, ignorant of the language, and inclined to think contemptuously of a set of poverty-stricken, half-naked, and apparently pusillanimous creatures, of the lowest class, if not classed with a large share of temper and discretion, will be likely to be tried beyond the point of forbearance, when once embarked, in a Calcutta dinghee, upon the wide waters of the Hooghley.

A passenger on board one of the ships in Diamond Harbour hired a boat of this kind to convey him up the river. he was a person belonging to the middle classes, coming out to India with a free mariner's indenture, not remarkable for much information, and of rather an overbearing character. Seated in the small vessel, with what he considered to be a parcel of chattering monkeys, his annoyances soon commenced. Nothing can be done in India without great clamour, gesticulation, and apparent confusion; our friend, therefore, concluded that his life was imperilled by a set of fellows who did not know what they were about, and were quarrelling amongst themselves. When fairly afloat, he was still more aggrieved by the cool method in which they all settled down to occupations which threatened greatly to retard his progress; one or two commenced unbinding their turbans, which consisted of a long piece of very coarse cloth, and binding them up again; others produced their huddo-bubbies, and began to smoke, while the remainder engaged in the preparation for a meal. To his inquiry, why they did not continue their labours at the oar, he of course received no satisfactory reply; all jabbled together in an unknown tongue, and the more they attempted to explain the cause of a stoppage which he did not comprehend, the more was he exasperated. The reflection did not cross his mind that, as in all probability these boatmen, being well acquainted with the river, had some good reason for their conduct, it would be better to allow them to have their own way, and punish them afterwards, if upon inquiry they should be convicted of misconduct, but, provoked beyond all bearing, he determined to compel them to obey his commands. Accordingly, being provided with a good stick, he laid about him so vigorously, that three of the boatmen threw themselves overboard, and were instantly lost to view. The drowing, for so it appeared, of these men, brought the passenger to his senses; his alarm became manifest, and the rest of the crew, weeping and wailing, exerted themselves to convey him to the place of destination. Immediately on their arrival, they gave him in charge of a police peon, the case was heard before a magistrate, and the stranger immediately committed to jail. A true bill was found against him by the grand jury, on the deposition of the survivors; and he awaited his trial in great dejection of mind.

The affair assumed a serious aspect; the liver of three men having been wantonly sacrificed to his ungovernable temper, and, though a Calcutta jury is remarkable for its clemency, it was supposed that the case would go hard with him. With few acquaintances and no friends in the city, he had little consolation to soothe him under his misfortunes, or to soften the prospect of the future. If he escaped with life, the utmost he could hope for was transportation for the remainder of his existence. The trial came on, the charge was clearly proved, and a verdict of guilty brought in without the slightest hesitation. The counsel for the prisoner, however, brought forward a point of law, which was to be argued before the judges, and sentence was therefore deferred. In the meantime, the unhappy convict was visited in the prison by a person who could speak very fluent English, and who gave him to understand that, upon the payment of a certain sum, he would be able to get him off by producing the identical parties supposed to have been long ago the food of fishes. The jeopardy of the prisoner was too great to allow him to hesitate; he instantly produced all the cash he could command, and accordingly the missing men presented themselves the following day, and their identity being satisfactorily proved, the person supposed to have caused their death was discharged. It appears that these fellows were expert divers, who, immediately upon jumping out of the boats, sunk; and coming up again at some distance, swam to the shore. Their comrades knew very well how to avail themselves of the circumstance, and acting in concert, the fugitives remained concealed until it was their interest to come forward. The affair was altogether exceedingly well managed on the part of the poor, ignorant, despised boatmen, who thus contrived to punish their oppressor, and to get handsomely paid for the injuries they had sustained. No conspiracy could be proved against them, since they declared they knew nothing of the proceeding, and had concealed themselves on account of the alarm they felt at being forced overboard; and though no credit was given to this declaration, it could not easily be gainsaid, while the party who negociated the business took care to be out of the way. The stranger who had embroiled himself so unhappily upon his landing was too glad to escape from a very dangerous predicament to pursue the matter further, and the affair, though it made some noise at the time, was soon forgotten.

Another conspiracy of the kind proved of a far more criminal and dangerous character. The event occurred [illegible] and is remarkable [illegible] able. A wealthy mahajun, or merchant, had a young and handsome wife, of whom he was known to be exceedingly jealous. They had no family, and in the event of his death, his property would go to a relative, with whom he was at variance. This person, named Khan Beg, an idle, dissipated fellow, glanced a longing eye upon the inheritance, and cast about for the means by which he might succeed to it. Reduced to poverty by his extravagance, he knew that it would be vain to ask assistance from a kinsman whom he had justly incensed by repeated trangressions; and finding a ready accomplice in a domestic in the merchant's establishment, he set a scheme on foot, which promised to be successful. It appeared that Ibrahim Beg, the husband, had, in a fit of jealousy, sold, discharged, and otherwise got rid of his wife's female attendants, and that she had nobody to wait upon her but a slave girl, so stupid, as to be incapable of being very observant respecting what was going on in the house. Hitherto, the husband had treated his wife with kindness, but being irritated by suspicions instilled into his mind in the most Iago-like manner by Emamee, the servant, he lifted his hand a gainst her, and the poor girl, frightened and in pain, screamed dreadfully on the next morning she was not to be found, and information was given at the accustomed thanna that the woman had been murdered. The officers of justice immediately came, and Emamee deposed to the quarrel, but said that his master had sent him away on a message after it had occurred, and that he knew nothing more of the matter. Search was made throughout the premises, and some of the earth in the court-yard appearing to have been removed, on looking further, the body of a woman was discovered, but the head was nowhere to be found. Ibrahim Beg was of course apprehended, and carried to prison; it was in vain he protested his innocence, declaring that, immediately after the unfortunate quarrel with his wife, either exhausted by the violence of his emotions, or stupified by some drug administered to him in his drink, he had fallen fast asleep, and remained unconscious of every thing that had occurred until a late hour in the morning. The absence of Emamee upon his master's business was satisfactorily proved by some of his confederates; he identified a bangle found upon the arm of the corpse as one belonging to his mistress, which he had got mended for her; while the slave girl, who said that she had run away and hidden herself when her master beat his wife, and found the door of the apartment locked upon her when she desired to leave it, expressed her conviction that the body was that of Chumbelee, her mistress. Nothing, in fact, could be more conclusive; the head alone being wanted to complete the chain of evidence. Ibrahim Beg's jealousy of his wife was notorious, and her screams were heard be all the neighbours on the fatal evening. At first, notwithstanding the opinion of the native law officer, who stickled for the production of the head, the case was referred to the Nizamut Adawlut, and not a doubt entertained of the murder. Ibrahim Beg had some friends, and the greater number endeavoured, by every means in their power, to induce him to confess the crime with which he had been charged. Generally speaking, natives of India are very willing, after apprehension, and more especially after condemnation, to acknowledge their guilt, and to state all the circumstances connected with it. In many instances, the confession of the prisoner forms the principal evidence against him, and a relation of the whole particulars in a case of murder is seldom wanted for the satisfaction of the inquirers, who hear the whole account from the perpetrator himself. Ibrahim Beg, however, continued stoutly to deny all participation in his wife's disappearance, and as peremptorily to declare that the body produced was not that of Chumbelee. Unfortunately for him, he had kept her too strictly secluded for many persons to be able to question the identity, and his asseverations went for nothing. Time passed away; the evidence against the prisoner was deemed conclusive by the Superior Court, and a day was appointed for his execution. Khan Beg's spirits rose at the prospect of immediate possession; already he gave himself the air of a man of great wealth, and it was observed that Emamee had entirely deserted his old master, and become attached to his heir and successor. Circumstances which raised some indignation against the faithless domestic, who had so long eaten the prisoner's salt, but did not create any suspicion of treasonable acts towards him. At length, the very day before that on which the sentence was to be carried into effect, a young English gentleman, the assistant to the judge and magistrate, received intimation that Chumbelee was in existence, and living not above twenty miles from the scene of her alleged murder. Though scarcely crediting the intelligence, yet a life being at stake, he determined to ascertain the fact in person, and having despatched bearers and bearers to the place, rode over himself in the evening. The woman, had been placed in the custody of a gang of fakeers, who had established themselves in a tomb; and as these fellows were expert in all sorts of devices, it would be necessary to take them by surprise. Accordingly, the village police were summoned cautiously, the tomb surrounded, and search being made, a female, who proved to be no other than Chumbelee, was found in a subterranean apartment. She was immediately placed in a dandie prepared for her, and conveyed to the city. Day had broken before she could arrive, the scaffold was erected, and every preliminary for the last melancholy ceremony completed. Crowds had assembled to witness the execution, and though in India time appears to be of no sort of value, since large multitudes will wait during almost any period with exemplary patience, the expectation was becoming anxious, when, instead of the prisoner, a sweet meek like appearance, who acquainted the spectators with the turn affairs had taken. Meanwhile, Emamee and Khan Beg were apprehended; the former, on perceiving that the whole plan had failed, gave the necessary explanation. He stated, in the first instance, that an unfortunate propensity to gambling had put him into the power of Khan Beg, who assailed his integrity with temptations too strong to be resisted; that the affair had been projected for a long time, and was executed the moment a body could be procured which might pass for that of Chumbelee; that, at length, not very disconsolate widower was found, who was very willing to part with the corpse of his wife for a consideration, but being afraid to produce the head, they cut it off, and contented themselves with the trunk; that Emamee inflamed the mind of his master by a well cated account of his wife's misconduct, and when she had wept and moaned herself to sleep, and Ibrahim had become insensible from the effects of a dark beverage, the slave-girl being locked up in the room in which she had hidden herself, he enveloped Chumbelee in a dark blanket, and giving her into the custody of the bearers of the tomb, who were in waiting to receive her, proceeded to dispose of the corpse; that, in this undertaking, he was assisted by Khan Beg, and having managed every thing, as they thought, very dexterously, they repaired to the abode of the former, and he (Emamee) went to sleep; that, in the morning, he returned to the house of his master, pretending that he had executed a commission with which he had charged himself on the preceding night, that, soon afterwards, Chumbelee was missed, and Ibrahim, concluding that she had fled with a paramour, abandoned himself at first to grief and resentment; that he (Emamee) took care to report the circumstance, and the neighbours, recollecting the screams they had heard, were easily induced, by a few hints and surmises, to suspect foul play; the confederates, therefore, soon had the satisfaction of seeing Ibrahim in the gripe of the law. A trifling matter about a few rupees, it appears, ruined this hopeful scheme. Khan Beg refused to pay one of the subordinates employed in this affair, Ibrahim contrived to get deeper into the secret than the principals were aware of, and this man it was who disclosed the young English civilian with the circumstance of Chumbelee's existence. Khan Beg and Emamee were tried for the abduction and conspiracy, and sentenced to work upon the roads for life.

From the Sing. Free Press, Extra, of 5th August.

The last few days have been profuse of arrivals, which are announced from Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, from all of which Presidencies we have received papers containing Europe News by the Overland despatches to 26th April and 19th May. The papers laid before Parliament in April, developing the progress of Russian and Persian intrigue to disturb the British power in the East; and shewing the humiliating posture into which Russia is thrown by their detection and exposure, possess the greatest interest—but our readers will probably prefer having our latest news first; and these also contain accounts of a remarkable movement of much interest in the two great political parties at home.

The following are the arrivals referred to:—

Aug 2 British barque Sylph, T. Viall, from Calcutta 15th July.
" 4 Brig Poppy, D. McKenzie, from Calcutta 15th July.
" 4. British ship Good Success, H. Fraser from Calcutta 11th July.
" 9 British ship Charles Grant, W. Pitcairn, from Madras 12th July.
" 9. British ship Castle Huntly, T. H. Johnston, from Bombay 4th July.
" 9. H. M. S. Volage, Smith, Esqre, from Madras 27th July.

Latest Europe News.

(From the Madras Courier, July)

London, 15th May, 1839.

The Tories have been in and are out, the Whigs have been out and are in again; and all within the short space of a week. The events which led to this hey presto! movement of parties were these:—On the 15th of last month commenced in the House of Commons the long-looked for debate on Irish affairs. Lord John Russel in consequence of the House of Lords having appointed a committee to inquire into the state of crime in Ireland, a course considered hostile towards the government, gave notice for the 15th of April of a motion for a vote of confidence on their Irish policy. The debate lasted from Monday the 15th till the Friday following; when on a division in a House of 618 there appeared for Ministers a majority of 22. Ministers had been anxious that this vote should be looked on as a kind of general vote of confidence; but this view of the matter by no means squared with the object of the Radical or movement party, who had for some time been endeavoring to "squeeze" out of Ministers some concession to the Democratic principle. At noon therefore, on the above division, was declared Mr. Thomas Duncombe put to the vote a Radical amendment, to the effect, that it was also expedient to effect such further reforms in the representation of the people in parliament as would conduce to their contentment and to the security and welfare of the kingdom at large. Upon this there voted for Mr. D.... 81 against him..... 299
Majority against extending the representation..... 218

This result so disappointed the movement party that they were understood to have vowed revenge at the earliest opportunity. This was not long wanting. On Friday, May 3d, came on the second reading of a Bill for suspending the constitution of the Island of Jamaica. The House of Assembly, nettled at the Imperial Legislature having passed an act for the regulation of persons in the Island, abstained altogether from exercising their Legislative functions. The Whigs (for once in their lives "taking the Bull by the horns") did not wait till the assembly placed themselves in a wrong position by absolutely refusing to Legislate, but proceeded at once to suspend the constitution. The conservative party, influenced no doubt by the great weight of the West India interest, seized the opportunity to oppose Ministers in toto. Mr. Hume, and nine other radicals, smarting under recent disappointments, opposed them on the plea that the suspension of a constitution at all was an arbitrary act. The result was that on Monday the 6th. Ministers could only muster a majority of FIVE!! This was of course a defeat; and on the following day they announced in either House of Parliament that they had resigned, and that their resignation had been accepted by Her Majesty. Sir Robert Peel was then commissioned, by the advice of the Duke of Wellington, to form a Ministry. Sir Robert was in daily communication with Her Majesty, and with his own supporter for the purpose, and on Friday it was expected that the new administration would be announced. Judge the astonishment of the town when instead thereof appeared an announcement that Sir Robert Peel had resigned his task. Expectant tories were chopfallen. Dejected whigs and radicals went almost mad with joy. Never was there so sudden and unexpected a catastrophe. But when the cause was made public, still greater was the astonishment. From explanations made on Monday night in the Commons by Sir Robert, it appears, that knowing he would have to begin the government with a minority in that House he deemed it the more necessary that he should appear to the country to have the support of his Royal Mistress. This he thought would not be the case if certain Whig Ladies of the household (the Marchioness of Normanby and others) were not removed and supplanted by others of conservative connections. Her Majesty, who has all the blood of the Brunswicks in her, answered, with a firmness that would have astonished even her grandfather, that she would rather be reduced to the level of a subject, than be dictated to in the choice of her private friends; or be compelled to give up those whom she had known from childhood. Of course there was no withstanding such resolution as this; and, accordingly, after one or two letters had passed, Sir Robert gave up the attempt to form a Ministry. It is due to him to say that he was formally acquitted by the Queen and her Ministers of any attempt unduly to enforce what he conceived to be the right of a Prime Minister; and on the other hand Sir Robert in his place in Parliament bore testimony to the constitutional manner in which Her Majesty conducted her share in this very delicate negociation. Lord Melbourne and his colleagues have again assumed the Government. As they have adjourned the House for ten days, to consider their future course, it is impossible to do more than guess what it will be. They must adopt some decided policy, or they will be every month in danger of being deserted, as before, by their radical allies. Whether a coalition of moderate tories and conservative whigs will be attempted, or an infusion of "movement" principles into the cabinet, by the persons of Lords Durham and Brougham, is still a problem; but the whigs will find it very difficult, after the recent crash to continue their former do-nothing policy. Probably the nation would rather have a conservative administration at once than a Ministry of so useless and neutral a character.

On Thursday the [illegible] Morning Chronicle (a journal which has become the temporary organ of the movement party) a letter from Daniel o'Connell offering to give up agitating for repeal of the Union provided there be at once an union of all men disposed to carry reform further than the limits prescribed in the Reform Bill; but threatening an instant agitation of that question if that course be not adopted. Only a few days previously to this declaration of war by the veteran agitator, there appeared a letter from Lord John Russell to his constituents which, as much as any thing, decided the fate of Ministers with their radical allies. To this manifesto Lord John completely backs out of all "movement" and speaks of the Reform Act as a final measure. Nothing can exceed the anger of the radicals with their former idol. Lord Brougham has since published an answer to this letter, in which he takes the Whigs strongly to task and announces his readiness to join any government that will govern constitutionally and pursue a course of practical reform. While all the ministerial changes and court cabals and intrigues are going on, the democracy are endeavouring once more to erect their hydra heads. They adopt all the outward forms of revolutionists. They have had their national convention and their watchwords still in their "Chartism" by which they stipulate for universal suffrage and many such matters of the same cloth. They have thought fit so to remember riotous, and some of their leaders have been arrested; but their proceedings excite more ridicule than fear at present. When governments are insecure very slight movements of the people, however, are of political importance. The worst feature of their proceedings is that they are systematically arming themselves with pikes and fire arms.

Mr. Rowland Hill's plan for an universal penny postage will be adopted in this country. Every letter whether it go one or 500 miles will be charged a penny. They calculate that the increase of correspondence will make up the revenue.

Major Bevan, late of the 28th Madras Native Infantry, has just published a little work [illegible] ty years in India." It has excited some attention. Nothing else of any value has of late appeared in the literary world. In my next I shall not fail to inform you of any new publication of importance.

From the London Bombay Times Extra, May 15.

Accounts from Bombay to the 24th March reached town on the 10th May, by a government messenger—letters have not been received.

On the 13th April, despatches were received at the India House by special messengers, with accounts from Bombay up to the 26th February. Letters via Marseilles were received on the 16th, and via Falmouth on the 19th.

On the 26th of April, the bells of Newcastle and Gateshead rang a joyful peal, in honour of the arrival of the Ida, Captain John Currie, from the East Indies, the first vessel belonging to that port that had regularly engaged in the East India trade.

The Queen has conferred the honour of Knighthood upon Major Thomas Livingston Mitchell, Surveyor-general of New South Wales.

The Chronicle says that in the forthcoming miscellaneous estimates there is an item for $5,000 being an estimate of the sum required to be voted towards defraying the expense of steam communication to India by way of the Red Sea, for one year to March 31, 1840.

Sir J. Campbell and Sir F. Pollock have given their opinions that the East India Company cannot, since the Charter of 1833, legally become copartners or shareholders in banking Establishments in India.

MAY 9.—Ministers have resigned; the fact was announced last night in both Houses. In the Peers, Viscount Melbourne said:—I consider it, my lords, my duty to seize the earliest opportunity afforded to me to acquaint your lordships, that in consequence of the vote to which the House of Commons has come this morning—a vote which, though not immediately fatal to the measure against which it was directed, yet at the same time, is one that it must be obvious to all who are acquainted with parliamentary proceedings, is such, as that they must know, that it is of such a nature or kind as to render the final success of the measure totally impossible; and, considering, my lords, the measure as of the highest possible importance, of the most paramount importance to the welfare of the great kingdom to which it related, and to the working out of the great measure of negro emancipation, which was voted by both Houses of Parliament with so much satisfaction, and for which such great sacrifices were made; considering, I say, this of the utmost, the most paramount, and indispensable importance for that great object; in considering also that the vote on this occasion is not only necessarily fatal to the ultimate success of that great measure, but will, I submit, with sufficient clearness and distinctness indicate such a want of confidence on the part of a great proportion of that House of Parliament, as to render it absolutely impossible that we should continue to administer the affairs of her Majesty's government in a manner that can be useful or beneficial to the country, and which render it impossible that we can take measures of energy and importance that are absolutely required by the situation and circumstances of the country; but which, my lords, if they are taken, allow me to say, that then there is no danger or peril whatever to be apprehended in any part of the conflicting and difficult matters of this country (hear, hear). I say then, my lords, under these considerations, and under the pressure of these circumstances, we have thought it to be our duty to tender the resignation of the offices which we hold, and which her Majesty has been graciously pleased to accept. And we now only retain these offices, and discharge the functions connected with them, until other arrangements can be made, and successors appointed, to carry on the business of the country.

In the Commons, Lord John Russell said:—Sir, I wish to make a communication to the House, in consequence of what took place last night on the motion of the right honorable baronet opposite, for the rejection of the bill to provide for the government at Jamaica. Sir, it will be evident to this House that that was a bill requiring more than ordinary support—more than ordinary confidence—and that it has been met with less support and less confidence on the part of this House than that which has usually been given to her Majesty's ministers. It has, therefore, become their duty to consider in what position they are placed with respect to that bill. It would undoubtedly be in their power to proceed to another stage of that bill, and again to ask the opinion of the House on the question; but we see no reason to suppose that the judgement of the House upon a second trial would be different from that which it has already declared. We might, likewise with the support of the majority no greater than that received last night, send the bill to the House of Lords, and leave it to the House of Lords to deal with it as they should think proper. But this course [illegible] upon a bill which certainly was introduced by the government here, and the governor and council of Jamaica, unusual powers, would have the appearance of throwing upon the House of Lords a responsibility which we do not think that we are fairly entitled to throw upon them, after the vote which has been come to in the House of Commons. It therefore seems to us that there is no option but to give up the bill which we thought it our duty to bring forward. It is then a question whether having brought forward a bill of that importance, we shall leave the state of affairs in Jamaica, in the West India colonies, and in our colonies generally, in that state in which the ministers of the Crown ought to be content to leave these colonies. It is obvious that in Jamaica the authority of the Crown will be greatly weakened by a vote of the House of Commons, giving, in effect and in impression support to the contumacy, as he must call it, of the House of Assembly, against the propositions of the ministers of the Crown. But it is obvious that the effect likewise will be, that with regard to the other colonies, where hitherto there has been, if not a ready and eager, yet an ultimate compliance with the wishes of the Crown, there will be a disposition rather to imitate the resistance made in Jamaica than to persevere in the course which they had pursued hitherto. But there is this further question, that it was our intention, and our duty, to have brought forward, within these few days, another question relating to the colonies—relating to the important provinces of Lower and Upper Canada—whose affairs required, and still require the most deliberate consideration of Parliament. It was evident that the measure with regard to Jamaica having been so opposed—having been opposed by such large numbers in this House—we could not calculate on that support which is necessary for the settlement of the affairs of Canada. Therefore, Sir, in continuing in the administration of affairs, not having, as we think we have not, a sufficient degree of confidence and support to carry on those affairs efficiently in this House, we should be exposing to jeopardy the colonial empire of this country, many of whose colonies are, I will not say in a state of hazard, but in which questions of considerable importance are pending. Hitherto her Majesty's ministers have thought themselves justified in continuing in the administration of affairs, supported as we were by the confidence of the Crown, and by the confidence of the House of Commons. But, sir, after the vote of last night, I do not think that we are entitled to say, that upon very great and important affairs upon which government was obliged to come to a decision, we have had such support and such confidence in this House as would enable us sufficiently to carry on the public affairs Sir, it has therefore been the duty of her Majesty's ministers, on consideration of all these circumstances, humbly to tender their resignation to her Majesty. Sir, with regard to the course to be pursued to night, it will be the course usual on those occasions. I shall move for a short adjournment, in order to enable her Majesty to form an administration that may carry on the affairs of the empire. But, sir, I cannot close what I have now to say, without expressing on this occasion, as I shall be ready to express on every occasion, and as I shall feel to the latest moment of my life, my gratitude to those who have supported the government during the four years in which we have held the arduous situations in which we have been placed—and that too in no unimportant difficulties, in no circumstances of ease or facility—but who have supported the government in such a manner, that although it had not at any time the confidence of a majority of the House of Lords, we felt it nevertheless consistent with our duty to carry on the administration of the affairs of the country Sir, I say to those who have given this efficient support, and who have been always ready to show in this House that they were willing to do every thing in their power to promote the great principles on which we were agreed, I must again say that I shall always feel the deepest gratitude. Sir, I will now only conclude by moving that this House as it is rising do adjourn to Monday next. (Loud and continued cheering from the Ministerial benches.)

The motion was put and agreed to.

MINISTERIAL EXPLANATIONS.

(From the London Bombay Times Extra, May 15.)

MAY 14.—In the House of Commons last night, Sir Robert Peel having her Majesty's permission, afforded some explanation of the recent Ministerial transactions. He said, that when he waited on her Majesty, she expressed her great regret at parting with her late Ministers, who had given her entire satisfaction; but their resignation had made it necessary for her to consider the formation of a new government. He expressed to her his sense of the vast difficulties which a new government would have to encounter, but assured her, that as he had been a party to the vote which had removed her Ministers, nothing should prevent him from rendering her every assistance to replace them. Having received her commands, he communicated, on the same evening with eight of his friends, and the next day submitted their names to the Queen, acquainting her that the Duke, while he placed his services wholly at her disposal, would rather lead the House of Lords without an office, than undertake a department of the Administration She, however, expressed a wish that he should hold an office and Sir R. Peel assured her he had no doubt that the Duke would forego his own personal inclinations at her desire. No material question arose at that time as to the form of the administration, or the conduct of the government. On Thursday occurred the difficulty, or misconception, which led to his resignation It related exclusively to that portion of the household offices which ladies were filling; for on the subject of those household offices which were held by members of either House of Parliament, she had conceded all that could be wished. With respect, then, to the offices of ladies, he would state, not his own impressions of his conversations with her Majesty because no one having present, he would thus be gaining the undue advantage of his own testimony, where no other evidence could be fully taken, he would therefore state only so much of the conversation between Her Majesty and himself as existed in the shape of correspondence. But he would state what were his intentions as he had expressed them on his own house on the Wednesday evening to his intended colleagues. Not then knowing exactly who all the ladies in the household were, he looked at the Red-book, and said to his friends that as to all the subordinates, that is, all below the Ladies of the Bedchamber, he should submit no change whatever to her Majesty; and as to the superiors, he presumed that those connected with opponents would immediately relieve the new government by relinquishing their places. He further told his friends, that in these higher places he thought it important some changes should be made, as indications of entire confidence on the part of her Majesty; but there were other cases in this superior class, with respect to which he observed, that in the absence of party feeling and political connexion, he should think it unnecessary to propose any alteration These were his intentions: if in explaining them to the Queen he had failed to express them with sufficient clearness, the fault was his own. It was on Thursday that he next attended her. What passed at this audience he should not relate. He would leave the whole case on the letters: that of her Majesty was received by him on the Friday, and its tenor was, that having considered the proposal to remove the Ladies of the Bedchamber, she could not consent to adopt a course which she conceived contrary to usage, and which was repugnant to her feelings. The letter he answered by another, which he read to the House, and in which he requested permission, on resigning his trust, to state his impression of the circumstances. The letter then recapitulated the following particulars:—That he had represented to her Majesty the importance of publicly demonstrating her confidence in her servants, and had assured her that each individual of the House hold should be a person acceptable to herself, and that on her expressing a wish in favour of Lord Liverpool, he had proposed to offer him the office of Lord Steward or any other which she might prefer to bestow on him. That on Sir R. Peel's proposing to apply the same principle to the case of the Ladies of the Household, she said she would have no change—she would reserve the whole. That the Duke of Wellington, who afterwards saw her, understood this to be her decision. His letter concluded by expressions of his gratitude and devotion.

"And now (said R. Peel) as to the misrepresentations with which I have been publicly assailed. It is stated that I proposed unwelcome appointments on my Sovereign. Except Lord Liverpool, whom her Majesty herself suggested, I named but two individuals, and both in the expectation that they would be personally acceptable to her—the one Lord Ashley, and the other Lord Sydney. It is stated that I proposed the dismissal of Baroness Lehzen. Such an idea never entered my mind, and I never even heard of the suggestion till Friday night. Again I say, I may have explained myself imperfectly to the Queen; but my intentions were fully declared to my friends, to them I can refer for my actual meaning. My resignation was solely because I understood that her Majesty was resolved to retain the whole of the household as far as the ladies were concerned and because I felt it impossible for me to conduct the government without the fullest and most unequivocal proof of the Royal confidence.—India, Jamaica, Canada, the internal state of England, insurrections in the provinces, Lord John Russell's letter of appeal to the respectable part of the community for assistance—these were objects and considerations of no ordinary moment and anxiety. I had considered it my duty, looking at the country's agitated state, to go on, if possible, with this Parliament. But it must have been in a minority; and if I did not set out with the confidence of the House of Commons, the least I could strive to secure was the confidence of the Crown. But this I did not consider that the country would believe me to possess, if some of the chief officers of the household were to be held by the immediate relatives of those Ministers whom I had displaced—my rivals for political power My chief difficulty of all would be with a party in Ireland. I was there in a minority by 22. The Ministers whose policy the majority defended were Lords Normanby and Morpeth. Of the chief household offices two where held by the sisters of Lord Morpeth, and the third by the wife of Lord Normanby. Of these ladies I speak and think but with the highest respect; I complain not that their appointments were of a political character; but I argue that this character of the household required that on a change of the Ministry, some changes of he household should follow Nay, it is said that Lord Normanby is a candidate for the very position I have relinquished, and Lord Morpeth for the seat of this House. It is true that the ladies might have avoided politics, and confined themselves to the mere duties of their station; but the same presumption might be raised in favour of the household noblemen and gentlemen, who are confessedly liable to go out with the government appointing them. With such disadvantages I could not have gone on or only by a dissolution which it was my anxious desire to avoid, for the sake of the public peace. I thought the service of the country might sustain little detriment by my failure nay even by my perpetual exclusion; but by assenting to the required conditions, I did feel that the country and the crown itself would suffer. Thus much I have thought it my duty to state, and I owe it to truth to add, that intervening reflection has confirmed me in my resolve.

Lord John Russell said, that the misconception which had existed was not as to facts, but as to principles. First, with respect to the ladies. It had been said, that the question of the household had been mooted in the Queen's first conversation with the Duke. Certainly she had said that she had been told it was useful to change the Parliamentary members of the household; but this was not by any advice of Lord Melbourne's on going out; for it had not occurred to Lord Melbourne as likely that any question as to that point would arise. There was no material difference as to facts between himself and Sir R Peel. When Sir Robert waited on the Queen, she expressed her resolve to deal with frankness and candour. She gave him full power as to the men of the household; he ought to apply the principle on which Lord Liverpool was selected to the ladies also; and on this the entire subject hinged. Upon the ration that she wished the whole of the female household to remain, put a end to all question as to a total or a partial change. Matters having come on Thursday to this issue, she sent again to Lord Melbourne, and consulted him what answer she should give to Sir R. Peel on the Friday morning. He called his colleagues together; and they advised her to send the letter just read by Sir Robert Peel. The question then was this, whether the resignation was one essential to the formation of a Government? Whether the change should be total, or only partial, it must be equally painful to a Queen's feelings. If the principle had been admitted, he might, when once confirmed as Minister, have insisted on more removals, which she would have been unable to prevent, without again breaking up the Administration. Unless the usage of former kings and queens prescribed the concession he (Lord John) was not prepared to admit that she was bound to do violence to her own feelings by yielding it. He then referred to precedents of continuance in service, and cited the precedent of the Duke of Malborough's two daughters. The failure of Sir Robert Peel to form an Administration, when the Queen had given him full powers, both as to political offices, and as to so much of the household as was occupied by members of either House of Parliament, could not be imputed to her Majesty, nor to those who had advised her. She thought that what he asked would destroy her personal comfort; his political difficulties would not have been smoothed by the removal of the household; that removal might have proved a source of weakness rather than of strength: she would not have looked favourably on servants forced upon her; and, being of a high and generous spirit, she would have been likely to have first and repaid ungenerous treatment. "On Sir R. Peel's resignation, continued Lord John "her Majesty commanded my attendance. As to the ladies, certainly she had not gathered the precise manner in which he proposed to exercise the power of removal. She asked me whether I thought her justified in the line she and taken; and my answering that I did, she said she hoped that, as she supported our Administration, we should now be ready to support her. Next day the former Cabinet assembled, and prepared a minute recording our opinion, that the principle of change applies to the officers of the household:—Lord John concluded by saying, that the question for himself and his friends had been merely whether they were willing to resume office, and become constitutionally responsible for her Majesty's decision. They had taken that responsibility, and must now trust to the opinion of Parliament and of the country.

May 15.—In the House of Peers last night, Lord Melbourne entered into explanations, which differ in no respect from those offered by Lord J. Russell, and in fact from what was stated by Sir R. Peel He said, that upon being admitted into her Majesty's presence on Thursday night, her Majesty stated that they had one or two points to talk over (Friday morning) the night before. Some conversation had taken place between her Majesty and Sir R. Peel, and a proposition made by him for the reconstruction of a Ministry, but that at the close of that conference the right honorable baronet made a proposal that the ladies of her Majesty's Household, not starting to what extent he would exercise that power—not stating how many or whom it his intention to propose to remove—but asking the power of dismissing the Ladies of the Household, and leaving unquestionably upon her Majesty's mind a very strong impression that it was intended to employ that power in a very great extent—to such an extent certainly, as to remove all the ladies of the bedchamber as well as of those filling an inferior situation in the Household.

In the conclusion of his speech, Lord Melbourne stated the reasons which had induced him to resign, namely, because these had, as he conceived, arisen among his supporters that amount of difference in opinion which lead him to suppose that he could no longer, with honour to himself or advantage to the country, conduct the affairs of Government; and he added—"I now, my lords, frankly declare that I resume office unequivocally and solely for this reason—that I will not abandon my Sovereign in a situation of difficulty and distress; and especially when demand is made upon her Majesty, with which I think she ought not to comply—a demand in my opinion my lords, inconsistent with her personal honour; and which if acquiesced in, would make her reign liable to all the changes and variations of political parties and render her domestic life one constant scene of unhappiness and discomfort.—(loud cheers)

The Duke of Wellington said, that it appeared to him to be absolutely impossible that any set of men should take the charge of Her Majesty's Government without having the universal influence and control over the establishment of the royal household, that influence and control which their immediate predecessors in office had—a control that appeared to him to be especially necessary, because that household had been composed by their predecessors in office, in order that the public might see that the government which was about to enter upon office, had possession of the entire confidence of her Majesty; and continued, I cannot but think that the principles on which I proposed to set with respect to the ladies of the bedchamber, in the case of a queen regnant, were the correct principles. The public will not believe that the Queen holds no political conversations with those ladies, and that political influence is not exercised by them, particularly considering who those persons are who hold situations. I believe the history of this country affords a number of instances in which secret and improper influence has been exercised by means of such conversations I have, my lords a somewhat strong opinion on this subject. I have unwortheless filled the office which the noble Viscount now so worthily holds; and I must say I have felt the inconvenience of an anomalous influence, not exercised perhaps by ladies, but anonymous influence undoubtedly of this description, and exerted simply in conversation; and I will tell the noble Viscount that the country is this moment suffering some inconvenience from the exercise of that very secret influence. (Hear, hear.) My lords, I believe I have gone further into principles upon this subject, than may, perhaps, suit the taste of the noble Viscount; but this I must say, that at the same time we claimed the control of the Royal Household, and would not have proposed to her Majesty to make any arrangements which would have been disagreeable to her. I felt it was absolutely impossible for me, under the circumstances of the present moment, not to undertake any share of the government of the country without that proof of her Majesty's confidence.—(Hear, hear.)

The following are the members of the proposed Tory Government so far as report goes:—

Sir Robert Peel—First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Duke of Wellington—President of the Council.

Lord Lyndhurst—Lord Chancellor. [Department

Earl of Aberdeen—Secretary of State Foreign

Lord Stanley—Ditto for the Colonies.

Sir James Graham—Home Department.

Sir Frederick Pollock—Attorney General.

Mr. Creswell—Solicitor General.

The Duke of Beaufort—Lord Chamberlain.

Earl of Liverpool—Lord Steward.

Lord Wharncliffe—Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Lord Eliot—Secretary for Ireland.

Sir Edward Sugden—Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

INSURRECTION IN PARIS

PARIS, Sunday Night, May 12.—This day, at half-past 2 o'clock, commenced an emeute if not insurrection, of a very serious nature.

At this hour a number of men, amounting to at least 200, suddenly made their appearance in the Rue St. Denis. Their presence attracted a great crowd of idlers, and they were immediately joined by others of their own party; no doubt, all of them lodge like them, dressed in blouses, with caps. They passed down the streets rapidly, and halting before the house of Lepage, the gun-maker, which they attacked, and after some difficulty, forced an entrance into it, and seized about 120 muskets and other fire arms, which they carried off. They forthwith passed down that street (the focus of all previous insurrections) and, reaching the quays, divided. One party proceeded to the military post on the Quai aux Fleurs, adjoining the Palais de Justice, and called on the troops to surrender. Without waiting for a reply they fired a volley, which killed a very fine young man, the sentinel at the door, and wounded the officer in command, and a sergeant. The soldiers (principally conscripts) immediately surrendered, and were disarmed.

Having achieved this feat, they attacked the Palais de Justice, but were repulsed by the Municipal Guards, who killed several of them.

Another party returned towards the Post Neuf, partly at leisure and at their ease, as I saw them in the revolution, and consequently on the 5th of June, 1832.

Several dead bodies were brought to the Morgue, and among them two women—one elegantly dressed, and the other of the working or lower orders.

While this was going on, the military post in the Place du Chatelet was attacked and easily disarmed.

A party, which proceeded to the Place de Greve at-tacked the Hotel de Ville, defended by some National Guards, who surrendered to them. They erected on the Quai Pelletier a barricade with coaches.

A general movement was then made towards that classic ground the Rue St. Martin, where as usual, they commenced erecting barricades, extending from the church of St. Merie towards the Halle. The Rue Aubrey le Boucher and those in its vicinity are said to be as well covered with barricades as in June, 1832.

These scenes had occurred scarcely an hour. The municipal guards were the first who approached the insurgents and fired on them. After a heavy fire with but little mischief to either party, the latter gave way and fell back on their central point already mentioned. The National Guards also turned out numerously at the first beat of the rappel. Patroles of each passing every instant through the streets, and an occasional shot is heard, but no volleys or sound to indicate that a general attack is going on. The morning will be a terrible one, it is to be feared.

You will now ask me, as I have asked a hundred people, "What is all this? What is it about?"

I am told it is the outbreak of a regular republican conspiracy. That the disaffected have 26 depots of arms in several parts of the town, and that they are well organized and well prepared.

A barricade was formed in the Rue St. Denis, near the church of St. Leu, with a hackney coach and an omnibus; another at the corner of the Rue Mauconseil et Tiquetonne, and there are others, we are told, at divers point of the Rue St. Martin. At half past six o'clock the barricade of La Rue Tiquetonne was attacked and destroyed by a company of the grenadiers, of the 3d Legion, sup-ported by a detachment of the 15th Regiment of the Line." One of the National Guards (M Lebeau) was killed. Several arrests have taken place.

There is in the affair an alarming feature. Six or eight regiments of the garrison are under orders for the departments, to be relieved by others on the march for the metropolis. Rumour states that their removal is owing to an intimation received by Government that they had been successfully tampered with. If this be true, there is but too much reason to expect that the insurgents will be joined by some of the soldiery.

Tea.—Scarcely any alteration was produced in the value of this article by the reported stoppage of the trade in China brought by the Overland Mail the arrival of which we noticed in the Postcript of our Report of 13th ultimo, the same Mail bringing also the account of the settlement of the dispute. On the first impulse a little more spirit was displayed in the biddings at the sales then in progress, and a trifling advance in low Congou was in some instances paid on the 15th, the day the news was generally known, but on the following day, which closed the sales, even this slight improvement was scarcely maintained.

Between the last sales and the present month's a firmer tone, is apparent, but it has not been maintained, as will be seen by the following daily report of sales now on: the quantity brought forward is so large for a monthly sale, being upward of 8,000, 000 lb., particulars of which we give below.

The Tea Sales opened on the 6th inst. with more spirit than has lately marked the early parts of our Tea auctions. In rates there was but little variation from those which prevailed at the close of last month's sales; wherever a slight difference occurred it inclined to improvement. Of 14,300 Packages offered nearly 3000 were sold.

On the 17th instant 13,300 Packages were offered, and 4000 sold, without variation upon the rates of the 6th: the tone of this day's sale was, however, more flat and inanimate, the trade appearing but little disposed to purchase.

Extreme flatness marked the sale on the 8th inst. only a fifth part of the quantity offered finding buyers say 4,000 out of nearly 20,000 Packages: the only material reductions of rate, which occurred, was in good and fine Souchongs, which were about 6d lower, common Congous 1d ditto.

Of 13,000 Packages submitted on the 20th instant, upwards of 5000 sold without any further decline upon the former day's quotations: as may be inferred from the larger quantity taken, a better tone prevailed but not to the extent of improving prices. Yesterday the sales closed without any variation from the day preceding.

Silk.—There has been an improved demand in this market since our last, and China may be quoted 6d a 1s higher: Bengals have sold currently at previous rates.

Public sales of about 700 bales Bengal and 650 bales China have just concluded, at which about half were disposed of, that portion bought in being generally of the lowest qualities, for which holders are anticipating an advance. Manufactures held now but a small stock of the Raw material, and having lately made large sales of goods, we expect a good business for some time should no monetary or political derangement occur to prevent it.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 31st Aug. 1839.

Expulsion of the English from China.

We stated in our last Saturday's paper that many of the English, not considering themselves any longer safe at Macao from the Chinese, were about following the example given by Capt. Elliot, who sailed for Hongkong on the 16th of this month, in order not on his account to involve the Portuguese Government of Macao in difficulties with the Chinese. On the 17th at night a yellow Imperial Edict was placarded, of which we are sorry not to be able to give a translation but only such abstract as we had verbally from some of our friends who read it, the Chinese shewing, we know not for what reason, no disposition to allow any foreigner driven away by the servant of one of our friends who is the act of copying. This edict, as far as we understood, approves of all the measures taken by the Imperial Commissioner to put down the Opium-trade, and threatens foreigners caught in the act of smuggling the drug with immediate execution, the principals with beheading and the accessaries with strangling, and all their property to be confiscated. If however vessels arriving should by mistake have Opium on board and deliver the same up to Government on arrival, they may proceed unmolested to Whampoa to trade.

On the following day another proclamation from the Imperial Commissioner and many of the High Officers of the Province was placarded, recapitulating the above edict, also threatening with immediate death such as attempted to introduce Opium into the country; again ordering the ships at Hong-kong immediately to proceed to Whampoa; and the Opium-store-ships that had delivered their Opium at Chumpee to sail away without loss of time; threatening with destruction if these orders were not obeyed; again complaining of the injustice withholding the murderer of the man at Hong-kong from the resources of the Chinese law; and saying that if the murderer was not given up all foreigners (the English are not here particularly named) shall to a man be held responsible.

These are, we believe the principal points of these edicts, something is therein said about the time when its provisions are to be acted on, which however, from fear of stating it incorrectly, we refrain from mentioning.

Meantime on that same Sunday morning the account of a most atrocious murder that had been committed by Chinese upon British subjects reached Macao. Of this horrid outrage the circumstances are as follows, or very nearly so, we having them from the mouth of one who was present at the depositions of the survivors, which depositions themselves, as taken before the managing Committee, we were unable to obtain, owing to the hurry of the subsequent removal from Macao of the British community. It appears then that on the night of Saturday the 17th, the small passage schooner Black Joke on her way from Macao to Hongkong, was, owing to a contrary wind and tide, anchored off Lantao island, when before any one on board had seen them approach, they were surrounded by three Chinese boats, two large and one small-er, to all appearance mandarin boats, which having fired three shots of charcoal dust so as effectually to blind the crew of the Black Joke, the Chinese boarded, and cut down the five lascars immediately, and threw them overboard. The lascars, awakened by the noise, and seeing the fate of his comrades, jumped over board, and succeeded in eluding the enemy by clinging to, and hiding himself behind the rudder. There was but one passenger on board, Mr. Moss, a young Englishman, who when hearing the noise overboard, a hastening forth from the Cabin, was knocked on the head, and fell back into the Cabin. The work of murder on deck being completed, the Chinese went down into the Cabin, which they began to rifle, and seeing that Mr Moss still gave symptoms of life, most barbarously wounded him in many places, and while one of the murderers held the ear of the sufferer another deliberately sawed it off with a blunt instrument, taking with it a large portion of skin from the head, and afterwards in derision stuffed the ear down the throat of the almost dying man. Just before the perpetration of this fiendish act, Mr. Moss seeing a fellow about to cut off his finger to possess himself of a ring thereon, had the presence of mind to draw it off, and give it to the ruffian. Loss of blood, and pain had deprived Mr. Moss of his senses and it appears that the robbers had no time to carry away all the boat contained, probably from their seeing an English vessel approaching. They therefore attempted to set the boat on fire in several places, and taking with them their booty, went away. About half an hour after this, the Brit. Schooner Harriet, Capt. Hall, coming from Hongkong, fortunately for the survivors was the boat, and boarding her found all the dead who had crept from his place of concealment, and Mr. Moss in the dreadful state already described. Such assistance as was then available was afforded to the wounded man, who still gave signs of life, and taking the Black Joke in tow, the Harriet arrived here early on Sunday morning, when Mr. Moss was immediately conveyed to the Hospital, and we are happy to say that there is considerable hope of his recovery, though it is feared that he will lose the one of one arm of which the muscle has been completely cut through with a knife.

The Tindal must positively affirm that the boats were in every respect like mandarin boats, and having, as he guessed, about 300 men on board; and this statement seems to be borne out by the circumstance of a mandarin-cap having been left behind by the murderers. It may well be supposed that this catastrophe, coupled with the publication of the Edicts above referred to, threatening with execution on the spot and without trial if found smuggling opium, and with retribution for the man killed at Hongkong, produced the greatest consternation among the foreign community here. The managing Committee had, we understand, several interviews with H. E. the Governor of Macao, and this matter and indeed the whole morning in deliberating upon what measures were best to be adopted. The result was a recommendation to the British community to leave Macao the day following at noon, as they could no longer be considered safe from attacks of the Chinese. The private British community still remaining at Macao consisted at the time of 70 Europeans and about 120 Parsees, and the means of embarkation were rather scanty, as to ships boats at least, and it was expected that some delay would take place and the hour of embarkation be later than that fixed.

On the night of Sunday last it was generally reported among the inhabitants of this town that about 1800 Chinese soldiers were about to land from the Lorpa, and an equal number at Casilla bay, with the intention of surrounding the houses of the English and making them prisoners. We believe that this was actually intended, but that a strong remonstrance from the Macao Government, and an assurance that the English were about quietly to embark on the following day, stayed this enterprise.

The whole of Monday preparations were going forward for the embarkation of the English, and this was at last effected at about four o'clock, and at about five, the small flottilla, consisting of eight or nine small passage schooners, some lorchas, and a number of ship's boats, and four armed vessels of a larger size, set sail but the threatening appearance of the weather made them seek shelter in the Typa, where they anchored for the night.

Thus for the first time during a period of near 150 years, has the friendly intercourse between the English and the Chinese been entirely suspended! When or how it will be resumed, it is impossible to foresee!

On Tuesday and Wednesday many of our Parsee neighbours who had not been able to make ready before, embarked, and on Friday only, at about noon the vessels, until then prevented from leaving, by a continuance of bad weather set sail for Hong kong, where the whole of the British China merchants will for the present stay on board of their ships. On going over to Hongkong good care was taken that the small boats kept together escorted by larger vessels to prevent any atrocities like that committed by the Chinese on board the Black Joke.

As regards the outrage, we are, although the Tindal deposes to their having been Mandarin boats, disposed to believe that they were pirates, the Mandarin cap left on board the schooner proving but little, it being the custom of gangs of thieves when ther on shore or about to disguise themselves as Mandarines, the more easily to deceive and gain admittance to their victims. Of this practice the numerous edicts warning the people not to allow themselves to be illused by in p stons under the guise of Mandarines, are a sufficient proof. Owing to the persecution of the smuggling trade, thousands of daring men, accustomed to set at defiance the laws of their country, have lost their lively hood, and these will naturally consider piracy as their only resource. Indeed we expect soon to hear of many similar outrages, though probably chiefly upon Chinese craft, and some it is rumoured, have already been committed. This neighbourhood has ever been the favorite haunt of all kinds of desperate characters, and under present circumstances it is probably be so more than ever. We should think it not unlikely, that the pirates, being aware of many people being about to leave Macao for Hongkong conceived this a favorable opportunity, and possibly had their scouts at Macao to give notice of any boat about to sail. Moreover, the schooner either belonged to, or was chartered by, Mr. Just, who had a watchmaker's establishment in China, and in whose employ the unfortunate Mr. Moss was. The Chinese might suppose that many of the packages put on board at Macao, in a small compass, contained articles of great value, and their cupidity being thus roused led them to the commission of the dreadful massacre. It is some consolation to know that in their expectation of much plunder they were deceived, the boat having on board, besides about 400 dollars in silver, and these we believe they did not find, only one watch or clock, the rest of the packages being luggage. Had the Chinese belonged to Government, their object, if they suspected the boat of having Opium on board, would probably have been to possess themselves of the vessel and her cargo, and to take the crew prisoners to be judged afterwards by their own authorities. As it happened they began by killing every one they could, and after ransacking the vessel, and plundering every thing, with the exception of a few packages, which the having in sight, probably of the Harriet prevented them from removing, they attempted to destroy the vessel, it being evidently their intention that no vestige of crew or vessel should remain to become a tell-tale against them. That the Chinese Government should have given orders for the destruction of every foreign craft, their boats could master, seems to be impossible from the tenor of their proceedings hitherto, nor could they wish, supposing it even possible that such orders had been given against the English, to attack indiscriminately all foreigners; and how could the mandarins know to what nation those on board the Black Joke belonged, it being night, and moreover the murders having been perpetrated before any questions were asked? They might as well have beat Americans, and these it appears the policy of the Chinese, under present circumstances, to conciliate as much as possible.

Another boat, the Jane, was, we understand chased this morning after, but luckily escaped similar treatment by a squall springing up which carried her, though an indifferent sailor, soon without reach of her pursuers. One of the Lascars belonging to the Black Joke, and who had jumped overboard, contrived to keep himself afloat, although wounded, until picked up by the Jane. This poor man also, we learn, had escaped his arm completely cut off, and the other partly. He has been taken to Hongkong, so that the total of killed and wounded is four of the former, and two of the latter.

As requires Macao a good many Chinese families have emigrated during the week, unobtrusive, no doubt, of cause any display of violence on the part of their authorities should the English not have been prevailed on to go away.

Strict surveillance seems to have been kept upon the sale of provisions in the market, the supplies of which, some days have really been rather short. Report says that the Imperial Commissioner is soon about to leave this neighbourhood, and to proceed to Hong-kong, there to take hostile measures against the English shipping. Hitherto, as far as we have heard, no warjaucks have made their appearance there, nor have the Chinese ceased to supply provisions to the ships. There are rumours, however, of a number of fireships having been constructed which are now waiting the pleasure of the Commissioner. The information we gave last week of an intended poisoning of the wells at Hong-kong seems not to have been without foundation;—we have been told that a bundle of poisonous herbs had actually been put into a well or spring, but discovered in time to prevent mischief; the water from this well was given to some goats without causing any bad effects.

It is now upwards of five months since the foreign community at Canton were imprisoned, and yet, though the news of it have reached India long since, not a single man of war has yet made her appearance to protect British Interests at stake to so very large an amount; and the only ship of war here during the first part of all these occurences has sailed away as if her presence could have been of no use! If any of them should soon arrive they will find arduous duties to perform.

Just after writing the above we hear of the arrival of H. M. S. Volage on the evening of the 29th. The ship lay in Macao roads until about one o'clock yesterday when she weighed anchors and proceeded, we suppose, to Hongkong.

From a Correspondent.

Ways and Means.—The garrison of some station in Manteehooria had been very long without pay, and there were no prospects of even making up the arrears. In this emergency the commanding general applied to a neighbouring district, and having obtained the imperial sanction, procured a considerable sum of money without interest. The capital was was lent to shopkeepers at the rate of 10 per cent, and from the proceeds the soldiers subsist. This is really an excellent plan, and many institutions in China are thus maintained. It often happens, that a Province is too short, and two ends not exactly meeting, a loan is made from the treasury of another, and the capital so long put on interest until the sums thus realized are sufficient to pay the deficit. Though much rguery takes place in these transactions, and many a debtor to Government absconds, yet it keeps the Provincial Governments from heavy debts. Lately however the defalcation of the revenue has been so great, and so many merchants have become bankrupt, that even this expellent fails, and no other resources remains, but to issue paper money or to apply to the generous Rothschilds! How general would be the happiness of the Canton community, if our friend Lin would form an acquaintance with the banker and relieve the people from sundry anxieties.

Hwang ho. Amongst the most unruly and at the same time independent powers that domineer in the despotic Central Kingdom none exceed the Yellow river. Manage it in what a way you like, raise dykes like hillocks, and station thousands of the preventive guard on its banks, still the haughty monarch defies all control and levels the obstacles that oppose his majestic course like mere mole hills. This appears to have been also the case during the course of this year. The superintendent therefore, who holds the rank of a provincial Governor, has set to work to repair the damages and sent in the bill to the Great Emperor. One amongst the many items amounts to the trifling sum of 170,000 taels and adding up the whole it makes a considerable sum. Sycee as well as dollars being in these bad times a very scarce commodity, there is some demur in paying the debt, and memorial after memorial have been dispatched without effecting a liquidation. In fact the bill has been protested, and the transaction is likely to be placed on record to remain there.

Pokien.—The board of war has ordered that drill serjeants should be sent to the troops of Fokeen and Chekeang to teach them the use of fire arms, in which they are extremely defective. Since this however constitutes the strength of the army, the soldiers ought to be indefatigable in acquiring the art of using them in perfection.

Shansi.—The harvest having been bad in several districts, directions are given for opening the public granaries and supplying the wants of the suffering people.

Punish.—Some unpleasant affairs of which we are not able to learn the real nature, have occurred in the de artment of the Board for the Imperial kindred. Many of the culprits have absconded, whilst others have been seized and condemned to suffer severe punishment.

Manila.—We have to notice the appearance in Manila of a weekly Price-current, in the Spanish and English languages. We are informed that the Editors are well supported in obtaining the most correct quotations of prices and reports on the market. Besides these, this publication gives the shipping news, rates of Exchanges and Insurances, abstract of imports and exports, as well as of the rates of duties levied on articles for importation or exportation. The annual subscription to this Price Current is $ 10.

The Imperial Commissioner has given notice to the authorities of Macao that he will visit this town to morrow. H. E. proposes leaving Chin nan (Casa branca) at 6 o'clock to morrow morning, and, if the visit takes place, he may be expected here at about eight o'clock. The letter from the Koxum is too giving notice of this his intention is couched in the most friendly terms.

The arrivals during the week are the Piony from Acoutta, bringing late news from Europe, of which we have made copious extracts from the Singapore Free Press Extra of 8th August; the Mindy, from Manila; the Cordelia, from Liverpool; and H. M. S. Volage from Singapore; they have all proceeded to Hongkong.

We learn that the French ships Alcmene and Alexandre will be despatched on Tuesday next the 3rd September, the former for Manila and Batavia, the latter for Batavia direct.

Art. IV. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia; government of Vargas, Cruzabegui, Cruzat, Zabalburu, Bustamente, marquis of Torre-Campo, &c. (Continued from Chinese Repository Vol. VII., page 541) and from Canton Press No. 47, 24th August.

The waters of the Pacific Ocean had not yet been sufficiently examined, except in the direct track of the annual galleons, to make it evident, that other valuable islands were not still in reserve-tion. Magellan had seen land south of the Marianas; other later navigators had done the same; and in 1696, two boats with 29 natives on board had been driven on the coast of Samar. The report of these discoveries in reserve reached Europe, and pope Clement XI. was earnest in his recommendations of farther exploring voyages. Philip Vth yielded to these instances, and enjoined the governors of Mexico and the Philippines to proceed in the matter, in connexion with the fathers of the Company. These orders reached Manila just before Zabalburu's recall, and a vessel was immediately dispatched to do the work, but returned unsuccessful. A second arrival of shipwrecked Carolinians now took place, and a second ship was sent out to find the group from which they came, but with no better success than the first expedition.

In the course of the same year (1709) don Martin de Orsua y Arismendi, conde de Lizarraga arrived, with the appointment of governor, and by his order, a third vessel was dispatched in the following September. This ship made the Palaos group in 5 to 7 degrees of south latitude, and held some friendly communications with the natives; but being afterward driven from her position by gales, returned to Manila, leaving two padres on the islands. The report of an actual discovery of a new group led to the preparation of a stronger expedition, but the unfortunate party perished, almost to a man, by shipwreck, in the straits of St. Bernardino. Again, the annual ship to the Marianas was directed to revisit the Palaos, and did actually touch at them in 1712, but the 18 islands sighted on this voyage were of inconsiderable importance. The existence of any extensive land in that quarter was now discredited, since so many costly expeditions had failed to find it. The search was given over, and the only intelligence ever had of the lost padres was a vague report of their falling victims to the ferocity of the Palaons.

The conde de Lizarraga was a man of most amiable character, and his administration was throughout, unusually popular. A condescending deportment gained him the affections of the countrymen, while his patronage of native industry, especially in checking an excessive immigration from China, endeared him to the people. He died, deeply regretted, in 1715, leaving the administration in the hands of the Audiencia, headed at that time by don Joseph Torralba. This very unfortunate, or very mischievous, person soon contrived to embroil himself in several suits with strong antagonists. An order came to reinstate one of the displaced oidors of Zabalburu's time; but Torralba refused to fulfil it, and thus exposed himself to an appeal to the Council of the Indies. A feud arose between the clergy of Arragonese, and those of Castilian, extraction, and Torralba succeeded in drawing on himself the animosity of the latter party. He had also become deeply implicated in fiscal malpractices, when the arrival of don F. M. de Bustamente y Rueda, in August, 1717, again reduced him to a subordinate position.

This energetic, but ill-fated governor began his course with fiscal reforms, which were equally efficacious in replenishing the public chest, and in making him unpopular.

His attention was early drawn to the value of the islands of Paragua (Palawan), as an outwork of the colony. For the protection of the mission already existing there, and for the complete reduction of the island, he built a fort at Labo near its southern extremity. This post was continued for a few years, and then abandoned by his successor. The old fortress of Zamboangan, too, was rebuilt by Bustamente's order, after 37 years of neglect, and in opposition to the wishes of his advisers. Desirous to mark his administration by farther enterprises, Bustamente dispatched an envoy to Siam, in 1718, whose his reception is detailed at great length by our Augustine chronicler. From this account, we may extract, for amusement's sake the question, so often asked by eastern princes, in later times, "whether the letters of the envoy were from the king of Spain, or from the governor of the colony." If we record, furthermore, that on the presentation of these letters, the Jesuit college struck its bells, and the Dutch factory saluted and showed its colors, it is not for the sake of the ceremony, but to notice the fact, that there was then such a factory and college at the Siamese capital. The fruits of this mission were, a commercial treaty, a plot of ground for a factory, the privilege of building ships in the Meinam, mutual exemption from port-charges, &c. The advantages thus gained appear to have been ill kept, for we are told, that a Siamese junk, visiting Manila the following year, was so ill received, as to destroy the confidence reposed on their part, in the whole treaty.

Orders now came from Madrid for the apprehension and trial of Torralba. He was accordingly committed on charges of mal-administration, amounting to $600,000 or $700,000. His acts as governor ad interim, were annulled; his goods sequestrated; and he himself confined at Cavite.

A singular train of circumstances was now operating to undermine the authority, and shorten the life of Bustamente. The annual galleon (of 1716), was just being dispatched for Mexico, and along with a valuable cargo, she bore a laudatory memorial of their governor's acts, from the city and citizens of Manila. As she slowly left the bay, a suspicion crossed Bustamente's mind, that she was lingering for dispatches of an opposite tenor. He hastily ordered the captain to shore, and the angry crew threw the unwelcome messenger overboard. Suspicion now became proof; the vessel was pursued and brought back; her captain displaced; and the command given to another.

It so happened, that, at this time, the imprisonment of Torralba, and other circumstances had almost annihilated the Audiencia, thus placing the sole authority in the hands of the governor. At this moment, a conspiracy (involving the friends of the displaced captain and other chief citizens,) was reported to be in existence, and Bustamente, in an evil hour, taking counsel from Torralba, resolved on crushing the supposed conspirators. The accused individuals fled for refuge to the churches and convents, and from these asyla, the archbishop was called upon to dislodge them. One priest questioned the validity of orders, emanating from the governor, unsupported by the Audiencia. His scruples on this head having been referred to the universities, and sustained by them, were submitted to the governor. The reference only added to Bustamente's exasperation; he demanded a full retractation; and charged the consequences of the alledged conspiracy on the prelate and his advisers. Following up his harsh resolves, the governor called the citizens to arms, pointed the guns on the walls of the city, and gave the signal for firing on the people.

The archbishop, on his side, buckling on his spiritual weapons, excommunicated Torralba as the secret foe of the clergy; whereupon he was arrested and confined, with several of his party. Bustamente had now united both clergy and people against him, and when his call to arms came, they assembled, but not to support him. Alarmed by the defection, the governor ordered the artillery to be fired on the gathering masses, and it was only because the aim was bad, that they escaped with slight injury. The crowds pressed on to the palace; the guards fled; and the governor was left to a single-handed encounter. Disdaining accommodation, he threw himself upon his assailants, wounding the nearest with his sabre; but the contest was short; he was cut down, and his son, a gallant young officer, rushing to his father's rescue, fell beside him. The exasperated mob wreaked their vengeance on the dying men, dragging them through the streets, and covering them with filth and ignominy. Torralba, and the other advisers of the governor were now in turn thrown into prison, and the archbishop and his fellow-sufferers set at liberty. The prelate was further hailed as the chief of the popular party, conducted to the now vacant palace, and entreated to take the administration of the government. His clerical friends, to whom he referred the question, united in pressing his acceptance. Yielding to their arguments—the danger of the colony, the broken condition of the Audiencia, his power to restore order, &c.—he besought their prayers, and support, and assumed the office. An Audiencia ad interim was reconstructed; quiet restored; and the prelate, turning from these civil cares, ordained a solemn funeral for the dead—the victims of popular fury. In illustration of the "lucid pomp" of these ceremonials, our author adds, that 74 quintals of wax were consumed in candles. Provision was also made for sending to Mexico, the family of the deceased, consisting of six orphan children.

It now appeared that unfavorable representations of Bustamente's acts, had long before gone to Madrid, for royal orders, now came, directing, that the old Audiencia be restored, and in case of the governor's evasion of these commands, requiring the archbishop to supersede him. This almost prophetic provision arrived after its own fulfilment, so far as concerned the suspended officers; but it had all its intended weight, in quieting men's minds, and confirming the archbishop's authority. Thus supported, the prelate, by a decree of October 19th, (1719), eight days after Bustamente's death, instituted a solemn inquiry into the causes and manner of that tragedy. In the course of the trial, it was deposed by seventeen witnesses, that the vexatious proceedings of the deceased's his imprisonment of various citizens, lay and clerical; his declared designs, driving many others to the asyla of the altars; his call to arms; and lastly, his attack on the foremost of the crowd; were the causes of the fatal casualty. One or two went farther, and justified the act, as necessary to the general safety. Torralba auswered them all, charging his murdered friend with avarice, oppression, and inhumanity; and finding a divine intervention in his sudden removal. These depositions were full as to the circumstances of the day, but when the inquiry came to turn upon the leaders of the insurrectionary movement, and the authors of the bloody acts, not a single witness could testify to their identity. The investigation closed; the evidence were transmitted to the council of the Indies; and the people of Manila consoled themselves, while waiting for the consequences, with the persuasion, that they had been "the executors of divine and human justice."

When the news of this event reached Mexico, the representative of Bustamente in that country presented himself before the viceroy, and demanded the arrest of several persons, lately arrived in the galleon, as participators in the death of his kinsman. They were accordingly arrested, but it being decided, that the Mexican courts had no jurisdiction in the case, the accuser and the accused were remanded to Manila together, there to take their place in the trial before the marques de Torre-Campo, the new governor.

This nobleman had been called to the office on the receipt of the news of Bustamente's death at Madrid, in 1720. He reached his post, the following August. The archbishop gave way to the new officer, and submitted also to the royal command on his own share in the late proceedings, conveyed in orders to exchange his chair for a see in Mexico. He survived the voyage, but expired in a little more than a month after entering his new cathedral.

Several matters of pressing importance engaged Torre-Campo's attention on his arrival, and for a time, diverted him from the discharge of his special commission, to inquire into the death of his predecessor. The piratical states on the south were extending their depredations, and the marques was not at first very successful in his efforts to check their atrocious visitations. A mass of legal processes, and other unfinished business was also on the hands of the law officers, and before this was disposed of, a further difficulty was started. The royal order of inquiry had been based on unofficial information, and it was held, that no steps should be taken, till the receipt of further instructions. The marques entertained the doubt, and submitted the knotty point to his confessor. The Franciscan father he should have been a Jesuit) argued it with admirable ingenuity, and finally decided, that the inquiry ought not to be pressed, until new reference was made to his majesty.

In 1724, further orders came, requiring the investigation, and again the marques repaired to his ingenious confessor. The padre found in this second rescript, "a most elegant proof," that he was quite right in his previous argument. If the first order had been sufficient, why this second. But this second rescript was dated previously to the receipt of the representation made by the marques, and hence it is evident that a third must be coming, and should be expected. A multitude of remarks concurred to demand delay, and the matter being submitted to two Jesuit fathers also, they on other grounds, decided against immediate investigation. The marques yielded to these able casuists, and the inquiry was suspended. It does not appear, that the question of guilt or innocence was ever decided. Years passed by the actors in the tragic scene disappeared from the stage; and the whole transaction was suffered to sink into oblivion. Among the later survivors, was the much-to-be-blamed, or much-to-be-pitied, Torralba. Heavily fined by the court for his doings as acting governor, transferred and re-transferred from prison at Cavite to prisons at Manila, he lived on in wretchedness till 1734; owing his subsistence in his last years, and his burial after death, to the hand of charity.

We here arrive at the close of the second century of Spanish intercourse with Eastern Asia. The notices we have exhibited are far from conveying what we most desired to exhibit, the steps by which the Spanish power was extended over the islands from the Bashees to Basilan, and still more the process, by which 2,500,000 men of Malayan origin and habits, were brought to a comparatively high point of civilization, and to a peculiar attachment to the church of Rome. These successive steps, our authorities do not supply, and we cannot go beyond them. The reader must therefore imagine, that, while we have been detailing the succession of colonial rulers, the fate of expeditions, the bitter results of controversy, or the ravages of the mob or the earthquake, the work of conquest and civilization has been going on slowly but surely. The Spanish soldier and the Catholic father have been co-workers together. The latter especially, with all his imperfections as a moral and religious guide, has been preparing, the while, in his remote parish, the church and the altar; spanning the neighboring rivulet with its arch of stone; introducing articles of comfort and sale; superseding the native character by the Roman letter; training the voices of Bisayan or Tagalo children to the music of Spain and Italy; standing, as does all this, between the native subject and his subduer, a constant mediator and protector. Making his home in remote hamlets, unknown to us even by name, he has toiled on in the cause of civilization, forgotten and alone. The detail of his labors is already lost, but the results remain. They are honorable to their author; and as we contemplate them, our only grief is, that a vicious influence was allowed with him to deprive him of the best instrument ever wielded by human hands, for the uses of philanthropy. Had the Catholic missionary been permitted and required to carry with him the Holy Scriptures, his track would not have been marked merely by the bestowal of present and temporal benefits. His civilization would not have stopped at the same point, at which it is now nearly stationary in the Philippines. His influence would have gathered new strength with every exercise; the impulse given to the native mind would have become a permanent, self-sustaining power; and they who imported it would have been permitted, ere this, to rejoice over a whole people, raised from idolatrous barbarism to high endowment and pure piety.

Native Society in India

THE DEAD ALIVE.

The long journeys frequently undertaken by natives of India, and their protracted absences from home, often occasion reports of their death, which in some instances are acted upon in a very tragical manner. A family of high caste, but inferior circumstances, were settled upon the property of their family friends, in a village near the city of Etawah; two brothers alone remained, and the younger, finding it difficult to support the establishment upon the limited means which were left, determined to seek his fortune in a distant country. Accordingly, he took leave of his friends, committing his young wife, to whom he had been married about a year, to the guardianship of his elder brother; the whole family inhabiting one house, a case of frequent occurrence in the patriarchal mode of living still followed in India. For the first and second years, remittances came from Buljeet Singh, together with letters, which gave, however, a very vague account of his situation and prospects; and during the three following years, no intelligence whatever was received from him. At length, news was brought of his death, the information being well authenticated. A brother-townsman, who had served with him in the Mahratta army, witnessed the catastrophe, which occurred in fording a river. Several horsemen, and Buljeet Singh amongst the rest, were carried away by the force of the current, and drowned. The friend and comrade, Chait Ram, charged himself with the property of the deceased, which he brought with him and delivered up to the family. He had, however, been a long time in the execution of this trust, waiting for a convenient opportunity to return; and from his account, Buljeet Singh had been dead more than a year previous to the announcement to the family of the event. Affairs had not gone on very prosperously with Hurruk Singh, the elder brother; and, upon this intelligence, he considered it to be advisable that his sister-in-law should perform the rite of suttee. Though the expense of her keep, in the degraded condition of a widow, would not amount to much, there were other considerations which rendered her death desirable. Examples were not wanting in the village, of widows who either married again or lived openly in a disreputable manner, while one or two had gone off with Mohamedans. To avoid this disgrace, and to obtain the credit which the occurrence of a suttee in a family never fails to confer, it was resolved that Kooshlee should ascend the funeral pile, and burn herself with the few articles belonging to her deceased husband. Though living happily with Buljeet Singh and retaining a strong recollection of his kindness, long absence had so far reconciled the widow to her loss, that she felt no violent grief at the tidings of his death, and was not at all desirous to sacrifice her own life to secure his entrance into paradise. She was, however, [illegible] to carry this [illegible] out. The [illegible] his sister-in-law had resolved upon self-immolation, the house was surrounded by brahmins, and every art resorted to in order to excite the poor victim to go through the act with propriety. Stunned by the apparent hopelessness of her situation, Kooshlee sunk into a state of torpor, and was, therefore, unable to offer the feeble opposition in her power. Had there been scars of the fact, there were Mohamedan police-officers in the village who might have interfered; but, living a life of great seclusion, she was ignorant of the protections afforded by the British Government to persons placed in her situation, and nothing occurred to induce a supposition that the intended sacrifice was not voluntary on her part. During the whole of the day subsequent to Chait Ram's arrival, who had entered the village on the previous evening, Kooshlee was overpowered by ceremony, decked out in all her ornaments, and, taking occasionally small doses of opium, the only sustenance (if such it might be called) which passed her lips, towards sunset she seemed to be in a fit state to undergo the fatal ceremony. The whole village was, of course, in a state of excitation; such a thing had not occurred for a long time in the small community, and the spectacle formed a sort of gala, very acceptable to persons whose religious feelings were strongly in favour of a deed supposed to be so honourable to the gods. As the time approached, Kooshlee felt more and more unwilling to submit to a cruel death; but she could offer no resistance, and, in the proper period, she was dragged rather than led forth, submitting, yet with reluctance, to her fate. The village was situated near the banks of the Jumna, directly in the road from a ferry, and the native [illegible] according to custom to take place on the river's brink. The pre[illegible] in consequence of the access of property conveyed by Chait Ram, were made with no small degree of magnificence; the pile was high, well constructed, and furnish d with a sufficient quantity of fuel. Kooshlee caught a glimpse of it, but was unable to raise her eyes to it from the ground; however, was either under too much awe, or too completely stupified, to make any attempt to escape, and, therefore, the ceremony was not hurried for the purpose of concealing her desire to avoid the horrid sacrifice to which she was condemned. It is usual to ask questions of a suttee, who, during the period from the time of the cession to the moment of cremation is supposed to answer like an oracle; but it is only enthusiasts, who go to death with a sort of triumph, that can indulge in those propitiatory benefactions. She replied to none of all, and it was thought advisable to leave her to herself. She had walked three times round the pile, her ornaments were taken off and distributed amongst her relatives, and the flowers with which she was garlanded eagerly appropriated by the surrounding spectators; and, seized suddenly by four brahmins, she was forcibly placed upon the pile. The [illegible], or torches, were all ready, when, bounding up with a piercing shriek, she stood (to the horror and consternation of her family, who had expected that she would have resigned herself quietly to the flames) on the top of the pile, exclaiming, "I am not dead—I am not burned—I am not dead—I will not be burned—I will not be burned—bring me water to release me!" All eyes were turned in the direction to which, in her distraction, she had pointed; and upon the road appeared a Mahratta horseman, who had leaped out of the ferry-boat upon his chargers, and was now advancing at full gallop. A part of the pile had already kindled, but the greater number of the persons employed to ignite it had dropped their torches on the positive intimation given by the natives, and were confined the stranger's approach. It was, indeed, the other than Buljeet Singh, and though his wife supposed had not seen him, and had entered her cremation in the wild frenzy of despair, the impression on the spectators was universal. Just as the flames began to [illegible] and [illegible] towards [illegible] the released; her husband had flung himself from his horse, and received her in his arms, delighted by the proof she had given of her attachment. He had been fortunate in his last encounter, after having most unexpectedly been saved from impending death; cast on shore at a very considerable distance from the ford he had attempted to cross, he was for some time disabled by exhaustion and an injury he had received, and finding an opportunity of entering on a lucrative service, he made no attempt to rejoin his former companions. Succeeding beyond his expectations in the employment in which he was engaged, he found himself in a situation to return home, and most opportunely arrived in time to save his persecuted wife from a dreadful fate. The brahmins were feasted on the occasion, and all the sweetmeats in the village purchased and distributed amongst the poor; it was, in fact, an evening of great rejoicing, and to none more than the rescued martyr, whose sufferings were rewarded by the reputation which she had gained.

The return of the dead, or the party supposed to be dead, to their heirs and successors, is not always, however, very welcome, and especially when gains have been taken to prevent the possibility of so untoward an event. Khyrun Khan was a youth of very considerable property, whose wealth excited the jealousy of his nearest kinsman. A very broading for a time over the means by which he might possess himself of an inheritance to which he was the legal successor, in the event of the boy's death, Moontaz Ali determined to make away with him. The youth was fond of fishing, and often went out in a boat by himself, which he could very well manage, and his kinsman considered whether he might not contrive to drown him. Upon further reflection, the project was thought too hazardous, the river being well frequented; he, therefore, on the evening on which he resolved to perpetrate the crime, contented himself with unloosing the boat, and allowing it to float down the current, throwing into the water at the same time a turban and shawl which belonged to his intended victim. Having laid his plan, Moontaz Ali decoyed his young relative into a jungle, upon the pretext of shooting peacocks with bows and arrows, the birds in the neighbourhood of the place where they lived being sacred. Arriving at a spot which he had closely reconnoitred on a previous occasion, he seized suddenly upon the boy, and threw him into a deep hole, which had previously ascertained to be fifty-four feet deep, with more than twelve feet of water at the bottom. On the completion of this crime, the murderer hurried from the spot, being anxious to get home before his absence should be remarked. Some hours elapsed before Khyrun was missed; at length, one of the servants, recollecting that he had not seen him since the morning, inquired of his fellows whether they knew what their young master had done with himself. No one could give a satisfactory answer, and going to the river's side, to the river, the absence of the boat caused great alarm. On further search, the turban and shawl were found, and it was supposed that the body had floated away, or been devoured by the alligators that haunted the stream. No suspicions fell upon Moontaz Ali who never had been in the habit of accompanying his young kinsman upon the river, and who was not supposed to entertain any evil design against him. The death of Khyrun being to all appearance fully established, his relative took possession of his property, and revelled for a time in the enjoyment of a prize gained at the expense of such atrocious crime. Khyrun Khan, however, when precipitated into the well, had seized upon a projecting stone, and finding a rest for one of his feet, contrived to keep himself about midway down without falling into the water. It chanced that some travelling fakeers, to whom the well was known, passed the next morning through the jungle, and going to it for the purpose of drawing water, they found the youth, and dragged him out before he was perfectly exhausted. Upon his recovery, the boy, who was only twelve years old, was disinclined to return home; he did not like the idea of facing his kinsman after the late murderous attack, being apprehensive that he would make another and a more fatal attempt upon his life. He had gold ornaments about his person, with which he rewarded the fakeers, and he resolved to accompany them in their travels, and seek out some of his maternal relatives, from whom he might expect to receive protection. The fakeers, who were bent upon a mission of some importance to themselves, readily entered into their new companion's views, and supplying him with the proper garments in exchange for his own, they all departed together in company. Some months elapsed before the fakeers, having completed their pilgrimage, were able to devote themselves to the interests of their protege. They then carried him along with them to the city in which the family of his deceased mother (for he was an orphan) resided, and going at once to the house, made the case known. Great was the surprise at this discovery; the uncles and grandfather of the youth had long since acquiesced with his death, but his story produced implicit belief, corroborated as it was by the testimony of the fakeers, and by the clothes and ornaments which they still preserved. After some consultation, the uncles came to the resolution of proceeding at once to the residence of Moontaz Ali, and obliging him to surrender his ill-gotten wealth. The fakeers were, of course, engaged in attendance, and the whole party arrived without accident at the place at which the property was situated. Moontaz Ali, though rather astonished at a visit from persons whom he little expected to see, saw they had not a question of the account given of their nephew's death, received the party very courteously. Gravely however, in his countenance, they brought a youth forward, grown it is true in stature, but instantly recognized by himself and the surrounding domestics, whom he still retained as the certain Khyrun. The whole story was got at last, and measures were taken for the apprehension of the criminal. Khyrun, accompanied by the fakeers, pointed out all the circumstances already mentioned, the attempt to murder him, and his almost miraculous rescue. In a part of the jungle the bows and arrows were found which had been taken out for the purpose of shooting peacocks, and, upon examining the well, the ledges of stone were seen which had so providentially arrested the fall. Moontaz Ali did not survive the disgrace and terror of a discovery fraught with ruin; he took poison, and died before the affair could be brought before a public tribunal.—Asiatic Journal.

ART. X.—Notice of the Remarkable Phenomena in the tides of the Sandwich Islands on the 7th November, 1837.

By T. Chas. Byde Roche, F R. C. S.

On the evening and night of the 7th Nov. a most remarkable commotion of the sea was witnessed at Honolulu, in many respects similar to that witnessed at these islands in May, 1819. One inch and a half of rain had fallen during the previous 24 hours; the wind was fresh from the N. E., equally at intervals. The atmosphere was clear and cool.—Therm. 74.5 The Barometer had gradually fallen during the four previous days, but this evening had again risen to 30.36. at 6 o'clock. when the alarm was given that the sea was retiring. The first recession was the greatest,—something more than eight feet; but being unprepared to make observations at the moment, the exact fall was not measured. The reefs surrounding the harbor were left dry, and the fish aground were mostly dead. The sea quickly returned, and in 20 minutes reached the height of an ordinary high tide generally remaining stationary, it again receded and fell six feet. This was repeated at intervals of 20 minutes. On the third rising it was four inches above ordinary high water mark and fell again six feet four inches. After the fourth rising the length of time occupied by the rise and fall varied, and the rise and fall diminished regularly, but not regularly. At 11. P. M. the Thermometer stood at 74, Barometer 30.04 wind freshening and frequent showers; the ebb now occupied 20 minutes, and the flow 10. At 11 30 it became calm with constant rain Therm. 73.5; Bar. 30.03. The ebb and flow still continued occupying the same space of time, but the rise and fall decreasing. This continued during the forenoon of the 8th The rapidity with which the water fell, varied in different parts of the harbor. On the east side, the greatest rapidity noticed was six inches in a minute; but on the north, at one time during the third recession it fell 12 inches in 30 seconds. At no time did the water rise higher than a common spring tide; but the fall was about six feet below low water mark. The same occurrence is related to have taken place in 1819, when the tides rose and fell 13 times in the space of a few hours. On neither occasion was there any perceptible motion or trembling of the earth, or unusual appearance of the atmosphere.

Since the above was written, distressing accounts have been received from Maui and Hawaii of the damage done to property and loss of life. On the leeward side of Maui the same rise and fall took place as at Honolulu, but on the windward part of the island the sea retired about 20 fathoms and quickly returned in one gigantic wave sweeping every thing before it, houses, trees, canoes, and every moveable object exposed to its fury. At a small village, called Kahului, in the district of Wailuku, on the sea retiring, the natives inhabitants followed it as it receded, eagerly catching the stranded fish, shouting and hallooing with pleasure, when suddenly the sea rose perpendiculare before them like a precipice, and rushing to the beach, buried the assembled multitudes in the flood, and overflowing the shore, swept away every house in the village but one; the canoes and property of the natives were all destroyed. Happily, owing to the amphibious education of the people, but two lives were lost here, but as the same occurrence happened all along the seaside we shall probably hear of more deaths.

At Byron's Bay, on Hawaii the same phenomenon took place. An unusual number of persons were collected together attending a protracted meeting, consequently every house was crowded. At 4 past 6 the sea retired at the rate of 4 or 5 knots an hour, reducing the soundings from 5 to 3½ fathoms at the anchorage, and leaving a great extent of the harbor dry. Hundreds of curious souls rushed down to witness the novelty, when a gigantic wave came roaring to the shore at the rate of 6 or 8 knots an hour, rising 20 feet above high water mark, and fell on the beach with a noise resembling a heavy peal of thunder, burying the people in the flood, destroying houses, canoes, and fish-ponds washing away the food and clothing of the inhabitants, large quantities of animals, fire wood, and timber collected on the strand for sale. The cries of distress were horrible; those in the water unable to swim among the wreck of houses, and pieces of timber, struggling for their lives, and those on shore wailing for their friends and relatives The British whale ship Admiral Cockburn was at anchor in the Bay, and to the timely aid and humane exertions of her master, (Lawrence) and crew, many are indebted for their lives; but for the assistance rendered by their boats many who were stunned and insensible, would have been carried out to sea, and perished, as the natives had not a single canoe left that would float. Every thing was destroyed; those who escaped with their lives had neither food nor raiment left. In Canokapa and Kaaheia alone, 66 houses were destroyed, and 11 persons lost their lives, four men, two women and 5 children; at Waiolama and Hauna a woman and child were drowned; at Kauwaie one woman lost her life The amount of damage done has not yet been ascertained, nor is it known how many stones the sea rose and fell. There was no shock of an earthquake felt at Hilo, or elsewhere, although it is ascertained that the volcano of Kilauea was unusually disturbed the previous evening, the fires were suddenly quenched, and yawning chasms burst open in previously tranquil places, accompanied with violent explosions. Inquiries have been made of masters of vessels who were to the north and to the east of the islands on the 7th, at various distances, but none of them noticed any thing unusual in the sea, or atmosphere. That this apparent submarine volcanic action has taken place at some distance from the islands is proved by the wave striking the different islands simultaneously and apparently in the same direction; but at what distance we have no means at present of determining. Perhaps the internal fires have found a new vent, which may be laying the foundation of a new group of islands in our neighborhood.—It is now 19½ years since a similar phenomenon occurred here, but not so violent as the last, nor was it attended with any loss of life.

On the second day after, an affecting scene was witnessed at Wailuku, (Maui) The bodies that had been recovered from the sea were conveyed together to the church, followed by a great multitude; a funeral sermon was preached on the occasion; this solemn warning made a deep, and it is to be hoped, a lasting impression on those who witnessed it, of the uncertain tenure by which we hold our lives.—Hawaiian Spectator.

ART V. Description of the tea plant; its names; cultivation; mode of curing the leaves; transportation to Canton; sale and foreign consumption; endeavors to raise the shrub in other countries.—From the Chinese Repository.

The tea shrub, indigenous in China and Japan, remained concealed from the rest of mankind for centuries after its virtues were known to the natives of those countries, and the infusion of its leaves used as a common beverage. While the silk from the same regions early found its way by gradual advance to the capitals and courts of western kingdoms, this luxury was untasted in those countries until about 175 years ago. Since its introduction, however, its consumption has increased with unexampled rapidity, and it now ranks after cotton and sugar, one of the great staples of international commerce; and has passed from being called a luxury, to be held as a necessary of life. "The progress of this famous plant," says an eminent writer, "has been something like the progress of truth; suspected at first, though very palatable to those who had courage to taste it; resisted as it encroached; abused as its popularity seemed to spread; and establishing its triumph at last, in cheering the whole land from the palace to the cottage, only by the slow and restless effects of time and its own virtues." Edin. Rev.

The native name of tea in both China and Japan is cha, changed into tay in the principal dialects of Fuhkeen, from one or the other of which source the term has found its way, with little or no alteration, into all the leading languages of the world. It has been called by various other names among the Chinese themselves, and it was not until about the eighth century that it received its present appellation. Chinese scholars have supposed that the ming mentioned in ancient books was the tea plant, as its infusion is said to have been drank. Notices of its use, however, which are entitled to credit, occur as early as A. D. 839 about the time of the Eastern Tsin dynasty, when the plant was called ming. During the Tang dynasty, A. D. 800, the use of tea as a beverage became common among all classes; the name was then written tou; but the upper stroke of the lower half of the character was soon after dropped, and it received its present form and name of cha. Writers endeavor to account for some of these synonyms, by saying, that the first pitching was called cha, the second ming, and the third tou, in this way. Like many other things, which have afterwards become of great importance the virtues of the tea plant were gradually ascertained and acknowledged, while no one took the trouble to note the earliest stages of its adoption.

Its botanical name is Thea, but its affinities with the Camellia are so numerous, that some botanists unite it with that genus, and style the name of Tea; whether there are two species is still a doubtful point, some including in one the green and black tea district, while other observers, judging from the many varieties produced by cultivation in the Camellia Japonica, also regard the different kinds of tea as all produced from one species. From all that we can learn, it is more than probable that the two were at first identical but by cultivation in different climates and soils has wrought changes upon the plant similar to those upon the apple or cherry. Loureiro in his Flora Cochinchinensis, observes that he had examined the tea which grows in the vicinity of Canton, and the dried flowers of the plant which produced nothing, and compared them both with the Thea bohea and Thea viridis, and that the same sort from different localities was unlike, and all differed from one another in such a manner, as left him to suppose all of them to have been produced from one and the same species.

The shrub is usually from three to five and six feet high, with numerous branches bearing a very dense foliage, and in its general aspect is not unlike a myrtle, though not so symmetrical as that plant. The wood is hard and tough, and when freshly cut or peeled gives off an unpleasant smell. The leaves are coriaceous or leathery but smooth and shining of a dark green color; the edges are notched or serrated, and the leaf itself stands on a short petiole Those of T. viridis, or green tea, are broader than the black in proportion to their length, but not so thick and are somewhat serrated or even all at the apex; those of Thea bohea are elliptical oblong and flat. Some authors of note say that the leaves of green tea are three times as broad as long, and those of black tea twice as broad as long, but this is evidently a mistake. Chinese traders in tea say, "that the shrubs cannot be distinguished, they are nearly alike. The leaf of black tea is long and pointed that of green tea is shorter and somewhat roundish which is caused by the different soils." The flowers open early in the spring, and appear upon the plant about a month; they are smaller in size, and much less elegant in appearance, than those that render the Camellia so attractive. They are about an inch in diameter, perfectly inodorous, and of a pure white color; they proceed from the axils of the branches, and stand on short foot-stalks, at the most two or three together, but usually solitary. There are five or six imbricate sepals, or leaves supporting the blossom, which fall off after the flower has expanded, and leave from six to nine petals surrounding a great number of stamens, that are joined together in such a manner at their bases as to form a sort of floral cup-seat. The seeds are inclosed in a smooth, hard capsule of a flattish triangular shape, which is interiorly divided into two, three and even five cells, each containing a firm, white, and somewhat oily nut, about the size of a hazel-nut, of a disagreeable and nauseous taste. They ripen in December and January.

The tea plant is said by good Chinese authority to be cultivated in every province of the empire to a greater or less extent, but in flourishes to some of them to higher perfection than in others. The four provinces of Fuhkeen, Nganhwuy, Kwangsee, and Kwangtung produce the largest part of the tea which is exported from Canton. Large quantities are also consumed by the countries adjacent to the western frontier; and Russia also carries on an important trade to it, both of which markets are supplied from the western provinces. The northern parts of Fuhkeen find the finest kinds of black tea. They are produced in the valleys and on the acclivities of the Bohea hills, and lie in lat. 27° 47' north, and long. 118° east, in the districts of Kwangsee and Tsungyuan, a part of the department of Keenning. The name is pronounced Woee in the court dialect. Moe in the Canton dialect, while in Fuhkeen itself, the hills are known as the Booe hills. The green teas are cultivated in the province of Nganhwuy, in a tract of country lying in lat. 33° North, and long. 118° to 118° east, at the base of a ridge of mountains or hills, called the Sungko hills, which divides the province from those of Chekeang and Keangsoo. With the increase of trade the cultivation has extended. The district of Tsinhe in Kwangse produces a small amount. Those kinds of tea, called Ankay teas, come from the two districts of Nangan and Anke in the south-western part of Fuhkeen in the department of Tseuenchow. Two or three districts in the province of Kwangtung, bordering on Keangse, furnish both green and black tea in considerable quantities; among which Hopiy and Tsingyuen furnish the most black, and Hoshe, the most green tea. The two middle provinces, Hoonan and Hoopih, as well as Honan and Sanchee also raise a surplus for exportation. In the reign of Hungwoo of the Ming dynasty, it was ascertained by the Board of Revenue, that 447 localities in the province of Szechuen alone produced tea, and probably the number at present is greater. The extreme northern provinces are not very productive; and from what we can learn, the principal supplies for the capital are brought from the other provinces, a large proportion of it as a tax levied in kind.

The soil of these plantations which have been examined by foreigners is very thin, in some places but little more than mere sand; a soil very similar to that which produces pines and scrub oaks. The shrubs are usually planted on the declivities of hills, where there can be but little accumulation of vegetable mould, not so low as where water springs out, or so high up as to be exposed to the violence of storms. That which is somewhat loamy and daftpeah is esteemed to be good soil by the cultivators. Dr. Abel remarks that the soil in which he saw the best specimens was composed of disintegrated sandstone or granite. The soil in the Anke hill visited by Mr. Gordon was of a similar nature, and colored by an oxyd of iron; and this also is the character of the plantations near Canton. In the Anke hills the cultivation of the shrub does not interfere at all with the raising of wheat or other grain, the trees being scattered about on the hill-sides in situations where few other plants would grow.

The tea is always raised from seed, which is first sown very thickly in nursery beds, as the greater part proves abortive; and then, when the seedlings have attained a proper size, they are transplanted to beds prepared for them. The holes into which the seeds are thrown are three or four inches deep, and about three months after as before the shoots are ready to be transplanted, but the common practice in many places appears to be to sow the seeds in the beds prepared for them, and never after to remove them. The plants are not manured or irrigated by art, nor does it appear to be usual to prepare the ground for their reception, a spot with a southerly exposure is preferred, where they are placed in beds in a regular manner at intervals of from four to five feet. Care is taken that the plants are not overshadowed by large trees, and certain superstitious notions prevail concerning the noxious influence of vegetables and certain trees when growing too near the tea. An easterly exposure is avoided where that would bring a wind from the sea, but cold, hoarfrost, or even snow does not injure the plant. It is sometimes destroyed by a worm that eats up the pith, and it has access to the stem into tubes, and by hebeen which attack and cover old shrubs. Insects also take from the plant when three years old, but it does not attain its greatest size under six or seven, and thrives according to circumstances, care, and position, from ten to twenty years. In some instances, the branches are pruned, which, together with the constant abstraction of the foliage, has a tendency to reduce the height; it, however, exists literally, and after a time spreads so as rather to resemble a collection of plants than a single shrub. In these specimens, the size of the leaves is rather less than when the plant is suffered to grow higher, but they cover the branches so thickly as hardly to permit the hand to be thrust in among them.

From a manuscript written by an intelligent native, whom we infer from its contents to be either one of the travelling traders to the Bohea hills, (a class of persons between the long merchants at Canton and the cultivators in Fuhkeen) or else one of the landholders resident in that province, we extract some opinions concerning the hills. There are two ranges, both of which form part of the same great chain, and lie between the provinces of Fuhkeen and Keangse. They derive the name of Woo-e from two brothers, Woo and E, the sons of a prince in ancient times, who, on his decease, refusing to succeed him, left their patrimony, and took up their residence on these picturesque hills; their mansion was after their death called the palace of Woo-e, and now the inhabitants constantly burn incense to their memory. The hills were, however, famous for their teas as early as A. D. 950, in the Sung dynasty, before they were known as the Bohea hills. A legend states, that, on a time there appeared to the peasantry a venerable old man, who held a sprig of the tea plant in his hand, and proposed, to them to make a decoction of it, and drink it. They tried his proposal, and approved the plan, when he immediately disappeared. The circuit of these hills is about 120 li, in all parts of which tea is raised; a stream divides them, on the northern side of which the best tea grows probably; because it has a southern exposure. As these two ranges produce the best tea, their names are most widely extended, but there are between 40 and 50 localities in their vicinity, all of which produce excellent tea. There are several villages among the hills, where the landlords and cultivators reside; and one of them, Singtsan, is a sort of mart to which all these persons resort who deal in the leaf.

According to this manuscript, the seeds are carefully mixed up with wet sand in the spring of the year, and the next year the seedlings are transplanted into beds, where they remain without any further care until the leaves are ready to be picked. Some localities produce tea of a better flavor than others and care is taken to examine the soil of the beds. Purchasers inquire the position of the garden from which the samples before them were taken; and tea from near the summit of a hill, from its middle, and base, bear prices corresponding to its relative height. If the soil is good, the leaves can be picked when the plant is of two years growth, but if it is poor and dry, three years are required. There are individual shrubs which are celebrated, either from some accidental associations, or from the goodness of their tea. One, called the egg-plant tree, grows in a deep gully between two hills, and is nourished by the water which trickles from the precipice. The produce of another is also esteemed to imperial use, and an officer is deputed every year to superintend the gathering and curing. A third is said to have borne leaves since the time of the Sung dynasty; and there are many other, some of which have singular descriptive names, that are held as remarkable. The produce of these trees is never brought to Canton as an article of sale; it is reserved for imperial use and for grandees. It is said, the tea from the most celebrated trees is valued at 120 dollars per catty and the cheapest is not under 20 dollars.

The picking of the leaf is sometimes performed by a different class of laborers from those who cure it; but in this, as in other parts of the manufacture, the practice is not uniform in all places. There are four pickings in the course of the year, but the last is considered as rather a gleaning than a regular gathering. The first is made as soon as the fifteenth of April, and in favorable seasons even earlier, when the delicate leaf buds appear, and the foliage is just opening, being covered with a whitish down. The quantity obtained is small, but the quality is superior, and the finest sorts of tea are made from it. The next picking is technically called 'rain chaw,' or 'second spring,' as the first is 'shaw chaw,' or 'first spring,' and takes place at the end of the fourth month and beginning of the fifth, answering to the first part of June, when the branches are covered with leaves, and produce the greatest quantity. The third, called 'sun chaw,' or 'third spring,' is about a month after the last, when the shrubs are again searched, and the produce made into the most common sorts of tea. A fourth gleaning, called 'saw lou,' or 'autumn dew,' from the name of a term, is made by some at the commencement of autumn; but this is not a universal practice, for the leaves are old, fit only for the coarsest kinds. Inferior tea is sometimes gathered by clipping the small twigs with shears, a practice that tells ill with bud leaves and small sticks; but the usual mode is to cull the leaves by hand, and lay them loosely on bamboo trays or baskets. The produce of single plants varies so much that it is difficult to estimate the average. Our Chinese author says, two catties in weight of green leaves are obtained from some of the celebrated trees, but the usual quantity is between ten taels and a catty of green leaves, or from one pound to 22 ounces. Mr. Gordon was told that each plant yielded a tael of dry tea annually, which would be nearly five taels of green leaves. He says, that a mow (1000 sq. yds.) of land contains between 300 to 400 plants; and in his visit to the Anke hills, he remarked that the distance from centre to centre of the plants was about 4½ feet, and they were about two feet in diameter. It is evident, from the nature of the case, that no amount can be fixed upon as the average produce.

England and France.

The happy footing upon which England and France have been together, ever since the Revolution of 1830, is, no doubt, the result of the popular influence, whose beneficial effects we have been tracing upon the whole frame of international policy. The ancient maxim, that the two countries were natural enemies, is now exploded; and has been succeeded by a conviction that the near neighbourhood which makes each the best customer of the other ought, in a merely commercial view, to make them natural allies. But, indeed, the very circumstance of their proximity and their strength, which exposes each in war to the greatest hazards from the other, offers no trifling capable reason for their living upon a friendly terms and never suffering any trifles to interrupt their amicable intercourse. These things were always sufficiently evident; yet the Government of the two nations being in the hands of courtiers and princes, while the people had little or no weight in the administration of affairs, the course taken by the two states was directed not by the enlightened reason and the common sense of mankind, so much as by the refinements and caprices and prejudices of the governing few; the interests and the feelings of the governing being alike disregarded. Hence a spirit of rivalry and mutual enmity grew up on both sides of the Channel; and the two nations, formed by nature to be friends, were filled with a spirit of mistrust and apprehension. This is now happily past; and for this we have to thank the French Revolution, and the English Reform. He would be a bold as well as a wicked Minister, in either country, who should attempt to revive the old hostility between the two: but he would speedily be a defeated and disgraced and punished Minister; and his fate would serve as an example to all others from endeavouring to thwart the well-grounded desires, the deliberate, and rational, and virtuous principles of a mighty people.

The salutary influence of this amity and union between those great powers is felt to the very ends of the earth: it tends to the security, to the improvement, to the purification of the world. England now resumes her station as the head of the Liberal Interest in Europe. What noble part she here in the contests of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries for Religious Freedom and the Reformation, that same part she now maintains for Civil Liberty and National Independence. But now her course is more easy, her success more secure, because now she has for France for her almighty coadjutor; and with France her co-operation is cordial, as her amity is assured.

The peace, not of these two states alone, but of all Europe, and of the world, is in the keeping of France and England. While their contiguous friends, not a gun can be fired in any part of the globe without their consent. No aggression upon national independence can be attempted; no war against public liberty waged; no invasion of the rights of man and the law of nations undertaken. The coalition of the Holy Alliance is gone; it has ceased to reign, it can no more trouble and vex mankind. The police of Europe, which the coalesced Sovereigns, the Great, had the Pope and all the Jesuits to administer in order to give their words, it is entrusted to the suspicious patriot; the thief and the receiver, the murderer and the robber are no longer suffered to play the part of watchmen; or, under the disguise of patrolers, to uproar upon the wayfaring man. The high police of Europe, by land and by sea, is in purer hands, ay, and in stronger hands too! The great Continental power of France—the mighty Naval Force of England—the sword and the trident—the eagle that has perched upon every capital of Europe, save one—the flag that a thousand years has braved the battle and the breeze—surrounded under the banner of liberty; and, marshalling them into free nations, appealing, if need be, to all other people, calling to their aid the poor oppressed of Europe, they will have no nation mislaid because of its liberties—nor any tyrant conserted against his subjects—nor any opinion proscribed because of its truth and its error—nor any wrong done to the weak by the strong—nor any rebellion of might against right.

LISBON, APRIL 22, 4 o'CLOCK P. M.—The long-pending Ministerial arrangements have at length been brought about without resorting to the expedient of closing the Cortes. On Thursday last the Queen sent for the Baron da Ribeira de Sabrosa, and again charged him with the formation of a Ministry, who, on pointing out the impracticability of a meeting Her Majesty's wishes upon anything like a coalition, was honoured with a carte blanche, and on the same day succeeded in rallying the following personages of the Crown, all of his own political creed, and taken from the left or Septembrist side of the Chamber—viz. the Baron da Ribeira de Sabrosa, President of the Council, Minister of War, and ad interim, for Foreign Affairs and Marine; Julio Gomez de Silva Sanches (formerly Minister for the same department), Interior; and the Senator José Eduardo da Cunha e Araujo, Ecclesiastic and Justice; Manoel Antonio de Carvalho retaining the portefeuille of Finance. M. Mozario da Castro, resident at Lamego, was still cited by letter to take the Foreign and Marine Department, which he has declined.

The Premier, on taking his seat on the Ministerial bench with his colleagues, declared that neither his own wishes, the state of his health, nor domestic affairs could have permitted him to accept or even desire power, but that the full conviction that he was rendering a service to his country, and the respect he owed to the supreme head of the state, compelled him to take office. He then went on to state that the Ministry had not had time to form a programme of the policy they intended to pursue, but for himself and colleagues he could solemnly assert that their principles were in accordance with the constitution of 1838, which they would maintain inviolate, and use every possible means to secure obedience to the laws, tranquility to the people, and the impartial administration of justice; and in conclusion hoped that the Chamber would not prejudge their intentions, but await their measures.

The debates in the Chambers during the past week have been merely of a local nature. This day, however, the further continuance for one year of the extra of rather double duties imposed on various kinds of provisions or produce imported, such as sugar, rice, dry codfish, &c., was brought under the consideration of the house, and is still going through discussion.

It having come to the knowledge of the Portuguese Government that several vessels are about to arrive in this river from several ports in the kingdom and adjacent islands, in order to be nationalized, for the purpose of being employed in the slave trade, Her Majesty the Queen has commanded that the decree of the 14th of January be strictly observed, which provides that no vessels excepting those which had previous to its promulgation sailed under the Portuguese flag, and those which may hereafter be built in the ports of Portugal and its Asiatic and African dominions, can under any circumstances be considered as nationalized.

The revenue of the Lisbon Custom-house and Excise-office and Custom house of Oporto, for the month of February last, amounts only duly to 309 967 340 reis equal to 71 611 £. Ster. sterling, showing a deficit on the preceding month of 7,680 19s 5d. sterling, and that of the northern and southern districts for the quarter ending the 31st of December, 1838, to 23,443,863 reis, or 5 397 l. 8s. showing a deficit of 44 l. 14s 4d. sterling upon the foregoing quarter.

Several guerillas of the worst and most desperate character have, in their various rencontres with the Queen's troops, been killed and taken prisoners. An extract of a letter from the Correio, dated Portalegre, the 18th instant, states that the day before yesterday the whole of the Royalists (Miguelites) were summoned to the house of the administrator of the district. On going out many of them were attacked with bludgeons. It is said this affray took place by order of the Administrator himself, who is a son of P——Sousa Periera, formerly head-surgeon of No 1 Battalion, was very ill treated. This circumstance created great sensation in the whole city, because the said Bento was a very pacific man much respected.

A letter from Douro states that a band of daring smugglers, amounting to 250, infests the coast of Algarve, bidding defiance to the authorities and troops, coolly waiting for their vessels at the various landing places, and disembarking their contraband goods with impunity.

The Dowager Queen of England left Malta on the 17th inst in Her Majesty's ship Hastings and is daily expected here.

The daughter of the late Count de Povoa, having yesterday attained her 13th year, was this morning married to the Conde das Galveas of the Marquez Fayal eldest son of the Duke of Palmella.

THE Bus Wag, from Calcutta 11th May, and Singapore 8th June, was telegraphed as having arrived in the Hoogley on the 23d ultimo, but her papers had not reached Calcutta in time for transmission by that evening's dak.

Since writing the above, we have received the Singapore Free Press Extra of 4th June, arrived yesterday by express from Calcutta.

The intelligence, which extends to the 30th of May, from Canton, will be found in the Journal of Commerce, and be read with the deepest interest. No doubt can now be entertained of a protracted stoppage of the trade, and it is to be hoped that all vexatious will be taken of the present crisis to place our future relations with China on a much more advantageous and honorable footing than they have been. Much embarrassment will, of course, be occasioned to parties engaged in the trade, but to a contained to parties engaged in the trade, but to a comparatively less extent (we allude to the legitimate trade) this season, than would have been the case had the suspension occurred at this time last year. 80 chests of Cotton has been shipped to China, from Calcutta, or Madras, for the last six months; while the export hence amounts, in round numbers, to 60,000 bales against 90,000 at the corresponding date in 1838.

It is unfortunate that these accounts did not reach this in time to be transmitted home by Thursday's Steamer. The intelligence, however, will probably be conveyed as soon by the Ariel via Suez. Ibid 6th July.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 7th Sept. 1839.

We informed our readers in our last that the Imperial Commissioner had given notice to the authorities of Macao that he should pay them a visit on the 1st of September. H. E. afterwards deferred it to the 3d when at about nine o'clock in the morning a salute from the Monte fort of 19 guns announced his entry by the gate of San Antonio. He came accompanied by Tung, the Viceroy of Canton, and a small number of other officers apparently of no high rank. The band of the garrison preceded the procession, which was composed of the high functionaries already named, and their immediate attendants, a part of the Macao garrison as a guard of honor, and about two hundred Chinese soldiers, armed partly with spears, partly with bows and arrows, and partly with matchlocks and swords. The train proceeded through the bazar to the Senate of Leal Senado, the archives of the city, a Palladian divinity, and as such particularly excited to the interest of the Commissioner, who offered his devotions there, and there also received the Procurador of Macao an officer through whom all the business with the Chinese authorities is transacted. A salute from the Bar fort did honor to his arrival there.

After a short stay H. E again moved on on his return to the City gate entering the Praya grande by Bazil's lane, meeting all along the Praya grande and returning to the gate of San Antonio by Mercantil street etc. On passing near the Monte fort a salute of 19 guns was again fired, and the same from the Fort of San Pedro, but the, we believe expected, visit to the fort and Senate house did not take place. It was about eleven o'clock H. E had left Macao on his way back to Chun bunce, and proceeded that same day to Heang shan. We must confess we were sorry that disappointed in the gratification we had expected to our sense of sight, in beholding the train of the, for the present, very highest officer of the Empire, representing Imperial Majesty itself. The chair in which the Commissioner was seated was exactly like what we often see Mandarins of rank in; it was, as well as that of the Vice-roy carried by six bearers and preceded by a rout. The Chinese soldiers, if such they were that carried the arms already enumerated, were accordingly shabbily dressed, and marched in no kind of military step. Their accoutrements were dirty and neglected; we have omitted to state that some of the men carried harquebusses with their stands or forks.

The Commissioner is a stout, rather good looking man of about fifty, with a round face, a thin white beard, and a very intelligent eye. H. E seemed to be very sure sure to every thing he passed, putting frequent questions to those walking beside his chair, and in this was very different from most other mandarins whom it has been our lot to see, and to whom the maxim of nihil admirari seems to be ever present; who deem it derogatory to their dignity to give the slightest signs of curiosity, and who even, quantle, when passing through the streets, deign not to look either to the right or left, but stare out right before them, affecting supreme contempt of every thing around them.

The Governor or Viceroy of Canton is a thin old man, who looked as if suffering from ill health.

The sheds in the bazar had been removed for the occasion, and the procession moved through several triumphal arches, with inscriptions indicative of the loyalty of the people—similar inscriptions manifesting the great love the people bear to the Imperial Commissioner were hung at the doors of the shops, their inhabitants burnt incense and knelt on their thresholds as the great man passed. Two war junks were anchored off the Praya Grande, the crews of which had for the occasion been put into new red jackets with white facings, and who stood, after having fired a salute, in an attitude of attention, while the train moved along the Praya Grande.

A good many Chinese from the neighbouring towns and villages had come to Macao to see these officers, and a considerable crowd attended the procession.

As a mark of friendship the Commissioner has sent to the authorities of Macao and to the garrison presents of food such as buffacks, hogs, rice &c and some silks, nankeens, and grasscloth, as also, some silver we believe, for the garrison.

Several edicts have appeared during the week, of which we are sorry not to be able to present our readers with translations; one of them prohibits natives to provide the English at Hong kong with food and water, under pain of death; another, caused by the arrival of H. M. 2 Volage ahiden the Pilots for not having permitted her to enter Hong-kong, as without their help she could never have found her way, and they are directed, if any other evasions should arrive, to order them away immediately. This edict further says that the English, not obeying the Imperial orders of either going to Whampoa or returning to their own country, will be roaming about in all nooks and corners to obtain water and food, and as the natives will not provide them it is possible that they will come on shore and rob them; in such case the edict says it shall be lawful for the Chinese, either officers, soldiers, or private people to kill the English. Immediately on arrival of the English ship of war troops were sent to man all the forts on the river, and this probably is the reason why the Commissioner visited Macao with so small a train of certainly not 'picked' troops. The greatest preparations are being made to repel invasion, rafts are being constructed across the river in many places, and chatts thrown across the Bogue. 600 men were sent to the small fort near Canton in the Macao Passage, and not finding room therein were quartered in boats round it. The greatest vigilance is displayed at the different custom-houses, and no boat is allowed to pass without being frequently searched. The intercourse between Macao and Canton may for the present therefore be said to be almost altogether suspended; no letters can be sent up or down, except they go by the Canton chinese that enter or leave the port of Macao. Indeed we see for the present no chance of a speedy settlement of differences between the Chinese and English, and the sooner therefore the Ladies now on board outside leave for Manilla or Singapore, the less will their privations be, there being little or no prospect of their being able soon to come back to Macao.

The Government's orders are to withholding supplies from the fleet at Hongkong are now strictly enforced, and boards have been fixed on shore at Hongkong containing a warning to the natives against using the water of several wells and springs, they having been poisoned to do mischief to the English.

On Thursday last the House from Canton (have called the Grass to distinguish him from the principal officer of the revenue in Macao) arrived in Macao, and was saluted with 11 guns from the Monte fort. His object is, we are told, to examine the custom-house records, and he will remain here some days. He visited the Senate-house yesterday.

In another part of our paper will be found an abstract of exports from Java during the last year amounting altogether to about four millions of Sterling, giving a proof that the agricultural resources of that country are being constantly developed. The last accounts however from thence do not report so favorably of mercantile affairs there, specie being at very unusual rates that bank was obliged on the 6th of August to suspend Cash payments. The Government had brought forward 10,000 Pieuls of Tin for sale, which was purchased at 35½ @ 36 Rs. per Picul, for which bank paper was received in payment.

Errata.—We beg to correct an error of the pen we have fallen into in last week's paper in stating that Captain Elliot left Macao on the 10th, which ought to have been on the 22nd of last month. The Imperial edict also was promulged on the 20th and not on the 17th as stated. The attack on the Black Joke also took place on the 20th.

HUMANE SENTATIVE.—Captain Harris, in his Narrative of an Expedition into Southern Africa, gives a long and interested account of slaughter committed on a herd of elephants. We pass, however, the details of his wanton cruelty to attract the following beautiful incident:—"Not an elephant was to be seen (observes our author) on the ground, that was yesterday tenanted with them; but on reaching the plain, which had been the scene of our exploits during the early part of the action, a calf, about three and a half feet high, walked forth from a bush and saluted us with mournful piping notes. We [illegible] observed the unhappy little creature, bemoaning about its mother after she fell, and having probably been unable to overtake the herd, it had passed a dreary night in the wood. Enraging in little gambols on about our legs, the ingenious creature, after demonstrating its delight at our arrival by a thousand wayish antics, accompanied the party to the bank of its dam. The conduct of the quaint little calf now became quite affecting, and elicited the sympathy of every one. It ran round its mother's corpse with touching demonstrations of grief, piping mournfully, and vainly attempting to raise her with its tiny trunk. I confess that I felt compunctions in committing the murder the day before and now half resolved"—and then Captain Harris wiped the tear from his eye, loaded his rifle, and went on with his goodly work. It appears that the young elephant voluntarily accompanied the party to the wagons, where, notwithstanding all the care bestowed on it, it died in a few days.

A SCENE FOR STRANA.—There is no place where privacy is so little to be enjoyed as at Paris; unless one uses the precaution of locking one's door. I allude, of course, to an hôtel garni. Every five minutes, some garcon en noir, frotteur sans souis, or laquais en place, looks into the salon, or chambre-à-coucher, mutters a "Pardon madame," and retreats, leaving one quite mystified as to what could be the excuse for the intrusion. The hostesse who congratulates the pensions of this hotel walked into my chamber, sans cérémonie, this morning, ere I had left my pillow, wound up the time-piece on the console most methodically, and then withdrew without a word of excuse, to my great astonishment, and to the horror of my femme de chemise, who followed him to the anteroom to explain the mistake of his conduct. An English chambermaid would be quite as much embarrassed, could she find herself in such a position, as the lady this stranger had intended; but a Frenchman is never embarrassed, and considers another person's entertainment of this feeling as a proof of gaucherie.—Lady Blessington's Visit to Paris.

VOL. 4. No. 50. Macao, Saturday, 14th September, 1839. No. 206.

ART. V. Description of the tea plant; its name; cultivation; mode of curing the leaves; transportation to Canton; sale and foreign consumption; endeavors to raise the shrub in other countries.—From the Chinese Repository. [continued from last week's paper]

The weather has great influence upon the quality of the leaves. If there is too much rain, then they will become mildewed and broken, of a yellow color, and not at all flourishing; if too little, they will be small in size, and the foliage not at all abundant. But if the rains fall equably, and after the showers a bright sun appears, then they will be thick and flourishing, of a bright green color and thick texture, and the flavor superior. "In picking the leaves," says the manuscript, "it is important to regard the state of the weather. When they are fit, and the right day has come, it must be immediately improved; for if one day too late, the leaves will be old and hard, cannot be rolled up compactly, and the flavor will be inferior; so if one day too early, they will not be so good: the proper period is known by testing the leaf. When the time has come, and the weather is fair, then engage a large number of hands,—men, women, and children,—and gather them as fast as possible, for that is especially important. Each person can, on an average, pick ten catties in a day, and for each catty he is paid five or six cash; he should also carry some dry provision in his pocket, that no time be lost in going to and returning from his meals. He must be told not to pick the old and yellow leaves, nor those that are too young, or broken; and after trays are brought home, such must be sorted out." This account applies more strictly to large plantations, where the landlord directs the workmen, but in smaller establishments and single families, the cultivation and picking are done by the household, and the leaves, after assorting them, are carried to the curing-houses for sale. It is said by the same authority that this mode is practiced in the province of Nganhwuy and the green tea districts generally; and it appeared to Mr. Gordon to be the usual mode on the Anke hills. In the vicinity of Canton it is the customary practice; and from the nature of the case, in most instances, no other mode can well be adopted.

The curing of the leaf is performed by persons skilled in the business, and some of the descriptions of tea known in the market depend in a good degree upon the particular mode in which they are prepared. This part of the manufacture has nearly as much to do with the quality of the tea, as the age of the leaf, and much more than either the soil or cultivation. The manuscript just quoted, says, "that on the Bohea hills, when the leaves are brought to the curing-house, they are thinly spread upon bamboo trays, and placed on frames in the wind to dry until they become somewhat soft; then, while lying on the tray, they are gently rubbed and rolled, until red spots begin to appear, when they are tested by pouring hot water upon them to see if the edge of the leaf becomes yellowish. They must be rubbed many times and equably, and from the labor attending this process, the tea is called kungfoo cha, or 'worked tea (from whence the English term congo is derived). When the leaves have been rubbed sufficiently, they are ready for firing, in which operation several rules must be attentively observed. The iron pan being made red-hot, the workman sprinkles a handful of leaves upon it, and waits until each leaf pops with a slight noise, when he instantly sweeps them all out; he must remove them quickly, lest they be reduced to a cinder. They are now put into drying baskets, and placed over a fire of coals. This fire should be made of compact charcoal, and when thoroughly ignited, a layer of ashes spread upon it, that no smoke ascend into the baskets. About ten catties are put into each basket, and the workman, while it is over the fire, stirs the leaves around with his hand until they are perfectly dry. After this, the tea is poured into chests, and set away in a dry place, where it is presently packed in chests lined with lead, and papered to prevent injury from dampness. In curing the finest kinds of tea, as powchong, pekoe, &c., not more than ten or twenty leaves are thrown into the hot pan at once, nor more than ten taels laid upon a single tray to be rolled, or put into a single basket to be dried. As soon as the curing is finished, these sorts are rolled up in small papers, two or three taels in each package, and stamped with the name of the plantation, and the day of curing, and then put into tenden canisters. A large portion of this sort of tea it bought up by merchants from Heunsun (Amoy) in Fuhkeen, who make advances to the cultivators."

"Whoever wishes to engage in the green tea business," continues the manuscript, "first buys the green leaves, and then hires men to sift and cure them. They are first sifted, and then winnowed in fanning-mills in order to separate the sticks and bad leaves, after which they are fired, four or five catties at a time. Young leaves are fired over a gentle, and old ones over a hot fire, for about half an hour, or while two incense-sticks can burn out. For firing one pan-full, the workman is paid eight cash." This account agrees in the main with statements from other sources, and the difference in the two modes pursued in curing black and green tea sufficiently accounts for the dissimilarity between the appearance and color of the dried leaf, even if they had been originally picked from the same plant. This same memoir says, "that the difference in the color of black and green tea arises wholly from the mode of curing; green tea is cured over a slow fire, and not dried in baskets afterwards; but putting the tea into red-hot pans, and subsequently drying it over a covered fire, makes it black. Green tea can be changed into black, but the contrary cannot be done, because the leaf is already black, and does not admit a further change of color." The Chinese seldom crink green tea and yet black tea is made in Keangsoo, where nearly all the green tea is grown. Although it may be ultimately ascertained that there are two distinct species of plants, cultivated for their leaves, still all the different sorts known in market, (except those made by mixing two kinds together,) may be satisfactorily accounted for by a reference to the age of the leaf, locality of the plant, and mode of curing it. This statement also very plausibly accounts for the comparative rapidity with which green teas spoil on becoming damp, for humidity and heat combined would more quickly spoil a leaf that was simply dried, than one that was reduced almost to a crisp.

The houses in Canton, where tea is cured, are large buildings, known to foreigners under the name of park-houses, and contain all the implements for curing. Two or three rows of furnaces are built of brick and mortar in a large airy room, having a line of hemispherical iron pans inserted into the brick work on each side of the row, in an inclined position; two pans are placed in such a manner opposite to each other, that they are heated by the same fire. Into these pans, the rolled leaves are poured, two or three catties at once, and the workman with his bare arm stirs them around until they are too hot to be easily borne. He then dexterously sweeps them out, and lays them on a table covered with matting, where they are again rolled; after this second rolling, they are again fired in the pan, and in some instances under an even a third a fourth application of fire. Two firings are, however, deemed sufficient in most cases. These various manipulations are modified according to circumstances. Tea, which has become damaged during the passage to Canton, is merely subjected to a second drying, to fit it for the voyage to Europe; while in many cases, an extraordinary demand for a particular sort induces the Chinese to endeavor to meet it by taking other, and usually inferior, qualities, and imitating the kind wanted. Fresh leaves which are brought from the neighboring villages, undergo all the usual processes. The rolling of the leaves after firing is attended with some pain, arising from their heat, and an unpleasant, acrid juice which exudes from them when pressed. In truth, it may be said that all the operations in curing tea, between picking the leaf and sealing up the box, are rendered unpleasant, by the irritating dust which fills the atmosphere of the room, and the combined heat of the furnaces and roasting pans. In the Anke hills, Mr. Gordon was informed that it was customary for the curer to furnish the fireplace—a mere temporary concern—and other utensils, and the fuel used in curing the leaves; and that he was paid at the rate of one dollar per pecul of fresh leaves, equal to five dollars per picul of dry.

At various stages in curing, the leaves are tested by pouring boiling water upon them. When first dried in the wind, some are put into water to see if a yellow edge appears; and after firing, their quality is again tested. "To ascertain the quality of tea," says the manuscript "take some boiling spring water, and pour it upon the leaves in an empty cup, and then place a cover upon the cup, when the color and flavor will both appear. If the water is not boiling hot, the leaves will float. In the best qualities, the taste is aromatous and daily, and a clear yet strong fluid is in the cup. The inferior sorts are known by an unpleasant smell, and a turbid, weak infusion. Those leaves, which, when in the water uncoil without tearing, are the best." Chinese connoisseurs mark the manner in which the leaf uncoils when hot water is poured upon it, from which they infer the degree of care observed in curing it. They also try what number of infusions can be successively made from the same leaves, before the water runs off limpid, and thus judge of the strength and quality. As many as fifteen "drawings" are obtained from the richest flavored teas. It is well known to all in the least acquainted with the business, that the infusion is the most certain mode of testing the quality of tea, and that a sample is always examined in this way before deciding upon its goodness and value.

In choosing green tea, according to the manuscript just quoted, ten things should be regarded, and ten avoided. "The leaf must be green and glabrous; it must be rolled firmly; all the leaf-stalks must be clean picked out; the leaf must be fleshy and well rolled; all the dirt and broken leaves must be separated, the taste of the infusion clear and fragrant; it must be equally fired; the infusion must be of a clear, greenish color, which is the most important point; and lastly, the decoction must be aromatous and oily." The ten things to be avoided are mostly the opposites of the above. "The leaves must not be yellow; nor should they be smoky or badly curred; avoid that tea which has a musty smell, or that with a pellicle floating on the surface of the infusion, is is an evidence of the use of gypsum or Prussian blue in its manufacture; the infusion if reddish indicates old tea; and it should not give off a bad odor, nor have iron sand in it." These and many other tests are all known to those skilled in deciding upon teas; some of the marks, from which the "tea-taster" determines the quality, depend on the weight, some on the taste of the dry leaf, or its smell when strongly breathed upon and infinitely put to the nose; sometimes the color and general aspect of the lot is observed; a loadstone is said to detect the presence of minute particles of iron in some kinds; but the color, clearness, taste, and strength of the simple infusion are regarded as the most important criterions.

Some have imagined that the effects experienced upon the nerves from drinking a strong infusion of green tea, were owing to its having been roasted in copper pans; but no copper utensils are used in the manufacture, and, moreover, chemical tests of the greatest delicacy prove that no deleterious salt of this metal is contained in green tea, the effect is rather to be ascribed to the partial curing which retains more of the peculiar properties of the plant in the leaf. Our native authority, as we have just seen, cautions the purchaser against taking tea which has a pellicle floating on the surface of the infusion, lest gypsum or Prussian blue should have been used in the manufacture. It is known that these two substances are employed in the packhouses at Canton, when firing the cheapest sorts of green tea, in order to give them a bloom, but we think that their application is not extended to all the green tea brought from the northern provinces. The chemist Brande detected the presence of a coloring substance in the capsules which he analyzed; and it is well known that the Chinese themselves never consume those kind of green tea which are prepared for exportation. The finest kinds of young hyson and hyson-pekoe have, however, a yellower, and more "natural hue," as Davis calls it, than the bluish-green that distinguishes the cheapest sorts; but, as the same author remarks, "if deleterious substances are really used, our safeguard consists in the minute proportion in which they must be commixed with the leaves." Whatever proportions of them are used, especially of Prussian blue, must be injurious; still we think that the effect which a strong infusion of green tea has upon the nerves, must be ascribed rather to the partial curing than to the presence of these chemical salts.

NEILGHERRY TEA PLANTATIONS.

[Translation.]

An account of the prosperous condition of the Tea Plant (Thea Viridis) on the Neilgherries, and of the advantages to be derived from cultivating it on a grand scale in that elevated part of India: by M. Perrottet, Botanist to the French Government.

At this time when the experimental farm was established at Kaitee, on the Neilgherry Hills, Colonel Crewe who had charge of it received, from whence I know not, several plants of Tea, which he placed in one of the kitchen gardens of the establishment. The place chosen appeared the more suitable for the young plants being sheltered by a very thick hedge from the north-east winds, which are generally fatal to vegetation in that elevated region.

Shortly after, Colonel Crewe died, and the establishment was broken up, with the exception of a few Native Gardeners who, either from ignorance of the value of the plants or indifference, entirely neglected them.

In August 1836, General de St. Simon, Governor of the French Establishments in India, to whom the Council at Madras had just made over Kaitee, to be occupied by him as long as he might remain in India, sent for me to the Neilgherries. I arrived at Kaitee on the fourth of the same month, and there found these Tea Plants to the number of nine, very stunted and hardly a few inches high, but still alive. Their slow progress and wretched condition astonished me at first sight and induced me immediately to search for the cause of it. I found it in the position of the roots in reference to the level of the soil. In fact, the part of the stalk which is situated above the collet or first vital joint, intended to live in the open air, was found buried a foot at least. I had them bared, one after the other, to the roots; none of these were already rotten, and all would have infallibly become so, if they had remained in the same condition much longer. I cut off the decayed roots and made around each plant a large hollow, in which I spread an inch of good mould, formed of decayed vegetable matter, and then watered them moderately. In a month after, at most, young sprouts made their appearance and continued to grow gradually,—so that, when I left the Hills in April 1837, or 8 months after, these precious plants were from two or two and a half feet high and were loaded with branches and leaves of the finest growth. In January 1838, I returned to the Hills and found my Tea plants in good condition, but they had grown little in height. The Gardeners had either filled up the hollows, or allowed them to fill up, so that the plants were as much buried as before. I had them again laid open and placed them in the same state as I had previously done. They were only watered moderately and during the driest weather. Their progress was so rapid that during the nine months that I again remained on the Neilgherries, they attained three feet and a half at least in height and were furnished with branches from the bottom of the stalk to the top, which gave them a form nearly pyramidal. People from curiosity came over from Ootacamund to see them, the Honorable Mr. Sullivan and Colonel King amongst others were surprised at them. Vegetation is strongest in this shrub from July to October, during which period the rains are most regular and abundant; they require no other care than, but to pull up the weeds, which grow about them in great force and in prodigious numbers.

[illegible] the Neilgherries on the 18th October 1838, my young Teas were loaded with flowers, fruit and leaves—these last were of the greatest beauty, bread, and of a very remarkable bright green—the flowers also were very large and emitted a very sweet odour. Each of the plants, except two, were then about four feet high and were in the most prosperous condition. Their numerous branches were remarkable for the vigour and strength of their vegetation. The fruit with which they were beautified was perfectly spherical and had attained the size of a large Pea.

After the facts which I have stated, there is every reason to believe that the culture of the Tea, established on the grand scale, will succeed well on the Neilgherries, and may produce results of great importance, especially if care is taken to select the localities and positions which agree best with it. The soil is there, generally, very fertile; it is neither stiff nor friable, and therefore easy to work. The rains are frequent and generally very abundant, but they do not fall in torrents sufficient to cause damage, as is often the case in other mountains.

In some localities the Thermometer falls below the freezing point: at Ootacamund for instance, it freezes from one to two degrees; that is one sees ice that has some consistence.

The centigrade Thermometer of France places the zero at the freezing point, and divides it and the boiling into 100°. This has long been used in Sweden under the name of Celsius's Thermometer.

At Kaitee there are only hoar frosts, and the Thermometer (divided into a hundred degrees) does not fall at night below two or three degrees above zero. This cold does not appear to do any injury to the Tea plants, it only stops and retards their vegetation. But, I repeat, it is absolutely necessary to protect them from the north east winds, which are detrimental to them because they are dry and cold. Labour is abundant on the Neilgherries and not dear. Workmen may be procured in all seasons and as many as may be wanted. The climate is wholesome and very agreeable. The air and benefice is fresh and most conducive to health. What more is wanted to make of it a delightful place, a terrestial paradise! In fact, I know no country more agreeable to live in, where a European would be less annoyed either by cold or heat. Woollen clothes may be worn all the year round without inconvenience.

Herds of cattle, cows, sheep, &c. &c. are numerous and in the most thriving condition. Pasture is abundant and of good quality. Every kind of seed is in succulent and thrives. There are excellent potatoes and in great variety throughout the year; also peaches, plums and apples which, although not as good as in Europe are very eatable. One meets with abundance of delicious strawberries, raspberries of two or three kinds, and a great number of other fruits, such for instance as the Myrtus nemosa. (Hill gooseberry), which are perfect, Berberis thuctoria, (Dyers barberry), an Eurapeus (Oleaster) approaching to the E. argenea. Monocera tuberculata (no English name), a Physalis (Brazil or Winter cherry). Totalis arvinosa. (no English name—Molukkanaway, Tam. Aimalie), &c. &c. &c. Wheat, barley, and oats thrive beyond all expectation and almost without any care; the produce is generally of good quality and much esteemed. Barley, particularly there, acquires qualities which are valuable in making beer. Mr. Davis, who is established at Kulhutty, was making some when I was at his place and it appeared to me to be very good for a first experiment.

Hemp and Flax succeed equally well on the Neilgherries—their vegetation is so rapid that at the end of three months the produce may be cultivated—immeasurable advantages may be derived from these. The potato also produces at the end of three months and even less—it has qualities which are not found in it elsewhere—they contain from it a gluten which is much esteemed. What excellent and inconsumable reasons one would have then for establishing one's self permanently on these delightful mountains and making regular plantations of the precious articles which I have mentioned! What a source of fortune for him who shall have the good sense to be the first to devote himself to the different branches of agriculture! I hope I shall not be misunderstood—what I have said is not mere talk, as might be supposed at first; but the result of deep conviction founded on a perfect knowledge of the localities. I did not go to the Neilgherries as an Amateur, but as a Naturalist and Agriculturist. Being a stranger too, I can have no reason for imposition. Let a person only see and he will not be long in satisfying himself that I speak the truth.

France and Mexico.

(From the Revue des Deux Mondes.)

The Revue des Deux Mondes, in its number of the 1st inst., publishes an article on the differences between France and Mexico, in which the writer contends that they originated previous to the revolution of July, and that the Government of the convention was preparing to take signal vengeance for the plunder of the property of French merchants committed in 1828 in the Parian of Mexico, when the catastrophe of 1830 occurred. "The new Government," says the writer, "had hastened to recognize the republic and independence." Mexico, in the hope that the latter would give France the satisfaction she had a right to expect—that is, that Mexico would open her harbours, her markets, and her cities to a nation, friendly, disinterested, in some solutions, which supplied it with skilful labourers, engineers, and physicians, the produce of an advanced civilization and industry, and who guaranteed to the Mexicans in France the same advantages as those enjoyed by French citizens. The contrary, however, was the case. The promise made by the Mexican [illegible] forces for the plunder of 1828 was contantly stalked, under a thousand pretexts, and with revolting bad faith; the security and freedom of the retail trade was menaced at every moment by an anarchical legislature and prejudices unworthy of modern civilization; three treaties, negotiated between France and Mexico, by Mexican Plenipotentiary Ministers and ratified by the French Government, were successively rejected by the Government of Mexico. These insults were offered to the legation. The murder of a number of Frenchmen remained unpunished; useful establishments founded by them were destroyed; French citizens were imprisoned, held for ransom, arbitrarily expelled, and persecuted in the most savage manner by the Mexican authorities; the most barbarous and unjustifiable measures were addressed towards the French navy; and, to crown all, the Mexicans peremptorily refused in June, 1837, to give France any reparation, satisfaction, or indemnity."

Such, according to the Ministerial writer, were the grievances which induced the French Cabinet, at the close of 1837, to send an expedition to Mexico. After justifying the means employed by the Ministry to redress that country to submission, "France," says the Revue des Deux Mondes, "does not require from Mexico the sacrifice of a portion of its territory. She does not mean to attack its independence, humble its power, or drain the sources of its prosperity; she does not wish to impose upon Mexico, either a government, a prince, or a constitution. She only requires three things—namely, a pecuniary compensation for acts of plunder, for violations of property, and the arbitrary and iniquitous destruction of French establishments founded on the faith of treaties; a satisfaction for herself, consisting of the dismissal of the functionaries guilty of insulting proceedings towards the members of the King's legation; and, in future, she demands, not privileges in favour of Frenchmen, not, exhibitant duties, but the footing of equality, assured to Mexicans in France, but particularly the freedom of the retail trade, which had been guaranteed to Frenchmen by the stipulations of 1827, and by the treaty signed by the Mexican Plenipotentiary in Paris on the 13th of March, 1831."

The writer of the Revue des Deux Mondes is of opinion that these differences are on the point of being adjusted. "The English Minister, in Mexico, Mr. Pakenham, who enjoys great influence in the country, from his long residence and family connexions there, will make the Mexican Government understand the necessity of yielding to the just demands of France; he will tell Mexico not to rely on any support from England, and will insist the more strongly on its submitting, as the continuation of the blockade is extremely injurious to British trade." The writer adds, that "the greater part of the British squadron, sent into the Gulf of Mexico, must have ere now left it, to return to Jamaica. The English commander easily conceived that his forces were too considerable for the protection of the interests which they might have to defend and that at the moment when England was acting in Mexico to induce the latter to accept reasonable conditions, it was not expedient that a British squadron, superior to the forces of Admiral Baudin, should be uselessly cruising under the fire of San Juan d'Ulloa."—Bombay Times.

RESIGNATION OF MR. BIDDLE.

(From the Banker's Circular, May 3.)

The accounts from the United States from the most cautious and intelligent merchants represent trade to be improving and looking well, as far as the demand for British manufactures is concerned. The cotton speculation will not, we believe, succeed; prices will fall while the article is held principally by the merchants and dealers of that country; for the Banks, whether directly implicated in the speculation or not, cannot long sustain prices at the present level; they must force the cotton to market, or scores of them will suspend payment in addition to those which have already stopped. We do not think that the resignation of the Presidency of the Bank of the United States by Mr. Biddle will make much difference in this respect, but, if any, it will be in favour of a fall of prices; not because he had any personal interest in the matter one way or another, but because he was the boldest and most powerful agent in sustaining the weak and adventurous Banks of the South, whenever they fell into difficulties. His Successor, Mr. Dunlop, will not have the requisite nerve and confidence to act in a similar manner under emergencies. The Bank, too, of which that gentleman is now President, has, we believe, much less owing to it from the South than it had formerly, and the same motive for assisting the southern Bank does not consequently now exist. Therefore we say that in all probability prices of cotton must decline in the United States, and we are confirmed in that opinion by men of great knowledge and experience in that country.

Respecting the causes Mr. Biddle's retirement we are convinced that his letter tells substantially, and nearly the whole truth: we therefore insert it :—

"To the Board of Directors of the Bank of the United States:

"Gentlemen,—I execute a purpose which, as you are aware, I have long meditated, and which I intimated to the stockholders at their first meeting, under the new character—that of retiring from the direction of the Bank. It is now more than twenty years since I entered the service. They have been years of intense labour, and they have earned for me a right to claim the relaxation and repose which approaching age and precarious health require. I have waited anxiously for the most appropriate moment at which I could be best spared; but hitherto, whenever I have sought the retirement I so much needed, some difficulty in which my service was deemed useful, always interposed to detain me. None such exists now. All the political dissentions connected with the Bank for the last ten years have ceased—all its extraordinary efforts for the protection of our national interests are happily ended—and the Bank has returned to its accustomed channels of business in peace. I can therefore withdraw at length without inconvenience, and I do it more readily, because I leave the affairs of the institution in a state of great prosperity, and in the hands of able directors and officers.

"This separation from friends with whom I have been so long and so agreeably associated is among the most painful acts of my life; and I pray you to accept at parting my sincere wishes for the personal welfare of you all.

"Philadelphia, March 29, 1839.

We repeat that this letter, we believe, contains the whole with which the banking, mercantile, and manufacturing classes of the country can have any interest concerning the cause of Mr. Biddle's retirement; and this conviction is founded on conversations of which we have had the advantage with the best-informed men on American affairs; among others, with Mr. Jaudon, whose integrity, sincerity of candour and truth, no one will question who has the advantage of any intercourse in business with him. We therefore dismiss this subject with saying that capitalists take the same view of the matter for there have been several transactions in the shares of the United States Bank at £21 5s. and £21 10s. since the intelligence arrived; at the latter price 150 shares were sold yesterday to one party; those prices being as high as they have ever been for several weeks past.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON POSTAGE.

(From the Examiner March 10.)

We give the following as the most important points of the report, which as a whole is admirably drawn up:—

Moral and Commercial Evils of present High Rates of Postage.

That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the evidence taken before them abundantly proves that the present high rates of postage are extremely injurious to all classes, both in their individual and collective capacity, interfering as they do with their progress in moral and intellectual improvement, and, in some degree, with their physical welfare; also that those rates, by restricting the transmission of general advice, invoices, orders, &c. produce a most serious injury to commerce, and, consequently, to national prosperity: that by checking communication between persons interested in the same objects, or engaged in the same pursuits, they tend greatly to restrain the progress of the nation in arts and sciences: that by extremely limiting the operations of the different societies instituted for the spread of religion, the advancement of morality, and the promotion of charitable objects, they have an injurious effect on the character of the poorer classes, and also interfere with their domestic comforts: that in regard only of their private correspondence by letter or person intercourse, the same object, or engaged in the same pursuits, they tend greatly to restrain the progress of the nation in arts and sciences: that by extremely limiting the operations of the different societies instituted for the spread of religion, the advancement of morality, and the promotion of charitable objects, they have an injurious effect on the character of the poorer classes, and also interfere with their domestic comforts: that in regard only of their private correspondence by letter or person intercourse continue their depredations, and slew the cattle, killing the followers. They murdered an Officer of the Lorcha [lorcha] who was cut off while fishing near same.

Special action is still the order of the day, and we are the consequences.

There is no doubt we have been deceived by the reports given of the country by B —— and others, of which Government are well aware."

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

A letter just received from Hongkong detailing some particulars in relation to the Battle of Kaoulon, also states that a few days ago the body of a white man, most probably an American, was seen floating about with several contusions on his head, but it is difficult to find out whether the Chinese had any hand in his death or not." Now it really seems to me, Mr. Editor, that the circumstances of the Hongkong Residents, composed as the are entirely of small communities, are such as to preclude all necessity for doubts and "suppositions" as to what community this deceased individual belonged.

Is there such a vast number of American vessels at Hongkong manned by such a large number of seamen as to render it necessary to come to the unsatisfactory conclusion that this white man must be "supposed to be an American"? Why not be certain of it? There are but 4 or 5 American ships at Hongkong, and there is probably not more than one of the five which has as many as twenty souls on board. The number of persons connected with an American ship is therefore so very small that it appears to me quite impossible not to know immediately when even a single individual is missing. This man may be an American; be it so, still I hope for the honour of both the English and American flags, that a thorough investigation of all the particulars connected with the case of this unfortunate individual may be instituted. Possibly this may have already been done, but I am inclined to think not. These are trying times in China, and the circumstances which occur in such surprising succession should all be placed upon their proper footing and all be allowed to have their full and honest weight.

BRIVEL.

Macao, Tuesday Sept. 10 h. 1839.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 14th Sept. 1839.

By the Whitby Lassie from Singapore we have received a Free Press of the 13th and Price Current of 22nd of last month. From the former we recopy an address from the Calcutta merchants to H. M. Privy Council praying for speedy settlement of their claims on Government for the Opium surrendered to the Chinese by Captain Elliot. We notice the arrival in Singapore of the Tenasserim from China.

A singular and altogether unprovoked outrage has during the week been committed by the Chinese upon a Spanish vessel lying in the Typa, where by property to the amount of more than 90,000 $ has been destroyed, apparently for no object.

The following are the particulars of the case: The crew of the Spanish brig Bibaino which vessel being in ballast lay anchored in the Typa, saw at about 5 o'clock in the morning of the 12th of the month, several Chinese boats come towards them, and, making them out to be warboats, they hoisted their flag; a little afterwards it was observed that the Chinese detached two boats without people in them, and seeing that they were on the lee quarter upon the brig, the crew paid out more chain, and thus avoided their vessel being set on fire. Immediately after this large boats came close to the brig two by the head and two by the stern, and began firing with great fury, and at same time a number of boats with many oars came to the sides, and the deck was in a moment filled with a multitude of men, armed with matchlocks, swords, halfpikes and pikes. Seeing this, the crew, without attempting any resistance, all jumped overboard, and were most of them picked up by the Chinese. These after having rifled the vessel of all she contained, even of the clothes of the sailors, the officer's charts and instruments, chronometers etc. and after having cut away the flag, which also they took with them, set fire to the vessel, then left her, taking along with then the Chief officer (a native of Spain) with a chain round his neck. The boatswain and five others of the crew were set ashore by the Chinese on an island near Macao, and thirteen others were left in the ship's longboat without oars or rudder to find their way to Macao as best they might. These were brought on shore by the boat belonging to the bar fort, and the other six were taken off the island and brought to Macao by a customhouse officer (the practice mayor) who that morning had gone to the Typa by order of the Governor of Macao. Two sailors are missing, and it is not known whether they have been drowned in attempting to get to the shore, or whether they have, like the chief officer, been made prisoners by the Chinese.

We had several days previous to this occurrence observed a great number of Chinese boats near the Typa, and had been told that they contained combustibles and soldiers to act against Hongkong; but the attack and destruction of a perfectly defenceless vessel, belonging to a friendly nation, quietly at anchor in a spot to which the Portuguese jurisdiction has hitherto been supposed to extend, was a feat more congenial to these "braves." This brig was one of the Spanish vessels regularly authorized by a Chinese Hoppoet, in which the number fons was eight has to trade with Macao, and it is as yet not known with any degree of certainty what can possibly have been the object of the Chinese authorities in her destruction. The vessel was not by any means engaged in the Opium trade, spanish vessels being prohibited to carry the drug either to or from Manila; she was not carrying on any other illicit trade in the Typa being in ballast and about returning, we believe, to Manila. The Chinese could not have mistaken the vessel for an English one, she being well known as Spanish, and her Commander, who at the time of the catastrophe happening was ashore, being ill, having ordered that the Spanish flag should be hoisted whenever manned in boats were seen near the vessel, and this was accordingly done. It is probable that the Chinese suspected the Bibaino of the intention of carrying provisions to the fleet at Hongkong, and as shown in many instances, suspicion with the Chinese is equivalent to conviction they destroyed the vessel, though the finding her perfectly empty, was a proof of the vessel's innocence

Yesterday at about four o'clock P. M. H. M. S. Volage, came to an anchor in the roads, and saluted the Portuguese flag with 21 guns which salute was returned from the fort of San Francisco with an equal number. A boat from the ship of war, with a lieutenant came on shore, with, we are told a communication to the Governor, which after having been delivered, the boat returned. We have not heard what the nature of this communication has been.

The following are the translations with which we have been kindly favored, of the Edicts published at Macao some time since, and of which we gave a short abstract in our last. We hear results of an affair that is said to have taken place at Hong-kong on the 4th. in which some English are said to have been wounded, and some Chinese killed, but from want of well authenticated accounts, refrain from giving particulars. Another account received from Hong-kong the day before yesterday, to the effect, that Captain Smith commanding H. M. S. Volage has given notice on the 11th of this month, that six days after that notice the Bogue will be blockaded so as not to allow of any vessels entering the port. We have no reason to believe this account well authenticated. The Imperial Commissioner is said to be still at the Bocca Tigris or Chumpee, whither he repaired almost immediately after his return to Canton from Heungshan, the Hoppo from Canton, whose arrival at Macao we noticed in our last, left again on the 9th and it is expected that his visit to Macao will have the long desired effect of reopening the trade between this and Canton, now interrupted during near 6 months.

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner, Governor of the Leang Keang; and Tang, President of the Board of War and Governor of the two Kwang, issue this clear proclamation. Whereas it appears that the English foreigners are very obstinate opposing our commands and disregarding our prohibitions; for this sell opium—the vicious barbarians—lay water about Macao; and the empty opium ships which have delivered up the drug long remain at anchor; and with the newly arrived merchantmen (which, having brought opium, do not surrender it) collect together at Hongkong in one place; the one does not depart, and the other does not enter the port: There were even some of the foreigners, desirous with spirits, who went so far as to take the life of Lin Wei he, as is on record. We have already repeatedly commanded the superintendent Elliot to examine the affair with strict justice, but he is again perverse and will not receive our proclamations, hiding and not delivering the offender, putting contempt upon the laws; actions most detestable and unparalelled. Therefore, we have strictly ordered all the naval and military forces of every port and landing place with the utmost severity to guard and prohibit all provisions from being conveyed to the English, to the end that they may feel and repent. At present, we find that although the English have left Macao entirely, still they are again assembled at Hongkong, and live in the foreign ships. Now it is to be feared that being thus driven to the utmost point, they may go ashore in one creek at the villages or hamlets, and by force purchase provisions, seizing and plundering the inhabitants; but of this we are not certain.

Wherefore it is highly important to be prepared for them, and guard against them, and this edict is published for the full information of all you gentry, old men, villagers and shopkeepers in these towns and villages. You will then, at your convenience agreeably to the tenor of this, collect together and deliberate, purchase proper arms and exercise the able bodied among you that they may protect you. Then, if it should happen, that these barbarians should come ashore on such an errand, you are permitted to use your guns and cannon, and repel them with force. It is impossible that with their few numbers they can fight your multitudes. And if, also, they go to the hills to get water, it will be proper to intercept their path thither, not allowing them to draw it. But if the said foreigners do not at all go ashore, you are by no means allowed to go aboard your own vessels and boats and go alongside of their ships while at anchor, and any other doings involving life you are most strictly forbidden to attempt. Let every thing be done with the most implicit obedience. Oppose not. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 7th month, 23rd day.

(September 2nd, 1839.)

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner, &c. &c., and Tang, Governor of the two Kwang &c. &c., proclaim clearly this strict interdict. It appears that whenever a foreign ship of war arrives in the waters of Kwang tung, the channels of the inner passages being very devious, and the depths of the water not uniform, and they not accustomed to navigate there, she durst not alone lightly sail in; but by means of traitorous pilots and Chinamen and boatmen, who, covetous of her large gifts and compensation secretly conduct her in, she covertly reaches the inner waters. Traitors like these are excessively wicked. Moreover, we have written to the tungche of Macao commanding him to give strict orders to all the pilots in accordance with this, that they do not conduct any ships. To arrest pedlers or fishing boats and every other kind, that they obey this strict interdict, it is published at every landing place and harbor that they may all fully understand it. If those are any who under pay expectation of receiving wages on board of these ships, should secretly act as pilots, then at once the naval and military officers will closely examine and ascertain in all parts who they are, and taking these pilots shall instantly decapitate them, and exhibit their heads at all the landing places. Whoever shall sell provisions to them shall be most severely dealt with, without any chance of compromising the sentence. Now let all you people of the coasts be careful and preserve your lives by obedience, and implicitly observe these injunctions. A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 7th month, 23rd day,

(September 2nd, 1839.)

Lin, High Imperial Commissioner &c. &c., and Tang, Governor of the two Kwang again publish this clear proclamation. In the sixth month of this year, we received the imperial commands to promulgate the new laws, concerning those foreign Ships which bring Opium. If they endeavour secretly to sell it, it is ordered that the principals shall be immediately decapitated, and the accessories strangled, and the property entirely confiscated to government. For six months of this year, those who voluntarily surrender their opium, we have been allowed to remit their offences worthy of death. The new law of the heavenly dynasty is that all barbarians who come to Canton to trade must all obey them implicite; now we, the Commissioner and Governor, do fully explain all the particulars in the clearest manner, that all you foreigners may know them.

1st. All ships which bring no opium, shall make a clear representation to the authorities and enter the ports, waiting until they have been examined, when they can unload their cargoes. They are not allowed to loiter.

2d. All ships belonging opium clandestinely shall immediately make a surrender of it according to the orders, and their offences shall be remitted after a complete surrender they are permitted to enter the port, open their holds and trade.

3d. Let the murderer who took the life of Lin Weihe be instantly surrendered, and not implicate all the foreigners in the same crime by their covert concealment of him.

By these heads, do we the Commissioner and Governor shew our compassion for you foreigners, clearly explaining them that we may lead you in this new path. But if you are obstinate, will not hear and obey them, but follow your own inclinations, or think of going into bye places here and there secretly to dispose of your cargo, then it will be evident that at heart your are obstinate; and whenever you are taken, then you will be sentenced according to the new law. If you still presume upon your numbers and oppose, it will be impossible to discriminate between the gems and the pebbles (the good and bad) but all must be punished, and this punishment cannot be impeded by a subsequent repentance. Let each one tremblingly obey: A special edict.

Taoukwang, 19th year 7th month, 16th day.

(August 28th, 1839.)

We are now enabled to lay before our readers the depositions of the survivors of the passengers and crew of the Black John, of the attack of which boat, we gave an account in our paper of the first of this month, and also the result of the surgeon's examination, viz.:

HARMAN, THOMAS, being examined before the committee of management, deposes as follows:

"Left Macao on the morning of the 24th at 6 A. M. there being on board seven lascars himself, and Mr. Moss, passenger. The boat belongs to Mr. Jussi. Owing to contrary tide anchored at 6 P. M. under the southend of Lantao Island. Two men were on the look out, who at about 10 o'clock gave the alarm of boats approaching, when 5 or 6 pulling boats filled with men immediately ranged alongside, and began to massacre the crew. Deponent jumped overboard and holding by the rudder, remained about half an hour in the water. The boat had personal baggage and stores on board, which the night before were taken from Mr Jussi's house to the Black John. The Chinese took away several boxes but not all. The boats remained alongside about half an hour, and then deponent got on board and found Mr. Moss who told him that the crew were murdered. Attempts had been made to fire the vessel, by means of tarred rope, gunpowder, and clothes; he extinguished the fire by throwing water. Soon after the Harriet hove in sight, took them in tow, and brought them to the Typa this morning. A Mandarin knife and cap were found on board the Black John.

Mr. Mark Moss, a British subject born in London, deposeth as follows, before Mr. van Basel, Dutch Consul. Mr. Paiva, late Procurador of Macao, and Messrs Kerr and Leslie, British merchants, in Macao on the 25th day of August 1839:

"I left Macao on board the Black John, containing personal and household property, on Friday night last the 23rd instant, to proceed to Hongkong; having got as far as the point of Lantao, anchored there yesterday evening at about 5 o'clock; supped, and went to lie down. At about nine o'clock I heard the crew consisting of Lascars cry out "Wyloi Wy-loi!", ran to the skylight, and saw three guns fired at us I think with charcoal; when I reached the deck I saw three lascars cut down, and received myself a cut on the left side of the face, on which I went below, when I heard the Chinese crying out, "Ta, Ta" and on putting my head out of the companion, got a most severe wound on the top of my head from a pike. The Chinese then laid hold of me, stripped me of my clothes, and cut my arm in three places as I put it up to save my head. They then proceeded to plunder and break up the boat, and coming down with lights into the cabin, one of them, seeing I had a ring on my finger, attempted to cut the finger off, but I took off the ring myself, and gave it to him, another seeing my watch took it out of my pocket, and, laying hold of my ear, pulled to a man who came with a sharp instrument, cut it off with a large portion of the scalp on the left side of my head, so you now see me put it in my mouth, attempting to push it down my throat. I was then knocked about on all sides by the Chinamen and saw them bring a barrel of gunpowder with which they attempted to blow up the ship but did not succeed. I was resolved inevitably found the smoke caused by the explosion, and was nearly suffocated, when making a hole in it, I reached the deck but found no one there. I called out the names of some of the Lascars, and seeing a rope moving, aware, found that the Tindal above of the whole native crew had saved himself by hanging on to the rudder under water. He came up and gave me some water of which I drank five bottles full, and felt refreshed. A short time after this, the Harriet, Capt. Hall, came up, and I suppose, from the Chinese having so suddenly, that they had seen the vessel. From Capt. Hall I met with the tenderest treatment; he took me on board, dressed my wounds, and taking charge of my boat, brought me to Macao this morning at about 3 o'clock."

This is to certify that we have carefully examined Mr. Mark Moss, who reports that he was attacked last night by nine persons who boarded his boat, and inflicted several severe wounds on his person:

We saw him this morning at eight o'clock and found that he had received the following injuries.

ON THE HEAD.

A deep wound over the left eyebrow and extending across the arch of the nose, the bones of which have been completely divided.

An oblique wound on the forehead about two inches long. The left ear with a portion of the scalp has been cut away, leaving a large open wound.

There are also two smaller wounds on the head.

ON THE LEFT SIDE, FORE ARM AND HAND.

At the lower part of the arm there is a deep wound extending across the limb and dividing the external condyle of the humerus. In the middle of the forearm an extensive deep wound,—the fascia has been torn and the muscles much lacerated;—at the lower part of the forearm near the wrist another deep wound down to the ulna, which bone has been divided—on the hand a deep wound at the back of the thumb, almost separating this member from the hand.

Besides the above there are also several wounds on the body and limbs which are of little consequence.

From the severe injuries now described we consider the man to be in a dangerous condition.

(Signed) R. H. COX.
W. LOCKHART.

Macao August, 25th, 1839.

We have received the following Notice of the blockade, to begin on the 1st September, just in time for publication in this day's paper. Capt. Elliot's memorandum to commanders of ships will be read, we doubt not, with satisfaction by all who wish the cause of the English to be unprejudiced. We hear that that the British at Hongkong have addressed a Memorial to Lord Palmerston, which we should also have given, but it has by some mischance not yet come to hand.

Official Public Notice.

The High Commissioner and the Governor of these Provinces having publicly forbidden the regular supplies of food to Her Majesty's Subjects, having commanded the people to flee upon and assault them whenever they go on shore to purchase provisions; and carriers of Her Majesty's Subjects having been actually cut off: Notice is hereby given that it is my intention, at the requisition of the Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China, to establish a blockade of the river and port of Canton, and notice is hereby further given that none other than Vessels actually within the port, or foreign Vessels entering within six days from the date hereof, will be allowed free egress till the Blockade be declared raised.

Notice of the Blockading Force will be hereafter promulgated.

Given under my hand on board Her Majesty's Ship "Volage," at anchor in Hong-kong Bay, off the Port of Canton, this 11th day of September, 1839.

(Signed) H SMITH,
Captain of Her Britannic Majesty's Ship Volage.

GENERAL MEMORANDUM.

TO COMMANDERS OF ALL BRITISH VESSELS, AND OTHER HER MAJESTY'S SUBJECTS.

Ship Fort William,
Hongkong, 11th Sept 1839.

Amongst the protests put forward by the Commissioner for the vindication of his measures of death and indiscriminating violence, against all Her Majesty's subjects in China, men, women and children, is the declaration that some of them are actually engaged in the illicit traffic of Opium at this anchorage. The Chief Superintendent, on his part, considering it his duty to leave no just room for the inference that Her Majesty's flag is flying in countenance or protection of persons engaged in a trade declared to be lawless by the Government of this country, (to the great aggravation of the risks of the ships detained till the lawful trade can be conducted on a safe and honorable footing) has now to require all Commanders of ships, not having Opium on board, to repair to this vessel within the 24 hours, and make oath to that effect. And moved by the pressing public consideration herein before set forth, the Chief Superintendent has to require that all British vessels engaged in the traffic of Opium, should immediately depart from this Harbor and Coast.

By order of the Chief Superintendent,

Samuel EDWARD ELMSLIE

VOL. 4. No. 51. Macao, Saturday, 21st September, 1839. No. 207.

ART. V. Description of the tea plant; its name-cultivation; mode of curing the leaves; transportation to Canton; sale and foreign consumption; endeavors to raise the shrub in other countries.—From the Chinese Repository. [continued from last week's paper]

The tea which grows in Fuhkeen and Keangse is brought to Canton entirely by water transportation, except that part of the route crossing the Mei ling in the north of this province, and in some cases, a short land carriage from the hills to the boats. The distance from Canton to the Bohea hills is estimated by the author of the manuscript to be 2885 le, or about 930 English miles; to the department of Soochow in Keangsoo, he reckons the distance to be 3581 le, or upwards of 1190 miles. He has given minute directions on various points, as to the forms to be observed at the excise-offices on the road, the prices usually paid for boats, coolies, and transportation, and an itinerary of the distance between the places on the route, affording us an insight into the details of inland navigation in China. He says, whoever engages a boat, must examine the strength of the wood, the dryness of the hold, and the goodness of the sails, oats, anchor, and sculls. It is necessary to guard against loading the boats too deeply, lest they strike upon the sands and rocks in shallow places, and the tea get wet."

The tea, securely packed in chests, which are also wrapped in matting, and then marked, is first collected at the village of Singtsun, from whence it is carried to the mouth of the Kan keuh, a stream that takes its rise among the Bohea hills, and empties into the Poyang lake. For a portion of the tea at least, the route to Hokow, the principal depot on the south-eastern border of the lake, is by land; but it is probable that the tea is brought from all parts of the hills by the most direct road; not only down the Kewkeuh, but by several minor streams, all of which flow into the lake. From the village of Singtsun to Hokow is 410 le, and around the lake to Nanchang foo, the capital of Keangse, is 495 le. At these three places are excise offices to levy a duty on the passing goods, for it is the policy of the Chinese government to collect their internal imposts on manufactures at certain favorable spots on the great thoroughfares, near which not only tea, but all other products and goods, are compelled to pass. Whether this arrangement is made in order more accurately to ascertain the amounts consumed; or for the convenience of the governmental collectors; or whether it arises from a lack of confidence in the honesty of the manufacturer, who would not wish to pay more excise than he was compelled to, may be difficult to decide; probably from all these reasons combined. At any rate, the government have very adroitly taken advantage of the physical peculiarities of the country to place their tax-gatherers at such points as will incommode the people the least, while also they suffer but little to escape them. It is a part of the same policy to prohibit all native vessels from bringing tea and silk to Canton coastwise.

At Nanchang foo, the boats are fairly afloat in the river Kan, and have only to ascend it as far as the water will permit. From this place to Kanchow foo, in the southern part of Keangse, the distance is 780 le by the river. Between the two places, the itinerary has noted upward of one hundred localities, and added occasional remarks concerning the most remarkable temples, pagodas, &c., passed on the route, as well as the distances between the most considerable towns. There are many rapids in the river Kan, one of which, the Shihpā tan, or 'Eighteen rapids,' just below Kanchow foo, is somewhat celebrated as a place of danger; it is in passing this and other rapids, that the tea sometimes gets damaged. From this city to Tayu heen in Nan an foo, where the tea is landed, is 350 le. In some parts of this route, the boats are dragged over shallows; in others, the cargo is divided into boats carrying not more than sixty chests each, and sometimes, the men are obliged to wait until the river rises before they can proceed. The foreign embassies to the court of Peking have always ascended this river on their return to Canton, and their accounts state that the boats were dragged for miles in half the necessary depth of water. From the city last mentioned every chest of tea is carried by porters over the mountains, to Cheking heen in Nanheung chow in this province, a distance of 180 le. On both sides of the mountains, there are certain establishments, like post-houses, where porters are obtained; and it would appear that this part of the road is considered so dangerous, that additional coolies are supplied by them to accompany and guard the tea to prevent attacks from robbers. Large numbers of these porters are constantly employed in transporting not only tea, but goods, grain, and other commodities, as well as travellers, from side of the mountains to the other. At Cheking heen, the tea is again put into boats and carried to Keuhkeang heen in Lhaouchow foo, where it is examined a second time by the excise-office, and then reshipped into large boats, in which, by the Pih keang or North river, it reaches Canton, a distance of 980 le from the base of Mei ling. The boats in which the tea is brought to Canton, carry from 500 to 800 chests, and are usually called tea boats by foreigners, though they are not exclusively engaged in this business. They are the specimen of the vessels used for inland navigation. Their shape is like an ellipsoid; the ledge is the side, where the freighters work, is placed not far above the middle of the hull; and when laden, there is about as much above as beneath the water. Whole families live in them, making them their constant and agreeable residence. They are built of hard wood, are fitted either for sailing or tracking, and we have heard it estimated by naval men, that the largest are capable of carrying a hundred tons of measurement goods. At each of the excise-houses on the road, the supercargo of the tea presents a manifest of the cargo, and the number of persons and luggage in the boats. There are seven of them between the village of Singtsun and Canton; the excise levied at one of them is one candareen and four cash per pecul.

The green tea is cultivated in a large section of country lying partly in Nganhwuy, Keangsoo, and Chekeang, but the principal district is that of Wooyuen in Hwuychow foo in Nganhwuy, at the northwest extremity of a range of hills called Bungfo, which divide that province from Chekeang, between the thirtieth and thirty-first parallels of north latitude. They are cultivated near a branch of the Yangtsz keang, on every part of this range of hills, in a mountainous sandy soil, resulting from the disintegration of the rocks. The contiguity of this region to the large rivers enables the proprietor of green tea to carry his cargo either to Hokow or Kanchow foo on the Poyang lake in Keangsee, with only one unladi g his boats. This must be done to pass the hills between Changshan heen and Yuhshan heen, which divide the two provinces. This route is taken, we suppose, in preference to the nearer one by the Yangtsze keang, on account of the labor of stemming the powerful current of that river, and also to avail of the descending current of the stream from Yuhsh n to the Poyang lake. After the tea arrives at this lake, its route is the same as that which comes from Sing tsun.

The principal depot of the tea is a small call Shingtang in the district of Wo keang in Soochow foo in Keangsoo; this villa e on Nanhoo near the city of Soochow is a place at which large quantities of it are carried. After it is shipped at Shingtang or Soochow, it goes first to the city of Hang how foo to each kang, 60 le distance, near which is an imperial excise-post and a custom-house. This large city is situated at the mouth of the river Tseentang, in the district of Teentang, and the tea ascends the river 120 le to Changs an heen, on the borders of Keangse, passing through the districts of Yang foo and Sinching in Hangchow foo, beneath to Yechowfoo and Sengan to Kaochow foo. At Changshan heen, there is a post for levying excise, for here the tea is unladen to be carried across the mountains to Yuhshan heen in Kwangse, a distance of 120 le. The sum paid for carrying a tea-chest is 2 5 cash per pecul. 3 5 cash are paid for the load of two men's chair bearers, and 1 0 cash, and 45 additional for the assent. A sum of 9 cash is paid to all for spirits, and the employer is expected to add a douceur for wine to cheer the hearts of those being gone. On the arrival of the tea at Yuhshan heen in Kwangse foo, boats are chartered to take it either to Hokow or Kanchow foo, as the case may be. The distance to the former is 120 le; the charge for boats to the latter place is 30 taels, being a journey of more than 600 le.

By this long and expensive transportation, the price of the tea to the foreign consumer is greatly enhanced; some have estimated the additional charge for freight on the poorest sort third of the whole cost, but this cannot be accurately determined. If foreigners were permitted to procure their tea at Hangchow foo or Ningpo in Chekeang, the distance for transportation would be reduced to 35 miles for green, and 375 miles for black tea; and the whole distance could be performed by water, because in this route from the Bohea hills, advantage could be taken of the current down the Yangtsze keang. But on the other hand, its transportation over such an extent of country gives employment to many thousands of boatmen and porters, and enables the government to levy an internal revenue, while the additional expense to the foreign consumer (estimated at £150,000 annually on black teas alone), would never be considered by a Canton statesman, as an argument why he should endeavor to increase the consumption abroad by shortening his route, and lessening the charges of its circuitous portations. The single fact that so many mouths are fed by this branch of commerce, would weigh more with him (and we think justly), than the prospect that by and by many more might be.

After the tea has reached Canton, which usually happens about the middle of October, such of it as has been damaged on the route is unpacked and carefully dried. The trade in tea being monopolized by the hong merchants, the cargoes are usually carried to their hongs. But at times the traders from the hills are not disposed to sell immediately at the price offered by the hong merchants, but hold out for higher terms; at others, the lot was bargained for the preceding year, and advance money paid to assist the cultivator. The E. I. Company frequently made advances, through the hong merchants, to the cultivator in order to assist him; and also to secure a good quality of tea; and the same is frequently done now by private merchants; but, either through the mismanagement of the cultivator, or more probably, the erroneous calculations of the hong merchant's risk and loss has, in some instances, attended the transaction.

The preparation of tea for the foreign market begins the laborers for cultivating and curing it, and porters and boatmen for transporting it, in the interior of the country, also employ thousands of people in this city. The carpenter finds occupation in making small boxes for the finer description of tea, and large chests for the coarser. The plumber is engaged in manufacturing leaden canisters of proper sizes for the more delicate sorts, and in lining the large chests with lead. In making the sheet lead, he exhibits a mode of manipulation truly Chinese: the portable furnace is placed on the ground in a convenient spot; near to it is imbedded a smooth tile about a foot and a half square, to which there is a mate of a similar size, both of them thickly wrapped with paper. The workman, holding the upper with its edge resting on the lower, pours a portion of liquid lead on the latter, and instantly drops the one in his hand, by which means a thin sheet is made. This he takes out and hands to another workman, who, with a pair of shears and a hot iron, fashions it into various canisters, boxes, &c.

After the carpenter has made, and the plumber has lined, and the packer has filled, the chest, the skill and taste of the painter are called in to adorn its exterior with grotesque flower- and fanciful devices, great numbers of persons are employed in this department, though only the small boxes containing the finest teas are painted. When painted, the chests are covered with paper, on which is printed in English the name of the ship, description of tea, &c., &c., and these two branches, the papering and printing employ not a few. When papered and labeled, is but still to be sewed up in a mat, and secured with rattan, and for convenience, another label is pasted upon the outside.

After all these operations are finished, and the chest is ready for shipment, there is still remaining the "chop-boat" or lighter to be engaged, and in these fine boats, it is at last brought alongside the ship at Whampoa.

Assam.

ASSAM—ITS AGRICULTURAL IMPORTANCE.

To the Editor of the Calcutta Englishman.

SIR,

I shall not in this sketch touch on the political consequence of Assam, but confine myself to its commercial value as an agricultural province, which I shall estimate by the standard of the pounds, shillings, and pence it is capable of producing.

At present Great Britain pays 3½ Chins for tea, and nearly in specie too, not less than £2,500,000 annually, which is so much yearly lost to the national wealth of our country, as the money thus carried with, goes into the treasury of a foreign state. Now it follows, that if any British colony or other portion of her dominions, supplied her with tea sufficient for her consumption, these two millions of pounds sterling in money would be saved to the general stock of the kingdom. It is true that we have only under British rule, at present, supply sufficient for her want; but Assam, with very little attention, is capable of doing so in ten years.

To that country the tea plant of China is indigenous. It is found existing in extensive jungles throughout the province and in the neighbouring regions, occupying a area of several thousand square miles. 'This beautiful country,' M. Cash observes in his Topography of Assam 'enjoys all the qualities requisite for rendering it one of the finest in the world. Its climate is cool, healthy, and congenial to European constitutions; its numerous crystal streams abound in gold dust and masses of the soil near its mountains are pregnant with precious stones and silver; its atmosphere is perfumed with tea growing wild and luxuriantly; and the soil is so well adapted to all kinds of agricultural purposes, that it might be converted into one continued garden of sugar and cotton, coffee, sugar, and tea, over an extent of many hundred miles.' It was from these wild tracts that the tea recently sent to England, as an experiment, was prepared, and not from the cultivated tea plant brought round from China by Mr. Gordon. That experiment, however, has satisfactorily established the genuine character of the Assam plant. See the report of the English tea brokers, as published in the 'Proceedings of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India,' for May last, on the samples of Assam teas sent home by Government to the Court of Directors in March 1838. In fact, it only requires the applications of capital and skill to produce from those, at present waste tracts, not only sufficient tea to make us independent of China but enough to supply the wants of the whole world, as long as tea shall be drank, and on as cheap terms too, as any other country, if not cheaper. The discovery of tea in Assam is truly more valuable than gold. It also [illegible] this test and wealthy country. As this discovery will doubtless be regarded hereafter, if not at present, as an epoch in the history of British commerce, let us take a view of the benefits likely to accrue from it to Great Britain and India.

Assam is a much cheaper provisioned country than China, and being surrounded by thickly peopled states, and easily accessible from all points, labour will soon become so too. It is not, therefore, too much to expect that we shall, at no distant period, after supplying Britain, at home and abroad, divide the foreign tea trade of China, and share it equally with her; for merchants, like all other people, will always lay in their stocks at the cheapest market. But to the point. The export of tea from Canton on British bottoms for the first two years after the commencement of the free trade amounted for the twelve months ending lbs.

31st March 1835	41,641,266
For the year closing 31st March 1838 to	56,477,403
And for that term ending 30th June 1838 to	54,921,466

Thus giving an annual average export of 43,013,377 lbs. This average amount, as I have stated before, would cost in China better than £2,500,000 and employ about 35,000 tons of shipping. The exports of tea from Canton on American vessels for the year ending 30th June 1838, amounted to 16,618,733 lbs., and cost in China Sp. drs. 3,973,140

Now, would the circulation of so large a sum as £2,500,000, or Co's. Rs. 2,80,00,000 yearly in this country not very greatly increase it? It would, in our opinion, indeed, at it were, new life and activity into the agricultural interests of Bengal, and open sources of wealth and employment yet unknown; but perhaps not to a great extent than the port of Calcutta could be benefited. The large yearly increase of tonnage that would be found requisite when the production of tea has reached the contemplated figure of supplying the home market only, would bring about seventy 500 ton ships more to this port yearly, than now frequent it. This Government too would incr it largely in a revenual point of view. Suppose they impose an export duty of one anna per lb. on all Assam tea shipped from Bengal to Great Britain and the Colonies; that rate on 60,00,000 of lbs. would produce an annual income of Co's. Rs. 3,50,000 or £30,000 without requiring any actual increase in their present establishment. Such would be the results had we the home trade only in our hands. With a fair proportion or share of that of foreign Europe and America too, they of course would be much greater; and it is not unreasonable to look for them, for as previously mentioned, traders will always buy at the cheapest, and sell at the dearest market they can find.

Coffee, which is also a native plant of Assam is next to tea in commercial importance to Great Britain, for till this moment she has no coffee colony adequate to her wants. According to M'Culloch, coffee grows abundantly on all the low land hills of Assam, and experience in Ceylon a great part of the year, owing to the hills the appearance of being covered with snow. Assam, in fact, as well as tea, is a coffee country, also naturally and although labour there (at this moment) is somewhat dearer than in most other parts of India, yet even now, I fancy it is fully as cheap as slave labour in the West Indies, and it doubtless soon will become more so. What then is to prevent Assam from becoming a first rate coffee producing district?

In 1821, when the duty was 1s. per lb. the home consumption amounted to only	7,993,941
In 1828, the duty being reduced to 6d. per lb. the consumption, reached	16,766,120

And it is now (1839) in consequence of reduced duties, which always extend consumption increased to, 23,000,000

The consumption in fact throughout Europe and America is increasing at a much greater rate than production. The supplies of all our coffee colonies amounted in 1836 to only 20,700,000 lbs. being less than our wants by about 2,300,000 lbs.; the difference is, no doubt, imported from some of the foreign West India Coffee-islands or Java. Here then is ample encouragement for the investment of capital in Assam in the cultivation of coffee. Every thing is favourable to success: consumption ever rising; land excellent, cheap, and well irrigated; good cheap; labor comparatively cheap; in a word, every country seems blessed with greater advantages than Assam.

Cotton-cloth, or the tree Picea Indica, which produces it, is likewise indigenous to Assam, and rather thrives in great abundance, and promises to become before long a leading article of commercial importance. The importations of this article into England in 1836 amounted barely to 52,000 lbs. whilst for the year ending 5th April, 1837, they amounted to 1,78,378 lbs.; and this article is now known to be so very useful in nearly all our domestic manufactures of cloth, that its consumption will only be limited by supply.

I [illegible] rice, rotton, the sugar cane, silk, wood oil, &c. &c. and [illegible] more or less [illegible] Assam. Rice and cotton are largely cultivated by the Cossyas chiefly for export to Sylhet, Cachar, Jynteea, and Bengal proper. Every great mountain and river in the province of Assam, generally called Kamporee ranges, is said to contain a little attention would be equal to the Lead Mines. Many valuable gems are also found [illegible] among it, the real gem excepted.

Nature has blessed this country with an [illegible] abundance, and she has also covered it with [illegible] of the noblest vegetable in its territory that surpass produce to the best forests and regions of the earth. Immense rivers, Assam is watered by the magnificent Burrampooter, and its numerous branches at every point, as it runs water carriage, the best of all modes of conveyance, from the remotest part of the country is available to Calcutta, to any part of the interior of India, of Tibet, of Burmah, and I might almost add to any part of the world. There is not a better tract in the country around its native [illegible] than that occupying it with the Burrampooter [illegible] Assam, and after a winding course of about 2000 miles, it joins the Ganges, about 40 miles from the Bay of Bengal. It is more navigable than either the Indus, or the Ganges, of any other large river in India, and offers a wide field for steam boat navigation. Its importance too will very soon be duly appreciated if it has been overlooked or neglected hitherto.

[illegible] From the foregoing then it would appear that the British Indian Government would, if it had only the home trade in our hands, derive a yearly benefit to the state of revenue of [illegible] Rs. 3,50,000, that the port of Calcutta would derive a yearly increase from the increase of 34,000 tons yearly in its shipping

The other advantages we should derive from the successful cultivation of Assam, I can form no estimate of, being in possession of no data on which to base a calculation; but they would doubtless be very great, and add to the wealth of this Government and Britain generally.

Egypt.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN EGYPT.—The Pacha of Egypt, so conspicuous for his liberality in advance of Eastern despots generally, has sanctioned the attemp to instruct the ladies of his harem. The example appears to have spread amongst the nobles of Egypt, although the kind of instruction coveted is not just such as we could desire—it is not to be despised as the prelude to better days. The lady on whom this great and good work has devolved, is every way qualified for her work, both by classical attainments and piety. We are sure the following extract from her journal and letters cannot fail to interest. When will our wealthy Belooe imitate so praiseworthy an example? How truly gratifying to see the warrior chieftain of endeavouring to introduce the blessings of western education into his domestic circles.

"Egypt's dark land"

It is probably to the energetic effort on the part of an unprotected female, that Mehemet Ali has been induced to send to this country a Minister of Public Instruction. His Excellency has been here several days visiting our public institutions, and on Thursday spent some time at the Model Infant-school, Gray's-inn-road.

We are living in a busy world, and the schoolmaster is indeed abroad.

"Cairo, March 27, 1839.

"This day is among the most remarkable of my life: about 10 a. m., Mrs. Kruse, Mrs. Hekekyan, and myself, mounted on donkeys, set out for the harem. On our way we called for Capt. Lyons' janissary—Mr. Wahn, the Vice-consul, coming up at the time, said, 'You must take mine also for the honour of the dear old island.' Thus preceded by two janissaries in full dress, with their silver sticks of office, we went towards the Causa Dehara, my heart in prayer to the Lord the whole time that he would make his way plain before me. With many fears we arrived at the gate of a long avenue, which is the first strong door of the harem, we next came to another strong gate, where the janissaries and donkey-men were ordered to remain, while we were waited on by several eunuchs, who took us through another strong gate, and soon after ushered us into a long and stately saloon, where there were numerous ladies busily at work. We were then shown into an ante-room, and served with coffee, out of some of the most splendid cups, set with diamonds, I have ever beheld. Our attendants were young and beautiful slaves, evidently Greek, Georgian, and Circassian. One brought us coffee, another sherbet, and a third handed sugar, each waiter having numerous slaves to attend upon her below the dais; after this, a splendid pipe with a massive amber mouth-piece, set with large diamonds, was offered to Mrs Hekekyan but refused, that lady conforming more to European than Oriental usages. Two little girls were then brought in to us; they came up to me and lounged upon me with the greatest confidence, as if accustomed to such endearments; they were evidently some part of the Royal family, from their elaborate dress to the Persian. In about a quarter of an hour an old lady, evidently high in office, came to conduct us to her Highness. We followed her into another side apartment, where we were introduced to the Princess. We found Nazly Hanoun sitting on a high divan in the corner of the room. Mrs. Kruse and myself made our European salutation, but Mrs. Hekekyan had to prostrate herself at her feet, and kiss the hem of her garments. She condescendingly moved her hand in salutation, and then smilingly bid us to be seated on the divan nearest her Nazly Hanoun is a little woman, rather fat, apparently about forty years of age. Her countenance is striking in the extreme, particularly her eyes—indeed I never saw a more piercing eye in my life; she is said to be exceedingly like her father. Her dress was very simple, consisting of a black silk handkerchief round the head, secured at the side by a diamond pin, a shirt of white English net, which quite concealed the bosom, a robe of blue cloth, evidently English, and round her body wrapped a splendid Cashmere shawl, from which hung suspended a magnificent watch and chain. She almost immediately inquired which was the teacher, and on my being pointed out to her, asked me several questions in Turkish, which Mrs. Hekekyan translated. By this time, all my nervous fears had vanished. Her questions were pertinent, and showed that she had the improvement of her household at heart; she wished me much to come and live in the house, saying that every liberty should be allowed me; I of course declined this offer, but thanked her for the honour intended. It was at last agreed, that I should teach for the first few months four hours every day, i. e. from nine o'clock a. m. to one o'clock, p. m. I found that, owing to my very imperfect knowledge of the Turkish language (the Arabic not being spoken in the harems,) I could only devote myself to ornamental teaching at first, till time, patience, and application should open the door to a more useful labour. The Princess was evidently pleased with me, for she seldom took her eyes off me for a second. She was smoking the whole time, while a crowd of ladies stood below the dais, watching her every moment. We took our departure from her Highness about noon.

"April 2.

"Early this morning I rose and prepared for entering upon my sphere of labour. I took with me all I thought would interest her Highness, and set off, praying that the Lord would give me the strength I needed in this strange mode of teaching. I passed the soldiers at the first gate, and one of the state eunuchs whereof me into the harem, where I found the Princess engaged with her ladies in superintending the thorough cleansing of the grand saloon; she was standing on a small Turkish carpet, giving directions to the servants, who were all busily employed in obeying them. On seeing me enter she quitted her occupation, saying Ta, laske je Ditter Semsem (Come O lady!) beckoning me to follow her into her private apartment. On entering, I stood at a respectful distance from her, but she insisted on my taking a seat near her; she then in the name of God, the most merciful, the most high, &c. inquired after my health, and the usual morning salutations were given and returned. My letter of appointment in Arabic and more than a half dozen ladies were called in to inspect their contents. Every thing was examined with the greatest attention. I had taken with me several nice books with pictures, in order to see, from her manner, which she would have preferred if I had had the power of teaching: I soon found that with one accord they wanted no books, these were, therefore, dismissed. Nazly Hanoun wished to see some muslin work, which I instantly prepared, showing her how to execute it: she seemed much pleased with her labour, and really did it with considerable neatness. In a short time I had more than a dozen of my royal pupils at work, some with lace work, others with fancy work, and a few with muslin. At a little after eleven o'clock, her Highness' dinner was brought in by about thirty slaves; a silver basin and jug a richly embroidered napkin, was given to me, while a young Circassian slave poured the water on my hands, a still more beautiful girl doing the same office for the Princess. A small table, inlaid with pearl and silver, was placed before her, over which was thrown a cloth of velvet and gold: then came forward three slaves bearing a large silver tray, about four feet in diameter, which was placed on the table. I was then called to take my seat near her, when a slave covered my lap with an embroidered napkin, and another gave me a French cambric handkerchief for my mouth. The table was completely filled with silver plates, salts, peppers, and within the circle of these were of gold, of the finest description. Each plate was covered with a different dish: more than fifty dishes succeeded each other on the table, indeed in such quick succession that there was barely time to taste many of them. I was, however, so pressed, by looks and signs, and nods, and winks, first to have this: then to have that, I really felt at last afraid of seeing them. Although a knife and fork was by the Princess, yet she preferred using the meat and rice to pieces with her fingers, (the usual way of eating in this country,) but there was nothing unclean in the way she did it, and it was performed with the greatest dexterity. As a mark of particular honour, she broke two or three hard boiled eggs, and laid them on my plate, frequently placing on it also the choicest part of the dish before us. When she partook a second time of any dish, a little bell was rung. Towards the ante-room there were no fewer than three great silver trays, each filled with nine or ten dishes: and as they were emptied another took its place. Each tray was supported by three black slaves, richly dressed, who stood like three statues; at the foot of the divan, on each side of the room (the divan ran round the room, except the side where the entrance is) stood six young and beautiful girls, also splendidly dressed, with their eyes constantly fixed on their mistress, one holding a fly-chaser, another a censer, a third a cup with water, a fourth a basin and ewer, a fifth a towel worked with gold, and the sixth the little bell before mentioned. Dinner being finished, to my great relief, our hands were washed, her Highness received a cup, and I returned to my children.—The Bombay Times, 6th July.

Maulmain.

The week has passed without our having heard of any confirmation or otherwise of the reports that have so long been prevalent, of the King of Ava's sons being on their way down the country, with considerable armies under their command. We were always a most sceptical on this subject, and the longer the report continues to want confirmation, as it does at present, the less shall we be inclined to place credit in it. The more we think of the matter, the less can we bring our minds to imagine the King to be so demented, as actually to threaten us with an attack. He may talk and boast and bluster as much as he likes, but when it comes to the point of irrecoverably committing himself with us, we cannot but think, that prudence and reflection will step in, and stop him in such a course. He may, perhaps, consider our forbearance hitherto as a sign of weakness, he may imagine us to be hard pressed by enemies, all around us, but yet something may whisper to him, that we are not in reality quite so weak or so hard pressed, as to allow of his attacking us with impunity. We are, however, far from urging the improbability of the thing, and should be sorry to see a feeling of too great security and impunity to prevail: on the contrary, we think there is quite sufficient in the reports that prevail to arouse vigilance and prevention on our part, for, it may be, that in a very few days, we may hear of some formidable force approaching our neighbourhood. If the fabled intentions of the King are carried into effect, his sons may at the present time be on their way from the Capital, as it was said they were to quit some time middle of the present month. There are two reasons that induce us to doubt these reported intentions being carried into effect. The first is, that no intelligence has yet reached Maulmain (at least that we have heard of,) of any preparations going on in our neighbourhood for the assembly of troops, and secondly, that to collect any such large bodies of men, at this season of the year, would be almost tantamount to producing a famine in the country. Thatwahdin has nothing in the shape of a standing army, and the men whom he can collect together, and arm, must be withdrawn from the fields, which will consequently be left uncultivated. It may be that these Princes will assume their respective Governments, without bringing with them more troops than will suffice for the body guard of men of their high rank, and to such a proceeding, though unusual in Burmese domestic policy, we can take no exception, and must content ourselves with watching their proceedings. However, all is doubt and speculation just now, and we must wait patiently, until later and more decisive intelligence reaches us from the interior of the country.

If it could be supposed that the King would place confidence in the late intelligence of the successful operations of the army of the Indus, we might calculate on its having a good effect on his mind, but there are too many around him ready to prove by the most cogent arguments, that the reports published in our papers are got up for the purpose, and as usual, there will be abundance of letters from Persia to residents at Amarapoora to announce the defeat and annihilation of our armies. The China news too, exaggerated as it will be, ere it reaches the golden ears, will go far to increase his presumptuous hopes of success against us. China is looked up to by all Ultra-Gangetic nations, as the most powerful kingdom on earth, and to see her arrayed in hostility against us and herself first striking the blow (for the late news will be construed into hundreds of Spies burnt, and thousands of Englishmen put to death) may strongly encourage others to follow so laudable an example.

In this article we have stated as much for as against the probability of an attack being meditated against us by the Burmese. This only shews the impossibility of calculating on the designs of a conceited and ignorant people, with whom the arguments and reasoning that have weight with civilized nations, become utterly nugatory, while their hopes and passions are aroused by circumstances that with the others would be altogether disregarded.

"NEITHER SHIP-SHAPE NOR BRISTOL FASHION."

The renowned city of Briggstowe, the "Place of the Passage," having recently plashed a feather from the wing of Fame, her hardy sons may be alluded to with a better grace.

The above "saying" current among all British seamen, when they would speak contemptuously of any thing ill put out of hand, evidently implies that, in Bristol things are well done, and by inference that those things appertain to shipping. Commentators appear to have been puzzled in their endeavours to unstrand the lays of this very popular adage. Let us try our hand.

Time out of mind the people of Bristol have been celebrated for their maritime exploits. Cabot, Rodgers, Dampier, Cook, Davis, and other seamen are recorded in the maritime annals, as having sailed out of this port; and her seamen generally were noted for their hardihood, daring, and professional qualifications. During my own experience, I can vouch for those whom I have met with, upholding those qualities; one and all were, what in the service are emphatically styled "prime seamen."

It is well known that the mariners of this port, were among the foremost to undertake long and perilous voyages, which must have had their influence in perfecting them in the art of seamanship; and hence excelling. Is it to be wondered at that they should have obtained by universal consent, a title to the merit of being, if not the first, second to none among their countrymen as excellent seamen? Perhaps, too, self-love may have prompted their own voice in sounding the praise this sweetest theme: a compliment, which, whether that be admitted or not, holds good at the present day in the fleet just as the northern seamen of the east coast of England are, universally, esteemed the best leadsmen.

The point of the compliment thus paid to the tars of Bristol has been used as a sort of oral goad to emulation, the effect of which, however, as a stimulant to exertion, may be supposed to have a different action on the mind of those to whom it is applied, according to their temperament and idiosyncracy. The present race hold their claim to the character of good seamen and equally to the local distinction of pugilistic combatancy!

The order, be it remarked, from which the seamen, natives of this Port, spring, and those of the present day are said generally to retain the character of their progenitors, have always been noted as "Hickyards" which is rather an alloy to their more sterling one of "True Blues:" indeed it may be added that the Bristolians as citizens generally have, time out of date, been reproached with a coarseness of manners, and to this day, the soubriquet of "Bristol hog" rests with them, merited or not! The blunt bearing of John Bull is pretty much the same everywhere; with the view, however of ascertaining the origin of such a character, the question was put to a native cit, who very good-naturedly repeated the following lines as an explanation.

"King Bladud once espied some hogs,
That lay wallowing in the teeming bogs *
Whence issued forth those healing springs
Since honoured by still more potent kings.
Vexed at the brutes possessing
What ought to have been a common blessing,
He banished them in mighty wrath,
And forthwith built the stately town of Bath.
The hogs thus banished by their prince,
Have lived in Bristol ever since!

Among the innumerable examples of design in the animal economy, there is none in which the "goodness and loving-kindness" of the Author of our being are more conspicuously shewn than in the phenomena which are developed when accidental derangements of our animal structure are produced. A class of effects are then unfolded, which are the more interesting, as they do not belong properly to the common order of natural phenomena, but are called into operation only occasionally, when some violence is done to functions which would naturally proceed unattended by the effects to which we now advert. One of the most striking examples of this class of phenomena is the vis medicatrix, or those healing provisions which have been supplied as the natural cure of disease or injury.

We certainly do surgeons rely on the operation of these remedial processes, that they not unfrequently use a phraseology in which a certain volition and intention is actually ascribed to the different parts of the system, as if there were sentient and intelligent beings, entertaining a purpose to the accomplishment of which they actively address themselves. The celebrated John Hunter is mentioned as an example of this, who constantly speaks of the limbs and bones acting in disease or when suffering from injury, as if they had an intention of influencing, and knew how to execute the process. "This habit of expressing himself," says Lord Brougham, "could only have resulted from constantly observing the exact adaptation of natural operations to the uses and wants of the system on each occasion, and the exact coincidence in point of time, as well as proportion of the supply with the demand."

"The formation of bony matter when a fracture has taken place, and the pieces of the broken bone are required to be knit together again, has been mentioned before, and the whole process is striking and instructive. First, blood is poured out into the fracture—it coagulates; soon after very small or capillary blood-vessels shoot into the coagulated blood; the blood disappears, gelatinous matter alone remains; this gradually hardens, and bony particles are deposited, which fill up the break and knit the bone. Where a dislocation has taken place there is no similar process; but as soon as the luxation is reduced and the bones are replaced, in a very little while all the fine apparatus of the joints is restored with wonderful perfection, so as speedily to obliterate the traces of the mischief. Even where the restorative process has proved inadequate, and a distortion takes place, as when by some natural defect in the firmness of some bones, they sink under the pressure of the body, a new weight being thrown upon other bones, those are strengthened additionally for the purpose of enabling them to meet the new demand upon their powers. Thus the leg and thigh bones are fortified by additional secretions of bony matter, and these are thrown upon the yielding side, and perpendicularly to the line of pressure, with as manifest a design of strengthening as is shown by those who shore or prop an old wall. Again, when after a fracture the bone of the limb is set, the ends may overlap, and thus the limb be shortened. What then shall become of the muscles, which had been of a length to fit the former size of the bone? Those muscles immediately begin to shorten much beyond their original natural contraction, and they acquire a power of further contraction, to suit the altered length of the bone. It is as if upon any accident happening to one part of a steam-engine, whereby it had changed its dimensions, the neighbouring parts, wholly unaffected by the accident, were of themselves to change their dimensions or their position, so that their action should also be varied, and varied exactly to suit the alteration in the part affected, thus continuing the movement of the machine, but in a different adjustment, and all without any interference of the engineer." pp. 107—109

This is admirable. Nothing can be more felicitous than the illustration of the comparative imperfection of the most perfect work of human art. The mechanism of the animal repairs itself.

Aneurism furnishes another striking example of provisions of this kind. In this case new vessels are formed, or small ones enlarged, to supply the defect of circulation produced by an accidental impediment in an injured vessel.

"This, as is well known, is a tumour formed by the partial bursting or giving way of an artery; and if the vessel be of considerable size, death must immediately take place. The blood which escapes on the rupture of the vessel coagulates and becomes a lid. A kind of temporary plug is thus afforded, and time gained for a more durable repair being supplied by a more solid work being executed. Coagulable lymph is formed and thrown out, and it soon becomes firm membrane. Layer after layer of this is deposited so that a bandage or coating is provided sufficiently strong to resist the continual pressure from the impulse of the blood. Thus the inflammatory action which ensued upon the rupture, produces a new substance required for counteracting the effects of that rupture, and enabling the artery to continue performing its functions as a conduit for carrying the blood to its destination; and this fluid itself supplies the materials with which the breach in the conduit used for carrying and distributing it is first temporarily plugged and then repaired, as if the water in a pipe were to secrete, first a ciment or lute to make the channel watertight and then different plates of metal and braces to mend the pipes wherever its own pressure had burst them." pp. 109, 110.

There is, however, another provision still more remarkable, which is developed in the progress of aneurism.

"The pressure must be relieved of the mass of blood upon the channel, which is no longer of sufficient strength to resist it. Accordingly, blood-vessels, which before had hardly been discernible, begin to work with new energy, and are enlarged in their capacity. These run parallel to the artery injured, and convey the blood, so that the requisite supply continues to be afforded, but by a new system, formed and in operation for the relief of the injured channel, as soon as its damage has by the first natural operation been repaired." p. 111.

Having explained this exquisite arrangement, Lord Brougham, with his wonted eloquence, proceeds:—

"What engineer—what Smeaton, or even Watt himself, ever constructed a pipe, such that, when it was fractured, it could not only provide itself with a plug to stay immediate mischief, and enable the machine to go on, but could also provide splices for a permanent repair; and not only that, but could of itself, immediately after the accident, form new conduits and other parts exactly fitted to continue the general movement, and also to afford such relief as the injured part required,—relief exactly proportioned at once to the amount of the weakness sustained, and to the extent of the service required? And all this without the necessity of the engineer himself being at once appealed to, or any extraneous aid called in. Is there any thing like this in all the works of these great men? Is there any thing more marvellous even in the works of the grand Artist himself? Yes—for He, too, made the minds as well as the bodies of those men; and the wondrous mechanism of such minds as theirs, and those of the Newtons and La Places, which proceeded from the same hand, incomparably surpasses all the marvels of their bodily structure." pp. 111, 112.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

SIR,

In your Paper of 31st August last I was much surprised to find a statement of my unfortunate affair on board the Black Joke somewhat wrong. The Boat was not anchored on account of contrary winds but was becalmed. I was not conveyed to the Hospital, but to Mr. Just's house where I was living. The Schooner was not chartered or belonged to Mr. Just, and further I beg to request of you, your informant of me being in Mr. Just's employ: I have been in China one year for the sole purpose of trade between this and England, and I am not in the employment of any one in China, nor do I wish to be.

I beg to state that six unfortunate lascars have lost their lives, and happy to say the rest are

September 8th, 1839.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,

A short time ago you published in your paper an account of a scientific Parisian who proposed undertaking the manufacture of Sunshine; and as a counterpart to this I herewith beg to send you a notice of an individual who says he can make Rain, and he seeks aid of the United States Government to enable him to accomplish his object. Should these gentlemen succeed in their undertakings, of which both appear to entertain no doubts whatever, the former could probably soon realize a fortune in Spitzbergen, and the latter be no less fortunate among the Egyptians.

I extract the following from the Journal of the last Congress of the United States.

Your's &c.

S.

"Tuesday Dec. 18.—A petition was presented by Mr. Buchanan from John P. Esby, stating that he had discovered the means of making rain in tracts of country, and proposing to make the experiment at his own expense, provided, if he could succeed, that Congress would give him a premium of so much for five miles, and at a like ratio for any greater extent of surface. The petioner professed still higher powers, viz. to raise, at his pleasure, the Ohio River."

"Mr. Buchanan admitted that all these things were strange, passing strange, and though he did not profess to have full faith in the powers of the petitioner, yet there were more things in philosophy than were usually dreamed of. This he would say, that he was personally acquainted with the gentleman, and that he was not only very respectable, but highly intelligent; and besides the petition was signed by some of the most scientific and literary gentleman in Philadelphia, who state that his views were founded on strictly philosophical principles, and that it was highly probable he would succeed. Mr. B. did not believe, however, that he could make it rain; but, at the same time the probability of his success in the attempt had been attested by some of the most learned and respectable men in Philadelphia. Mr. B. therefore wished that the memorial might be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and he hoped no other motion would prevail, or, if any, that the memorial would be laid on the table; though he greatly preferred that it would go to the committee."

"Mr. Crittenden was understood to say that he was particularly alarmed at the suggestion that the Ohio River was about to be put under the peculiar care of the petitioner, though on what principles he could succeed Mr. C. did not know. But if he should succeed, he might in some fit of misanthropy, involve us all in eternal clouds, and might even bring another flood to desolate the earth; so that, unless the petitioner could show that he could also remedy these evils, and manufacture Sunshine as well as Rain, Mr. C. would rather he would not go on in these experiments, and he was unwilling to encourage any one in the attempt merely to produce rain unless he could also make sunshine. This latter exploit Mr. C. believed had been attempted by a Frenchman, who professed that he was able to make sunshine enough for the King's garden. But this would not be sufficient to scatter the clouds from the whole face of the United States, and check the swelling of the Ohio."

"The petition was laid on the table."

Macao, September 17, 1839.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 21st Sept. 1839.

We published last week the Notice from the Commander of H. M. S. Volage that the river and port of Canton was to be blockaded, and that such blockade was to take effect six days after that Notice. It will be seen from another Notice dated the 16th from Hong kong, that owing to the safety of certain of Her Majesty's subjects supposed to have been cut off by the officers of the Chinese Government having been ascertained, and negotiations having been opened upon the basis of the withdrawal of the proclamations against the lives and liberty of her said Majesty's subjects" the blockade notified on the 11th, will not be established. We know not what the nature of those negotiations may be, but it appears strange that, two days after, the Chinese authorities should have published the proclamation of which our readers will find a translation below, in which Captain Elliot is threatened to be seized and severely punished wherever he be found. It would appear from this proclamation that the negotiations towards a withdrawal of the proclamations against the liberty of British subjects could not have been far advanced, since the Chinese continue to issue new documents of the same nature. We still hope that this paper may have been sent from the Bogue at a date previous to the opening of the negotiations; if subsequent we suppose them to have been broken off. There are, however, rumours afloat of more pacific intentions of the Chinese, and we hope to see them confirmed, that the British now at Hongkong may be enabled to return to Macao, until the question at issue can be settled by the two respective Supreme governments.

We translate the following Edict issued by the Portuguese authorities from "O Portuguez no Chi-na", the Gazeta de Macao having thus changed its name, and its first number under the new designation having been published on the 19th of this month.

Edict.—"The lamentable occurrence having happened that the Chinese Cruizers have, early on the morning of the 18th inst., unjustly burned the Spanish Brig Bilbaina, then anchored in the Typa, on suspicion of the vessel having Opium on board; the loyal Senate do consider it their duty to fit out an armed vessel to cruize in that anchorage as fast as the roads, and by this means to procure. 1st. That vessels of any nation whatsoever anchoring there with Opium on board may be taken and confiscated.—2nd. That no other fatal mistake like that of the Spanish brig may happen. It is therefore published that all vessels of whatever nation that may anchor in the above named anchorages on or after the first day of October next with Opium on board shall be confiscated." Dated Macao, 14th September, 1839.—Signed, Silveira Pinto, Braga, Silva, Barretto, Lemos, Lima.

We hear that the answer given by the Chinese on reclamation made to them for the value of the brig burnt, was to the effect that the Chinese were convinced that the vessel burnt was English, that she had Opium on board, that she had visited, to sell this opium, several places on the coast lately; that therefore the representations made to them were false and scandalous, etc. etc. The affair is still pending, and it is probable that after the depositions of the mate and four sailors who have not yet been given up, shall have been taken, the Chinese will be obliged to make restitution.

The Revd. Mr Bridgman, at the invitation of the Chinese authorities, accompanied by three linguists, deputed for the purpose, went to the Bogue on the 10th, when he had an interview with a wei yune, an officer deputed by the Imperial Commissioner, which, we believe, had reference to the present difficulties between the Chinese and English. Mr. Bridgman returned to Macao two days after.

It will be seen from the letter Mr. Moss has favored us with, that we were led into error, in giving an account of the attack on the Black Joke, on some points not materially affecting the correctness of our statement. The letter would have appeared in our last had we received it in time; our readers will no doubt be glad to see that Mr. Moss is fast recovering from his wounds.

We are obliged to our correspondent S. for the interesting extract which accompanies his communication, relative to Mr. Esby's invention of producing rain at Hottom. Physical science is making such immense progress, and discoveries have lately been made, the possibility of which would fifty years ago have been treated with contempt and ridicule, that it would be very presumptuous in us to pronounce Mr. Esby's scheme to be visionary; supposing it to be really what it's inventor or discoverer professes it to be, it cannot fail to become one of the most beneficial discoveries ever made, in case it can be rendered available in countries that now, owing to their drought, are inaccessible to cultivation. Our correspondent in alluding to the discovery of making Sunshine by a Frenchman, if he means Mr. Gaudin's invention, will allow us to observe that this invention professes only to produce a light as strong as that of the sun, but by no means to produce its heat also.

We have last week but briefly alluded to it, but a serious affray too place we understand, on Thursday the 6th instant at Kow loon, a large town in the immediate neighbourhood of Hongkong, in an attempt to get provisions for the fleet. Supplies of every kind having been stopped for several days, the cutter Louisa and a small schooner the Pearl proceeded to Kow loon, and it was intimated to the people that troubles must ensue if the prohibitions against supplying the large fleet now in Hongkong bay, (consisting of upwards of 30 sail) were not removed. The tradespeople consequently brought a large quantity of pigs, ducks, fowls, etc. to the beach for sale, but were prevented from sending them on board the boats by the Mandarins. A collision consequently took place between the cutter and Schooner and the Mandarin junks, and which led to a regular engagement during which several broadsides were exchanged, and in the end three man of war junks were driven on shore after being somewhat roughly handled, and were then abandoned. The junks were assisted by a fort mounting several guns. Towards sunset, we understand, H. M. S. Volage, having heard of the disturbance, got under weigh and proceeded to Kowloon, but finding the Junks on shore and the fort silent, she returned in the morning to Hong kong, without firing a gun. The boats have, after this, again begun to supply the shipping, but not in large quantities.

Proclamation.*

Tseang, acting Keun min foo of Macao, raised ten steps and recorded ten times, issues this clear proclamation—

It appears that the American merchants Sturgis and others have petitioned, "that because Elliot wishes to prohibit their entering the port to trade, they request that such of their ships as shall presently arrive may proceed directly up to the Bogue, and there wait to be examined, and then enter the port, &c &c." Now this coming before me the Keun min foo, I have accordingly handed it up to His Excellency Lin the High Imperial Commissioner, and have received the following in reply:

"I find that whenever a ship arrives at Canton the most wait until the high officers have ascertained by examination that she brings no prohibited articles, when she is permitted to enter the port. Now who is this Elliot that so presumptuously dares to prohibit the vessels of other countries from entering the port! Such conduct as this is outrageously obstinate, and it will be impossible for me again to excuse his offences. Besides strictly considering the military officers in every part to seize Elliot and restrain (his actions), and transmitting this to the said Keun min foo, that, in answer to the petition of Sturgis and others, that their ships might proceed directly to the Bogue and there anchor, he sends them an answer, permitting it to be as they request; moreover, lest among the outside foreigners there should be some scheming persons, it is necessary that there be the greatest watchfulness kept up among the many ships of war stationed at the Bogue, daily exercising themselves and maintaining the strictest vigilance:—we also instruct the admiral of the station, that when an American ship reaches the Bogue, he direct two vessels to go alongside her, and ascertain that she has no contraband goods or any war like weapons on board, after which he will order the pilot to carry her directly up to Whampoa; they need not anchor within the chain passage. It is thus that I exhibit my sincere compassion, and enable them quickly to return home. You will transmit this in answer to the petition (of the Americans). You will also issue a proclamation to the merchantmen of all nations that they may know that our ships of war will protect them if they speedily enter the port, they need not delay their entrance, looking about them and loitering. (When at Whampoa), they will as usual wait until the governor, the footmen and admiral have granted the papers, and in leaving, they will receive the chop. &c. &c."

Having received this, besides taking and proclaiming it to the American merchants Sturgis and others for their obedience, I also, combining all the particulars, issue a clear proclamation, that whenever comes to Canton from foreign countries to trade may fully know them. You will accordingly comply with these; and hereafter, when your merchantmen reach Canton and have arrived at the Bogue, you will wait there until the governmental cruisers have ascertained that there is no contraband commodity or any warlike weapons on board, when the pilot will carry the ship directly up to Whampoa; the ship need not anchor within the chain passage. The said foreigners need not delay and look about them, watching what takes place, but it is right that they be obedient and not oppose. A special edict.

Tsoukwang. 19th year, 8th month, 11th day. (September 10th, 1839.)

* The following translation made from a Portuguese version of the proclamation was in type, when we were kindly furnished with the above; it will be seen that they are substantially the same.

Tsiang, Keun-min-foo (Subprefect) of Macao, &c.

Be it known, that the American merchants Sturgis and others, having addressed to me a representation, in which they request that their ships be allowed immediately to proceed to the Bogue, there to await the competent inspection in order to be able to proceed to Whampoa, seeing that Elliot pretends to prevent the entrance of these ships to trade; I, the Sub-prefect made known this representation to H. E. the High Commissioner, and have just received, in answer, a despatch from H. E. which says as follows:

"It is the practice for all merchant-ships that come to Canton to trade, to wait for the visitation of a Magistrate from this empire, and, if no prohibited articles are found on boar'd, they are immediately permitted to proceed to Whampoa; how then has Elliot dared to prevent the entrance into Port of the ships of different nations arriving in China! Such deportment proves only how great is his folly and rebellion! It is impossible any longer to suffer this, and I give therefore to the magistrates and military of the various stations, orders that Elliot may be taken and severly punished. I likewise direct the subperfect that he must always, in like circumstances, give all necessary sustenance to the American merchant, Sturgis and others, who requested that their ships might immediately proceed to anchor in the Bogue; and which has already been afforded; and I moreover direct him to take due precautions on all occasions to discover whether these foreigners come perhaps with any sinister views.

"As there are in the neighbourhood of the Bogue several dozens of His Imperial Majesty's cruizers, which having been daily exercised, must now be sufficiently well disciplined, I have addressed the Admiral of the station, ordering him positively, to send, whenever an American vessel arrives at the port, two of these cruizers to board such vessel and to examine it. If it has truly no arms or no prohibited articles on board, then the Pilot is to be ordered to take the vessel immediately up to Canton, without its being necessary that the said vessel be anchored at Lien kia: thus may the foreigners duly appreciate our favor, and may without loss of time return to their own country; the subprefect will as soon as he receives these our orders make them known without the slightest loss of time, that foreign ships of all nations may know that there are cruizers to protect them and to take them into port, thus avoiding unnecessary detention. The Subprefect will also await the orders from the Governor of Canton, the Foo-yuen and the Admiral; his representation to me is herewith returned."

The above orders from the High Commissioner having been communicated to the American merchants for their information, it becomes me to order that public proclamation be made, that all ships of the various nations coming to Canton may know and obey. When, therefore, your ships arrive you must demand a pilot to take you to the Bogue, where the cruizers must make the necessary visit, and if you really have no prohibited arms or contraband articles on board, then the Pilots may immediately take you to Whampoa, without your first anchoring at Lien kia; thus our clemency towards you will be made more manifest, and you foreigners will not be obliged unnecessarily to lose your time. Respect this and obey! a special proclamation.

Macao 14th day 8th moon of the 19th year of Tsoukwang (19th Sept. 1839.

Memorial.

To The Right Honorable,

LORD VISCOUNT PALMERSTON.

My Lord,

1st. We the undersigned British Merchants lately residing in Canton, several of whom had the honor of addressing your Lordship on the 24th May on the subject of the outrageous proceedings of the Chinese Government in March last; are once more compelled respectfully but most earnestly to address your Lordship, in consequence of having been again subjected to further acts of arbitrary violence from the same source.

2nd. On completion of the delivery of the Opium surrendered by Her Majesty's Superintendent to the Imperial Commissioner, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government (particulars of which have been laid before your Lordship) your Memorialists retired from Canton to Macao, in obedience to the injunctions of Her Majesty's Superintendent, in the hope of being allowed to remain peaceably in that settlement, under protection of the Portuguese Flag until otherwise arranged by the authority of Her Majesty's Government.

3. After a residence of three Months in Macao, your Memorialists have been compelled suddenly to abandon that place, and seek refuge on board their Ships, in consequence of menacing preparations of the Imperial Commissioner, and Edicts ordering the departure of all British Subjects on pain of severe punishment: at the same time holding us responsible with our lives for the surrender of an individual to suffer death, in satisfaction of the alleged murder of a native, in an accidental affray with some British and American Seamen, a few weeks since at the anchorage of Hongkong.

4th. Her Majesty's Superintendent has been unable after a careful investigation, according to the forms of British Law, to fix such charge of murder on any British Subject.

5th. Without any charge whatever against your Memorialists, individually or collectively, from the High Commissioner, in connexion with the ostensible cause of our actual expulsion from Macao, we were first deprived of our Servants, and supplies of food; and then compelled to abandon our dwellings, without previous preparation, and in the possession of means barely adequate for the removal of our Books, Papers and Articles of immediate use and necessity; under circumstances involving much cruel privation of families and invalids.

6th. The Governor of Macao was pleased to express his anxiety to afford all aid in his power to the British Community; but his Excellency did not attempt to combat those your Memorialists the fact of his total inability to give them efficient protection; and they quitted that settlement under a perfect conviction that such a course was imperatively necessary for the general safety.

7th. Your Memorialists further beg leave to call to your Lordship's serious notice, a case of aggravated outrage committed by some Chinese boats full of armed men, and bearing the flags of Mandarins, upon a British owned Pinnace Boat, consisting of seven Lascars and an English Trader (then in the act of removing with his personal effects from Macao to Hongkong), whom they cruelly murdered; and after murdering five of the Lascars, and robbing the vessel of much valuable property, set on fire, and then abandoned it: an event, which although your Memorialists cannot consider it to have been committed with the knowledge of the Imperial Commissioner, yet they can entertain little doubt, that it is mainly attributable to the highly menacing character of some of his late edicts, and to his generally violent bearing towards Foreigners, especially British, thus leading the inferior officers to conceive that any acts of brutal outrage might be perpetrated with impunity.

8th. In the former Memorial an opinion was expressed, that after the violent act of the High Commissioner in March last, the return of British Subjects to Canton would be alike dangerous to themselves, to the property of their Constituents, and derogatory to the honor of their Country; until such time as the power of the British Government might convince the Chinese authorities that such outrages would not be endured.

9th. And it was further stated that such powerful interference could alone prevent the recurrence of similar or more violent proceedings. Your Memorialists may respectfully refer your Lordship to the facts now detailed in illustration of the Justice of that Opinion.

10th. It appears unnecessary to add that the circumstance of the British being outside the Port instead of in Canton, has merely changed, the scene, not the nature, of the Connmissioner's persecutions: there being every reason to believe that, had we remained in Canton, the plan by which the Commissioner succeeded in extorting property to the value of between 6 and 9 millions sterling, would again have been resorted to, for the purpose of endeavoring to enforce the surrender of an innocent man for capital punishment.

ART. V. Description of the tea plant; its usual cultivation; mode of curing the leaves; transportation to Canton; sale and foreign consumption; endeavors to raise the shrub in other countries.—From the Chinese Repository. [continued from last week's paper]

The usual nett weight and measurement of a chest of the different descriptions of tea are as follows, taken from Macculloch's Dictionary.

Teas are at present put up in much smaller boxes than formerly, very few of the largest sized chests being made. The fine, and middling, qualities are often packed in boxes containing ten and five catties, and even less.

The Chinese have a great number of terms for most of them descriptive, to designate the varieties of tea in part of these are merely the names of celebrated trees, or small plantations, and do not denote prominent qualities; their origin is in many cases similar to the particular brand by which some sorts of wine are designated. It is difficult to describe the nice shades of distinction between the several kinds, for long experience is necessary to distinguish them; moreover, the Chinese mix them to some extent, and traders in London and elsewhere compound them still further, so that, a long course of instruction and experience are necessary before one can become skilful in tasting tea. A general outline, therefore, of all the principal sorts must suffice for this paper. They may be considered in the ascending scale of their value.

Black teas are sometimes known by the general term of hih cha or 'black tea;' a more common designation, however, is (or) E cha, which is a contraction of Woong, the name of the hills. Bohea, as we have already seen, is a corruption of the name of the Woo hills, derived through the local dialect, and is not known to the Chinese as a term for a quality. They call it to cha or 'large tea,' which may also be rendered 'largesized,' or perhaps 'coarse tea.' It is distinguished by containing a larger proportion of woody fibre than other teas; its infusion is of a darker color, and, as it has been more subjected to the action of fire, it keeps a longer time without becoming musty, and almost any other sort. There are two kinds of bohea, the coarsest of which is manufactured in this city, and other parts of the province, and therefore called Canton bohea. Much of it comes from the district of Hoping in Hwuychow foo in the northern part of the province, a part is raised in the vicinity of Canton. It is frequently mixed with the refuse of congo, and the leaves are much broken in consequence of the mode of packing by stamping them into the chest, and the thorough curing rendering them very crisp and brittle. It is used by the poor to a great extent from its cheapness, and was formerly largely exported. There is still more inferior sort, seldom or never brought down to Canton, called tow tow or 'autumn dew' tea from the term in which it is picked; it is composed solely of the leaves obtained at the last gleaning, and is very coarse.

Congo, the next higher kind, derives its name from kung foo or 'labor,' meaning that its preparation is attended with care, it constitutes the great bulk of the cargoes to England. The leaf is not so much broken as the common bohea, and the infusion is not so dark colored, but its quality has of late years deteriorated, and at present, it is more correct to say, nearly or quite all the common sorts of black tea go under the general name of congo. Campoi is a corruption of kan pei (or kom pooy in the Canton dialect,) meaning 'selected [for] firing;' it is a particular variety of congo, and has a more delicate flavor than the common congo, but is not so strong, and but little of it is exported. There is a sort of black tea called Anke from the name of the hills where it is grown; its taste and appearance are peculiar, by which it is easily to be distinguished from the tea raised in the Bohea hills, and it is usually inferior in all respects, it is also adulterated to some some extent. The Anke hills being, like the Bohea, of great extent, produce many kinds of tea, which are collectively called Ankoy teas by foreigners. The various descriptions of tea enumerated above are chiefly made of leaves obtained at the third picking, and constitute the largest proportion of the cargoes exported.

Souchong is the finest of the stronger black teas, with a leaf that is generally entire and curly, but more young than in the coarser kinds; it is made from the leaves of the second picking. The name is a corruption, through the Canton dialect, of seaou chung or 'small sort.' A variety called at Canton, padre souchong, derives its name from being frequently raised by Buddhist priests living in the hills, and cured by them in a very careful manner, for their own use and to give away. It is done up in small packages containing about half a pound each. Pouchong (or poon chung, [illegible] a yellowish hue, and not very strongly twisted. There are a great number of native names for varieties of souchong, pouchong and pekoe, which have never been Anglicized. Among these may be mentioned the lanshaw tea, or 'solumbium-seed kernel,' from the resemblance of the curled leaf to the embryo of that plant. The woo lung, or 'black dragon,' from a celebrated tree where this kind was first obtained; it is a kind of black tea which nearest resembles green, the leaf is thin and roughish, and the flavor somewhat peculiar. It comes from both the Bohea and Anke hills. The taou shé or 'sparrow's tongue,' and lung sew or 'dragon's whiskers,' are fanciful names, from the cylindrical appearance of the cured leaf; these two are varieties of pekoe. The lung tsuen or 'dragon's pellet,' is in rounder grains, and is also a sort of pekoe. The hwa hëang or 'flowery fragrance,' and soung pei or 'careful firing,' are varieties of pouchong and are cured by the process with much care; the two last sometimes find their way to Canton. The tung che or 'Dunglo [imitation] cured,' is a variety of souchong, that is cured in a particular manner to make it resemble a variety from Ngan hwuy; it is remarkably heavy, and has lately fallen into disrepute from being often found to contain a ferruginous dust, that is detected by passing a magnet among the leaves; it is called soo tsé or super sweeping, by foreigners; the leaf is much crisped and curled, and has a fine black glost.

Pekoe being composed mainly of the young leaf buds, the gathering of them must of course be injurious to the future produce of the plant, and this kind of tea is both expensive and scarce compared with souchong. Some have supposed that the flower buds were picked to make the finest kinds of pekoe, but we believe this idea is erroneous, and that it is wholly made from the leaf buds. The name is a corruption of pih haou or 'white hairs,' from the white down that covers the leaf when picked, and which is in a manner preserved in the cured leaf. A variety called chang heang or 'very fragrant,' or orange pekoe, and another lean mei or 'old man's eyebrow,' both differ slightly in color and taste from common pekoe. The hung mei, 'red plum' blossom, or hungmey, is so called from the color of the infusion resembling the tint of the flower. Tan haou or 'carnation hair,' is an inferior kind, sometimes called flowery pekoe, and is but seldom seen in this market. There is a sort of pekoe made in Kwangsee from the leaf buds, which is so delicate, and fired so little, that the least damp spoils it, and it is seldom if ever exported; this hyson pekoe, as some call it, is used by persons of rank as presents under the name of lung tung, which is perhaps the name of the district where it is raised. There is a sort which is rolled up into little round pellets, and hence called chow tan or 'pearl flower,' it is scented with the flowers of the Chloranthus, and cannot be obtained, even among the Chinese, except at high prices. The finest sorts of teas, and sometimes even the cheaper, both of black and green, are scented with odoriferous flowers, of which the Olea fragrans and Chloranthus inconspicuus are cultivated for the purpose near Canton; the Gardenia florida is also employed in the same way. The mode of scenting chulan and other teas is to put an open basket of the leaves just after firing over a coal fire, and cover them with fresh flowers; another similar basket is placed upon the top of this, and the leaves also covered with flowers, and a catch over the whole; the two are then left to the influence of the fire, until the tea is thoroughly scented. If this operation is done, as is sometimes the case at Canton, when the tea is dry and has been cured for some time, this peculiar scent is evanescent, and the flavor imparted by the flowers is soon dissipated. In all the finest sorts of tea, with a view to preserve the delicacy of their flavor, the application of heat is very limited in drying the leaves, and hence it is that they are more liable to injury from keeping than the common kinds.

Green Teas are collectively called luh cha by the Chinese, which means teas of a green color; they are so seldom also called sunglo, or Sung tea from the hills where they are cultivated. Teas are not as many varieties of green as of black tea. Twankay is rather the most inferior sort, affording a infusion of a pale brown colour; it is the produce of the third picking, and the leaf is not twisted very hard. The name is derived from Tun ke or 'the valley-rivulet of Tun' in Chehkeang, near Kwuh-chow, where it is chiefly. There are two sorts. Superior twankay or hyson kind, which term describes it in its original state, when freshly gathered, previous to the leaves being assorted, in which state the flavor is superior. After assortment, the inferior or coarse leaves are denominated twankay, the taste of which coarse and raw. It is much employed by the dealers in England to mix with finer teas, but the greatest part is consumed by itself, just as it is imported; it constitutes about one half of all the green tea exported from this country. Hyson-skin, called pe cha or 'skin tea,' is a leaf-loosing sort, made from the coarse, yellow, and half-twisted leaves of hyson and is rather an inferior kind; its name implies the refuse of a better sort, the word skin meaning the inferior portion, alluding perhaps to the rind of fruit. It has a fresh smell, and the infusion is somewhat yellowish. The qualities comprised under this name vary a good deal in color and values; from its being the inferior assortings of hyson and young hyson, the quantity brought to market depends upon, and bears some proportion to, the whole amount of hyson manufactured. The best skin tea is those [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] short while since coveted and solicited our alliance as their best safeguard, disappointed in their hopes of assistance from England against either Sikhs or Persians, dismissing the recently hailed English envoys, and facilitating those of Russia, who lavish the promises of aid and protection which England withholds; and entering into treaties with the Persian monarch, under guarantee of the Russian agent; probably too, with the Emperor, himself, against their own brethren of Herat. We hear of the Russian Envoy intimating the intention of the Emperor his master, to send an army of 10,000 Russians to subjugate the rulers of Kurrah and Bockara, and, that done, to fix with Persia the limits of their eastern frontiers. In short, we see Russian influence, instead of being limited as formerly to the line of the Arras, prevailing now, not at Herat alone, but at Caubul —nay, even to the banks of the Indus.

Nor is the rapidity of this progress less alarming and astounding than its onerring certainty. Sixty four years, that is, from 1772 till 1836 A. D. were required to advance the southern frontier of the Czars a distance of 700 miles, namely, from the line of posts established by Peter the Great, between the Don and the Volga (vide page 1 of Pamphlet), to the Arras; within these two last years the Emperor Nicholas has advanced his influence, if not his troops, from the Arras to Caubul, a stride of more than 2000 miles. In signifies little to object that the Russian troops are not yet on at Herat: the time may not be ripe for the last decided step of military occupation; but it is fast approaching, and all is prepared to take advantage of the proper moment; and, if England remains as indifferent to the present and the future as she has been to the past, that consummation will speedily be witnessed. The English mission and detachment once got rid of, a popular tumult, the revolt of a province or a chief, events which the ingenuity of a Russian agent can at any time readily bring about, may form a pretext for introducing a force that shall hurl the north throne, and whose first posts may be at Herat, or yet further east; for the moral courage and independence of the Shah once thoroughly subdued by a sense of his own helplessness, no obstacle whatever will exist to the military occupation of the country, and its resources will amply maintain the requisite troops which have of late been mustering to the north of the Caucasus.

Persia once prostrated, and Affghanistan overawed, or prostrated, who will again venture to smile or to sneer at the once supposed impracticability of a Russian invasion of India? With troops before the Indus would be convincing of the superior power of Russia to that of England, in the rapid approach of the former in despite of the latter, towards her Indian frontier, what it would be cause of that talisman of opinion which is so long sustained our Asiatic empire, or of the revenues and resources we derive from it? Will Runjeet Sing then continue our faithful ally, with the promises of Russia in his ear, and the fear of her bayonets before his eyes?

It is asked what has brought on this alarming condition of things—the rapid decay of British influence and power? The question is easily and simply answered,—it is the irresolution, the timidity, or the false economy, of English policy and measures, which, losing sight of the national best interests and power, and enamoured of peace—peace, at any rate—have paralysed the vigour of her councils, and induced her government rather to concede and conciliate than to stand firm and resent the smallest aggression on her interests; which has stripped of its foreign influence of power and means, when the hostile rather have been increased, to match the agents of a power that never spares money, or scruples at measures which are to forther her ultimate ends. How could the Shah of Persia, or the Chiefs of Affghanistan, set at the promises, or waive the threats of Russia, which experience had proved to be no empty words, in order to cling to England, the Envoys of which could neither promise efficient protection nor threaten with effectual punishment?

But again, it may be asked. "Is the case, then, desperate? is the game so totally lost as to preclude hope?" God forbid. The statement of facts and anticipations here set forth are merely those of others, not of ours, but, indeed, are certain; the condition of affairs in those countries is exactly stated; nor is it particularly cheering to reflect that the mischief is entirely owing to our own supineness or timidity—that a fitting support of our agents, and duly redeeming the pledges they felt it expedient to give, and an earlier and more efficient demonstration of resolution in the proper quarters, would have saved the whole loss. But the remedy is fortunately still, even at the eleventh hour, in our hands; better and decisive will yet retrieve the game. The attitude assumed in Persia by Russia, or at least by her agents, is unquestionably hostile; but, with the art which governs all her policy, a loop hole has been left in case of need. She may disavow the acts of her Envoy; and if need be she will do so. Already, if report deserves credit, she has taken the first precautionary step; her Ambassador at the Shah's Court has been removed, it is said, and is to be replaced by another, well known in Egyptian politics.

Should England assume a tone inconveniently high, this step can at once be appealed to as a proof of her conciliatory dispositions and innocence of intention. If not, the former able agent at the Court of Mahommed Ali will not be a less efficient instrument at that of the Shah, while the ex-Ambassador, who volunteered to lead a regiment to the attack of Herat, will make an admirable commander to replace, with other Russian officers, the British detachment discarded through Russian influence—perhaps His Excellency may be sent to organise the troops of Dost Mahommed Khan at Caubul.

But is Russia yet in circumstances to brave and to wage a war with England;—that is the question. We think not, even were she to have England single-handed for her antagonist. The proof of this may be found in the conduct of Russia herself. The day is gone by when doubts might have been entertained of her projects of conquest and territorial aggrandisement; every assertion she has made of moderation and self-denial has been belied by her acts. But she knows when, where, and how to make her approaches and carefully avoids all attempts at encroachment, whether political or territorial, where there is danger of coming too fully under the public eye. To England she has been especially lavish of conciliatory assurances and pacific declarations: were she prepared for a rupture, would this be the case? Would she, but for dread of consequences, so long defer seizing on the prizes which otherwise are within her grasp, and which have been the object of her solicitude for years? Not England may be assured that Russia dreads her; but presuming on the obvious reluctance of the English nation to risk disturbance of the peace of Europe, admirably skilled in judging how far she may press upon that reluctance, she does and will continue to advance, step by step, until patience is worn out, and indignation is roused. Then, and not till then, will Russia [illegible] the common voice of Europe may warrant her in maintaining.

In the concluding words of the pamphlet, "The integrity and independence of Persia is necessary to the security of India and of Europe; and any attempt to subvert the one is a blow struck at the other—an unequivocal act of hostility to England." This act has now been perpetrated, and that point in the progress of Russia, when resistance to her dangerous ambition become imperative, has surely been reached. The moment for firmness in language and decision in act has arrived; and let it not be forgotten that a neglect of such juncture is a constant sacrifice of opportunities in dealing with a powerful and encroaching adversary—must a length place us in a position where to struggle may be vain, and we may awake from our lethargy too late for safety.

Hurricanes.

The following directions, given by Mr. Redfield of New York, how to avoid the utmost violence of Hurricanes, when caught in them, well deserve the attention of our nautical readers.

"1. A vessel bound to the eastward between the latitudes of 32° and 45° in the western part of the Atlantic, on being overtaken by a gale which commences blowing from any point to the eastward of SE. or E×E., may avoid some portion of its violence, by putting her head to the northward, and when the gale has veered sufficiently in the same direction, may safely resume her course. But by standing to the southward, under like circumstances, she will probably fall into the heart of the storm.

"2. In the same region, vessels on taking a gale from SE.; or points near thereto, will probably soon find themselves in the heart of the storm, and after its first fury is spent, may expect its recurrence from the opposite quarter. The most promising mode of mitigating its violence, and at the same time shortening its duration is, to stand to the southward upon the wind, as long as may be necessary or possible; and if the movement succeeds, the wind will gradually head you off in the same direction. If it becomes necessary to heave-to, put your head to the southward, and if the wind does not veer, be prepared for a blast from the north-west.

"3. In the same latitudes, a vessel scudding in a gale with the wind at east or north-east, shortens its duration. On the contrary a vessel scudding before a south-wester, or westerly gale, will thereby increase its duration.

"4. A vessel which is pursuing her course to the westward or southwestward, in this part of the Atlantic, meets the storms in their course, and there by shortens the periods of their occurrence; and will encounter more gales in an equal number of days than if stationary, or sailing in a different direction.

"5. On the other hand, vessels while sailing to the eastward, or northeastward, or in the course of the storms, will lengthen the periods between their occurrence, and consequently experience them less frequently than vessels sailing on a different route. The difference of exposure which results from these opposite courses, on the American coast, may in most cases be estimated as nearly two to one.

"6. The hazard from casualties, and of consequence the value of insurance is enhanced or diminished by the direction of the passage, as shown under the last two heads.

"7. As the ordinary routine of the winds and weather in these latitudes often corresponds to the phases which are exhibited by the storms as before described, a correct opinion, founded upon this resemblance can often be formed of the approaching changes of wind and weather, which may be highly useful to the observing navigator.

"8. A due consideration of the facts which have been stated will inspire additional confidence in the indications of the barometer, and these ought not to be neglected, even should the fal of the mercury be unattended by any appearances of violence in the weather, as the other side of the gale will be pretty sure to take effect, and often in a manner so sudden and violent as to more than compensate for its previous forbearance. Not the least reliance however, should be placed upon the prognostics which are usually attached to the scale of the barometer, such as set-fair, fair, change, rain, &c. as in this region, at least, they serve no other purpose than to bring this valuable instrument into di-credit. It is the mere rising and falling of the mercury which chiefly deserves attention, and not its conformity to a particular point in the scale of elevation.

"9. These practical inferences apply in terms, chiefly to storms which have passed to the northward of the 30th degree of latitude on the American coast, but with the necessary modification as to the point of the compass which results from the westerly course pursued by the storm while in the lower latitudes, are for the most part equally applicable to the storms and hurricanes which occur in the West Indies and south of the parallel of 30°. As the marked occurrence of tempestuous weather is here less frequent, it may be sufficient to note the that the point of direction in cases which are otherwise analagous, is, in the West Indian seas, about ten or twelve points of the compass more to the left than on the coast of the United States in the latitude of New York.

"Vicissitudes of winds and weather on this coast, which do not conform to the foregoing specifications, are more frequent in April, May, and June, than in other months.

Russia.

Populations of the Empire.—The eighth Census, in which special details of the population of Esthonia, Livonia, Courish, Lowitia, Minscrelia, &c., are comprised, having been completed, the Finance Department at St. Petersburg have taken much pains to procure accurate information with regard to the entire population of the Russians. This amounted, in the year 1816, to 28,896,723 males and 30,237,351 females, making a total of 59,133,583 individuals. In this amount no account is taken of the subjugated and independent mountain tribes between the Caspian and Black Seas, which Baron Rosen estimates at 1,45,000 souls, nor of the Kirgishes or double tributary races, who dwell beyond the lines of the Ukrainburg and Siberian governments. The same remark applies to the soldiery of inferior grade as well as those of a like description who are charged to capitulate for themselves. We may therefore assume that the whole population is not certainly under twenty-nine millions. The male population is less than the female, in consequence of the greater degree of mortality to which a military life subjects the male, and likewise, of the omission of the military of inferior grades in the returns.

St. Petersburg, 1838.—The statement recently published by the Chief of the Police, with reference to the state of the Capital during the past year, enables us to communicate the following data on this subject:—At the close of the year 1838 the whole population of St. Petersburg amounted to 469,720, of whom 333,669 were males and 136,051 females. The classification according to rank and occupations, and with reference to either sex, affords the subsequent result:—Greek ecclesiastics 1967;—nobility 40,000;—the mercantile body, including both natives and foreigners, 18,004;—citizens of honour 162, and of various professions, 23 800;—citizens and mechanics of various descriptions, 98,714;—military 70,629;—servants of the court and others, partly serfs, and partly free-born, and individuals privileged with passports of service, 67,011;—and peasants, in part belonging to the crown, and in part to individuals, 126,313. (There must be some error or omission here, as the total of these several classes does not amount to more than 435,720, instead of 469,720.) The number of births in 1838 was 10,427, of whom 5,589 were males and 4,838 females; and of deaths, 7 795, of which 7,275 were by the usual causes of natural death, 347 by apoplexy, 164 from accidents, 5 by violence, and 34 by suicide. There were no burglaries; and the majority of the the to committed were by servants; the value of the goods stolen amounted to 195, 500 roubles (about £9,000), of which amount proper y to the value of 103,750 roubles (about £1,750), was recovered by the vigilance of the police. The number of Greek churches is 147, and those belonging to other religious persuasions 21; besides a number of domestic chapels. The sect of the Ancient Faith (Russian) has 5 churches. There are 10 palaces, and 8,061 buildings and tenements, 3,243 of which are of stone, and 8,418 of wood; of these there belong to the Crown 467, to public societies and institutions 107, and to private persons 8,067. The town-markets were supplied, in 1838, with 103,816 oxen, 5,616 cows, and 30,965 sheep. United Service Journal.

Trade with China.

We copy the following from a pamphlet an "Address to the People of Great Britain" ascribed to the pen of Mr. Gordon, as a corollary to our leading remarks.

"Unlike the climate of Hindostan, that of China is subject to extreme vicissitudes of cold and heat. In the northern half of the empire indeed, the rigour of winter is a-intense as in most parts of Europe, rendering similar precautions necessary to guard against its severity. But while necessary to guard against its severity. But while warm clothing could be insupportable under the burning sun of the summer months, the Chinese burning sun of the summer months, the Chinese does not, on that account, like the Hindoo, discard all covering from his body, but is content to wear fewer or light er garments.

"In a commercial point of view the political situation of China is more advantageous than that of Hindostan, inasmuch as the country is self-governed. Its produce is not sent abroad and drawn from the expense of a foreign government, but to be given in exchange for commodities which may administer to the wants or comforts of its own population, or to be turned with profits that increase the capital of its merchants.

"With reference therefore to the impor ance of the trade with China to manufacturing interests we cannot but feel regret as well as astonishment, that the apathy or indecision of our statesmen should have left our commercial relations with that nation in the deplorable state in which they are found at the present moment.

"The British cotton manufacturer cannot forget that even the once far famed fabrics of Bengal have given place to his superior skill, not only in the general market of the world, but in the very field of its production. Already have the rankins of China itself almost ceased to be numbered amongst its staple exports, unable to compete with the nankins of England. It seems, indeed, impossible that, drawing a part of his raw material from India at a very enhanced price, while the cost of his labour is more than double that of the Hindoo weavers, the Chinese could, any more than his Indian neighbours, clothe himself so cheaply or so well, in articles of his own manufacture as in those from the British looms, were the latter fairly placed within his reach. A population far exceeding that of all Europe is ready and able to purchase the productions of the British weavers. Our Monarch has been induced to say they shall not, and England has kissed the dust from his feet and acquiesced in humble silence.

"Should a brighter day arrive, and the ports of China be freely opened to our woollens, it must be the fault of our manufacturers if they do not obtain possession of the most extensive market that has been ever presented to them; for China possesses neither the materials nor the skill that would enable it to compete with us. Unless, however, great exertions are made, continental Europe, by supplying our many fabrics at a lower price, is not unlikely to occupy the better part of this vast field. Of glassware in any shape there is no manufactory in China that deserves the name, so that in this branch also an almost boundless field is unoccupied. It is to be hoped that when the paralysing touch of the excise is withdrawn from our glasworks, we shall cease to be, as hitherto, undersold by competitors of other countries far less skilful than our own manufacturers.

"The Chinese employed in our Indian foundries and dockyards have proved to be excellent workmen; but mere manual labour cannot compete with the powers of the steam-engine. The hardwares of Sheffield and Birmingham must therefore one day supersede the native tools and cutlery of China. Surpassing, in short, the Chinese in every branch of art and science, as well as in capital and machinery, there is scarcely an article, food excepted, that can administer to the wants or tastes of man, that the manufacturers of England may not supply to them of a quality and at a price that will ensure an almost unlimited demand. It does not, indeed, seem too much to expect that even the porcelain of Keang-Se may, at last, in China as in Europe, give place to the stone-ware of Worcestershire or Staffordshire; or that, [illegible] silk stuffs now at one distant period, be bartered for the raw silk of Young Nan.

"Against the reality of such brilliant prospects it may perhaps be urged, that experience shows them to be illusory. The East India Company say they made the most patriotic efforts to introduce British goods into China, but were unable, even at the willing sacrifice of large sums in the experiment, to force any considerable quantity on that market. Nor is it a sufficient answer to this fact, to allege, in explanation, the want of skill and economy that pervaded every part of the trading system pursued by those merchant-sovereigns. The enterprising traders of the United States have also failed in the object, though neither prudence nor judgment was wanting in the attempt.

"To this argument, there is an obvious and conclusive reply. Neither the East India Company, nor any other merchants, have as yet been permitted, correctly speaking, to trade with China. Their dealings have been conducted with about a dozen individuals, whose residence, indeed, is in that country, but who ought to be considered rather in the light of slaves to the officers of the local government, than as merchants. The experiment cannot be regarded as fairly made, till the freetrader can legitimately pursue the natural liberty of trafficking where, with whom, and in what objects of commerce may best suit his interest; secure from all molestation so long as he offends against no rational law of the country, and sure of redress should wrong be offered to him.

"How different from such conditions are those under which commerce with China has hitherto been conducted! Obliged to limit their resort to a single port, lying at a distance of fifteen hundred miles from the capital, foreigners are even there prohibited from dealing with any native who is not of the privileged number of hong merchants, half of whom are believed to be in insolvent circumstances."

Awful Judgement: a Man condemned to Sleep, Resting on a Spade, to the end of Time.

A report has in general gone abroad among the people, that a man called Henry Farland has in consequence of his dishonesty, been struck into a sound sleep in the middle of a field near Largan in November last; and still remains resting to the spade with which he was digging when the occurrence took place.

The following is the account of this affair:

Some time last harvest Farland was on his way to pay his rent (he occupied a small farm jointly with a woman named Harret Guthrie) and called to know if she was ready. She had the money, but said that as she could not go, he might take it for her, so he took the widow's rent. He proceeded in his way, and no more was heard of the matter for several days when Mrs Guthrie saw the agent approach her door, and ask her for her rent; she said it was already paid, that she had given it to Harry Farland, and mentioned the day on which he paid his own. The agent said he had received no money but Farland's "Well" said she, "there is Harry in the field, and you can satisfy yourself regarding it." "No." said the gentleman, "I cannot leave my horse, but go to him and tell him to give you the receipt;" she went and asked him what he had done with her money; he did not deny he had got the money, but said, coolly, where was her witness? she replied there was no one present but God and herself; "Your God, then Madam, said he, "was asleep at the time, and therefore could not see." "Then," said the poor widow, I suppose you have not paid the money; you cheated me but you cannot cheat God" So she left him. He was seen by a man standing on his spade, who observed him to continue in that posture without moving; he was surprised.

On approaching, inquiry was made, but to answer He attempted to waken him; but could not. The man then gave the alarm; as the neighbours flocked round Farland, but no means could be found to waken him. At last they sent for the clergy, the church minister, the Presbyterian minister, and the priest successively, to make him speak. The first two had no influence on him. When he spoke, he said, "I am to stand here to the day of judgment." The people then thought to move him by force, but could not stir him. They got a saw to cut the spade on which he was leaning, that he might fall, but the saw broke into pieces. Then they got blankets to cover him from the cold, but they were blown away; so he, it seems by fair, must bear all weather.

Belfast, 1839.

Having published addresses to the British Government on behalf of those interested in the Opium trade from China as well as from India, we add to them the following, from Parsee merchants of Bombay.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

To the Right Hon'ble Lord Auckland, Governor General of India.

My Lord.—Convinced of the anxiety your Lordship entertains for the prosperity of the Commerce of all India, we beg respectfully to lay before your Lordship a Copy of a Petition signed by us and other Holders of Opium in Caina, intended for H. M's. Ministers relative to the late Surrender of all the Opium in China to H. M's. Chief Superintendent, in obedience to an order issued by him and on a guarantee on his part, acting in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty, of being indemnified for the same by the British Government.

Well acquainted as your Lordship is with all the bearings of this trade, the connection of the Indian Government with it, under the sanction of the British Legislature, the important revenue derived from it by means of the Capital and exertions of those who had traded in it, and whom the Government had encouraged by facilities and assurances repeatedly affirmed, as the case required, it would be an unnecessary occupation of your Lordship's valuable time to enter into any details of such.

It is, however, because we feel that much weight and regard will be paid at home to your Lordship's opinions on the subject, that we now take leave respectfully and earnestly, to solicit your Lordship's powerful aid and influence to the prayer of that Petition, and to beg the favor of your Lordship's transmitting to H. M. Government these opinions at your Lordship's earliest convenience.

Your Lordship must be well aware that though the subject is a deeply important one, as affecting the revenue of this Country and the Commerce of both England and India with China, it is now rendered by its present position not only of particular and most vital importance to the properties and credit of those merchants immediately interested and directly engaged in the trade, but concerns intimately every person employed in Mercantile pursuits at all the Presidencies, and in this view it becomes a question of doubly greater moment to your Lordship, appointed to preside over the mighty interests of this valuable portion of Her Majesty's Dominions.

Every one engaged in trade at the different Presidencies is more or less mixed up with the Opium trade from the Magnitude of the Capital required in it. The direct shipper of the Drug must lose immensely and must then find the greatest difficulty in repaying the party through whose funds, lent to him, he was enabled to trade to greater extent, who again will claim from others, engaged in other Branches of trade, the money he may have lent to them, and so on will general distress and discredit for a time thus prevail to the great injury of all individually, and of commerce generally, as well as the Government who benefit by its prosperity

All these evils would be greatly increased to this Country by the British Government delaying to declare the course they mean to pursue and be still more aggravated by a reluctance to fulfil the guarantee of H. M's. Chief Superintendent, which from the confidence we have been ever made to place in the British Government, for the Honour and Justice and liberal beneficence to those under its protection which have ever distinguished it, we however never can believe possible, as all faith would then be for ever destroyed or much weakened in the acts of those whom the British Government appoints to High and important trusts in this Country, and every where else.

We feel that what we have thus ventured briefly to revert to is so well known to your Lordship, that it is in your Lordship's power to be of essential service in representing the vast and great variety of interests affected by these late occurrences in China, and that great weight would be attached by H. M's. Government to your Lordship's representation.

We would therefore most respectfully and earnestly entreat that your Lordship would be pleased to transmit at your earliest leisure your strong recommendation for a speedy declaration of their intentions by H. M's. Government. We also feel confident, on giving your serious consideration to the various interests affected, that the Government of India will not abandon those, by whose Capital and exertions India and England have reaped so many and great benefits, to the ruin that must ensue to thousands, should the British Government not recognise in the fullest and most liberal manner the acts of their own High Functionary in China, to say nothing of the degrading effects that would result politically to all holding High appointments, from a course which however, we repeat, we never expect the Government of such a nation as Great Britain could adopt, and we would thus further trust to your Lordship's recommending that some means be devised, for the speedy payment of the loss sustained, or if this be not practicable, of some portion being advanced to the parties interested for their immediate relief.

We have the honor to remain

Your Lordship's Obedient Humble Servants,

IRON STEAMERS — The Rainbow.

In several of our former numbers, we have alluded to the progress of steam boats constructed of iron; and we now lay before our readers, a drawing of the Rainbow, one of this class of vessels, lately constructed by Mr John Laird, of Birkenhead. The effect of the iron on the compass appeared at one time to be an insurmountable obstacle, to the employment of these vessels, by Mr. Airy, the Astronomer Royal, who made his first experiments on this subject in the Rainbow, that he has entirely overcome it. This vessel, as our readers are aware, has already made several trips to Antwerp, and on one occasion is reported to have made the passage (a distance of 190 nautical miles) in 14 hours' actual steaming. She has invariably made good passages in all weathers, and is said to be the fastest steamer afloat.

Iron as a material for building vessels, may be considered as gaining ground every day. Those which have been constructed by Mr. Laird, have done much towards establishing it; and it is worthy of remark, that the Garryowen, which was launched by him more than four years ago, and driven on shore at Kilrush, near the mouth of the Shannon, with several other vessels in the hurricane of the 6th of January, was the only vessel got off without more or less damage.

The Rainbow, after being afloat about twelve months, was docked lately, and on examining her it was found she was in perfect order. The following are her dimensions:—length, 190 feet; beam, 28 feet; depth, 12 feet 8 inches; tonnage, 322; draft of water with coals and stores, 5 feet 6 inches. Her engines which were made by Forrester & Co., Liverpool, are—diameter of cylinder, 30 inches; length of stroke, 4 feet 6 inches; diameter of paddle wheel, 21 feet 6 inches; length of float, 10 feet. We understand, that among others, Mr. Laird is now building one of 1300 tons for the British and American Steam Navigation Company, to run in conjunction with the President and British Queen, between London and New York.—Nautical Magaz

On the afternoon of the 13th January, a splendid steam ship was launched from the building yard of Messrs. John Scott and Sons. This vessel, which belongs to the India Steam Company, is the largest ever built in Greenock, measures 1206 tons, and is intended for the first of a line of powerful steamships, which are to maintain a constant communication with our possessions in the East by way of the Cape of Good Hope. As the vessel moved off her slips, Mrs. Kendall, the lady of Lieutenant E. N. Kendall, R. N., who is to command her, saluted her bows with a bottle of wine, and named her the India, in compliment to the inhabitants of that portion of the British empire to which she is intended to trade. Her length on deck is 200 feet 6 inches over all. She measures inside the paddle boxes 50 feet 9 inches, and outside of them 49 feet. Every thing which art or skill could devise has been resorted to in order to render her a model of strength and speed, and of safety and comfort to her passengers. In order to take the most ample advantage of the great opportunity for sailing, which is always afforded by any fair wind in a passage to or from India, Her Majesty's steam frigate Medea has been chosen as the model for her sails and masting. Her engines, which are fitted up with Hall's condensers, and all the recent improvements in marine engineering, are the workmanship of Messrs. Scott, Sinclair, and Co., of this town. They are 320 horses' powers, and from the well earned reputation of their makers, we have no doubt but they will do their work to the satisfaction of all concerned; and that both the vessel and the machinery will sustain the high character of the builders and engineers of the Clyde. Of her commander we have only to say, that he is well known in the scientific world as one of the companions of Franklin in his and others of the Polar expeditions. We are also given to understand, that the India Steam Company, who owns this vessel, are about to build six steam vessels, of 1500 tons each, which are to form a regular chain of communication between this country and Hindostan. Two of these are already contracted for in Greenock, a fact upon which we congratulate our fellow townsmen. Arrangements have been have been entered into, by which stations of depots for coal and water will be procured along the route, so that supplies of both may be had at the end of every ten days steaming; and it is confidently expected that the voyage to Calcutta will be performed under sixty days.—Greenock Advertiser.

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 28th Sept. 1839.

This being the last number of the fourth year of the existence of this paper, and it being possible that the circumstances under which the foreign intercourse with China is at present placed, may compel us, for a while, to cease its regular publication, we may be allowed to return to the foreign community in China our heartfelt thanks for the support the paper has met with, a support which we have been anxious to deserve, by procuring whatever information was obtainable, nor has any publication in China published for the time being a greater number of original and important Chinese documents. Little as the credit belongs to us individually, we may yet point with pleasure to the many and masterly translations from this difficult language, which must give a lasting value to this paper, and which we owe to the generous and friendly contributions of several of our friends, whose kind offices in our behalf we shall ever gratefully remember.

We have also striven to procure what information we could upon the manners of this singular people, which, though in contact for upwards of 300 years with nations from Europe and of European extraction, has yet so jealously watched that intercourse, that strangers have all the while, if we except the catholic missionaries, been limited to a small spot on the outskirts of this immense empire, and it may be said with much truth, that we are hardly better acquainted now with this nation than we were a century ago.

It is well known that so far back as the Ming Dynasty the Catholic missionaries had made such great progress as even to convert several members of the Imperial family; it is not a matter of surprise that their descriptions of the country should appear to us at the present moment exaggerated; they had been successful, and it is but natural that they should have represented, as more virtuous and happy than they actually were, a people by whom they had been so well received. But, if we look at the then condition of Europe and its inhabitants, we shall find that China really by comparison deserved the encomiums lavished upon it by these catholic teachers. We must remember that civilization in Europe is but of recent growth; that, though the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope and that of America had given a new direction to the energies of the enterprising; that, though the reformation had taught men to throw off the fetters of superstition which had so long kept the human race in thraldom; and that, though Bacon had written; yet, these missionaries might exult over, or lament, as recent events, the massacre of St Bartholomew, that in Ireland, and the persecutions in England, for which religion served as a pretext; they saw all Europe in convulsion during the thirty years war; they found the Spanish conquerors exterminating millions of the unoffending natives of America; in fine, wherever they turned their eye in the old and new world they saw nothing but injustice, oppression, and bloodshed, and the sword the arbiter of all human affairs; they left Europe, bearing with them all these images of horror, and arriving in a country as large or at least as populous as all Europe, they found there none but the useful arts of peace cultivated; they found the man of letters by law and usage honored above the soldier, and civilization to have attained to a much higher grade there than at that time in Europe. Can we wonder then, that these teachers of the Christian religion finding all this, and, moreover, a ready acceptance of their tenets, should have spoken in perhaps overstrained praise of a people which at that time must, to the eye of every unprejudiced person, have appeared, in worldly condition and welfare at least, superior to any known on earth?

The folly and dissensions among themselves soon lost to the missionaries the footing they had obtained, and though Christianity had made great progress, and enjoyed the favor and protection of the greatest prince of the present dynasty, Kanghe, yet the ambition and turbulence of the priests soon caused their downfall. They were ignominiously driven from the Empire by his successors, and though Christianity is still professed by some hundred thousands of the natives of the Empire, it solemnizes its rites in secret only, ever exposed to the persecution of governments, which aware of the apprehensions caused by the existence of this sect in former times, [illegible] and ever ready to discover and [illegible] upon any attempt to revive it

Had the teachers of the Christian faith enjoyed their good fortune with moderation, and had it been possible for Jesuits to act in concert with Franciscans, Capuchins, and other religious orders it is probable that Europeans would long ere this, have freely mixed with the inhabitants of this immense empire. But this was not to be, nor has commerce as yet accomplished what religious zeal has made and marred. The slow progress, if such it can be called, the different nations have made in the confidence of the Chinese, is owing chiefly, probably to the dislike that this people conceived towards the foreigners, who, ostensibly with a view to trade, first visited these shores. They were, for the most part, not much better than freebooters who elated with their success over the yielding Hindoos and the powerless Malays, began with ill-treating the Chinese as they had done the others. Not content with this, they even fought their nations' quarrels on Chinese soil, and one nation, jealous of the admission to trade of the other, hastened to injure the character of its opponent in the opinion of the Chinese. No wonder then that, having the power, the Chinese prevented all more intimate intercourse.

To the Portuguese alone it was permitted to settle on a barren spot at the southern end of the Island of Heang-shan, and this settlement, now nearly 300 years old, continued flourishing as long as the ports of Japan were open to the Portuguese, and during the short period of the naval glories of that nation. Their privileges, however, of trading with several ports of the Empire and even with Canton were little by little restricted. The English made several attempts to trade with China with but partial success until the latter end of the 17th century, when the ships of the E. I. Company had permission to trade at Canton, and when they were allowed to establish a factory at Tsiuy, which latter was however soon relinquished on account of the extortions, to which they were subjected by the conquerors of the country, and because the Chinese government ordered all the ports of the empire, with the exception of Canton, to be closed against the foreign trade. Since then all attempts to carry on a legal trade at other ports than Canton have proved abortive, and the foreign trade at this emporium soon became of immense importance. But the different nations who had factories at Canton, each traded through chartered companies, of which the English was the most important as transacting business to a greater extent than all the others together. But the monopoly of this profitable trade was guarded with the greatest jealousy, the laws of his country not permitting any Englishman to go to or live in, China without the permission of the company. The more intimate intercourse therefore between Europeans and Chinese was jealously watched against on both sides, the one nation afraid of innovation in their usages, and the others of competition in their monopoly. To these causes of separation may be added the contempt in which the higher classes of Chinese hold the occupation of the merchant, and the obstacles which opposed the latter in acquiring the, to a European, very difficult language; as great an obstacle was this latter, that the handful of foreign traders taught the Chinese to speak English; consequently all the Chinese whom their business brings in contact with foreigners speak a language peculiar to Canton, but of which English is the chief ingredient; this language is taught in schools, and even the government's linguists or interpreters know no other than this patois. It is true that of the Company's supercargoes there have been several who distinguished themselves as Chinese scholars, but not many acquired a familiarity with the language, without a knowledge of which it is impossible we should ever make much progress in our intimacy with the Chinese, except it be with such with whom trade brings us in daily contact. Of late however, and even before the cessation of the Company's monopoly, some protestant missionaries have applied themselves to the study of this language, and with much success, as the publications of the Rev. Dr. Morrison, and later those of the Rev. Mr. Medhurst show. Since the opening of the trade to all, many have applied themselves to this study, and though not many years have elapsed, we find among the foreign merchant community, several who have made great progress in, and have even mastered, the language.* Besides these there are at the present day many protestant missionaries in China preparing themselves for the work of conversion by the study of the language, and we are gratified to see that a book has just issued from the Press in Macao which promises to lighten considerably the labors of the Chinese student.† The encreasing desire for the study of the Chinese, cannot but improve our knowledge of Chinese affairs, and it is to be hoped that the efforts made by some philanthropical individuals and societies, to improve their moral and physical condition will teach the Chinese to have more confidence in the intentions of foreigners.‡

But it must be confessed that all these exertions prove the wish rather of better intercourse on the part of foreigners, than their success. The Chinese with whom business does not bring us into contact are as inaccessible as before, and the same jealousy on the part of the government still shuts up foreigners in this Empire into a space of a few hundred yards square.

An attempt was made by the Company in 1792 as well as by some private individuals, to open the trade on the east coast of China, but although in most places the people appeared friendly to the views of the visitors, the mandarins opposed them, and the vessels returned without having effected their object. Since that period however, the East coast trade, though limited to the one article of Opium, has increased so as at one time to have employed no less than between 15 to 20 vessels, sailing between the different ports of the coast and Lintin, nor have all the thundering edicts against them had the slightest effect in deterring them from prosecuting that trade until the beginning of this year. But this trade brought the foreigners in contact only with the most desperate and most despised part of the population, the fishermen, smugglers, and low government officers, nor have they ever had a settlement on shore. Some attempts to distribute religious tracts, have been successful so far as the distribution among a number of the idle and curious went, who seeing that people had arrived with the purpose of distributing books gratuitously, thronged to be possessed of a thing obtainable for the asking. We will hope that they have been read and understood by some at least.

It will be seen from the foregoing that hitherto only some progress has been made in the preparations to become one day better acquainted with the country of the Chinese, and that, should no violent quarrels hasten the period, long time may possibly elapse before the merchant or the philanthropist will be able to break down the barriers which laws and customs now oppose to greater intimacy between foreigners and Chinese.

Many, however, are the probabilities that the Chinese will be forced into better manners before these two can quietly have obtained it. All our readers are familiar with the measures taken, since about this time last year, against the Opium-trade, and that the Chinese government, in its eagerness to suppress it, have not only heaped insults upon unoffending foreigners, but even confined them for upwards of six weeks in Canton, threatening H. M. Chief Superintendent of trade with death, and finally, as under such circumstances the English refused to allow their ships to proceed in Whampoa, driving them away from Macao. Not only have the Chinese by imprisoning foreigners at Canton possessed themselves of British property to the amount of two Millions Sterling, but they have also made them incur very heavy expenses for demurrage &c., for all of which probably payment will be demanded besides satisfaction for the insults. Without such reparation being made, and without by treaty fixing the rules by which the foreign trade is in future to be carried on, it is impossible, after what has happened, that it should be continued with any degree of safety. Should the Chinese be allowed to carry through their measures of annoyance and insult without fitting remonstrance be made, they will resort to the same again whenever they wish to extort money either from Hong-merchants or foreigners, and a pretext for such stoppage will be found in the detection of a Chest of Opium, in the accidental death of a native or foreigner, and in twenty other occurrences, from which the Chinese would not fail to draw advantage.

We have had several arrivals during the week. The Tyrconnel from Bombay brings European news to the 13th of June we understand, but not a paper have we been able to obtain, the intercourse between this and Hongkong being so very irregular. We hear however that the Queen was about going to visit Scotland; the approaching crop threatened again to be short; money was very scarce, discount having risen to five per Cent; and the market for teas was very unfavorable. The last advices in England from Canton were to the middle of February. The arrivals from the United States the Athens from New York the 10th, and Lion from Providence the 23th May, bring nothing new, that we have heard of.

We published last week a notice from Captain Elliot, informing the public that negotiations with the Chinese authorities had been set on foot. Capt. Elliot has since arrived in Macao, and he and Capt. Smith of H. M. S. Volage had on the 26th an interview with the Kwang-tsiu-foo in presence and at the residence of the Governor of Macao. Many rumours are current as to the nature of these negotiations, but we believe nothing is with any degree of certainty known about them. We may merely mention that it is generally said that the demands of the Chinese are as follows: 1st. That no ship having Opium on board is to come near the coasts of China; 2nd. That the vessels that delivered their Opium to the Chinese at Chuenpee, as well as the 16 prescribed indictments shall leave the Chinese waters without loss of time; 3rd. That the man who killed a Chinese at Kowloon be given up 4th. That the other vessels with Cargo now at; Hongkong, immediately proceed to Whampoa to discharge their Cargo; according to which proposals the Commissioner promises that the trade is to be continued unmolested. Though we heartily wish a temporary agreement may be come to, we much doubt that this will be the case. A proclamation from the Admiral of the station has been published, we hear, at Hongkong, of which we have not yet seen the translation, but which we believe says, that the Admiral having received orders to destroy the fleet, he being a decse dent of Confucius whose greatest attribute was mercy, hesitated to give effect to such orders, hoping that foreigners would repent; and saying maybe that this best action on his part had been rendered more commendable by the contrition lately shewn by Capt. Elliot.

We understand that even H. E the Imperial Commissioner countenances the lie of the authorities of Casa Branca that the Brig Bittoine was an English Opium smuggler and not a Spanish vessel. As may be supposed the evidence as to what nation the vessel was of is of the clearest nature, but "there are none so blind as those that won't see". The mate and four seamen continue in the hands of the Chinese.

Six Chophouts from Canton arrived the day before yesterday; they are to take up Cargo from Macao; none is yet allowed to come from Canton. Thus the trade between this and Provincial City, interrupted during is no less than seven months, has only partially, as yet, been reopened.

There are besides, under the auspices of the Society for the diffusion of useful knowledge in China, several works now in progress, for the use of the Chinese exclusively, one of which is a monthly magazine of which many numbers have already been published and distributed, edited by the Rev. Mr. Gutzlaff.

‡ Doctor Pearson introduced vaccination into China, which has widely spread; Doctor Colledge cured numbers of Ophthalmia, and Doctor Parker, in the Hospital at Canton, has treated the diseases of many thousands of Chinese.

ART. V. Description of the tea plant; its natural cultivation; mode of curing the leaves; transportation to Canton; sale and foreign consumption; endeavors to raise the shrub in other countries. From the Chinese Repository for July. [Continued from last week's.]

The principal part of the supplies to the inhabitants of the countries on the west of China is raised in the contemptuous provinces, as Yunnan, Szechuen, and Kweichow. Little or none of it ever reaches Canton, but the delicacy of flavor and correctness of preparation, it is said not to be inferior to that grown further east. It finds its way throughout the steppes of Chinese Tartary, and into Tibet; and from these regions passes over into Ahsam, Nipal, Butan, and Somarcund. It is related in the Che King, that the tea raised in the west of China was once exchanged to the Tartars for horses for the use of government. Russia consumes large quantities, which is stated to be of a superior flavor when it arrives at St. Petersburg, owing to the greater ease with which it can be preserved from dampness during the land-journey, compared with the voyage westward by sea. It is all carried from the northwest of China to Kiakhta, from whence it is distributed over that empire. Tea is a common beverage among the Tartars. To accommodate their nomadic habits, and make it easy of carriage, the tea is frequently cured by pressing the leaves, after a partial drying, into cakes, about 16 inches long by 12 wide, and about 1½ thick, which are thoroughly dried in this shape. We believe it is boiled a little when used, but our information does not extend to the minutiæ of the preparation of this brick tea, as it has been called.

There are other modes of curing tea adopted by the tribes resident on the west of China. "The Europeans have known and drunk tea for many years," says Sir Bruce, "but they cure it in a very different way from the Chinese. They pinch the tender leaves, and dry them a little in the sun; some put them into the dew, and then again into the sun for three successive days; others, after a partial drying, put them into hot pans, turn them about until quite hot, and then pour them into a hollow bamboo, driving the same down with a stick until it is full, holding and turning the bamboo over the fire all the time. The end is then closed with leaves, and the bamboo hung up: tea thus prepared will keep for years." Tea also forms part of the merchandise carried by the caravans between China and Burmah, from whence it gradually finds its way south to the Lau people, the Shanzze, and Cambojans. Moreover, we think it very improbable, if a part so universally diffused over the empire of China, restricts itself wholly to her borders; it is probably cultivated to some extent in these countries, as it is in Cochinchina, and has lately been found to be in Assam, and the borders of Tibet. By some of the tribes on the southwest, tea is used as a pickle, and the leaves are eaten, though the exhilirating properties of the infusion are well known. Specimens of tea have been brought to Canton from those regions called lohn hoih, about the size of a pearch, and then curated in leaves, two or three together.

Few nations use tea more universally than the Japanese, and some have it of a more delicate flavor, or take more pains in curing it. It is cultivated in most parts of the country; and as in China, the spots usually selected for it are on the sterivities of hills; it is sometimes planted in hedgerows, but the care taken of it in some the less. The most celebrated is the Isshi tea, so called from the hills where it is cultivated; it is the property of the dairi, and is cured with extraordinary care. The Japanese sometimes triturate the cured leaves to a powder, and pour hot water upon them when lying on a sieve-like dish, and drink the infusion as it runs off; but this is not a common mode of using it, being, we understand, chiefly confined to marriage ceremonies.

Our mode of drinking tea with the addition of milk and sugar, while it may sometimes conceal the inferior taste of bad tea, in a measure destroys the fine aroma and delicate flavor of the finest teas, and renders them comparatively insipid. It would probably better the taste of our tea to imitate the Chinese mode of steeping the cup until the liquid is drank. The Chinese in all cases drink the simple infusion, and so common is a beverage as it, that in the poorest houses, a pot is usually kept standing to quench thirst; and if a guest is not presented with a cup of tea, it is, tea to one, a designed omission, as it is in Turkey not to offer a dish of coffee.

When we consider the great demand for this beverage, it will not be thought strange if the Chinese sometimes tried to adulterate it with the dried leaves of other plants; or if they should simulate the finer kinds by chemical agents; or if unfair attempts to increase the weight should be resorted to. When, however, we estimate the enormous amount manufactured for domestic and foreign use, we think it will be conceded that, (judging from the data in our possession,) there is proportionably but little garbling or deception practiced in this article. Attempts are made at Canton to deceive the purchaser, sometimes in one way, and sometimes in another. Young hyson is now and then made, in order to supply a sudden demand, by cutting up and gilling other kinds of green tea; and even when hard pressed taking black tea, and coloring it with a preparation of gypsum and Prussian blue, after cutting it up to a proper fineness. Mr. Davis describes the various processes which he witnessed in one of the pack-houses, in manufacturing a lot of young hyson in this manner. The variety of bohea, called Canton bohea, is sometimes adulterated, so as to resemble the very refuse of a firing-house. It was formerly customary, whenever a deception was detected in a lot on opening it in England, for the hongist who sold the tea, to return two chests as an equivalent; but this somewhat excessive demand is now exchanged for a fair bill of damages, which the hongs pay. The adulteration of teas is prohibited by the English laws under severe penalties. When one hears so much of the frauds practiced by the Chinese in adulterating teas, he would think the business was, of course, confined to them; but these restrictions indicate either, a great fear lest tea will be vitiated by the traders in that country, or a determination on the part of the lawgiver that it shall not be.

The Chinese themselves occasionally employ the leaves of other plants to eke out the genuine leaf, or wholly as a succedaneum for it; and this appears to be practiced to a much greater extent, especially in those quarters where tea is not cultivated, than one would suppose. A species of moss is sold in Shantung for this purpose; and we have been informed that a species of the family of Rhamneæ is employed by the poor peasantry in this region. Dr. Abel saw a kind of fern for sale in Nanchang foo, that was employed as a substitute for it. It is highly probable that the leaves of some species of the Camellia are also taken instead of the true tea; in many points they resemble each other, in appearance as well as in their qualities; they are cultivated in the same regions, and both are called cha by the Chinese. While passing up and down the streets of this city, trays containing the refuse of tea are seen on shop-boards set out for sale; the coarse leaves are called cha kuh or 'tea bones; the fine dust-like powder, cha mo or 'tea-leavings.' We have once or twice seen other leaves than those from the tea plant among the 'tea bones;' and attempts of this sort are not unfrequently detected by the tea-inspectors.

The history of the origin and progress of the tea trade is one of the most interesting in the annals of commerce. Its gradual extension in Britain and America has also had almost as much to do with improving the social system in those favored countries—as well in softening the asperities, and cementing the bonds of the intercourse between all ranks of society—as it has in developing the enterprise of their merchants. The exhibition of all the happy effects which have resulted from the use of the many associations that cluster around the tea-board, and the full meaning of the simple invitation, "Come and take tea with us this evening," belong to other pens; and we at present must content ourselves with a sketch of the commercial growth of this commodity.

"——the cups
That cheer but not inebriate;——"

The curious D'Israeli has collected various notices of its introduction into England. He thinks that it was used in Cromwell's time, from the fact that one of the Protector's tea-pots was subsequently in the possession of a virtuoso; but it is quite as likely that the latter owner called it a tea-pot from its resemblance to that article in his day, as that Oliver used it to boil water in for his tea. According to common accounts, the Dutch first carried tea to Europe, from whence, in 1666, it reached England; but there are authentic notices of its being known in London in 1660. However, its consumption was so limited for many years, that the whole of the importations were obtained from Bantam in Java, where the English had a factory; but from its first introduction, the use of it surely, and in a short time, rapidly extended. In 1670, the importations amounted to 79 pounds, but in fifteen years, they rose to 12.070 lbs. The rate of increase in its use in England is shown by the following table; which for the year 1839—supposing none to be exported to the continent—is nearly an average of two pounds avoirdupois for each individual.

Turkish and Egyptian Armies.

(From the Bombay Times of 3rd August.)

Owing to an accident, the following letters from our Cairo Correspondent did not reach us before our last number went to press. The first letter contains the latest news from Egypt, and was dispatched from Cairo by a dromedary to overtake the Steamer at Suez. The letters sent to the Consulates were written in French, and our Correspondent has transmitted to us copies of the originals. We present our readers with translations of them.

Cairo, 7th July, 1839.

I had scarcely finished my last communication when I heard the report of the guns at the citadel, and, upon enquiry, learned that Ibrahim Pacha had gained a complete victory over the Sultan's troops. The particulars, however, were then not known, but as the feu de joie was to take place three times a day, and continue for three days, it was naturally presumed something very extraordinary had taken place, and that the whole Turkish army had been swept away. Next day, (2d July,) a copy of following letter was sent to the Consulates—and ordered to be printed in Turkish, for general circulation.

Letter of H H Ibrahim Pacha to Abbas Pacha.

Rigekh, 1st Rabialakrr 1255 or 25th, June, 1839.

The armies encountered to-day at Reserib beyond Aleppo. The Infantry and Artillery were alone engaged. After a conflict of two hours, the Egyptian army remained victorious by the assistance of God. The army of Constantinople, not being able to resist the Egyptian soldiers, was obliged to abandon its camp, its guns, its baggage, and its stores, which have fallen into the power of the conquerors. The army of the enemy is completely broken, and it, as well as its Commander in Chief, Hafiz, is flying. Ibrahim Pacha has taken possession of the most elevated tent of the Turkish General, in which he writes this letter.

(Signed) Ibrahim Pacha.

The following is a copy of a letter circulated on the same day.

Cairo, Palace of Ibrahim Pacha,
10th Rabialakrr 1255.

Sir,—Glory to the triumphant arms of Ibrahim Pacha! That illustrious warrior cannot cease to conquer. A few years ago, Konih saw the numerous battalions of the Sultan fly before him. Well! that lesson was not sufficiently strong. Mahmoud has thought proper to renew the war. He covers the frontiers of Syria with innumerable legions. Ibrahim has reappeared, and two hours have sufficed for his valour to annihilate them. The army of the Sultan no longer exists. Part of it has been destroyed, and those who have escaped the carnage have either been made prisoners, or have fled. The Turkish General gave the first example of cowardice, by flying shamefully.

I am, Sir, your very humble servant,
Serat or H. H. Ibrahim Pacha.

The details of this battle Ibrahim Pacha had not received. He is waiting for the reports of Achmed and Sullyman Pachas. As yet he has only heard of the death of Ibrahim Bey, Colonel of the 2d Regiment of Guards. You may readily imagine we are anxiously waiting for other accounts, as it seems hardly possible so serious an action could have been terminated in two hours, and with such loss to the vanquished. However, if true, it is not quite such a wonderful affair as would at first appear, as only 6,000 of the Turkish troops had passed the Euphrates, the waters having run with such rapidity as to destroy the bridge of boats—and they must have been engaged with the whole of Ibrahim Pacha's force, not less than 60,000 strong. The Sultan can better bear a defeat than the Pacha, who, when defeated, (and defeated he must be, the Sultan having two armies of 40 and 50,000 men yet in reserve) will have the whole of Syria upon him—and if the worst should happen to the Sultan, he will be assisted by the European powers. The Russian Consul General, in conjunction with the Austrian Consul General, proposed to the Pacha that he should withdraw his troops from Syria, and that the Sultan's should recross the frontiers:—that Egypt should be guaranteed to him and his, upon paying regularly the tribute. This proposition His Highness would not listen to—but it shows clearly with whom the powers side. The English fleet left Malta on the 1st instant for Alexandria—to protect the English—on dit—it certainly is time we had some vessel of war there—it is more than two years since the British pendant, excepting on board a coal ship, and the packets, has been seen off Egypt. Arabs are getting very insolent and imagine themselves invincible:—only two days ago, a cavalry soldier drew his sword upon an Englishman in a frank shop, in the mosque of frank street.—Such occurrences are somewhat too common now, and the presence of a British fleet off Alexandria, will make the native authorities more attentive to our complaints.

Loss of the Manchester.

The following account of the loss of the barque Manchester, free-trader, on her voyage from Bombay to China, has been handed us by a friend. Mr. Hutton, the 2nd Mate of that vessel by whom the narrative is signed, arrived here in the Thomas Coutts, by which vessel it will be seen that the boat containing himself and a part of the Manchester's crew, had been picked up:—

July 15th, 1839.—The barque Manchester, F. Wilson, Commander, sailed from Bombay with a cargo of cotton, gums, ebony, &c. and a crew of twenty seven persons, and one passenger, bound for China, and for several days encountered hard, squally, unsettled weather, on the Malabar coast. About the 21th the ship began to make so much more water than usual that the pumps could not be left. On the 29th the leak increasing, it became necessary to call all hands to the pumps and relieve every hour, the ship's head was got to the N. W. for Ceylon, until the first of August, when at 10 A. M. sounded the well and found 9 feet of water in it. A consultation was held by the Captain his Officers &c., and it was agreed to abandon the ship under the impression that she would not float more than 12 hours longer, as she had already settled considerably in the water. The long-boat was hoisted out, and two casks of water, one of bread, and a few tins of preserved meats, two barrels of salt pork &c. put on board, Capt. Wilson, Mr. Phillips, passenger, and 15 men and boys in her, cast off and left the ship; when the pinnace was lowered, the 2nd mate and 5 hands and necessaries were in and ready, cast off. When the gig was lowered and ready to leave, the pumps were sounded, and found 15½ feet of water. The ship being very uneasy, left her and joined the long-boat and pinnace, and immediately made sail for Ceylon. The gig being unfit to carry sail, towed her astern of the long-boat.

August 2nd. At 6 A. M. found the gig useless, cast off and let her go adrift, this day the sea running high, and the boats shipping a deal of water, and considering it dangerous to continue our course to Ceylon, bore away for Acheen-head.

August 4th. The sea running high, nailed a cloth of canvas round the boat, which prevented them from swamping. August 5th, the latitude by observation was 2° 22' North, moderate weather throughout the night.

August 6th. Same weather, latitude observed 2° 32' North, longitude by chronometer 88° 06 East.

August 7th. Commenced with strong breezes and squally with heavy showers of rain. At noon latitude observed 2° 57' North. Longitude 90° 05' East. August 8th, squally unsettled weather, latitude observed 3° 51' N. longitude 92° 53' East. August 9th, more moderate, but the sea running high, latitude observed 5° 05' North, longitude 94 East. At 3 P. M. saw the land bearing about E. N. E midnight squally with a high sea running.

August 10th. At day light rounded Acheen, head with a strong breeze and a high sea. At noon saw a sail to windward steering to the N. W; midnight moderate breeze with a long ground swell. 11th Light airs and variable, the land in sight, distance from 15 to 20 miles. At 4 P. M. lost sight of the land. At 10 P. M. a hard squall from the N. W. with heavy rain and thick weather, lost sight of the long-boat's light, lay to until about 8 o'clock A. M. on the 11th when the light was seen, made sail and stood towards it, but in about 10 minutes lost it again, lowered the sail and lay to until day-light, when not seeing anything, made sail and stood to the southward by the sun, as there was no compass in the boat. About 8 A. M. examined our stock of provisions and found about 14 lbs. of salt pork, about 2 lbs. of bread, wet and sour, and ½ a gallon of water—served out to each man about 2 ozs. of pork, ½ lb. of bread. The wind falling light, got the oars out and rowed to the southward. At noon calm and clear hot weather, latitude by observation 6° 09' North. At 6 P. M. saw the land bearing about south; calm; and continued rowing until 9 P. M. when being fatigued, set the watch and lay down to rest.

August 13th. Dark, cloudy weather with squalls, and heavy rain, caught about 3 gallons of rain water, served out the same quantity of provisions to each man as yesterday and commenced rowing to the southward, in hopes of gaining the land. At noon a light breeze from the Eastward, sailing and rowing, latitude observed 5° 57' North. At about 2 P M. Wm. Parry rowing the after oar descried a sail on the lee-quarter, hoisted the union jack and steered towards her, at 4 P. M. got alongside the btrque Thomas Coutts, Capt. Robert Warner, from Bombay bound to Singapore and China, where we were most hospitably received, and for which we cannot be too grateful. At 8 P. M. a blue-light was burned and a light hoisted at the misen peak in hopes of picking up the long-boat. At midnight a blue-light was burned, but no appearance of the long-boat, and I sincerely hope that she is safe in Pulo Penang.

SIAM. — By the arrival of the Gutnare since our last from Siam, we have received accounts from Bankok of the 24 ultimo, at which date the market still continued in a very depressed state. A new measure was also in contemplation by the government which, if carried into effect, was likely to prove a material impediment to a continuance of commercial intercourse with Siam to the same extent as of late years. This was, to levy upon all square rigged vessels arriving at Bankok the full tonnage duty of 1 700 ticals per fathom, no matter how often the vessel might go there in the course of a year. The practice had formerly been to charge this duty only once in the year, the vessel paying it having the privilege of returning, subject to a duty of only 600 or 700 ticals, and never exceeding the latter. On this footing the ships from Bombay have traded for more than the last 10 years, and were thus frequently enabled, after discharging their original cargo at Bankok, to return to this port and make three or four trips back and forward in the course of the year. The shipping that plied exclusively between this port and Siam, also enjoyed the same privilege, to which it is principally owing that this intercourse has become so active; but as the imposition of such an exorbitant tax every voyage would absorb all the profits of the adventure, this branch of the trade must receive a considerable check, unless the authorities at Bankok abandon the measure, which is in all respects a most impolitic one—as the state of their revenues accruing from foreign trade will very soon discover to them, should they in their folly attempt any such experiment.

A small Cochin-Chinese junk from Turon, or some other port of Cochin-China, with which country the Siamese are not on the most friendly terms bound for Singapore, having set sail rather late in the season, had drifted into the gulf of Siam and put into Chantiboon. The Nakhoda and crew were there seized by the governor, and sent up to Bankok as spies; and it was supposed the vessel and cargo would be confiscated and her people bastinadoed.

The 24 Chinese seized in the Sampan Pukat with Opium from this, were suffering a cruel incarceration, chained together three by three loaded with irons, and each party confined in a separate prison.

Letters had been received from Dr. RICHARDSON on his way to Maulmain, dated 15th June from Jahong near Zemmay. His treatment, similar to what he had experienced at Bankok, had been confined throughout to mere empty professions.—Ibidem

A CHINESE CHRESTOMATHY, in the Canton Dialect: CHINA, printed for the Society for the diffusion of Useful Knowledge. Price to subscribers, Eight Spanish Dollars per Copy. Since by the unrestricted opening of the trade to China, a much greater number of foreigners have come in contact with the Chinese than was formerly the case, the acquisition of their language, if only for the common purposes of every day life, has become a matter of greater necessity than heretofore; but the real difficulties of the language no less than imaginary ones, have hitherto deterred many from attempting its study. These difficulties consist partly in the written characters of the language, which to be well known require a good memory and much and constant practice; in the spoken language itself which, consisting of monosillables only, requires from the speaker a great many inflections of the voice, to express different objects with sounds so slightly differing, that our alphabet is incapable of marking them; practice and a good ear will however master these; in the paucity and dearness of elementary books to teach foreigners; and lastly in the circumstance that, with but trifling exceptions, all the attention of the sinologues has been hitherto bestowed on the Peking or Mandarin dialect, which, though the language of literature, is not that spoken here, and its acquisition is consequently of little use to the merchant who wishes to make himself acquainted with the language of those he is in immediate contact with.

The first and the two last of the difficulties here enumerated it is intended to obviate by the publication now before us, the fruit of the labors of the Rev. MR. BRIDGMAN, to whom the Chinese student is beholden for placing the acquisition of the Canton dialect more easily within his reach. Hitherto only the first volume of the Chrestomathy has issued from the press; it is a quarto volume of 276 closely printed pages; two more of equal size are to follow, and its price to subscribers is only eight dollars. The work is exceeding well got up and would do credit to any printing establishment else where

We shall close our remarks with part of the Preface which will give our readers a more complete insight into the objects proposed to be attained by this publication.

"I. OBJECT OF THE CHRESTOMATHY.

"The Chrestomathy is designed to furnish a series of easy lessons—comprising, as its title indicates, simple instruction, or that which is plain and useful. Its object is threefold: to aid foreigners in learning the Chinese, to assist native youth in acquiring the English tongue, and to ascertain how far this language can be expressed and acquired through the medium of the Roman letters. Throughout the work, the English, the Chinese characters, and their sounds, occupy three distinct and parallel columns, on each page. The Chinese, in the middle column, is written in the local dialect excepting only the extracts from the classics and other standard works, with form of edicts, &c The English, in the column on the left, is a translation of the Chinese; and the sounds or the Romanized Chinese, fill the column on the right. A few notes and explanations designed to illustrate the text, are supplied at the bottom of each page.

"Used from time immemorial, often by clans having but little intercourse with each other, perhaps in some instances extending to tribes once distinct from the Chinese, this language gradually branched into dialects, some more and some less removed from the original tongue. These dialects are not less different from each other, than the cognate languages of Europe; and the principal ones, like the Italian and its many kindred branches, require separate elementary treatises to facilitate their acquisition. Of such works the Chinese have but few; and those few are of little value; and none of them have yet been translated. For acquiring a knowledge of the Chinese language, appropriately so styled—or that form of it generally used by the literati, and by officers of government, and hence sometimes, and perhaps erroneously, called the mandarin or court dialect—the works of Prémare, Marshman, Morrison, and Rémusat, are well-known and highly approved. For studying one of the principal dialects of Fukhin, Mr. Medhurst's Dictionary is a valuable acquisition. But, excepting a small Vocabulary, published by Dr. Morrison in 1828, no work of any note has yet been provided for the student in this dialect spoken by all the inhabitants of this metropolis and by great numbers in adjacent cities and villages. Such neglect of this language, after more than two centuries of intercourse with the people of Canton, ought not to be continued. And is it hoped that the Chrestomathy will be regarded as neither unseasonable nor unnecessary, appearing under circumstances, and in a time like the present.

"II. CHARACTER OF THIS DIALECT.

"Varieties in the modes of speech and deviations from the most approved usages exist in every tongue; and it is often difficulty to determined which should be regarded as the standard. The usage now most prevalent in Peking, among the people about the court, differs considerable from that once dominant, and still extensively used, known as the Nanking dialect, or the language of the southern court With their present knowledge, foreigners are unable to ascertain even the number of dialects spoken within the empire. However, with reference to all that are known, a few particulars ought to be here noticed. In the first place, the differences, between the colloquial style and that generally used in books, seem to be greater among the Chinese than they are among the people who speak other languages; but these differences are not everywhere the same. For example, in that dialect given in Mr. Medhurst's Dictionary, the differences between the colloquial and the written idioms are very much greater than they are in the dialect of Canton. In the second place, the standard works, which form the great body of national literature, are read and understood with nearly equal ease by the Chinese in every part of the empire, however much their local dialects may differ from the style of those works. In the third place, the system of intonation, except in a few instances, remains uniform and unchanged in all the dialects. And, in the fourth place, the characters preserve an unvarying form in all parts of the empire. A partial exception to this, however, is occasioned by the use of well-known characters to express local phrases; in all these cases, regard is had only to the sound of the characters; the addition is usually that of han (a mouth) to the left side.

"The characteristics of the Canton dialect are limited to the pronunciation, choice, and collocation of words. In these three particulars, the deviations from the standard language are less than in many of the other dialects; still they are too numerous to be here specified. A reference to Morrison's Dictionary or Grammar, will show the principal differences in pronunciation. And a careful comparison, throughout the following pages of the extracts from standard works with the sections written in the local dialect, will sufficiently illustrate its peculiarities in the choice and collocation of words. The books written in this dialect are but few, and they are sometimes accompanied with glossaries, containing explanations of the dialectical works and phrases

CANTON PRESS.

Macao, 5th Oct. 1839.

We stated in our last that the circumstances in which the foreign community of Canton finds itself at present, might probably oblige us for a while to discontinue the publication of our paper. We have since determined on carrying it on, but the size of the present paper will inform our readers that we have shortened sail till the storm shall have blown over. Our reasons for thus reducing its dimensions are several: the difficulty of filling so large a paper with interesting matter, now that our intercourse both with foreign parts and the Chinese is irregular and interrupted, in one of the principal; greater economy has also its share in the change, but we hope our subscribers will find the usefulness of the paper not lessened, since they will meet with nearly as much printed matter as it contained when issued at Canton, without the Prices Current and the statements of Exports of Teas to England and America, the former of these is useless at present, and the latter not obtainable. As soon as the revival of trade shall render their publication again useful we will return to the broad sheet as before.

There have been several arrivals during the week: the Lucanio Am., and the John O'Gaunt Brit., from Liverpool, the former the 11th, the latter the 13th June. The John O'Gaunt made a passage of only 84 days to Batavia, where she staid 10 days, inclusive of which she performed the whole passage to China in 102 days. Her English packets were forwarded from Batavia, we are told, by the Paris Queen not yet arrived. On the day before yesterday a ship of war was seen in the roads; she proceeded immediately eastward, and is supposed to be the Herald frigate, known to have arrived lately at Singapore from New South Wales. Another ship of war is since reported to have proceeded to Hongkong. For other arrivals we refer to our shipping report.

A Portuguese sullingwater of a Chinese junk reports to have seen in Lat. 10 North, a ship dismasted and waterlogged; we know not why he did not go near to see if assistance could be given; the same junk afterwards fell in with the wreck of masts, supposed to be from the same ship. Fears are entertained for the safety of the Thames Castle which vessel left Singapore for China on the 29th August, and is not yet arrived.

We informed our readers last week that negotiations were being carried on by intervention of the Macao authorities between the Chinese and English with a view to a temporary settlement of the existing differences. On Saturday, last however, Capt. Elliot, at ten o'clock in the morning, suddenly left Macao, and the Frigate sailed away for Hongkong. This sudden departure, so ill corresponding with Capt. Elliot's expressed intention of remaining at Macao some days longer, to terminate the negotiations then pending, led us to suppose that Capt. Elliot must have received information that the Chinese actually intended to commence hostilities at Hongkong, and that on this account Capt. Smith hastened back thither, to afford protection. From all we can learn on the subject of warlike preparations of the Chinese, it really seems to be the case that a great many warjunks have collected at Lintin, near Kowlun, and other places close to Hongkong, and that rafts have been constructed, and fire-ships got ready. An easterly gale which blew from Saturday to Wednesday, prevented the Frigate from reaching Hongkong, the weather obliging her to anchor off Lantao; she arrived at Hongkong the day before yesterday, where the fleet was quite safe, nor had the Chinese made any attempts to molest it. Meanwhile on Sunday last the Portuguese authorities received a communication from the Commissioner, containing another for Capt. Elliot, which was to have been forwarded to him on the following day by the Psyche, which vessel did however, owing to the gale, not leave finally till Tuesday last. This communication from the Commissioner is said to be to the following effect, viz: That the English may return and live at Macao, provided such of the 16 proscribed, who have not yet left, come to Macao, whence, after having arranged their affairs, they must embark, and leave the country; provided also all the ships that delivered Opium at Chumpee leave the China seas forthwith; the other ships containing Cargo to be allowed to discharge it outside, at Chumpee or such other place as shall be agreed on with the Hong-merchants; The demand for the delivery of an expiatory victim for the death of Lin Weihe at Hongkong, is for the present not to be mooted. There is also another clause in this proposal of adjustment which requires of Capt. Elliot to pledge himself that no more Opium is to be brought into the China Seas.

Though we have reason to confide in the source whence we obtained this abstract of the Commissioner's Chop to Capt. Elliot, we do not pledge ourselves to its perfect truth, and though one great difficulty to a temporary arrangement has been removed, by the Chinese not for the present pressing the delivery of an Englishman, yet we do not see that the objections to others of the demands of the Yum-chae can be easily removed. The demand that Capt. Elliot should pledge himself that no more Opium be brought into the Chinese waters, is perfectly extravagant, for, supposing that English vessels are not in future to bring it, and how to prevent even this, must, we suppose, exceed Capt. Elliot's powers, it being by no means against the English law to trade in Opium, then the demand would be supplied under every other flag that now trades to China, for so long as the taste for the drug continues, and so long as the Chinese find means to introduce it into the country, so long will foreigners supply it. Let us suppose, for instance, that the Indian Government prohibits its cultivation in Bengal, the Malwarries will grow it in greater quantities than they have hitherto done; should the influence of the Indian Government be exerted against its production in Malwa and other independent states, then we have no doubt that we shall see it grown in America, in Java, in Luconia, in fine, wherever climate and soil are favorable to its production. It is only vigorous measures of the Chinese Government itself that may possibly prevent the importation, or a moral influence which may restrain the people themselves from the indulgence in the drug.

The first of these means, powerful as we have seen their government to be over its own people, will be rendered unattainable, partly by the immense extent of coast which would require an enormously expensive preventive service, and, secondly by the known venality of Chinese government officers, whose zeal in their country's service would soon, we fear, be undermined by bribery. Moral influence may become so powerful among the people themselves, as to prevail on them to leave off the use of Opium; we think it not improbable that such influence has already been exercised, in a great degree, by the many writings, partly from the pens of the highest officers of the state, even of the Emperor himself, partly from those of private individuals, condemning the use of Opium in the severest terms, threatening if indulged in to excess, not only with the contempt of friends and acquaintance, but also with the severity of the law; respect for morality, or fear of punishment may therefore deter many; yet by far the greater number of a people so essentially sensual as the Chinese, and habitually but little restrained by religious or moral considerations, will continue to gratify their appetite at whatever expense or pains.

We now come to the consideration of the commissioner's proposal that the ships now with cargoes at Hongkong are to discharge them at Chumpee or elsewhere outside the Bogue, and that the Hong merchants are to settle where such discharge is to take place. We believe that Macao has been thought of as the fittest place, but that the Hong merchants oppose themselves to this. But supposing that the offer of discharging the immense quantity of British property, now collected in seventy ships at Hongkong, be accepted, in what manner will the Chinese pay for it, or is it intended to give all this property into the keeping of the Chinese, and trust to their honesty for the returns? We know that the Hong merchants, with few exceptions, are men of no substance; we are aware of the unceasing exactions made upon them by the Chinese authorities, which will be greater now than ever, as they are expected to pay for the extra-fortifications on the river and for the warlike preparations lately made at Hongkong; and every one of our readers must be sufficiently convinced that the consequences of the treatment the British have suffered, may be such as to render it very undesirable to leave any British property in the power of the Chinese, before the differences now pending shall have been settled. As to the Chinese making immediate payment for the goods, either by barter or in Cash; the former they are incapable of doing whilst the trade is in the hands of the Co-hong, and the latter, besides their incapacity, would not be permitted by their government.

Thus we apprehend almost insuperable obstacles to a settlement such as at present proposed; however, the next arrival from Hongkong will probably bring Capt. Elliot's answer, or an account at least of what is likely to be the result of the negotiations.

No satisfactory answer has yet been received from the Chinese authorities, respecting the burning of the Spanish Brig Bilbaino. Allapplications on the subject have remained unanswered, and the mate and 4 sailors still remain in the custody of the Chinese.

Siam. Private letters from Bankok inform us that inoculation has been greatly extended there during the last session; some ten thousand or more persons principally in the palace and in the families of the nobles, have been inoculated by Dr. Bradley; for which his "magnificant majesty," has been pleased to present him 240 ticals as a token of his royal regards. From one of the letters, we quote the following on the subject of opium.

"His majesty has lately issued a new edict against the introduction and use of opium in this kingdom, and requested the use of our press to print it. We have printed at his expense, and according to his request, 10,000 copies. The immediate cause of this new edict was the following. Three large boats or proas loaded with opium from Singapore, armed and containing about 30 Chinamen each, were heard to be selling it at out places on the Gulf. The Siamese hearing this sent to take them; the smugglers fired upon the Siamese, who returned the fire and killed 7 men, and took one of the boats. On investigating the matter, the king found a great number of his subjects were connected in purchasing opium. About the same time a number of junks recently from China had full cargoes of opium. Officers were sent into every town and village in the kingdom to investigate the subject. His majesty issued his edict, in which he offered pardon to who had opium, on condition they would deliver it up to be burned, and threatened death to all who should hereafter either buy or use it. For nearly two months, his officers have been scouring the country of this drug, at all hazards. We pity the poor creatures who have been accustomed to use it, but cannot but rejoice at the prospect of the removal of so great an evil. His majesty, however, has permitted a very small quantity to be restored to those who cannot break off the use of it immediately, but gives them to understand, that when it is gone they are to have no more for ever. Two or 3 ships from Singapore, &c., happening to come up at the time having, as was said, opium, were obliged to secrete it and take it back. The opium business is not yet completed; new discoveries are daily made, and for a number of days past, it is said the burning of the precious drug has gone on at a great rate."

"P. S. A severe shock of an earthquake was felt at Bankok last March. It took place about 4 o'clock in the morning, and aroused all the inhabitants from their slumbers. Those in the floating houses thought they were floating down the river, while those on land, thought thieves were breaking into their houses, and the cry of "thief! thief!" was heard in every direction. No great damage, however, was done. The day following, one or two slight shocks were felt."

Advices from Manila of 16th September state that the coming Crop of Rice was again expected to be very short, and that in consequence the importation of that grain would probably be permitted. We find it quoted in the "Precios Corrientes de Manila" at $2. @ 2.12½ per Cahan of 133 lbs for fine white, and at $1.87½ @ 2 per Cahan of 129 @ 130 lbs for Cargo.
